'Perfect' landing caps Discovery flight

By LEE SIEGEL
AP Science Writer

EDWARDS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. — Space shuttle Discovery glided to a picture-perfect dawn landing on a desert lakebed today, returning from a 2.5 million-mile maiden voyage that restored confidence in America's space transportation system.

Commander Henry Hartsfield and pilot Michael Coats guided the 102-ton space plane through sparkling clear skies to a touchdown at 10 minutes after sunrise, 6:38 a.m. PDT.

"Welcome home," Mission Control told the crew as the shuttle rolled to a stop on the hard-packed sand.

The sun glistened brilliantly off the craft as it completed final maneuvers and zeroed in on the landing strip.

Discovery and its crew of five men and one woman were back home after a six-day mission marked by extraordinary success despite bouts with a stubborn chunk of ice and a final-hours oxygen leak. Theirs was the 12th flight of a space shuttle, the 10th to land here.

The third and newest shuttle was over the Indian Ocean on its 97th orbit when Hartsfield and Coats triggered its big jets for 2½ minutes to drop the spaceship out of orbit and into an hourlong dive through the atmosphere into this Mojave Desert air base.

The weather was excellent for landing, with visibility of 100 miles. Scattered lightning storms hit the mountains about 40 miles north of the base two hours before landing time, but the weather posed no threat to the shuttle, said NASA spokeswoman Nancy Lovato.

Mission Control wakened the astronauts 90 minutes early today when it detected a leak in a set of tanks that supply oxygen for the cabin pressure and power-producing fuel cells.

Hartsfield switched to a backup system and initiated a trouble-shooting procedure that isolated the leak to a pressure control system. The system was shut off and the leak stopped. NASA officials emphasized the problem posed "no hazard" to the crew or the shuttle and that there was enough oxygen on board for Discovery to stay in orbit an extra two days if necessary.

Discovery's six-person crew comes home with an empty cargo bay, graphic evidence of its success in launching a record three communications satellites on a single flight.

NASA reported all three satellites had reached the high orbits necessary for operation and they would soon begin earning money for their owners: American Telephone & Telegraph, Satellite Business Systems and Hughes Communications Services Inc. The companies paid the space agency a total of $37 million for the delivery service.

Discovery's satellite deployments were the first for commercial customers since last February when two communications payloads went into useless orbits because their booster rocket nozzles failed after successful launches from the shuttle Challenger.

Those failures caused NASA's customers some concern, raised their insurance rates and resulted in one satellite launch being delayed. That, plus three postponements over two months of Discovery's debut flight, had put the shuttle's reputation as an orbital carrier in question.

Two of the satellites released by Discovery's crew were equipped with the same type of booster rockets as those that failed in February, demonstrating the nozzle problem has been resolved and giving confidence to the many shuttle satellite customers who plan to use that system.

Shuttle flight director Randy Stone said there had been a dip in morale after the February failures and the success of the current flight "affects the confidence of everbody in the program."

With Discovery joining Columbia and Challenger in the fleet, the shuttle system is about to be put to the test on its committment to on-time launches. The launch rate will be one-a-month for the next 15 months, with 16 flights planned in 1986. Challenger is next up on Oct. 1, with Discovery set for its second flight on Nov. 2.

Asked to evaluate the newest shuttle, another flight director, John Cox, said Tuesday: "If you can discount the ice, I think everything else has been absolutely perfect."

The two other prime objectives of the mission — testing a 10-story-tall solar sail for stability and manufacturing test quantities of a pure drug — also were successful.

The solar sail was extended and retracted repeatedly by Judy Resnik, the second American woman to fly in space. It is a forerunner of a device that may harness the sun's energy to provide power for future space stations.

Miami air traffic controllers, from left, James Zeiler, Steve Kalbaugh and Wayne Roshaven re-enact their roles in helping Elaine Yadwin through an emergency landing.

Woman safely lands plane after husband's heart attack

By LYNN CLINE
Associated Press Writer

MIAMI — A woman whose "only thoughts" were to help her fatally stricken husband get to a hospital used radio instructions to safely land a light plane from a mile in the sky despite never having piloted before.

The Piper Cherokee with Elaine Yadwin, 61, at the controls thumped to the ground with the only damage a broken front landing gear more than an hour after her 66-year-old husband, Richard, slumped at the controls from an apparent heart attack.

The Coast Guard flew the couple to Palmetto Hospital, where Yadwin was pronounced dead on arrival, said hospital spokesman Ernie Domenech.

Another passenger, whose name was not released by authorities, at times had to hold back Yadwin's body while Mrs. Yadwin manipulated the controls.

"The only thoughts that went through my mind were, 'I've got to help him, I've got to help him.' We had to come down. He needed help," said a teary-eyed Mrs. Yadwin after her ordeal Tuesday.

Minutes before noon, Mrs. Yadwin took over the Piper Cherokee when Yadwin lost consciousness during a flight over the Everglades, said Jack Barker, a spokesman for the Federal Aviation Administration in Atlanta.

Elaine Yadwin

Sixty-three minutes later, the ordeal was over.

The Yadwins and their friend were en route to Fort Lauderdale from St. Petersburg when Yadwin collapsed.

"We're having a big problem," Mrs. Yadwin told the Miami Air Route Traffic Control Center over the radio. "I think my husband just had a stroke."

Steve Kalbaugh, 36, had just returned to the control center from lunch when he picked up Mrs. Yadwin's signal.

"Are you a pilot?" asked the controller.

"I'm not a pilot ... I've never flown before," she said from 5,500 feet.

After getting her to read him instrument positions, he determined she was on autopilot and told her to stay there.

The next problem was to determine the fuel situation.

"The left fuel tank was on zero and the right fuel tank was on 10," the controller said Mrs. Yadwin told him. "That meant that basically she would be out of gas very soon in the left tank."

Kalbaugh said he then asked controllers Wayne Roshaven and James Zeiler, both pilots experienced with Piper Cherokees, to help.

"Zeiler instructed her on how to change the fuel tank. Apparently the left tank emptied and she changed over, just as it ran out of gas," Kalbaugh said.

The friend had to hold Yadwin's body back from the controls so Mrs. Yadwin could reach the fuel tank switch.

The controllers instructed her to turn so as to stay over land, afraid that the sight of the open ocean would frighten her.

Other planes had picked up Mrs. Yadwin's frequency and offered assistance, the controllers said. But her aircraft kept disappearing in a pillow of clouds which made it difficult to pinpoint her.

Smith seeking re-election as write-in candidate

By ED TODD

Midland County Sheriff Dallas Smith today launched his write-in campaign for a third four-year term in office.

Smith, 41, was defeated in his quest for nomination in the May 5 Republican Party primary election by his former patrol lieutenant, Gary Painter, 37. Smith got 39.4 percent of the vote; Painter garnered 60.6 percent.

"The recent primary election was abused by political enemies who circulated false and untrue stories about my failed marriage," Smith said in a 9 a.m. press conference today in his office. "A great many people have expressed their interest in continuing the type of law enforcement leadership that I have brought to the Midland County Sheriff's Office."

By announcing his candidacy, Smith said he is "responding to the request of my supporters who want to see the same quality of law enforcement maintained in Midland city and county.

"I have concluded that I will become a write-in candidate for sheriff in the November general election."

THE NOV. 6 election will be a three-way race for sheriff:

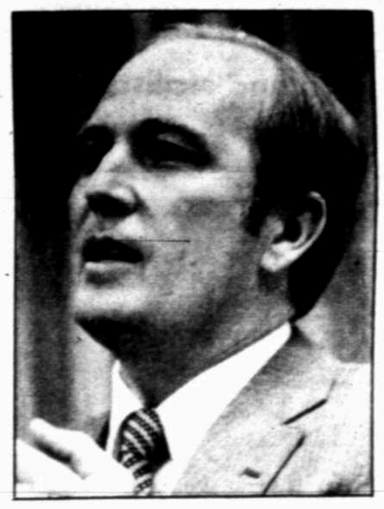

—Smith, the write-in candidate.

—Painter, the Republican Party nominee.

—Joe Carr, 44, the Democratic Party nominee.

Smith predicted that it would be a "winner-take-all" race and that the sheriff-elect would take 37 to 38 percent of the vote.

Canada picks Conservatives

By CHARLES CAMPBELL
Associated Press Writer

TORONTO — Brian Mulroney's Progressive Conservative Party swept to a historic landslide victory over Liberal Prime Minister John Turner, winning the most Parliament seats ever captured by one party in Canada.

The national election Tuesday was the Tories' first majority victory in 26 years. Mulroney's troops trounced the Liberals in all 10 Canadian provinces, ousting a party that had governed for all but nine months of the past 21 years, including 15 years under Pierre Elliott Trudeau.

The Conservatives captured 211 seats in the 282-seat Parliament. The Liberals won 40 and the socialist New Democrats 30. One independent was elected.

The Liberals were crushed even in French-speaking Quebec, where the Tories got just one seat in 1980. This time the Conservatives took 58 of the 75 seats.

Mulroney, who as head of the winning party is almost certain to become the new prime minister, promised today that his Progressive Conservative government will improve conditions for business and "get the economy of Canada moving again."

During his campaign, Mulroney promised to improve relations with the United States and to spark the economy, which is suffering from 11 percent unemployment.

Speaking early this morning to a cheering crowd in a hockey rink in his hometown of Baie Comeau, Quebec, Mulroney proclaimed "a new day for Quebec and a brand new day for this wonderful Canada."

Quebec has voted solidly Liberal most of this century, and always supported native son Trudeau. Mulroney, a 45-year-old electrician's son who became president of a mining company, won the Tory leadership last year largely on his promise to make inroads in Quebec.

Just a month ago, 12 seats in Quebec would have been considered a victory for Mulroney.

With 99 percent of the vote counted nationally, the Conservatives had 50 percent of the popular vote to 28 percent for the Liberals and 19 percent for the New Democrats.

The victory was the worst thumping the Liberals have received since John Diefenbaker and the Tories won 208 out of 264 seats in 1958.

"The people of Canada from coast to coast have spoken and the people are always right," Turner said in a concession speech. The prime minister won the district where he was a candidate in Vancouver, and will now be leader of a tiny opposition in the House of Commons.

Mulroney promised to create a "new climate of confidence" for business, fight for women's rights, and work for world peace.

"Our objective and our mandate is to create jobs and to get the economy of Canada moving again," he said. "We owe it to our youth and the elderly as well."

Police say Midlander shot wife, then self

By MARK LEWIS

A West Midland man killed his wife this morning after an argument, and then turned his gun on himself, police said.

The bodies of Andrew Jackson Moore, 50, and his wife Teddy Lee Moore, 38, were found by police at 1:40 a.m. in the bedroom of their home at 4626 Brookdale, both dead of gunshot wounds to the head.

A .38 caliber snub-nosed revolver was found in Moore's hand, according to Lt. Jim Colburn of the Midland Police Department.

"They were involved in some type of argument about 1:30 this morning," Colburn said.

The argument woke up Teddy Moore's sister, Paula Angelo, who was visiting the couple from Illinois. According to police reports, Ms. Angelo said she went into the bedroom to see what the problem was, and Moore pointed a pistol at her and told her to get out, then slammed the door behind her.

She then ran to a neighbor's house to phone police, who arrived at 1:40 to find the bodies.

The couple had two sons, a 20-year-old and an 18-year-old, but neither lived at home, Colburn said.

Moore's occupation was unknown at press time, but his wife was a nurse at Midland Memorial Hospital.

WEATHER SUMMARY

AP Laserphoto Map

Cool weather for the East and southern California, along with showers in the Northwest and southern Florida, is forecast through Thursday by the National Weather Service.

Record-breaking lows continue overnight

From Staff and Wire Reports

Midland experienced a second day of record-breaking cold this morning, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

An overnight low of 53 was recorded. While that's three degrees warmer than Tuesday's chilly 50-degree low, it is still three degrees colder than the previous record low of 56, set 50 years ago.

Ironically, just one year ago Midland experienced the hottest Sept. 4 on record. An all-time high of 99 degrees was recorded, 14 degrees warmer than Tuesday's high of 85.

Tonight is expected to warm up to near 60, forecasters predict. Fair skies and southeast winds of 5 to 10 mph are predicted.

Thursday should continue fair with highs in the low 90s. Five to 15 mph breezes from the south are anticipated.

STATE

A ridge of high pressure kept skies clear over Texas early this morning, and temperatures were once again slightly cooler than normal for this time of year.

A few clouds dotted the lower Rio Grande Valley, while some heavy thunderstorms were scattered offshore over the northwest gulf.

Just before dawn, the mercury had dipped into the upper 50s over the plains of West Texas. Elsewhere, readings in the 60s to lower 70s were common statewide. At 4 a.m., temperatures across the Lone Star state ranged from a low of 54 degrees at Amarillo to a warmer reading of 74 at Laredo.

The northern half of Texas observed a light southerly wind around 5 mph. But the National Weather Service reported a more notherly wind of 5 to 15 mph racing through East Texas and the southern region of the state.

Reagan blasts critics' 'distortion'

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer

President Reagan, seeking to douse the issue he ignited in Dallas, says critics have "greatly distorted" his views on religion and politics, while Democrat Walter Mondale is attacking the president's tax policies as unfairly favoring the rich.

Mondale, in an effort to regain the "Fighting Fritz" label he earned in winning the Democratic nomination, rolled up his sleeves and loosened his tie to earnestly denounce Reagan's tax cuts.

"I'm mad, I'm angry, I'm damn mad, because I don't think it's right," he said while campaigning Tuesday in California.

Mondale's running mate Geraldine Ferraro joined in the condemnation of the Reagan administration's economic program. But she also acknowledged her family had more money it its pockets because of the tax cuts Reagan sought and won.

Nonetheless, she said the cuts were unfair.

"And actually, could we have done without it? We could have. We would have lived as well," she said. "... There are a lot of people who are suffering in this country as a result of my getting the tax cut and Ronald Reagan getting the tax cut and George Bush and a lot of other people in this country who are upper income, and that's unfair."

Reagan was in Chicago today, ending his four-day campaign kickoff trip with a speech to the Chicago Economic Club before returning to Washington.

Mondale was in Salt Lake City addressing the American Legion, the same group Reagan spoke to Tuesday. And, like Reagan, he planned a morning courtesy call on Mormon Church officials.

Before the Legionnaires and again in Chicago, Reagan addressed the religion-in-politics issue on which he has drawn heat from his Democratic opponent.

Reagan told reporters in Chicago that he had raised the religion issue only once, referring to the large ecumenical prayer breakfast in Dallas on Aug. 23.

"What I said was greatly distorted," Reagan said. "My concern was not with government invading religion but with all those people that are trying to make government turn around and interfere with people's right to prayer."

Speaking on the day he accepted his party's nomination at the Republican National Convention, Reagan told the prayer gathering: "The truth is, politics and morality are inseparable. And as morality's foundation is religion, religion and politics are necessarily related."

Three days ago Mondale responded in a radio address, saying the Republicans in Dallas "raised doubts about whether they respect the wall our founders placed between government and religion."

Wearing a Legionnaire's cap from his own California post, Reagan sought to answer Mondale's criticism in his Salt Lake City speech.

"I can't think of anyone who favors the government establishing a religion in this country. I know I don't," he said.

"But what some would do is twist the concept of freedom of religion to mean 'freedom against religion,'" he added.

Campaign officials labeled Reagan's comments a clarification, but the issue may be raised again this week when both Reagan and Mondale speak to the B'nai B'rith in Washington.

Reagan restated his call for a constitutional amendment permitting organized prayer in public schools — while allowing children to opt out if they wish. He called voluntary prayer in the schools "in the spirit of the Constitution as our forefathers wrote it ..."

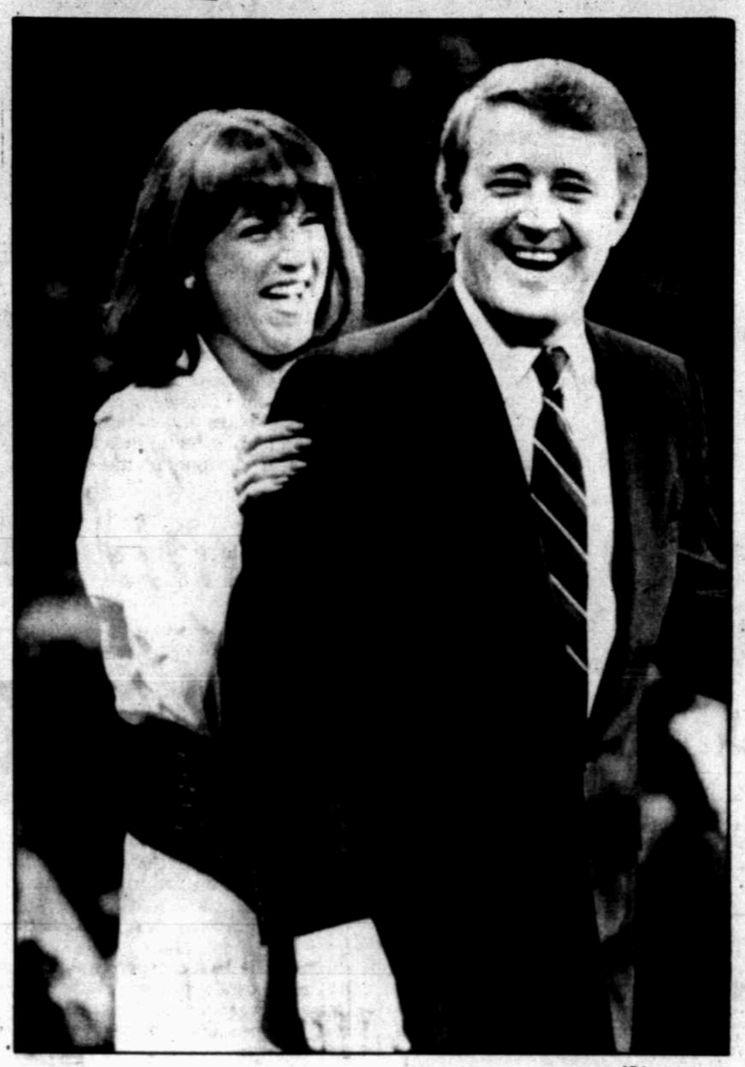

Vice President George Bush, too, has been on the attack, angrily criticizing Mondale on defense spending and Central America policy in a speech at College Station, Texas. Hours later in Houston, though, he was forced to correct and hedge his charges.

Criticizing the Sandinista government in Nicaragua, Bush shouted: "If you walk like a duck and you quack like a duck and you say you're a duck, you're a duck. They are Marxist-Leninists. They are not liberals as Mondale says."

At a news conference later, Bush said, "Maybe I used the wrong word" in quoting Mondale. He said the Democrat had called them "leftists ... It's something less than they are."

On the military, Bush contended Mondale wanted to "drastically cut spending" for the Pentagon. Questioned later, he hedged and said he wasn't sure what Mondale's program called for.

Mondale has not advocated cuts in defense spending but said he would increase military spending by smaller amounts than those sought by the REagan administration.

Congratulating her husband, Prime Minister-Elect Brian Mulroney, is Mila Mulroney. The pair appeared at Baie Cameau, Quebec, following Mulroney's landslide win.

Mulroney reaches childhood goal

By CHARLES CAMPBELL
Associated Press Writer

TORONTO — Brian Mulroney, who grew up an electrician's son in a remote Quebec mill town, was 19 years old when he confided to a friend that he wanted someday to be prime minister.

Now the 45-year-old lawyer and businessman, who made his first run for public office just last year, has reached his goal with a sweeping election victory at the head of the Progressive Conservative Party.

Mulroney — the Irish surname is pronounced Mull-ROO-ney — has a striking lantern-jaw profile and a mellow voice that has served him well ever since he was a boy, when the visiting publisher of the Chicago Tribune, Col. Robert McCormick, paid him $50 for singing "Danny Boy" and "Dearie."

"The eyes are Paul Newman blue," the Edmonton Journal once wrote. "His hair has the swoop of the Robert Redford style and the voice the resonance of a Lorne Greene school of broadcasting. The jaw is by Gibraltar."

In the 1980 referendum on Quebec independence, Mulroney was a major player in the campaign for a "No" vote, and he has taken strong stands for minority language rights. On bilingualism and many other points he shares the views of longtime Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau, a Liberal, which were opposed by many of his Conservative colleagues.

But on other national issues, Mulroney has always been hard to pin down.

"To many Conservatives he is all things — for Mulroney has made it his policy not to say what his policy is," his three biographers wrote in a friendly account of Mulroney's life.

The ambiguity left many political observers thinking Mulroney's ideas may be more liberal than his defeated opponent, Prime Minister John Turner, who is in the Liberal Party's right wing.

Mulroney is eager to improve relations with the United States.

"We in the Progressive Conservative Party know which superpower is our friend and which we're going to stand beside," he said in a speech in Toronto, suggesting Trudeau too often treated the United States and the Soviet Union alike.

He pledged to enlarge the Canadian armed forces and buy more weaponry, promised to scrap portions of Canadian energy policy that angered the U.S. government and said foreign investment would be welcomed to create jobs.

But Mulroney also says Canada's social programs are a "sacred trust" which will be expanded, rather than cut.

Mulroney made his Baie Comeau roots a campaign theme in much the same way Plains, Ga., became nationally known as Jimmy Carter's hometown in 1976.

Speaking English at home and French in the streets, Mulroney gained complete fluency in both languages — a strong advantage in his campaign.

The ambitious young man went away to school in grade 10, studying at a Catholic boarding academy in Chatham, New Brunswick. He went on to St. Francis Xavier College in Antigonish, Nova Scotia, then studied law at Laval University in Quebec City.

As a young attorney in Montreal, Mulroney earned a reputation in labor law, helping settle bitter disputes on the waterfront and at the newspaper La Presse.

All the while, he also was working hard in the backrooms of the Progressive Conservative Party, which has suffered through lean times in Quebec for nearly a century.

In 1976, he tried to leap into politics with a run for the Tory leadership, but was defeated by someone even more unknown at the time — Joe Clark, who later became prime minister for a troubled nine months.

After the setback, Mulroney accepted the job of president of the Iron Ore Company of Canada, owned by the Cleveland-based Hanna Mining Co. He held that job until his next chance at the Conservative leadership in 1983.

This time he won, mostly on his pledge to make Tory inroads in the Liberal fortress of Quebec. He defeated Clark on the fourth ballot of a hard-fought convention.

Mulroney met his wife, Yugoslav immigrant Mila Pivnicki, at a Montreal country club when she was 19. Mila Mulroney is now 31, and campaigned at her husband's side with an easy grace and a charming, squinting smile. They have three children — 10-year-old Caroline, 8-year-old Benedict and 5-year-old Mark.

Canadian law leaves it up to Turner and Mulroney to arrive at an appropriate date for the new government to take power. It is expected that Mulroney will need about two weeks to choose a Cabinet and discuss the changeover with top civil servants before being sworn in. Conservatives have mentioned Sept. 17 as a possible date.

Turner will go into the history books as the shortest-serving Canadian prime minister of the century. He took office when Trudeau resigned on June 30.

The election could have been delayed until next year. But Turner, buoyed by polls showing the Liberals surging ahead for the first time in more than two years, waited just nine days to decide that it should be held this year.

While Mulroney ran a careful campaign, avoiding mistakes, Turner careened from one blunder to the next.

He was embarrassed by television footage showing him tapping the behinds of two women. His most damaging move, however, was agreeing to appoint a list of Trudeau loyalists to comfortable patronage positions.

SMITH

"I think we'll have a pretty good shake (in winning)," said Smith. "I'm still a Republican. I'm a conservative." He recognized a likely split in the Republican and Democratic votes. Part of his campaign will be to educate the electorate in how to vote for a write-in candidate on the automatic voting machines.

But he said he is not counting on support of the Republican Party officials.

"Let's be fair to them," he said. "They're supposed to support the Republican nominee. I think it would be unfair to indicate otherwise."

Four years ago, Smith won re-election for sheriff by getting 70 percent of the vote to Carr's 30 percent. Carr, a detective in the Midland Police Department, is on leave in waging his campaign.

In 1976, Smith defeated the reigning 36-year sheriff, Ed "Big Ed" Darnell, by winning 52.3 percent of the vote; Darnell garnered 47.7 percent.

Smith was unequivocal in his reasons for his losing the primary election to Painter: rumors that he had beaten his wife.

"THE FACT IS," said Smith, "I have never beaten by wife...kicked her...or slapped her."

Smith was married to the former Gail Mabee in August 1973, and fathered three children, a son, 7, and two daughters, 9 and 5. They were divorced in August 1982 following court hearings on property settlements.

Smith is accusing Midland Police Chief Wayne Gideon, 49, as fueling the wife-beating rumors. The sheriff said Gideon had told people "I have beaten my wife while she was pregnant" and that many people cast votes against him on the basis of those rumors.

Smith has filed a $4 million slander lawsuit against Gideon.

"Indeed, we're going to show that it (the rumors) is not the case."

Smith indicated his campaign, which will cost more than $45,000, will be waged via billboards, media advertisements, and door-to-door campaigning.

Unlike his low-key primary campaign, Smith said his write-in campaign would be aggressive and that he would focus on his accomplishments as sheriff.

HE CITED:

—Improved "quality" in his deputy ranks. Thirty of his 50 officers hold college degrees, and five deputies have attended the Federal Bureau of Investigation Academy.

—Increased basic pay for a deputy from $725 a month in 1977 to $1,800 to $2,000 a month today.

—Co-operation with other law-enforcement agencies, including the Texas Department of Public Safety, the FBI, Drug Enforcment Administration, Texas Rangers, and said he has extended cooperative efforts to the Midland Police Department but that Gideon has not reciprocated.

—The closing in 1977 of a syndicate-operated house of prostitution in a motel. "If we knew (of any organized prostitution in Midland today)," he said, "we'd certainly would jump right on it."

—Shutting down the illegal casino operation in R.J. Morris' restaurant in southeast Midland.

"I think we have the support of the other law-enforcement (agencies), yes."

"This agency is going to continue to enforce the law in that regard," Smith said. "We are not going to tolerate organized prostitution or organized gambling."

Americans called 'freedom fighters'

HUNTSVILLE, Ala. (AP) — Two Americans killed when a helicopter was shot down in Nicaragua were anti-communist "freedom fighters" being paid "beans and rice," not mercenaries or agents of the U.S. government, says the group to which they belonged.

"It was a mission of mercy, regardless of what the Sandinistas say," Mario Calero, a Nicaraguan rebel living in Louisiana said Tuesday night at a news conference by the group calling itself Civilian Military Assistance.

Dana Herbert Parker Jr., a Huntsville policeman on leave, and James Powell III of Memphis, Tenn., were killed Saturday during a flight inside Nicaragua from a base in Honduras, the U.S. State Department and officials of the Alabama-based CMA said.

Group leader Tommy Posey said the group is a volunteer organization operating on funds provided by its members to help supply food, clothing and other supplies to rebels fighting the leftist government in Nicaragua.

Calero, a member of the Nicaraguan Democratic Force, a U.S.-supported rebel group, said the helicopter was unarmed when it was shot down in a battle area. Nicaraguan government officials have said the craft was attacking the Tapasali Military School near Santa Clara, about 10 miles from the Honduran border.

The Nicaraguan government formally protested the raid, calling it a product of "the polemic of terrorism carried out by the United States against Nicaragua."

Defense Minister Humberto Ortega called the attack, which the Nicaraguans say killed two adults and four children, "a new aggressive escalation against Nicaragua with major North American involvement."

Chilean government imposes curfew after demonstrations

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — The government enforced a curfew today in the capital and closed four universities after a French priest, one of his parishioners and a 14-year-old boy were killed in violent demonstrations against military rule.

More than 50 people were injured and 270 were arrested by riot police Tuesday in the first of two days of planned demonstrations, the most widespread anti-government protests in Chile in six months.

The demonstrations, centered in this Andean capital, forced most shops to close several hours early and sharply curtailed public transport and school attendance.

French Embassy spokesman Jean Mazoyer said the Rev. Andre Jarlan, 43, died in his second-floor office in the Santiago district of La Victoria on Tuesday when he was hit in the neck by two bullets apparently fired through the wall from outside. Witnesses said riot squads had fired automatic weapons at demonstrators on the same block a half hour before.

Earlier Tuesday, a 35-year-old rehabilitated drug addict was shot dead in the back while manning a street barricade in the same slum neighborhood in southwestern Santiago, said the Rev. Pierre DuBois, a Roman Catholic priest. Police said the slain man was a "common criminal" and the shooting was not related to the protests.

In an incident at another street barricade in a suburban neighborhood in southern Santiago, a 14-year old was fatally shot late Tuesday, police confirmed early today.

The government imposed a curfew of midnight to 5 a.m. in Santiago so police could clear flaming barricades set up by youthful protesters at intersections in a score of outlying districts. It also closed four volatile university campuses, decreed censorship of two independent radio stations and seized editions of two opposition magazines from newsstands.

The protests are intended to pressure President Augusto Pinochet to restore democratic rule came as the 68-year-old army commander approaches the 11th anniversary of the 1973 military coup that toppled an elected Marxist-led regime and brought him to power.

Gen. Roberto Guillard, governor of metropolitan Santiago, said, "a very small percentage of the people, who have some mental problems," took part in the protests, which he said were "destined to fail."

Mario Sharpe, president of the six-party Democratic Alliance that called the demonstrations, said they "showed the desire of an immense majority of Chileans for democracy." He said the regime imposed censorship "to hide the magnitude of the protest and the violent repression."

The opposition alliance urged Chileans to stay home today, and leftist groups said they planned to block access roads to keep commuters out of the center of this city of 4 million people. Associations of small businessmen and truckers announced support for the one-day work stoppage.

Most downtown shops closed Tuesday afternoon.

Rodolfo Seguel, leader of the labor opposition, was among 45 people hospitalized with injuries in the unauthorized demonstration. He was clubbed so hard he had to be carried out of the plaza.

Deputy Soviet premier dies in East Germany

BERLIN (AP) — Leonid Kostandov, a deputy Soviet premier, died today of a heart attack while visiting East Germany, the official East German news agency ADN reported.

The 69-year-old Kostandov died of "a second heart attack" at the government hospital in East Berlin at 5:30 a.m., the news agency said.

Kostandov, a member of the Soviet Communist Party Cental Committee, headed a Soviet government delegation to the annual Leipzig trade fair during the weekend, ADN said.

The news agency published a medical bulletin signed by a Dr. Wittbordt, who was identified as medical director of the government hospital, saying Kostandov died of "a second heart attack."

It said the Soviet official suffered from chronic heart disease and earlier had survived a heart attack. It did not say when the first heart attack occurred.

Leaders seek to expand dockworkers' strike

LONDON (AP) — Union leaders were meeting here today to discuss ways of expanding a dockworkers' strike after plans were scrapped to resume talks in the six-month old walkout by coal miners.

Observers of London's financial markets said the labor developments sent stocks tumbling and the British pound crashing to an all-time low against the U.S. dollar.

The Financial Times share price index of 30 leading British industrial firms also closed 16.8 points lower Tuesday night at 838.3. The British pound stood at $1.29, down from $1.30, a record low set on Monday.

The national docks committee of the Transport and General Workers Union, which includes 35,000 longshoremen among its 1.5 million members, called the meeting here today.

John Connolly, a national docks officer, said union leaders were determined to make more effective the nationwide longshoremen's strike called on Aug. 24. The strike was called to back the miners' walkout, which centers on a government plan to close unprofitable coal mines.

The National Association of Port Employers said about a third of the 35,000 longshoremen are on strike, halting a third of Britain's sea trade. Five of the nation's 10 biggest ports, including London's Tilbury Docks, are closed.

Connolly said such action would include picketing ports that still are working.

Arizona artist paints marine fantasies from his imagination

PRESCOTT, Ariz. (AP) — The ocean's a long way from Prescott Valley, but that doesn't bother artist and former child actor George Lee.

Lee, who recently moved here from Salt Lake City, specializes in paintings of marine fantasies that feature multimasted ships, moonlit beaches and fog-enshrouded skies.

But he says it matters little where he works since "I make them all up from my imagination, anyway."

"It's more fun to make them up," the 59-year-old artist explained as he worked in his new studio. "I don't work from photographs because they give you a dead painting, but sometimes I do use sketches."

Lee began his acting career at age 5 as a member of the original cast of the Our Gang comedy series, playing the character Skeeter. His father worked for MGM Studios in Culver City, Calif.

"If you were a kid in Culver City, you worked in the movies," he recalled. "Whenever they were filming a Laurel and Hardy movie, a casting director would come to our school, grab us, and stick us all in.

"I certainly never felt like a movie star," he added. "I didn't have to get up early every morning and learn lines. They didn't even give us specific lines to learn — they just told you generally what to say."

"I don't work from photographs because they give you a dead painting, but sometimes I do use sketches... I'll put out about 20 paintings a month. But standing in front of an easel eight hours a day can get to you after a while. It's definitely a full-time job."

— Artist George Lee

He retired from acting at age 13. Art school came after a stint in the Navy. Graduation led to a job as an animation artist with Walt Disney Studios, but before long he had moved to its sound department "for about five times the money."

Yet he continued to paint on the side, deciding in 1960 on the role of a bohemian artist on Cannery Row in Monterey, Calif. "I remember I sold one painting at $250 and that fed half the artists in Monterey that night," he said with a chuckle. "We were always wondering how we were going to eat."

A year later he went to work for Sylvania Corp. He finally took up art full time in 1968. Since then his paintings have commanded as much as $12,500, and he says he has sold at least 8,000 to date.

"I'll put out about 20 paintings a month," he said. "But standing in front of an easel eight hours a day can get to you after a while."

Massive voter sign-up on tap for Oct. 4

WASHINGTON (AP) — Plans are being made to send 100,000 volunteers into the streets of America in an attempt to register 1 million new voters on a single day in October.

The idea is to sign up new voters at work sites, unemployment and welfare offices, day care centers, schools, hospitals, universities, subway and bus stops and housing projects in states where volunteers can be deputized as registrars. In other places, potential voters will be bused to local registration offices.

The massive sign-up — unprecedented in U.S. history according to its organizers — is to occur Oct. 4, a few days before the registration deadlines of most states. An estimated 50 million Americans over age 18 are not on the voter rolls.

Seventy national groups — civil rights, peace, environmental, church, human, feminist and student organizations — are lending their names to the project and in some instances urging local affiliates to provide the manpower.

These include the League of Women Voters, Southern Christian Leadership Conference, National Board of the YWCA, Union of Concerned Scientists, American Asociation of University Women, National Congress of American Indians, Nuclear Weapons Freeze Campaign, Americans for Democratic Action and American Public Health Association.

The organizers' goal is for each of the 100,000 volunteers to sign up 10 new voters and to write them personal letters and telephone them just before Nov. 6 to make sure they vote, according to Hulbert James, coordinator of the National Voter Mobilization, the group overseeing the one-day campaign.

"To our knowledge, there's never been a coordinated, national effort like this to register so many people from so many constituencies," says James, a veteran civil rights worker who formerly headed the anti-hunger program of the National Council of Churches.

James said the only comparable event that comes to his mind was Vietnam Moratorium Day, Oct. 15, 1969, when hundreds of thousands of Americans took part in anti-war protests in cities across the country.

The organizers call their project non-partisan, but Democrats always claim they are the beneficiaries when large numbers of unregistered voters are signed up and brought to the polls.

This year, especially, the Democrats say that presidential nominee Walter F. Mondale's chances of defeating President Reagan depend on a huge voter turnout.

The Republicans are mounting their own effort to sign up supporters among the unregistered.

William Greener, spokesman for the Republican National Committee, said between 1.7 million and 2 million new Republican voters have been registered so far this year in a targeted effort on which the GOP has spent more than $8 million.

Retiree building 22-foot sailboat out of beer cans

Associated Press

Homer Conner still doesn't have a name for the 22-foot sailboat he's bulding out of beer cans, but an appropriate motto might be "this boat's for you."

So far, Conner has used 7,000 Budweiser cans on the 10-year project taking shape in his yard at a Cheraw, S.C., mobile home park.

Conner, a 64-year-old retired textile worker, says he drinks six or eight cans of beer a day. He buys other cans for 1 cent apiece from neighborhood boys who collect them along the highways around Cheraw, which is about 75 miles southeast of Charlotte and just across the border from North Carolina.

The boat may contain as many as 10,000 cans by the time it's finished, which Conner hopes will be by next spring.

The beer cans are placed end-to-end inside a long fiberglass cloth tube that is then coated with resin and allowed to harden. The resulting tubes are then attached side-by-side to run the length of the boat.

Even the cabin, mast and keel will be made of fiberglass-coated beer cans, said Conner. The labels will show through in the cabin but will be painted over elsewhere. The frame is made from fiberglass-coated coffee cans, and Conner is considering making the bottom deck from clear wine bottles.

"When I first started, I was going to use 2-inch aluminum pipe, but that was so expensive I just decided to substitute the beer cans," he said. "After I started thinking about it, I said, 'Well, no one has ever done this before. Why not try something no one else has ever tried?'"

The boat will eventually weigh about 3,300 pounds and have a hull about 4 inches thick.

"I'm sure it's going to float," he said. "There's no way water can get inside those cans."

Conner says he is looking for an acre of land that will allow him more room and the freedom to work without bothering the neighbors.

He says his wife, unlike the spouses of many amateur boat-builders, supports the project.

"She encourages me," said Conner, who has three sons. "She loves the water. I thought when the boat's finished that we'd do a little sailing together."

Mexican officials acknowledge gold deposit discovery

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Government officials acknowledge that a substantial gold deposit has been discovered in central Mexico, but they are putting little public emphasis on the find for fear of repeating the economic bust that followed the nation's oil boom of the late 1970s.

El Barqueno gold field, found last November in Jalisco state 335 miles northwest of Mexico City, has a motherlode officially estimated at 3 miles long and about 40 feet wide, with a yield of 5 to 15 grams of gold per ton of earth. It also is estimated to hold 20 grams of silver per ton of earth and variable quantities of lead, iron and zinc. There are 31.1 grams in a troy ounce, the standard measure in weighing gold and silver.

Only 5 percent of the 12,103-acre area believed to contain gold has been explored to date, according to the government's geophysical and geochemical studies.

The deposit near a village known as Panico has been described in local newspapers as potentially the richest in the world.

The newspaper Excelsior of Mexico City predicted that the field holds enough gold to produce 396,000 troy ounces of gold and 1.6 million troy ounces of silver a year.

Mexican authorities have not denied any such reports of the field's potential. But their own reports are conservative.

Energy and Mines Secretary Francisco Labastida Ochoa has said, "The announcement about the mining potential of gold and silver responds to the policy of keeping the public informed and not to the...desire to signal a new resource with which the development of Mexico can be sustained.

"We must not ever again fall into illusions. We must not again make the mistake of thinking that a natural resource will be the solution."

Rapid development of petroleum discoveries brought unprecedented prosperity to Mexico from 1978 through 1981, producing a climate of heavy spending and borrowing against what officials then assumed would be a vast oil wealth.

But in 1982 the world oil glut and falling prices reduced Mexico's petroleum income far below expectations.

Mexico could not meet its foreign debt payments and the economic downturn still persists two years into the administration of President Miguel de la Madrid, who took office in December 1982.

Labastida Ochoa has described El Barqueno as "the greatest known gold mine in the country," but he said that publicity about the discovery's potential was being handled carefully "so as not to generate false expectations."

Official reports show Mexico as the 25th largest producer of gold in the world. Production for 1983 was 1.8 million troy ounces and projections call for that figure to increase by 25 percent this year.

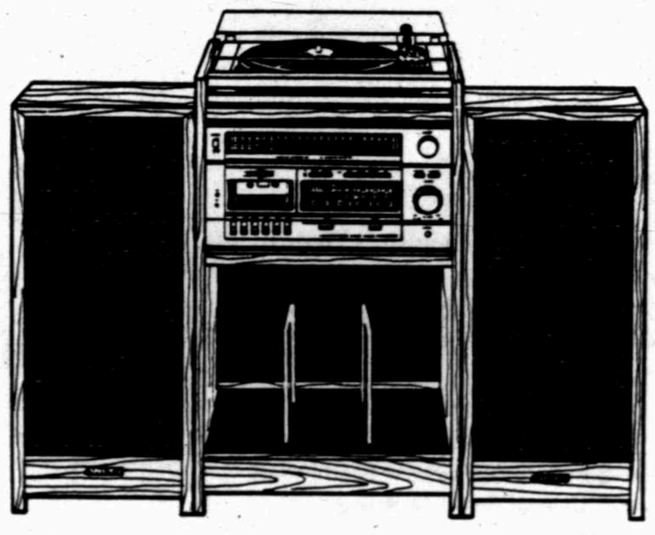

Government officials have declined to estimate probable or proven reserves of gold.

Mondale seeks to revive image as 'Fighting Fritz' with attacks

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Walter F. Mondale, seeking to revive his "Fighting Fritz" image, is on the attack with tougher, more aggressive language to describe Ronald Reagan and his policies.

Trailing by 10 or more percentage points in the opinion polls, Mondale is making a calculated effort to portray himself as the same come-from-behind political infighter who beat Democratic rival Gary Hart last spring for the presidential nomination.

"He has shown before that when he has to he can be as tough as he needs to be," said Maxine Isaacs, Mondale's press secretary.

Today, Mondale was expected to again go on the attack against Reagan, this time questioning the president's defense policies in a speech before the American Legion Convention in Salt Lake City.

The appearance before the veteran's group marked a pattern in which Mondale is trailing Reagan from campaign stop to campaign stop around the country.

The president spoke to the American Legion on Tuesday, and speeches by both candidates are scheduled before B'nai B'rith and the National Baptist Convention in Washington on Thursday. Mondale campaign aides said Mondale spent much of the post-Labor Day kickoff on the campaign in California because Reagan also started in his home state.

Ms. Isaacs disputed any description of Mondale's anti-Reagan rhetoric over the last three days as "personal."

Vice presidential candidate Geraldine Ferraro greets the crowd with sweeping gestures in downtown Eugene, Ore., Tuesday afternoon as part of a campaign swing through the West. Ms. Ferraro was to join presidential candidate Walter Mondale in Portland, Ore., today for a noon rally.

But on Tuesday, discussing his repeated call for a half-dozen televised debates with Reagan, Mondale said, "Why shouldn't we stand there toe-to-toe. I'll be glad to take him on."

And talking with employees of a meat processing plant in Compton, Calif., the Democratic presidential nominee noted an accusation from Reagan that Mondale was appealing to the envious impulses of voters by accusing the president of policies that favor the rich, especially in tax cuts.

Rolling up his shirt sleeves and loosening his tie, Mondale said, "I think what he (Reagan) is saying is, 'shut up.' If I were he, I would want me to shut up. I don't think envy is the real word. I don't think it's envy, I think it's anger.

Ferraro warms to role as Fritz booster

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — Geraldine Ferraro is warming to her role as Walter F. Mondale's chief booster as she campaigns in Reagan country lambasting the president on war and peace and the economy.

The Democratic vice presidential nominee moved through California, Oregon and Washington Tuesday stressing what she termed the unfairness of the Reagan administration's economic policies.

"He (Reagan) talks about castles in the air, but Walter Mondale and I are going to work to make houses affordable on earth," she told cheering supporters in Spokane.

Ms. Ferraro was flying from Spokane to Portland, Ore., today to join Mondale in a day of stressing arms control issues and the Democratic argument that Reagan is not serious about curbing nuclear weapons.

"I think the most important issue is the war and peace issue," she said Tuesday.

And right behind it is the economy issue.

"The president boasts of the recovery, but in my book it's not a complete recovery until the loggers and the teachers and the others of Oregon have recovered their jobs," she told an enthusiastic afternoon rally in downtown Eugene.

When asked at a news conference whether she considered herself rich, Ms. Ferraro responded: "Not me, not me. You can call my husband what you want."

But she acknowledged that her family had been helped from the tax cuts passed during the last three years.

"If I didn't have the Reagan tax cut, I would have paid more than 41 percent of my income on taxes and so would my husband. So we got a benefit.

"And actually, could we have done without it? We could have. We would have lived as well.

"What I'm saying to you is that there are a lot of people who are suffering in this country as a result of my getting the tax cut and Ronald Reagan getting the tax cut and George Bush and a lot of other people in this country who are upper income, and that's unfair," she said.

Ms. Ferraro and her husband, New York real estate broker John Zaccaro, have reported a combined net worth of $3.7 million.

She also rejected suggestions that too many people are doing too well for the economy to become a potent election-year issue.

"You tell me whether you can get rid of a $180 billion deficit between now and Nov. 6. Whether you can get rid of a $120 billion trade deficit between now and Nov. 6. You tell me how you get interest rates down between now and Nov. 6," she said.

Meanwhile, following an initial awkwardness about campaign rallies and the chores of a national political candidate, the three-term congresswoman is becoming more comfortable with the virtually non-stop hoopla.

"I'm getting to enjoy that stuff. It's terrific," she said.

She is shaking more hands, waving more to crowds and appearing more comfortable and confident than she did just after she was nominated in July.

Women start classes at Conservative Jewish seminary

NEW YORK (AP) — The first women ever admitted to the rabbinical school of Conservative Judaism start classes this week, and some plan to work as assistants at upcoming High Holy Day services, officials say.

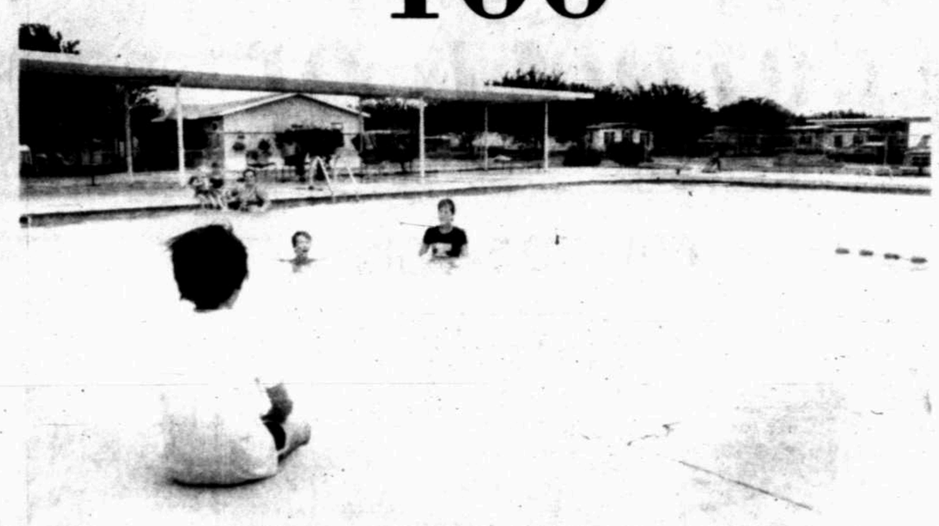

The first day of classes at the Jewish Theological Seminary is Thursday, when 19 women will join 21 men at campuses in New York and Jerusalem.

The rabbinical program lasts six years, but some of the women already were enrolled in other graduate work at the seminary and may meet the requirements of ordination in less time.

The admission of women was made possible by a 1983 vote of the faculty, which previously had refused to accept women. The Rabbinical Assembly, the association of Conservative rabbis, continues to refuse women admission. Rabbis do not have to belong to the association.

Rabbinical students traditionally assist at High Holy Day services, and seminary spokeswoman Marjorie Wyler said two of the women have already accepted such assignments.

Reagan restates policy on separation of church, state

CHICAGO (AP) — President Reagan is trying to put to rest the religion issue he raised two weeks ago with his remarks at a prayer breakfast about the inseparability of religion and politics, while at the same time restating his backing for school prayer as "in the spirit of the Constitution."

"I can't think of anyone who favors the government establishing a religion in this country," Reagan told the American Legion in Salt Lake City on Tuesday. "I know I don't."

In Chicago today, the president was addressing a conference on the future sponsored by the Chicago Economic Club before flying to Washington at the end of a four-day campaign kickoff trip to the West Coast.

As he arrived in Chicago, Reagan was asked by reporters if he had put the religion issue to rest. He said he had only raised it once — at the prayer breakfast — and "what I said was greatly distorted."

"My concern was not with government invading religion but with all those people that are trying to make government turn around and interfere with peoples' right to prayer," Reagan said.

In a radio broadcast Sunday, Democratic nominee Walter F. Mondale contended Republicans had "raised doubts about whether they respect the wall our founders placed between government and religion."

In Salt Lake City, Reagan acknowledged the existence of that wall and defended the right of anyone "to choose and practice his or her own religion or to choose no religion at all."

"My concern was not with government invading religion but with all those people that are trying to make government turn around and interfere with peoples' right to prayer."
President Ronald Reagan

But the president repeated his call for public support of a constitutional amendment permitting organized prayer in public schools while allowing children to opt out of locally sanctioned prayer meetings if they wish.

"Our administration opposes any required prayers in school," Reagan said. "At the same time, we call for the right of children once again to pray voluntarily in our public schools. That stand is in the spirit of the Constitution as our forefathers wrote it and as we have lived it for most of our history. Let us restore that balance."

Campaign press secretary James Lake said afterward Reagan included those remarks in his speech to the Legionaires to clarify his position "so there could be no misunderstanding" in the future.

Lake initially said it is "not our intention" for Reagan to discuss the issue again, even when he addresses the B'nai B'rith in Washington on Thursday. But he later retracted that, saying Reagan would discuss the issue Thursday but would not make it the focus of his speech, which also is expected to deal with Middle East policy and other issues of interest to the Jewish community.

While softening his tone somewhat, Reagan did not retract the charge he made in Dallas on Aug. 23 that it is the opponents of school prayer who are intolerant. And he recalled without repeating his earlier contention that religion and politics are "necessarily related."

"Our forefathers were religious people," Reagan said Tuesday. "They knew that morality derives chiefly from religious faith and that government no more should handicap religious expression than it should show preference for one religion over another."

In Dallas, Reagan said, "The truth is, politics and morality are inseparable. And as morality's foundation is religion, religion and politics are necessarily related...Our government needs the church because only those humble enough to admit they are sinners can bring to democracy the tolerance it requires in order to survive."

Just before delivering his address to the Legionaires, Reagan paid a visit to the headquarters of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints to meet with Mormon elders.

A church statement issued later said: "The discussion was upon the challenging times we live in and the need for prayer and divine guidance in seeking solutions to the problems...(Reagan) emphasized his own belief in the need for prayer in finding solutions to our nation's problems."

George Bush isn't 'cucumber sandwich'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Vice President George Bush's sister and nephew have taken pen to hand to defend their kinsman against journalistic accounts depicting Bush as a preppie who is soft as "a cucumber sandwich."

Three of the nation's leading newspapers, The Boston Globe, The Wall Street Journal and the Washington Post, have published in recent days separate letters from the vice president's sister, Nancy Bush Ellis, and his nephew, James L. Bush, defending his honor and extolling his war record.

Shirley Green, the vice president's deputy press secretary, said it was sheer coincidence that both had written in Bush's defense.

"There's no great conspiracy," she said. "They're a close family. I guess after three or four years, some of them are fed up."

She added that Bush "was amazed and very, very touched," when he saw the letter first printed in the Globe from his sister, who was angered by a Mary McGrory column written from the Republican convention in Dallas that depicted Bush as a "terminally polite" preppie who "does not handle crisis well...He cracks, he whines."

"George never cracks; he never whines. He flew strike after strike off the aircraft carrier San Jacinto during World War II..." his sister wrote in a 750-word riposte. "Go after him on votes you don't like, on his conservatism which you think is phony, or real, or whatever — but enough of these mean-spirited, untrue attacks."

The same letter appeared last Saturday in the Post, for which Ms. McGrory is a syndicated columnist.

James Bush, a Boston insurance broker who lives in Milton, Mass., took exception to a Journal profile that posed the question, "Bush: Preppie or Tough Cookie?" The Journal story quoted an unnamed Connecticut delegate as saying, "Poppy (Bush's nickname among old friends) is a cucumber sandwich."

Alabama senator thanks Democrats for victory

Associated Press

Sen. Howell Heflin thanked Alabama Democrats for an "overwhelming" primary victory, but his Republican challenger, former Rep. Albert Lee Smith, vowed to give Alabama a second GOP senator with help from President Reagan.

"I know it's an uphill battle, but we will climb the hill," Smith declared Tuesday after defeating three other Republicans. He said the November election would present "a clear contrast between the Reagan-Smith ticket and the Mondale-Ferraro-Heflin ticket."

Also holding primaries Tuesday were Georgia, where substitute teacher John M. Hicks won the Republican senatorial primary; Florida, where the winner of a run-off between two Democrats will face Rep. Andy Ireland, who switched to the GOP party in July; and Nevada, where Republican Peggy Cavnar won the right to a rematch against Democratic incumbent Harry Reid.

And voters in Jackson, Miss., authorized a change in their city government designed to gain representation for blacks.

In Georgia, Hicks defeated pharmacist J.W. Tibbs by a 2-1 margin in a low-turnout Republican run-off for the right to face Democratic Sen. Sam Nunn. That's a dubious privilege since Nunn has the support of even the state's GOP leaders in his quest for a third term.

State Rep. Gerald Johnson won a Democratic run-off against airline pilot Bob Watson and will challenge Rep. Newt Gingrich, a leader of the young conservatives in the GOP and the only Republican in Georgia's congressional delegation.

And airline pilot Bill Bronson came out on top in a Republican run-off against marketing executive Ben Clay and will challenge Democratic Rep. Buddy Darden. Darden won a special election last year to fill the seat of Larry McDonald, one of 269 people killed when a Korean jetliner was shot down by Soviet fighter jets.

Rep. Don Fuqua of Florida won a 12th term by burying two Democratic opponents with more than 80 percent of the primary vote. He has no Republican opposition in November.

Judge declares mistrial in chiropractor's trial

KEOKUK, Iowa (AP) — A chiropractor accused of killing his wife and dismembering her with a chain saw will be retried on first-degree murder charges within 90 days, a disappointed prosecutor said immediately after a jury came back with no verdict.

District Judge James Haverkamp declared a mistrial Tuesday in the trial of James Klindt when the jury reported it was still deadlocked after 32 hours of deliberating charges that Klindt killed his wife, Joyce.

Jury foreman H. Wayne Nelson told Havercamp that jurors were no longer in a frame of mind conducive to discussing their differences.

"We haven't changed much all the way through, and after awhile, we just ran out of things to say to one another. We did our best but we really couldn't reach a decision," Nelson said.

Klindt, who sat half-smiling through most of the trial, was rushed to a squad car after the mistrial and refused to comment.

Scott County Attorney William Davis reacted swiftly. "You can be sure we'll try it again and as soon as possible. We have 90 days to bring it to trial," he said.

Gunman shoots policeman

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — A gunman shot and wounded a policeman early today and took a former girlfriend hostage at the home of her new boyfriend in what apparently started as a domestic disturbance, police said.

The gunman had barricaded himself inside the house in a residential neighborhood, police said. Several nearby homes were evacuated and traffic was diverted around the area, said police spokesman Bob Moss.

"We've been in contact with him (the suspect) all morning," Moss said. "We're just playing a waiting game. We don't plan to go on the offense unless it's necessary."

Officers were called to the house around midnight by the owner, said Capt. Roy Phillips.

Woman's 'honor' restored

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (AP) — A school district that kicked a high school senior out of the National Honor Society after she became pregnant probably will not appeal a court order that she be reinstated, a lawyer for the district said.

U.S. District Judge J. Waldo Ackerman ruled Tuesday that Linda Wort, 20, was a victim of sex discrimination and was denied equal protection under the law.

"I'm just so excited," said Mrs. Wort, who was dismissed from the honor group in February 1982. She filed the suit "to make sure it wouldn't happen again," she said.

George Lewis, the district's lawyer, said school officials probably will not challenge the decision.

Aw, come on!

Aw, come on! Are they serious?

Ann Lewis, political director of the Democratic National Committee, is in a huff because Vice President George Bush's service record is being used to his and President Ronald Reagan's advantage in the current re-election campaign.

She even goes so far as to deride what she terms "epaulet-flexing" and notes "they're trying to put emphasis on his military career because that may wind up being the only point or the only issue between them in which he thinks he can score points off Geraldine Ferraro or which he can appeal."

Somebody needs to give Ms. Lewis a brief lesson in national politicking. The name of the game is appealing to the electorate. For some politicians that means kissing babies, eating barbecue, drinking beer and tramping through wheat fields or steel yards.

For all, it means citing in campaign literature, commercials and so forth the information about the candidate's background that will make him — or her — appealing to voters.

George Bush is one of those who can cite his service record as a Navy flier. In fact, he not only flew 58 combat missions during World War II but was shot down in the South Pacific on Sept. 2, 1944. Bush was lucky; he lived. His two companions didn't.

Bush received the Distinguished Flying Cross for his service to this country. He's understandably proud of that fact. We are, too. So is the U.S. Navy, which honored the vice president at a Norfolk, Va. ceremony during which an old Navy film of Bush's rescue was shown.

What's Ms. Lewis's complaint? Is she saying that the vice president should not be proud of his service to this country in World War II? That seems to be the case since she said "events like this for the purpose of a national campaign trivialize the very values they claim to commend."

That seems a slap in the face to all the service veterans in this nation who gave their sweat, blood and some, their lives, in the service of this great land.

Or is she merely saying that Ms. Ferraro can't compete against this type of extremely favorable campaigning and, therefore, Bush should not be permitted to use it either?

We'll remind Ms. Lewis that numerous politicians have noted their service records when seeking office and notable Democrats, including the late President John F. Kennedy, were appropriately honored for their service.

Since time immemorial politicians have cited information to make themselves appealing to the electorate. Ms. Lewis's remarks are just a seasonal tradition. They indicate that Labor Day is past, the hour is late in political races and that the Golden Rule for campaigners is the letter of the law.

That rule commands say something — even if it's dumb!

No more vacations

"A president doesn't get a vacation. He gets a change of scene." That was President Reagan speaking, and he spoke the truth.

Reagan has been taking a lot of flack recently because of the time he spends chopping wood and riding horses on his ranch in California. Even Speaker Tip O'Neill, who should know better, has been one of the needlers. Fact of the matter is, as the president pointed out, that anyone in his position never gets a vacation in the sense we envision it as a respite from work. He is on duty day and night, no matter where he is or what he is doing.

This was true of Franklin D. Roosevelt when he tried to get away from it all by going to his home on Campobello Island, and of Harry Truman when he sought to relax with the boys on the yacht Sequoia. Dwight Eisenhower always was the president-on-the-job, no matter how many hours he spent on the golf course, and so was Gerald Ford during his skiing adventures on the snowy slopes of Colorado. In all instances, they were only split seconds away from the telephone and crises in every part of the world.

The same is true of Ronald Reagan, horseback riding or not. He is on the job 24 hours a day.

Those who complain about how much a president appears to be away from the Oval Office should be reminded that presidents deserve vacations, but are forced to settle for only changes of scenerv.

Another View:

Is this progress?

The cost of health care being what it is today, who can afford not to have insurance? We mean, what if surgery is needed or if a serious illness crops up, not to mention ordinary checkups and rabies shots?

Yes, you read that sentence correctly. The latest in insurance offerings is health plans for Fido and Princess. Some 38,000 dogs and cats in — where else? — California are insured by Veterinary Pet Insurance. But the California firm is not the only pet insurer. Indeed, Animal Health Insurance Agency of New York State has applied to sell its policies in 22 states. And one group of veterinarians in Minneapolis has formed a health maintenance organization for pets. As with humans it pays for animals the see the doctor regularly, before anything serious develops.

No doubt there is some value in the peace of mind that may go with knowing, as one of the insurers said, that you're "able to tell the veterinarian to do all they can to save the animal." Be that as it may, there's something unsettling about pet health insurance. If these plans gain widespread usage, can the time be too far distant when the veterinarian refuses to treat the faithful pet dog that has just been hit by a car until Rover's insurance card is produced? And what about cost controls for veterinarians once they get used to third-party payments without a lot of questions? Ah, progress.

Justice nixed Vesco kidnapping

WASHINGTON — Federal investigators have gathered copious information linking fugitive financier Robert Vesco to multi-billion-dollar drug-smuggling operations involving Cuban President Fidel Castro and Nicaraguan government officials. But the Justice Department quietly killed an elaborate plan to kidnap Vesco and bring him back to face criminal charges for which he was indicted more than 10 years ago.

Jack Anderson

Evidence I've uncovered indicates that the Reagan administration — like others before it — is afraid of what Vesco could disclose if he were actually to stand trial for his swindles. The elusive millionaire apparently knows too much about some well-known people in this country, both Republicans and Democrats.

My associates Corky Johnson and Jon Lee Anderson uncovered the intricate kidnap scheme that was secretly developed last summer — and just as secretly squelched by Justice Department brass. The FBI's lips are sealed, but reliable sources say here's what happened and why:

FBI agents conducted several meetings last year with officials of the government of Costa Rica, where Vesco hid out for several years before taking refuge in Cuba. The first of the meetings was on July 29 in a hotel near the Miami airport. G-men from the Miami office discussed the proposed kidnapping with representatives of the Costa Rican vice president and officials of that country's national security agency.

The plan called for luring Vesco back into Costa Rica, where he owns a ranch, abducting him and turning him over to the FBI.

Coded telex messages from Miami to FBI headquarters in Washington outlined the details of the plan. They indicated that the Costa Rican government was unofficially but enthusiastically behind the plan.

What would the Costa Rican government get for its cooperation? Reportedly several million dollars to be passed on to anti-Sandinista rebels whose presence in Costa Rica had become an embarrassment. The money presumably would have enabled the Nicaraguan guerrillas to carry their operations deeper inland into Nicaragua, away from the Costa Rican border.

When asked by my associate about the Vesco kidnap money, Eden Pastora, the designated rebel recipient, only chuckled and said he welcomed any donation to his cause.

The kidnappers — who would not have been FBI agents — had lined up a helicopter and boats equipped with radios on which they were to communicate over special frequencies with the FBI.

But the Justice Department killed the plan. The conspirators were told by an FBI agent that the plot was aborted because any money funneled to Nicaraguan rebels had to be approved by the CIA, and the spy agency was not interested in bringing Vesco to book.

Further evidence of official U.S. reluctance is the report that the chief of Costa Rica's internal security refused to attend one meeting with the FBI, saying he knew the United States wasn't really interested in capturing Vesco. This squares with earlier information from Costa Rican police officials, who told me that U.S. authorities in the past have expressed little interest in Vesco beyond occasionally denouncing him.

Why wasn't the CIA interested? Costa Rican officials and friends of Vesco said he has told them he has had ongoing contact with the CIA and its director, William Casey. Vesco reportedly brags that he even met Casey recently, and that Casey has helped him invest in the stock market.

Vesco has a habit of blowing hot air, but his associates say he was delighted when Casey was named head of the CIA.

Footnote: CIA general counsel, Stanley Sporkin, who worked with Casey at the SEC, said that Vesco's claims about Casey are "complete nonsense." Not even "10 percent of what Vesco says" can be believed, Sporkin said. He also denied that the CIA maintains contacts with Vesco.

TAXPAYERS' PURSUIT — With apologies to Trivial Pursuit, I have created a special game for taxpayers that I call Taxpayers' Pursuit. How many of the following questions can you answer? (The answers appear at the end.)

1. "If a man can make a better mousetrap," said Ralph Waldo Emerson, "the world will make a beaten path to his door." But what happens when the government builds a mousetrap?

2. How do federal agencies get out from under the personnel ceilings that are imposed on them?

3. How many pages of regulations must officials study to determine the eligibility of Social Security applicants?

4. What's wrong with the government's 17,000 computers?

5. What can you do to reduce the massive government waste?

ANSWERS: 1. The specifications for constructing a government mousetrap ran 700 pages and weighed 3.3 pounds. 2. They fire some employees for one day at year-end, then rehire them the next day. 3. 25,000 pages, plus about 12,000 pages of corrections each year. 4. They are old and incompatible. 5. MOSCOW NIGHTS — Has James Watt's influence reached the Kremlin? According to Helsinki Commission sources, the old fogies in charge of Soviet cultural matters have become upset at the pernicious effect of Western-style rock music on Soviet youth. In the past year, many Soviet rock groups have been banned and several discotheques have been closed down or ordered to switch to softer, less subversive music.

ANTHONY HARRIGAN

Protecting U.S. manufacturers

PITTSBURGH, Pa. — Will the United States have a steel fabricating industry a decade hence?

Anthony Harrigan

This is a question that's very much in the mind of one of the nation's largest steel fabricators, a businessman whose company builds giant tanks, bridges, refineries and other major steel structures. He is concerned about the collapse of scores of steel fabricating comanies as a result of competition from Japan and Korea. He cited the example of a large steel tank ordered by the Exxon Co. His company and several other major U.S. comapnies bid on construction of this vessel. The bids were in the neighborhood of $2.5 million. A Korean company obtained the order when it bid $800,000.

The difference is explained by labor costs and foreign government aid to new fabricators — U.S. steel fabricators pay wages of roughly $8.50 an hour, whereas the Koreans pay about $3.50. No amount of modernization or efficient management can make up for the disparity in wages. Moreover, the Japanese and Korean governments are heavily involved in the financing of overseas projects.

The U.S. public is becoming familiar with the plight of basic steel producers and the competition they receive from foreign nationalized and subsidized steel companies. The problems faced by the steel fabricators are less well known. Undoubtedly, however, the majority of Americans would find it almost inconceivable that the United States be without a steel fabricating capacity.

The American people need to hear more frank talk on the subject of deindustrialization. One of the most candid business spokesmen is Philip A. O'Reilly, President of Houdaille Industries, makers of machine tools.

Writing in Industry Week recently O'Reilly said that Japanese numerically controlled machine tools gained a 70 percent market share in 1983, up from 4 percent seven years before. He pointed out that American machine tools have become an endangered species as a result of "the massive intervention and support of the Japanese government." He declared that it is not possible for independent U.S. manufacturers to compete in these product lines "where the resources of an entire nation are brought to bear against them." He added that the outcome in America "has been the massive loss of jobs, manufacturing facilities, and skills."

The U.S. government has engaged in protracted negotiations with the Japanese, but the talks have been allowed to drift inconclusively. The problems posed by Korea and other nations have not been addressed. The failure of the U.S. government to act decisively, according to Mr. O'Reilly, "results from thinking conditioned by illogical free market ideology."

Positive action by the U.S. government is needed and needed soon in order to preserve engineering and manufacturing skills which are vital for our prosperity and national security. The nation can't wait until essential industries have been lost to foreign government cartels.

ART BUCHWALD

Cooking up fishy tasting deficit

I received a call from a friend in the Office of Management and Budget who said he had been asked to cook up a new batch of deficits for the elections.

"Nobody's here so it's okay for you to come over."

Art Buchwald

I found him in the OMB's test kitchen where they try out every new recipe before packaging it for the public.

"Here," he said. "Put these on to protect your eyes."

"What are they?" I asked.

"Rose-colored glasses. Everyone in the administration is required to wear them when cooking up government numbers."

"What's in the pot?" I asked him.

"Our new figures for the campaign. It looks like we're only going to have a $174 billion budget deficit instead of the $200 billion that we originally predicted."

"It smells fishy," I said.

"That's just because I put in tremendous portions of gross national product and added large tax revenues which we hadn't counted on this year. It tastes delicious."

He gave me a spoon and I tried it.

"It's not bad. But after all, you've only cooked this for the Reagan people. Will you be able to bring it in at $174 billion when you have to feed the whole country?"

"No question about it. For one thing we took out all the fat in government spending. With the economy really cooking along, interest rates ought to drop. The only thing that could spoil the recipe is if Congress keeps adding more ingredients than we need. If we can stick with what we've got we can reduce the deficits to a measly $139 billion by 1989."

"Have you added any new income taxes to the recipe for the next year?"

"Not at the moment. The president can't digest anything that has new income taxes in it. The last time we served him a deficit stew with taxes in it he spit it out and fired the chef."

"So you really think you can cook up a dish of deficits for $174 billion without adding any new taxes?"

"We can for the election, but we're keeping our options open for 1985. We might have to throw in a federal sales tax or a value added tax, but we're not going to announce it until after November."

"I still don't know how you created this so fast," I said.

"When you're cooking numbers you have to go on certain assumptions. For example, I figure that by adding optimism the real growth in the pot will increase by 4 percent each year until 1989. Inflation will simmer at around 4 percent and that means the government's borrowing rate will be reduced to 5.1 percent. That should make your mouth water."

"Mondale says those are unrealistic assumptions."

"What else would he say? He wants to be president. If he makes it, which we all doubt, he'll cook the figures just the way we have."

"He says you have a secret recipe for deficits that you're not telling the American people about, and what you're cooking up now is some voodoo stew that even Reagan's economic advisers can't stomach."

"It's not worthy of comment," the OMB man said. He then sprinkled 100 large folders into the pot.

"What did you just add?" I asked.

"Defense contracts. That's what gives the deficit its rich taste."

Vitamin D deficiency found in older people

Dear Dr. Solomn: My mother is 79 years old and she has been told that she has a deficiency of vitamin D. I don't remember ever hearing about anyone who had a vitaimin D deficiency. Is this unusual? — Mrs. K.G., Atlanta, Ga.

Solomon

Dear Mrs. G.: Vitamin D deficiency is rare among young adults in the United States; for a variety of reasons, however, the incidence increases with age.

Many older people receive little exposure to sunlight, some because they are confined to their homes because of disability or disease. In addition, older people may not have enough foods that contain vitamin D in their diets. Under these circumstances, a vitamin D deficiency may result.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My husband is a diabetic and he has been pretty good about following his diet. I would like to provide a little more variety in his meals, and I would like to know whether I can use aspartame. Is there any recommendation on this? — Mrs. T.E., Houston

Dear Mrs. E.: The moderate use of aspartame, a low-calorie artificial sweetener, has been approved by the American Diabetes Association. It had previously been approved by the Food and Drug Administrtion for use in diet sodas and various foods.

I would urge all patients with diabetes to discuss any planned changes in their diets with their physicians before implementing such changes.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Since vegetarians do not consume meat and therefore avoid consuming a large amount of animal fats, I would assume that their cholesterol levels must be pretty low. If I am correct so far, I would futher assume that they do not have as many heart attacks as people who are not vegetarians. Is this in fact the case? — Gus, Vineland, N.J.

Dear Gus: Vegetarians do appear to have a lower risk of ischemic heart disese than do nonvegetarians. (Ischemia refers to a deficiency of blood due to obstruction in a vessel.) Part of this decreased risk appears to be related to the fact that they do not eat meat, but there may be other reasons as well.

For example, it is possible that vegetarians are more health conscious than other people and may follow a lifestyle that encourages good health. Possibly vegetarians do not smoke as much as others do. Their lower risk of ischemic heart disease may also be attributable to their higher consumption of their foods as well as their abstinence from meat.

In one study of 300 subjects, vegetarians were found to have lower cholesterol levels and higher ratios of high-density lipoprotein to cholesterol than did nonvegetarians. Both factors are believed to be protective against heart disease.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My neighbor cut herself while working in the garden and her doctor gave her a tetanus shot. I suppose this happens a million times a day, but what makes this different is that my neighbor is pregnant. You have often warned against using drugs during pregnancy and I was wondering how this applied to a tetanus shot. Apparently her doctor didn't think it was important. — Mrs. L.T., Modesto, Calif.

Dear Mrs. T.: I have warned that pregnant women should not use drugs without the knowledge and approval of their physicians. Sometimes even potentially dangerous drugs may have to be used if failure to use them would pose an even more serious risk to the patient.

Tetanus vaccine, however, does not pose such a danger. Dr. John L. Sever, of the National Institute of Neurological and Communicative Disorders and Stroke in Bethesda, Md., says that tetanus vaccine does not present a risk to the fetus and he recommends that two doses be given to pregnant women who have not been immunized since tetanus is often fatal.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have been thinking of getting a vasectomy for some time but I keep putting it off. Lately I've been reading a lot about the possibility of heart attacks among men who had the operation, but that doesn't interest me and apparently there's nothing to it anyway. What does bother me is whether it can cause a person to become impotent. — Don, Racine, Wis.

Dear Don: The results of a large, multicenter study suggest that impotence is not a risk for men who undergo vasectomy. The researchers compared more than 10,000 men who had had the operation with an equal number of control subjects. Although some men in each group were found to be impotent, the difference between the two groups was not significant. The men who participated in the study were interviewed from five to 14 years following the operation.

Mayor of Georgia town hires six goats to mow grass

BAINBRIDGE, Ga. (AP) — Mayor Bill K. Reynolds isn't kidding when he says he's proud of his new grass-cutting crew, even though the six-goat team has been on the job a short time.

"Lawnmowers wear out," Reynolds said. "Our goats don't. In fact, the herd has increased by two kids last week and, our official herdsman (sanitary superintendent John Thursby) estimates that two more sets of twin kids will be born any day now."

The unsightliness of the city's six holding pond sites has nagged at Reynolds for most of his seven years as mayor. "We've been thinking of goats for several years," he said.

In the past it has taken two workers two days, four times per growing season, to keep pond sites mowed, public works chief Dave Holley said.

Congressmen hold 'field hearings'

WASHINGTON (AP) — While Congress has been on recess through the national conventions of both parties, some lawmakers have been holding "field hearings" that just happen to be in front of homestate voters who must decide how they are doing their jobs.

Rep. Don Albosta, D-Mich., is chairman of a House subcommittee that is looking at the government's policy of contracting out some services, instead of having government workers do them.

The hearing planned for Sept. 17 at Selfridge Air National Guard Base in Mount Clemens, Mich., is in the district that Albosta represents.

"Government agencies must review the cost of their commercial activities, to determine whether they can be accomplished at less cost by government workers or by private industry," Albosta said.

He said the panel will consider the impact on the local community of displacing large numbers of employees. Albosta added that the Air Force needs to be sure that services are performed in the most cost-effective way possible.

Rep. Albert Gore Jr., D-Tenn., is chairman of a House Science and Technology subcommittee that held a hearing on health care issues related to Alzheimer's disease.

The hearing was at East Tennessee State University in Johnson City, Tenn. Johnson City is not in Gore's district, but as a candidate for the Senate in the November elections, he wants to represent all of Tennessee.

He said two million Americans have Alzheimer's disease, which is characterized by the loss of intellectual abilities.

"Beyond the financial and medical burdens imposed on those who develop this disease, are the severe emotional strains faced by families and friends. The progressive intellectual deterioration of a close loved one is a tragic experience that has been described as a funeral that lasts for years," he said.

Rep. Dan Lungren, R-Calif., was chairman for two days of hearings in the Silicon Valley on entrepreneurship and innovation. Lungren represents a district in the same state, but this hearing was not held in his district.

Lundgren said the goal was to focus on policies that allow the government to "best maintain our technological leadership, improve our international competitiveness and raise the quality of life and standard of living for our people."

Cubs knock Phils out of chase

Associated Press

The Chicago Cubs have passed their first test of the final month.

Ron Cey homered for the second straight day and Scott Sanderson managed to scatter 13 hits as the Cubs beat the Philadelphia Phillies 7-2 Tuesday night, extending their lead in the National League East to seven games over New York.

The Cubs did it by knocking out Philadelphia ace Steve Carlton, and the impressive victory may have knocked the Phillies out of the pennant chase.

"This is not the time to get cocky," warned Sanderson after Chicago had finished sweeping the two-game series at Veterans Stadium. "But if we had come in here and they won two in a row, it would have given them confidence to get the ball rolling for them."

Instead, Chicago ran its record in September to 4-0 and, coupled with the Mets' 12-2 defeat in St. Louis, helped the Cubs take their biggest lead of the season. Third-place Philadelphia is 10½ games behind.

The victory came on the same day Chicago received permission from the baseball commissioner's office to start printing playoff tickets, and although it may be early to start counting such things, the Cubs magic number to eliminate the Mets is now 18.

"It wasn't that I fooled them. But none of their hits were in the gaps, down the lines or over the fence," said Sanderson, who took a shutout into the ninth but lost it when his own error led to two unearned runs.

Cey's 25th homer of the season, a two-run blast, helped the Cubs charge to a 3-0 lead in the first inning.

Gary Matthews and Keith Moreland drew walks from Carlton to start the sixth and Cey followed with an RBI single. Gary Woods delivered a run-scoring double that brought on reliever Kevin Gross, pinch hitter Leon Durham had a single that made it 6-0 and Sanderson capped the outburst with a sacrifice fly.

The lone highlight for the Phillies came as Carlton, 11-7, struck out four to regain the all-time major league strikeout lead with 3,857, one more than Houston's Nolan Ryan.

Cardinals 12, Mets 2

In St. Louis, George Hendrick went 4-for-5 and drove in four runs, Tom Nieto belted a two-run homer and had a pair of singles, Tommy Herr doubled twice and singled, and Lonnie Smith had three singles.

It added to a 17-hit assault that powered St. Louis over New York.

The Mets enjoyed a brief 2-0 lead in the first inning on Darryl Strawberry's 20th homer before the Cardinals went to work against Sid Fernandez.

Doubles by Herr and Hendrick made it 2-1 in the bottom of the first, Nieto homered in the second and Hendrick had an RBI single in the third before St. Louis broke it open with five runs in the fourth.

Fernandez, 4-4, along with Wes Gardner and Brent Gaff, were victimized in the Cardinals' big inning.

Winner Danny Cox, 7-10, gave up four hits over eight innings and Bob Forsch, activated from the disabled list earlier in the day, worked the ninth.

Dodgers 2, Padres 1

Pinch hitter Sid Bream's sacrifice fly with the bases loaded and one out in the bottom of the ninth inning was the game-winner for host Los Angeles.

Ken Landreaux, whose home run in the first inning put the Dodgers ahead, drew a walk from Andy Hawkins, 7-9, with one out in the ninth. Landreaux stole second and continued to third on catcher Bruce Bochy's throwing error.

Hawkins walked Pedro Guerrero and then intentionally walked Greg Brock, leaving it up to Bream.

Braves 8, Astros 7

Dale Murphy is known as a home-run hitter; Alex Trevino is not.

They both hit late homers in Atlanta to lift the Braves.

Murphy's NL-leading 30th homer, a two-run shot in the seventh inning, made the score 7-7. In the eighth, Trevino led off with a home run, his third of the season and just the fifth of his six-year career.

"Trevino may not have hit many home runs in his career, but he can sure hit the fastball," said Houston coach Denis Menke, a former Braves player. "And Murphy always wears us out."

Pirates 5, Expos 3

Jason Thompson stroked a two-run single and Tony Pena hit a sacrifice fly as Pittsburgh rallied for three runs in the top of the ninth inning.

With a runner on first and one out in the ninth, Montreal reliever Bob James gave up a double to Lee Lacy. Johnny Ray was intentionally walked to load the bases and then Thompson singled before Pena drove in an insurance run.

Pittsburgh starter Jose DeLeon, who has lost eight straight decisions, took a one-hitter and a 2-1 lead into the sixth. But Montreal loaded the bases with two out, and Wallace Johnson greeted reliever Rod Scurry with a two-run pinch-single to put the host Expos ahead.

Reds 8, Giants 3

Eric Davis hit a leadoff home run in the fifth inning to lift Cincinnati into a 2-2 tie, and then belted a three-run shot in the eighth inning during a six-run rally.

The visiting Reds went into the eighth trailing 3-2 but Dave Concepcion's RBI double tied it. Pinch-hitter Tony Perez then delivered a run-scoring single and Davis followed with his sixth homer of the year.

Pete Rose doubled for his third hit of the game and later scored on a wild pitch to cap the uprising.

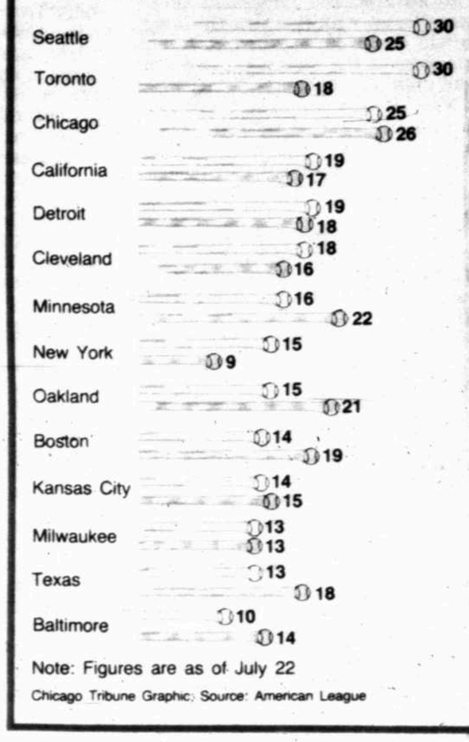

Mario Soto raised his record to 14-7 despite allowing Scot Thompson's first home run since 1980.

Lloyd worries Jimmy

Play moves into quarterfinals

AP Laserphoto

Chris Evert Lloyd heads toward Navratilova showdown.

Associated Press

His next opponent is John Lloyd, against whom he has never lost so much as one set. But there is no way Jimmy Connors is looking past him toward John McEnroe.

"I don't worry about anybody except the guy I'm playing next. One at a time, that's the way I take 'em," the third-seeded Connors said after he advanced into the quarterfinals of the $2.55 million U.S. Open Tennis Championships.

"I've seen John play for about 10 years now," Connors said, "but I haven't seen him or anybody else play here. I have enough trouble watching the guys I'm playing while I'm playing 'em."

In today's women's quarters it was No. 1 seed Martina Navratilova vs. Helena Sukova of Czechoslovakia; Lloyd's wife, No. 2 Chris Evert Lloyd vs. Sylvia Hanika of West Germany; No. 3 Hana Mandlikova of Czechoslovakia vs. No. 14 Carling Bassett of Canada and No. 4 Pam Shriver vs. No. 13 Wendy Turnbull of Britain.

The men's other quarterfinal matchups are the top-seeded McEnroe vs. Gene Mayer, No. 2 Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia vs. No. 5 Andres Gomez of Ecuador and No. 4 Mats Wilander of Sweden vs. No. 15 Pat Cash of Australia.

Both Connors and the unseeded Lloyd advanced with Tuesday night victories over seeded Swedes, Connors defeating No. 16 Joakim Nystrom 7-6, 6-0, 6-3, Lloyd beating No. 9 Henrik Sundstrom 4-6, 6-4, 6-4, 6-2 after the day's schedule was disrupted by rain.

U.S.Open

In Tuesday's only afternoon match completed between showers, McEnroe disposed of unseeded Robert Green 6-3, 6-2, 6-2 to advance to a quarterfinal meeting with Mayer, a surprisingly easy 6-3, 6-2, 6-3 winner over No. 13 Tomas Smid of Czechoslovakia.

Also Tuesday night, Wilander beat Tim Mayotte 6-4, 6-4, 7-6 in a fourth-round match begun Monday night. And Hanika defeated Patra Huber of Austria 6-4, 7-5 to fill out the women's quarterfinal field.

Connors said he wasn't surprised to find Lloyd waiting for him in the quarters. "He's been playing good tennis. He's beaten a lot of good guys to get there."

As usual, Connors played an animated game, reacting to the crowd — which in turn was reacting to him. "I was having a good time out there," he said.

"I sat around all day. Didn't get to hit any balls because of the rain. I just wanted to get out there and try to get going. I was just happy to get out of the hotel room."

Lloyd said he's "very superstitious — I think a lot of players are — and I think I've only lost once in the first round here in the 10 times I've played it. And that was to Jimmy (in 1981).

"But I think I'm a much, much better player now than I've ever been. Jimmy's ranked third in the world, obviously one of the great players, but I'm not going to be overawed by playing him."

Neither, for that matter is Mayer. "I've played well against him, beaten him," Mayer said. "I had a rough match against him the last time we met in the Open (McEnroe winning 4-6, 7-6, 6-3, 4-6, 6-1 in the 1982 quarters). Win or lose, hopefully this one'll be shorter."

McEnroe had no trouble defeating Green, who wasn't supposed to get anywhere near this far in the tournament. "He had nothing to lose and could go out there and hit his shots, which is what he did — except I played better," McEnroe said. "He didn't play badly. He had a great tournament and I think he should be proud of what he's done."

The Open was only the second Grand Prix tournament in which Green made it past the first round. "You just look for a decent draw and hope for the best," he said. "I thought if I got a good draw, one or two rounds. The fourth round is more than I expected."

He said he'd had a lot of interest shown in him in the 48 hours between his third-round victory over Australian John Fitzgerald and the loss to McEnroe.

"A few agents have been making contact, expressing an interest in getting together," Green said. "Right now I don't have any contracts — clothing, shoes, rackets. I do have a string contract ..."

Morris denies charges

'I'm no hothead' rages Jack

By HARRY ATKINS

DETROIT (AP) — Jack Morris, claiming he's not the hothead the media has made him out to be, is talking to reporters again.

The Detroit Tigers' ace right-hander has made it clear, however, that his silence is being broken only because of orders from above, apparently Manager Sparky Anderson.

"I'm not happy talking, but my life will go on and so will yours," Morris said Tuesday night. "I'm a person of a lot of pride and I'm not too crazy about a lot of things I've read.

"I'm tired of seeing all the negative things that are being written."

Morris said he stopped talking because, "I couldn't breath. My phone was ringing off the hook, at home and on the road."

Morris, who got off to an 11-2 start, stopped talking to reporters in July. His record was 12-5 at the All-Star break but he has gone 5-5 since then. He currently has a 17-10 record after losing to the Baltimore Orioles on Monday night.

"I was told to talk to you, so I'm talking," Morris said. When asked why, Morris replied, "Because I respect that person."

Anderson, when asked, only smiled and said, "He's talking. That's all that matters."

Morris said he felt he had frequently been quoted out of context and misquoted.

"Sometimes short quotes are worse than no quotes," he said. "You can say something and the punch line isn't what was meant.

"Jack Morris is not the person the media has made him out to be."

Morris said he was especially upset that reporters continued to write about his temper, long after he felt like he had taken control of that situation.

"You keep writing about my temper," Morris said. "Ninty percent of the guys in baseball have tempers."

As the weeks of Morris' silence wore on, some of his teammates — notably catcher Lance Parrish and right fielder Kirk Gibson — began to speak out against him.

Parrish told him the team didn't like to play for him when he showed anger out on the mound. Gibson blasted him for continuing to pout in the clubhouse after the team had rescued a game in extra innings long after Morris had been relieved.

"A lot of the things other players said really weren't that personal," Morris said, explaining that they were uttered in the heat of the moment. "That's why I hardly ever talk after games. Next day, my mind will be clear.

"The fact that it's been written that I've hurt the team, I think that's unjust. Everybody can improve life and I'm trying."

What about this Loveinbloom?

That guy, what's his name, Gary Hogeinbloom, will have a pretty good idea of the kind of job he did Monday night when Tom Landry holds his next press conference.

If Landry doesn't refer to Gary as "that young quarterback from Eastern or Western Michigan, Podzerac, Loveinbloom, or whatever his name is....", Holeboom will know he's making progress.

Although the Hillsdale, Mich., rifleman received good marks for his performance from media sources, not to mention the Rams secondary, the only grade that counts is the one that comes out of Coach Landry's film critique.

Hoagenbloom survived adversity that gave every indication of being terminal to bring Dallas to victory Monday night on national TV over the Rams, the team that cost Danny White his security.

SOMEHOW ONE got the feeling that changing quarterbacks was not something Landry especially wanted to do. Tom is loyal and the suspicion is that if it hadn't been for public and media pressure and the hint of rebellion in the ranks, Landry would have gone with White.

Danny's statistics are beyond reproach and, if you've got your team averaging 26 points a game, it means there's something asunder someplace else that is contributing to the problem.

But tradition says if a team doesn't reach the Super Bowl, it's the quarterback's fault...and don't forget it.

Although Landry may have made the switch with some reluctance, it shouldn't have been difficult to make. There was no way he could lose.

Look at the situation. A vocal segement of fans is openly critical of White's inability to take the Cowboys all the way, "I don't care what kind of statistics he has," and their discontent is echoed in the media. The squad is divided in Holdinboom and White camps, some of the resentment toward Danny stems from his stand in the 1982 strike.

A SWITCH means Hogey must put his money where his mouth is. Landry can sit back and let Gary eliminate himself from the picture and then wait for the boos and the demands of the contrite players to "get Danny back in there."

It's not as though this Cowboy team was a stand-pat contender. Many figure the Cowboys were headed for an 8-8 season. Landry could afford to take a chance.

If the kid from Up North comes through, that's good, too. If he's a clearcut winner in the quarterback duel, then that means the Cowboys, in defiance of the sages, are a Super Bowl contender.

IN MONDAY'S game, Hogelboom demonstrated what all the shouting has been about. That arm...he's a Shawon Dunston in shoulder pads.

Royals shave Twins lead

Associated Press

First it was the Minnesota Twins breathing a sigh of relief and then the Kansas City Royals took their turn as the hot American League West race continued to be the only real scramble left this season in major league baseball.

Twenty-four hours earlier, Minnesota Manager Billy Gardner was talking about the need for his Twins, who entered the important three-game series with five straight losses, to win one from the Royals. Round one went to the Twins, 4-1, and their lead grew to two games.

Now, it was Tuesday night, and Kansas City second baseman Frank White, whose sixth-inning single drove in the go-ahead run in a 4-1 victory by the Royals, was holding court.

Kansas City's Mark Gubicza, 10-11, scattered seven hits over 8 2-3 innings and got last-out help from Dan Quisenberry, who collected his 37th save.

White's single scored Darryl Motley to break a 1-1 tie. The Royals added two more runs in the seventh when pinch-hitter Lynn Jones doubled off Minnesota reliever Pete Filson after a single by Greg Pryor, a sacrifice and an intentional walk to Willie Wilson.

Minnesota starter Ken Schrom, 4-8, had yielded only one hit through the first five innings until Motley singled to left with one out in the sixth.

Angels 5, Indians 3

Left fielder Joe Carter misplayed Rod Carew's double in the 12th inning, allowing Juan Beniquez to score the tie-breaking run from first base after Cleveland's Chris Bando had tied the game with a two-out, three-run homer off California reliever Don Aase, 3-1, in the bottom of the ninth.

Mike Witt entered the ninth with a five-hit shutout, but left the game after allowing a leadoff single to Andre Thornton and a two-out walk to Pat Tabler. Bando greeted Aase with his ninth homer of the year.

Fred Lynn, who has driven in 34 runs in his last 35 games, singled, doubled and hit a two-run homer, his 19th, extending his hitting streak to seven games.

Orioles 4, Tigers 1

Cal Ripken and Eddie Murray drove in first-inning runs and Mike Boddicker, 17-9, pitched a six-hitter through seven innings as Baltimore handed Detroit its sixth loss in seven games. Rick Dempsey added a two-run homer for the Orioles in the fifth.

Al Bumbry and Mike Young started the Baltimore first with singles and moved up on a passed ball by Tiger catcher Lance Parrish. Ripken hit a sacrifice fly and Murray singled to chase Dave Rozema, 7-6, after only a third of an inning.

Blue Jays 6, Yankees 4

A sacrifice fly by George Bell drove in the go-ahead run in a three-run eighth inning and Jim Clancy and two relievers combined on a seven-hitter as Toronto downed New York. Clancy, 11-13, allowed six hits, struck out three and walked two in 7 2-3 innings.

Red Sox 3, Brewers 1

Boston's Al Nipper threw a seven-hitter at Milwaukee, fanned six and didn't allow a walk in improving his record to 8-5. The Red Sox took a 1-0 lead in the first inning against Don Sutton, 12-11, when Wade Boggs and Dwight Evans hit consecutive singles and Jim Rice followed with a sacrifice fly.

Bill Buckner started the second with a double and scored on Marty Barrett's sacrifice fly. The final Boston run came on a third-inning RBI double by Rich Gedman.

White Sox 12, A's 2

Greg Walker clouted two three-run homers, his 20th and 21st, and Tom Seaver hurled a five-hitter as Chicago drilled Oakland in a rain-delayed game.Seaver, 13-9, picked up his 286th career victory by pitching eight innings.

Steve McCatty, 7-13, who had a 7-0 lifetime record against Chicago going into the game, gave up five runs in 2 2-3 innings.

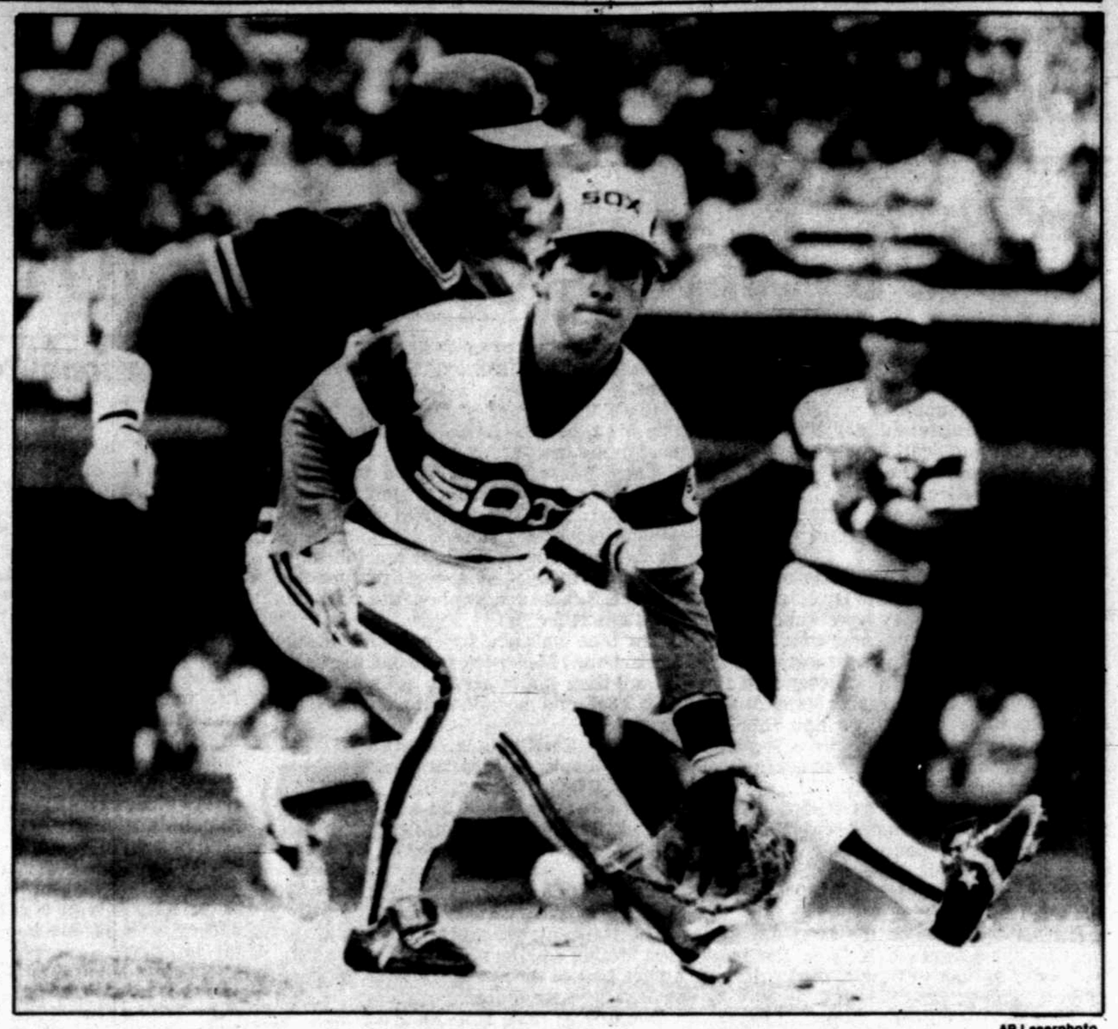

Leading 1-0, the White Sox started their rout in the second inning when Walker smashed his first homer of the night, scoring Scott Fletcher, who had doubled, and Jerry Hairston, who had walked.

Mariners 6, Rangers 3

Al Cowens drove home Spike Owen with a one-out double in the top of the 13th inning to lift Seattle past Texas.

Owen opened the inning with an infield hit. He advanced on a wild pitch by loser Dave Schmidt, 6-6, and reached third on Alvin Davis' grounder before Ken Phelps received an intentional walk. Cowens then doubled off the left-field wall.

JIM MURRAY

Bear's stage was sweaty locker room

Charlton Heston, on a television program the other night, delivered himself of an interesting opinion. "A leader, to be effective, must be a great actor," he suggested, adding that Franklin Roosevelt, Winston Churchill and, probably, Caesar and Napoleon and Ronald Reagan knew this very well.

Football coaches certainly do. To a man, the successful ones were accomplished thespians. Knute Rockne's locker-room performances, if you can believe the people who were there, ranked with the greatest Hamlets of all time. Oscar winners. Best performances by a male actor using material from another medium.

Football coaches play a role that is part John Wayne, part Mr. Chips and, maybe, part Camille.

They have to be able to run the gamut of emotions, and not from A to B. From A to Z. They have to be able to cry on command, simulate anger, even pretend fear ("Stagg Fears Purdue"). The football coach has to be Lil Eva fleeing over the ice, King Lear mourning his daughter, Arthur at Camelot, Horatius at the bridge.

PAUL (BEAR) Bryant was one of the best that ever trod the boards. The Prince of Players. A Barrymore of the blackboard. A tragedian, comedian, a man for all seasons.

Complex, sentimental, mordant and kind at the same time, Bryant never played a game, he gave a performance. From the time he came on the field in the protective custody of two of the South's finest state troopers — grim-faced, sunglassed, looking like refugees from "In The Heat Of The Night," twin Rod Steigers — he was putting on The Bear Bryant Show, a television special.

They've made a movie about the old Bear, called simply "The Bear," and, so far as I know it's the only theatrically released movie made about a football coach since "Knute Rockne, All-American" back in the 1930s, which catapulted Pat O'Brien and Ronald Reagan to fame.

But it takes more than a checkered hat, 30 pages of script and nine reels of film to capture Bear Bryant, as any one of a dozen football coaches can tell you. An actor named Gary Busey and the writers, directors and editors make a valiant try. I leave to the paid critics how successful they were, but to me Bear Bryant was not so much an enigma as a contradiction, totally.

The Bryant I knew was almost shy. I never thought he was entirely comfortable in social situations. He was happiest in a locker-room full of sweaty football players or on a sideline or at a bar with fellow coaches swapping stories or comparing techniques.

A WHOLE cadre of successful coaches came out of the system that produced Bryant, the one pioneered by the revered Bob Neyland of Tennessee. There was Red Sanders of Vanderbilt and UCLA, for whom Bear worked, Jim Tatum, Darrell Royal and a half dozen others. They all knew the secret of successful football and they passed it around in a kind of cross-pollination of clinics, where they shared innovations generously.

They knew every able-bodied football player in the United States and they competed for them. They all knew what it took to win: two-dozen of the quickest, meanest, hardest youngsters they could find this side of a chain gang, give them a football, sting their pride, instill an us-against-them philosophy — and go out and win the Sugar Bowl.

Bear always wanted to come to the Rose Bowl, which he had played in as an undergraduate but which segregation made him effectually ineligible for throughout most of his coaching career.

Bear wasn't a political activist but it chafed him to see his good friends in the Big Ten or the Big Eight or even the Pac-10 winning football games with players who came well within Bear's recruiting range but whom Jim Crow wouldn't let him touch.

The movie has a scene in which federal law forces the University of Alabama to accept a black coed for the first time and in the background Bear growls, "Next time let's make it a halfback." But the real watershed moment for Bryant came in a 1970 Alabama-USC game played in Birmingham, which may have been the first integrated game played in that state.

Conventional lore has it that a back named Sam (Bam) Cunningham made a believer out of Coach Bryant that night, in which USC ran wild over an outmatched Bryant team (42-21). But it was actually a lesser-known player, halfback Clarence Davis, who had shredded the Alabama line and secondary. After the game, Bryant shambled over to shake his hand. When he learned that Clarence Davis had been born in Birmingham, he shook his head, then his fist and vowed: "This will never happen again."

BEAR NEVER posed as a great molder of character. He once stood up in a Santa Barbara coaching clinic and delivered himself of this credo: "If you guys got any boys who are students and like to read, why send 'em to Stanford. But if you have any whiskey-drinkin', women-chasin' athaletes (cq) who like to play football, why you just semd 'em to Ol' Bear."

Yet, when "the best football player I ever had," Master Joe Willie Namath, broke the training rules, Bear suspended him without hesitation. Bear never did the expected. On the other hand, he never did the unexpected, either. "You knew what his teams were going to do. You just couldn't stop 'em from doing it," rival coach Wally Butts once observed.

You may have noticed in the papers that Mrs. Bear Bryant died the other day. Anyone who knew them knew she wouldn't outlast the Bear long. That was another thing about him. His marriage was a love affair. He never needed much more than "Mary Harmon," as he always called his first lady, a football and a team to hand it to and a team to run it through.

The film "The Bear" will open in Tuscaloosa later this month. It will be the Bear's last performance. I only hope it's as good as the 400 preceding ones he gave there.

Rob Moerschell now tailback

AUSTIN (AP) — Rob Moerschell, the Texas Longhorns' starting quarterback for nine games last season, on Tuesday was switched to tailback in a move to bolster the team's running back situation, Coach Fred Akers said.

Moerschell, a 5-foot-9, 183-pound senior from Dallas, had gained a reputation as a fine runner but average passer during his first three years at Texas. He had returned punts his first two seasons and started all but the Houston, Texas Christian and Cotton Bowl games as UT's quarterback last season.

"We put Rob at tailback today because we are getting really thin there. He's a great competitor and he's a fine runner," Akers said. "He wants to get to a position where he can play and we are to the point where we need to get our best football players on the field."

The Longhorns open against Auburn Sept. 15 in Austin.

Moerschell has battled for the starting quarterback role at Texas for two years with Port Arthur junior Todd Dodge.

Museum curator finds old segments of 'Honeymooners'

NEW YORK (AP) — Nothing excites the connoisseur of classic television like the discovery of lost or forgotten episodes of a favorite program.

So it's no wonder folks have been packing the Museum of Broadcasting, just off Fifth Avenue in Manhattan, three times a day since early August. They've come to see four hour-long episodes of "The Honeymooners," each broadcast once by CBS in the early 1950s, then stored away in a vault in New Jersey.

Ron Simon, the museum's curator who located the programs shelved alongside kinescopic reproductions of other vintage CBS shows, said he had received inquiries from entrepreneurs who see gold in his discovery, and that means the episodes will undoubtedly be rebroadcast sometime in the future.

Few series have enjoyed wider syndication over the years than the 39 half-hour "Honeymooners" programs produced in 1955 and '56. The series, featuring Jackie Gleason as Ralph Kramden, Audrey Meadows as his wife, Alice, and Art Carney and Joyce Randolph as their upstairs neighbors, Ed and Trixie Norton, now has a cult-like following.

Simon said rights to the four newly discovered programs probably belong to Gleason, who created "The Honeymooners" for the "Cavalcade of Stars" variety show on the DuMont network.

The comedian and bandleader took the sketch to CBS with "The Jackie Gleason Show" in 1952, and the Museum of Broadcasting episodes are from that variety series.

Each "Honeymooners" skit in the museum show is about 40 minutes long, with the remainder of the program filled by Gleason's monologue, a performance by the June Taylor Dancers and commercials for the program's sponsors — Sheaffer pens, Shick electric shavers and Nescafe. Jack Lescoulie, later a regular on NBC's "Today," is Gleason's announcer.

Simon said he found a fifth installment of "The Jackie Gleason Show" with the others in the CBS vault, but that Gleason did not appear on that program. Robert Q. Lewis was the guest host.

"The characters seem a little rougher around the edges," Simon said of the early "Honeymooners" sketches, "and the plots are more complicated than they would become in the half-hour show.

"They were done live, and they didn't really have a specific amount of time to work with," the curator said. "So they could play around with the audience a bit."

Indeed, in one of the four programs in the museum series, the sketch has not been completed when time runs out, and in the next week's program, Gleason attempts to summarize what was left of the story. It is apparent from his narrative how complex the plot of the preceding episode was.

None of the plots of the four CBS shows were reworked for the syndicated series. In one, for instance, Ralph and Alice put a deposit on a new, luxury apartment. "It's not like moving to the moon or another planet or Jersey," Alice tells Trixie in an effort to console her friend. "It's just the Bronx."

The museum shows are coupled with Gleason segments from the "Cavalcade of Stars," although Simon said he had so far been unable to find "Honeymooners" skits from that earlier series.

"We have a lead, a writer from 'Cavalcade,' and we're trying to develop a relationship with him right now," the curator said.

Footnote: Three episodes from "The Twilight Zone" never broadcast in syndication are being offered to stations by Viacom Enterprises. The three programs are part of a "Twilight Zone Silver Anniversary Special" planned for broadcast from Oct. 2 to Nov. 12.

Two of the three episodes were written by Rod Serling, who was host of the series that premiered on CBS on Oct. 2, 1959. The third, "Miniature," is an hour-long show in which Robert Duvall plays a lonely bachelor who develops a relationship with a doll in a museum dollhouse.

Memorials have become performances

ENTERTAINMENT

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Last month's memorial services for Richard Burton and Truman Capote provided further evidence of a Hollywood trend: the final tribute as show business.

The practice may have started with the rites for Edgar Bergen in 1978. It was held in a Beverly Hills church with somewhat traditional eulogies by Johnny Carson, Ronald Reagan and others.

Another tribute was given by Jim Henson, creator of the Muppets and a longtime Bergen fan. He came to the pulpit accompanied by — Kermit the Frog.

"This is the first time I ever played a funeral," said Kermit.

The new kind of memorial, often organized by producers or agents of the departed stars, has turned into something akin to an Irish wake combined with a Dean Martin roast.

The Burton memorial was held not in a church but in a theater — the Wilshire, where the Welsh actor made his last stage appearance nine months ago in "Private Lives." The curtain was up, disclosing the set for "Brighton Beach Memoirs," the theater's current attraction.

Half of the audience consisted of fans and curiosity seekers, allowed inside just before the program started. They heard a series of reminiscences — most of them funny — by actors, directors and journalists. The only religious note was provided by a Welsh church choir which sang hymns.

John Huston flew in from Puerto Vallarta to speak for less than a minute. Richard Harris broke down and fled from the stage as he began his speech. He returned after a few minutes and read a somewhat incomprehensible elegy of his own composition.

The religious may be offended by the Burton event, though he had a more proper funeral at Celigny, Switzerland, after his death there Aug. 5. Others may find it a fitting farewell for an actor who loved storytelling and good times.

While not primarily a Hollywood figure, Truman Capote, who died here Aug. 25, was given a funeral last week that reflected the trend in tributes.

It was held in the nondenominational chapel of the Westwood Village cemetery with the author's favorite songs sung on recordings by Ella Fitzgerald, Frank Sinatra and Andy Williams. A cabaret-style singer played piano and sang tunes from the Capote musical, "House of Flowers."

The tributes, both tearful and funny, came from actor Robert Blake, author Christopher Isherwood, bandleader Artie Shaw, Joanne Carson (former wife of Johnny Carson) and others.

Most memorable of the recent memorials was the one for Ethel Merman last March at the Huntington Hartford Theater.

The audience cheered film clips of Miss Merman belting her famous songs and laughed at reminiscences by Bob Hope, Mary Martin and others. Many of the stories reflected Ms. Merman's raucous humor.

It was more of a performance than a memorial, but as one "mourner" remarked: "Wasn't Ethel the one who sang 'There's No Business Like Show Business'?"

The funeral has long been an important fixture of movie legend, dating back to the New York mob scene for Rudolph Valentino in 1926.

Among the most legendary of funerals was the one for Harry Cohn in 1958. The Columbia Pictures boss was a much hated man, yet a studio stage was filled with people for his last rites.

"Give the people what they want, and they'll turn out for it," Red Skelton cracked on his television show.

The star funeral has often been depicted in films, notably in "A Star Is Born," when fans tore the veil from the mourning Vicki Lester to get a better look, and later in Blake Edwards' "S.O.B."

Singer: You have to have guts to survive

NEW YORK (AP) — "I want you to know, dear, I'm a collector's item," says Julie Wilson, the toniest of the high-tone supper club singers, who now, after an absence of eight years, is again singing for her supper.

"It was like meeting an old friend. You pick up where you left off," says the woman who put her career on hold while she raised two sons and took care of her parents in Omaha, Neb.

Now with her family duties behind her, she's back in show business, and recently she sang the songs of Stephen Sondheim in a New York City nightspot.

Miss Wilson, who usually wears a beaded gown and a flower behind her left ear, resumed her career last January, singing Cole Porter. But the engagement was interrupted when she and Bobby Short were called upon to do a musical revue "Me and Julie" in Boston for two weeks in March.

"I adore Cole Porter, but when you get into Sondheim, you get into living," she says, lowering her deep velvet voice an octave. "With Porter, it's a big romantic bubble. It's provocative, saucy, chic and elegant.

"Most of Sondheim's things are cerebral. I mean you have to figure them out. You have to listen," she says. "If you want the most out of his music, you really have to work. The audience has to work."

Miss Wilson also finds Sondheim more difficult to sing.

"He does a lot of dissonance. I like minor. I like going against," she says.

Going against has been something she's done all her life, but she's always been able to survive.

"Guts I've always had. You have to. If you don't have it in this business, you don't belong. You may as well walk away because you have to take a lot of rejections," she says. "You have to land on your feet when nobody's around. You have to make it happen."

Miss Wilson never started out to be a singer. She wanted to be an actress.

"It's just that I could carry a tune, and I sang because I could make a couple of bucks," she says. "In Omaha, I sang with a local dance band."

She went to Omaha University to study drama but a touring edition of "Earl Carroll Vanities" lured her on the road. Off she went to Philadelphia, Boston, Newark and eventually Loew's State Theater in New York. When the show moved on, she didn't.

"When I started in New York, there was a nightclub on every corner. You didn't know what club to go to first — the Persian Room, the Empire Room in the Waldorf, the Versailles Room with Edith Piaf there every night, the Cotillion Room in the Pierre Hotel, the Blue Angel, the Bon Soir," she says. "I mean it was a bonanza. I'm glad I was around then."

Julie Wilson

She got jobs in the chorus at the Latin Quarter, and later at the Copacabana, where, for $75 a week, she did three shows a night, seven nights a week.

"It was a different business then. There was a lot of warmth," she says. "It was personal. That's what I miss. Everything was personal."

But Broadway also beckoned. In 1946, Miss Wilson made her debut in the revue "Three to Make Ready," which starred Ray Bolger. Through the late '40s and early 1950s, she replaced some of the original stars in such musical smashes as "Kiss Me Kate," "Kismet" and "The Pajama Game" before moving on to nightclubs.

Miss Wilson and Sondheim are not strangers. She's played major roles in touring and summer stock editions of "Gypsy" (Mama Rose is her favorite), "Company," "Follies" and "A Little Night Music."

"I'm rehearsing a number that my pianist picked out called "Now You Know,' from 'Merrily We Roll Along,'" she says. "Musically, it's tricky. A lot of changes. It has a lot of difficult intervals.

"I like its simplicity, honesty and the directness and the telling it as it is and then saying, 'OK, now deal with it.'"

She says the only way to rehearse Sondheim is to dive right in. Just do the whole number.

"You have to live with that music and live with those lyrics. That's the hardest thing," Miss Wilson says. "Sondheim is so intense, so totally intense. I get intense with it. When you're on stage and there's 2,000 seats, you have some room to travel with that intensity.

"But when the audience is as close to me as you are, that's a lot of intensity. It's like hitting them on the head. But that's Sondheim. There's no other way I can do it."

Photograph collector sells all to museum

By SUZANNE MUCHNIC
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — Blasphemy, thy name is Sam Wagstaff. The legendary collector of thousands of photographs, the urbane gentleman with an enchanted eye and a well-stocked bank account, the tall, slim, attractively graying New Yorker whose talent for spotting unknown artistry has been lauded across the country, has declared himself "bored to death with photography."

He recently sold his collection to the J. Paul Getty Museum.

It's shocking to hear of Wagstaff's disaffection — until he qualifies the declaration: "I'm bored to death with photographs I've seen reproduced 50,000 times. I don't want to see them again. I'm bored by photography, and therefore I seek strange pleasure in it. By that I mean things that you and I have not seen before and that you and I have not suspected existed. In the same sentence, one must say, 'Down with Renoir and up with James Ensor.' They are part of the same period, but, in my mind, the great, eccentric Belgian is better."

Does this attitude reflect an aesthetic point of view or a reaction to overexposure? "Both," he said.

The overexposure that most concerns Wagstaff is of "the type of photography one has to suffer through — preferably slowly in in a major museum, on one's knees." What excites him is "the preposterous and the vulgar and the surprise."

And will that perverse interest lead him to collect photography again? "I've already started, in a smaller way, buying photographs I like. And things acquired past a certain date still belong to me. That's a proviso in the contract with the Getty."

The museum has also agreed to let Wagstaff proceed with plans for two exhibitions, both combining works bought by the museum with his new purchases.

Wagstaff also hints at branching out in a new directions: "I would love to collect contemporary work, but it requires a terrible amount of effort. I would like to help institute regional centers for photography."

So — photography buffs will be relieved to note — the blasphemer may knock received wisdom about photography, but he has not kicked his habit. There is life after Getty for Wagstaff.

Samuel Wagstaff Jr., who was born to a family made wealthy by land and farming in California, became known in the art world as an art historian and curator. He has served as curator of paintings at the Wadsworth Atheneum in Hartford, Conn., and at the Detroit Institute of Arts. He now lives on the 27th floor of a 5th Avenue building overlooking Washington Square and keeps a print room on a lower level of the same high-rise.

Actress giving up soap opera role

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Suzanne Rogers is giving up her Emmy Award-winning role as Maggie Horton on NBC's "Days of Our Lives" when her contract expires Sept. 23.

Miss Rogers said she is leaving after 10 years because the heavy taping schedule of the daytime soap opera prevents her from accepting roles in prime-time television and in feature films. She said she is also leaving because the show recently has been concentrating more on the younger, newer characters.

• • •

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Sid Caesar, who kept television's first generation laughing, is now completing a book and videocassette to keep those older viewers in vigorous health.

Caesar is aiming his health and exercise program at senior citizens and traveling executives. "Youth is wasted on the young — except if you're in shape," he said.

He turned to exercise after he conquered his alcoholism. He found a new way of life. He now does 1,500 exercises a day, six days a week.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Move over, Kermit, here comes Big Bird. "Sesame Street" is now in production with its first motion picture.

"Sesame Street Presents: Follow That Bird" stars the entire cast of the show, but its primary focus is on Big Bird.

Carroll Spinney stars as both Big Bird and Oscar. Jim Henson and Frank Oz, who have brought Kermit, Miss Piggy and other Muppets to the screen, will play their best-known "Sesame Street" Muppets, Ernie, Bert, Cookie Monster and Grover.

Eastwood able to pull off 'John Wayneish' scenes

By DAVID ELLIOTT
Copley News Service

HOLLYWOOD — Of the small group of actors who became film stars in the mid-'60s, only Clint Eastwood has maintained box-office pull. Indeed Eastwood continues to define box office, at least at the sub-Spielberg level.

Watching his latest, most disturbing movie, "Tightrope," we wonder at his endurance. This gaunt, middle-aged man continues to be a virtual folk hero to millions of fans. They don't care that he has a tiny kit of acting tools, and he seems rather proud of it. "I finally got to the point," he told Norman Mailer, "where I had enough nerve to do nothing."

Eastwood, 54, was born in San Francisco, the future stomping ground (literally) of his Dirty Harry. He drifted up and down the coast with his father, who worked at gas stations. After a run of odd jobs, his whispery, Western sex appeal landed him the TV series "Rawhide." As Rowdy Yates he was a pin-up cowboy, seemingly destined for the limbo of fading TV stars. But Eastwood has brains and luck.

He went to Italy, then the land of Federico Fellini and Steve "Hercules" Reeves, and slipped profitably into the crack between. A colorful, excessive director named Sergio Leone saw in him the Yankee beef who would make the "spaghetti Western" special. Starting with "A Fistful of Dollars," Leone gave Eastwood a poncho, pistols, a cheroot cigar and enough glaring sun to cause a full-time squint. He didn't need to act. He only had to walk tall, look mean and shoot. The squint and scowl made the Man With No Name a man to be feared, a primal force closer in style to Jack "Wilson" Palance than his opponent Alan "Shane" Ladd.

Years later, Eastwood called his spaghetti debut "the first film in which the protagonist initiated the action — he shot first." In other words, moral command came out of the barrel of a gun. The Man With No Name was a man without tidy scruples, a man who shot varmints (and later urban "vermin") because his hot gun gave him the cold power to call the shots. Even when a villain was more humanly likeable, such as Eli Wallach in "The Good, the Bad and the Ugly," he was there to be a target.

IN REVIEWING "Tightrope," I wrote, "There's no other star who can pull off tense, John Wayneish moments so well." Eastwood isn't Wayne, but he echoes our nostalgia for Wayne in his potent self-sufficiency, his brazen coolness in danger, his teasingly easy skill with guns and fists, his ability to say more with a lip twitch or a squint than his enemies can verbalize.

Unlike the classic Western hero — the most interesting late variations were the hard but decent men that Randolph Scott played in Budd Boetticher's fine Westerns of the '50s — Eastwood is backed up by no code. He may work for the law, but no law gives him his authority. He's a lone wolf, and his rare, boyish smile doesn't hide his wolfish instincts.

Beginning with "Coogan's Bluff" (1968) and then the bashingly popular "Dirty Harry" (1971), Eastwood fell under the sway of another mentor, veteran director Don Siegel. He put the spaghetti hero in an urban context, dumped Leone's pasta in favor of terse, jabby styling and made nihilism seem like a kick. In cynical '70s America, with powerful, venal "creeps" above and street-mean "scum" below, all caught up in the same rip-off game, the mission of the Eastwood character was simply to hit back hard and clear a little space for himself in a thankless world. For rest and recreation, he sometimes had women.

Unlike Wayne, Scott and even James Stewart in "Winchester .73," Eastwood in his hardest, most money-making mode is purely equated with his gun (most humorously in the films' phallic advertising). He says even less than they do, and what he says is different. "That'll be the day" became Wayne's intransigent code phrase, the remark of a gruff, rueful survivor. "Go ahead, make my day" became Dirty Harry's calling card to victims in "Sudden Impact" (1983), urging them to commit suicide with his assistance.

Unlike Wayne, Scott and even James Stewart in "Winchester .73," Eastwood in his hardest, most money-making mode is purely equated with his gun (most humorously in the films' phallic advertising). He says even less than they do, and what he says is different. "That'll be the day" became Wayne's intransigent code phrase, the remark of a gruff, rueful survivor. "Go ahead, make my day" became Dirty Harry's calling card to victims in "Sudden Impact" (1983), urging them to commit suicide with his assistance.

What provoked critics from the start is not just Eastwood's minimalist acting, which is at best shrewd and at worst inept. It's his gut appeal, below the distinctions of criticism. His movies deal in loaded issues like corruption, rape, vigilante justice, terrorism, yet they don't open up our thinking. Real thought, beyond graffiti grunts like "Nothing's wrong with shooting as long as the right people get shot," would slow down his trigger finger and our breezily primal response.

When you hear the fans laughing and whooping as their lean, mean hero snarls a dispatch phrase and "wastes" a human target, the Pavlovian power of movies is exposed nakedly. There's a slumming underside in most action movies, an appeal to voyeurism, vengefulness and the tease of drawn-out danger. Eastwood, along with the brick-simple Charles Bronson, peeled away the romantic and ethical covers. The beast got loose.

TO HIS CREDIT, Eastwood has used his position a bit adventurously, gracefully directing an old-style Western "The Outlaw Josey Wales," showing some gift for interior motivation in "Play Misty for Me," making film craft count with Siegel in "Escape From Alcatraz." But those aren't his big hits, and when he does a Will Rogers number in "Bronco Billy" or gets maudlin in "Honkeytonk Man," his fans recoil — they don't want him to be a softie.

There's a gentle side to Eastwood the man, and it comes out in his scenes with his children: son Kyle in "Honkytonk Man," daughter Alison in "Tightrope." With them, the Dirty Harry armor slips off, and the warmth is real enough so that even the risky scene of Alison climbing on top of her dead-drunk father, comforting him with the kittenish mantle of her body, is the most moving moment in a harshly disturbing movie.

"Tightrope," which grossed $9 million its first weekend, is Eastwood's most daring film. As a New Orleans cop whose kinky sexual impulses and guilt are churned up by his work on a nasty rape-murder case, Eastwood for the first time has a really internalized disgust beneath his cynic's sneer. He's driven, doubting, semi-deranged, and his hard facade cracks open. The plotting is plodding, and there are pulp touches — do we need the scene with the severed arm? — yet it isn't abstract or anomic. It moves Eastwood off the firing range of deadhead fantasy into something like life.

Still, since the film blatantly uses the vulnerability of women and the helplessness of children, and wraps everything up in brutal action, let's not hand out any awards. If Eastwood isn't to be glibly condemned, that still doesn't justify the bowing and scraping that goes on in revisionist pieces like the recent Los Angeles Times article by Tom Stempel, praising Eastwood's use of "strong" women.

Actresses like Tyne Daly in "The Enforcer," Jessica Walter in "Play Misty for Me," Genevieve Bujold in "Tightrope" shine because their talent outstrips Eastwood's, not because their parts are truly complex. When Stempel praises Sondra Locke as the rape victim gunning for revenge in "Sudden Impact" — Pauline Kael pegged her as "Dirty Harriet" — he belly-flops into a shallow pool. Eastwood doesn't move male viewers "to sympathize with a woman who is killing men." They're just getting the usual macho jollies, but in drag guise, from an actress whose talent is on Clint's semi-robotic level.

Eastwood shows some insides in "Tightrope," but he's still the mighty avenger, the king of the kill. And his fans still lap up his patented moments, the tense wirings of sadistic suspense followed by the Magnum discharge. He may be cracked marble, but he's on a manly pedestal, pointing a gun. You can admire Eastwood for using his middle age — though what choice does he really have? — and yet, beneath the facial sags and the night sweats of fear, he's the same stud.

UNLIKE BRONSON, Eastwood isn't complacent in his career, but there's a core complacency in his audience. "Let Reagan be Reagan" was a phrase in the 1980 campaign, and Clint's constituency says, "Let Eastwood be Eastwood." They like his cool, his contemptuousness, his easy brutality. Do they even notice that in "Tightrope" his character is a bit of a dummy?

West Germans don't think romance over

AP Laserphoto

West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, right, and West German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrick Genscher, left, laugh prior to the start of a cabinet meeting Wednesday in Bonn. The meeting was held to discuss the cancellation of East German leader Erich Honecker's trip to West Germany.

BONN, West Germany (AP) — Bonn officials say they do not think the recent romance between the two Germanys is over, despite the decision by President Erich Honecker of East Germany to scrap a planned visit to West Germany this month.

West Germany believes relations between Bonn and East Berlin will "further develop," said Philipp Jenninger, the Bonn chancellery aide who has led recent negotiations with the Communist East German government.

"We expect that the dialogue, which is wanted by both sides, will be continued," Jenninger said in an interview Tuesday with West German television.

The West German government avoided publicly linking Moscow to East Germany's decision, but officials privately said there was no question that Soviet disapproval was the main reason for it.

Bonn does not expect the postponement to harm relations, Jenninger said.

Chancellor Helmut Kohl of West Germany said earlier Tuesday that he was "optimistic" that detente between the two Germanys would continue.

The official East German news agency ADN announced on Tuesday that Honecker would not visit West Germany this month. But both Bonn and East Berlin took pains to indicate that the trip had been indefinitely postponed, not canceled.

The visit had been announced by West Germany but was never officially confirmed by East Germany. Bonn officials said it had been set for Sept. 26-29 at East Germany's suggestion. They said they had no idea when Honecker might reschedule the trip.

Bonn officials stopped short of directly accusing the Soviets of forcing Honecker to back out of the trip. But Jenninger said in the television interview that a recent Soviet media campaign against West German overtures to East Germany "may have contributed" to Honecker's decision.

The Soviet Union has claimed a militaristic Bonn wants to liquidate and undermine its Communist East German neighbor.

No East German president has visited West Germany since Germany was divided into two states following World War II, and the Kohl government had hoped the visit would crown more than a year of unusually good feeling between the two Germanys.

During the past 15 months, Bonn has guaranteed two huge bank credits worth a total of about $700 million to cash-strapped East Germany.

East Germany responded by dismantling automatic weapons along half of the intra-German border, relaxing some rules limiting travel back and forth, and allowing about 27,000 of its citizens to emigrate.

East Germany had some hopes for the visit, too, and fears that they might not be realized may have contributed to the decision to postpone it, one West German expert said Tuesday.

Klaus Boelling, who was West Germany's chief representative in East Berlin in 1981-82, said East Germany may have been put off by indications that Bonn would not discuss recognizing East German citizenship, opening a full-fledged embassy in East Berlin or closing down a West German center that keeps track of East German human rights abuses.

Shamir, Peres try to reach agreement

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir and rival leader Shimon Peres were ready today to try to work out agreement on a Cabinet and other details of bipartisan government, according to spokesmen for both men.

Negotiators for Shamir's Likud bloc and Peres' Labor Party, Israel's two main political parties, on Tuesday reached a "preliminary agreement" on forming such a coalition government, said the spokesman, Yossi Ahimeir.

Shamir has been caretaker prime minister since nationwide elections on July 23 left neither party with a majority in the Knesset, Israel's parliament.

Israel radio on Tuesday reported a compromise proposal in which Shamir and Peres would each serve as prime minister for 25 months, with Peres taking the post first. Each would serve as deputy premier and foreign minister in the government led by the other, the radio reported.

Israel radio said Tuesday that Labor would hold the defense portfolio for the government's entire term but Likud would appoint a deputy defense minister.

Ahimeir said on Tuesday that Shamir and Prime Minister-designate Peres decided to meet today to "approve the results" of lower-level negotiations between the two parties.

"If there was no certainty that such an agreement could be reached, they would not be meeting," Ahimeir said.

A deadlock over Cabinet appointments and differences on a national policy of Jewish settlements in the Israeli-occupied West Bank of the Jordan River threatened on Sunday to collapse the negotiations for a new government.

"There is no doubt the Likud went a long way since Sunday" in meeting Labor's demands, Ahimeir told The Associated Press on Tuesday.

Ahimeir said the two leaders have to decide on details of a Cabinet, but he did not elaborate. He declined to comment on the Israel radio report on Tuesday.

A Labor Party spokesman, Yossi Beilin, told the AP: "The main things to be concluded now are the make-up of the cabinet. We have reached agreement on most policy issues."

Ahimeir said the decision to again hold top-level talks came after hectic consultations between Likud and Labor and mediation by the National Religious Party, a crucial swing faction.

That arrangement described by Israel radio appeared to be virtually the same as one reportedly reached last week, a plan Shamir reportedly rejected under pressure from his party.

Two legal experts from Likud and Labor were reported to be drawing up a plan dealing with those West Bank settlements already approved but not yet built, and on the development of existing settlements.

The new government's expected austerity measures are likely to shrink expenditures.

Bomb explodes outside South African court

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — A bomb exploded next to the Rand Supreme Court Building in downtown Johannesburg today after a policeman spotted it on the seventh floor and rushed it outside, police said.

There were no immediate reports of casualties in the explosion, which occurred shortly after 10 a.m. local time just as the courts were scheduled to convene. The building is the site of many of the white minority-ruled nation's trials of people accused of trying to overthrow the racial separation system known as apartheid.

Police cordoning off the busy neighborhood told The Associated Press that the bomb was believed to have been a limpet mine, a hand-carried explosive with a timer that is a favorite with black nationalist guerrillas.

At about the time of the blast, former Prime Minister P.W. Botha was elected South Africa's new state president under a new constitution giving the first national political role to the nation's mixed-race and Asian minorities, but ignoring blacks. Asian and mixed-race legislators were sworn in Tuesday following elections last month. Botha's election was in Cape Town.

Earlier today, an explosion thought to be a bomb damaged a power station and knocked out electricity to rural areas of northern South Africa.

The explosion at the power substation two hours before dawn echoed over the town of Rustenburg, 62 miles northwest of Johannesburg, according to Fanie Terblanche, a spokesman for the national power company, Escom. He said eight towns and several mines in the area were without power, and repairs were not expected to be completed until nightfall.

He said the company suspected the blast was caused by a bomb, but he could not say for sure until police finished their investigation.

Police firing rubber bullets and tear gas on Tuesday drove off crowds of looters and arsonists plundering wrecked shops in three black townships.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Report paves way for set of laws on test-tube babies

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — A recommendation this week that two frozen embryos be destroyed was just a small part of a study intended to help society deal with the dilemma posed by creation of life in a laboratory.

The report paves the way for what officials say will be the first uniform set of laws on test-tube children.

On Monday, officials announced that a committee of scholars had recommended the destruction of two frozen embryos left in limbo at Queen Victoria Medical Center in Melbourne by the death of a wealthy Los Angeles couple who had been trying to have a test-tube baby.

But the study, two years in preparation, goes beyond that issue, and suggests ways for society to catch up with science's ability to create and alter life.

"It is high time the law caught up with science," said Jim Kennan on Tuesday. He is attorney general of the state of Victoria, which appointed the committee.

Car bomb injures minister

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Selim Hoss, the minister of education and labor, escaped a car bomb assassination attempt that killed four people and injured 25 in mostly Moslem west Beirut today, police said.

Hoss, 55, a former prime minister, suffered slight cuts on his face and head from flying glass, police said. He was rushed to the American University Hospital where his superficial wounds were cleaned and bandaged, and he was treated for shock, police said.

"I am perfectly well," Hoss said in a recorded bedside message to the nation broadcast by Lebanon's state radio. "This is not the first crime in the Lebanese crisis, but I hope it will be the last."

Hoss was in his black limousine approaching the house of Lebanon's chief Sunni Moslem religious leader in the seaside Rouche neighborhood when another car laden with an estimated 245 pounds of explosives was detonated by remote control, police said.

Freighter rescues crew

FALMOUTH, England (AP) — A Belgian freighter today rescued the eight-woman crew of a yacht that caught fire during a trans-Atlantic race, the British coast guard reported.

Coast guard spokesman Peter Baker said the women were sailing their 45-foot yacht Mascaret Steinberg from Quebec, Canada, to St. Malo, France, when the fire broke out.

As it burned out of control, they abandoned ship some 600 miles west of Land's End at England's southwest tip, Baker said. On doing so, they activated a satellite distress signal, which beams a position report to shipping authorities.

None of taxing entities exceed 8 percent

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

ODESSA — One year after Ector County's tax rollbacks, none of the Petroplex's governmental entities have set their tax rates above that magic 8 percent level.

Same time last year, the county and its school district were hearing rumblings from taxpayers about tax rates which exceeded the previous year's effective rate by more than 8 percent.

By mid-December, both found themselves embroiled in futile struggles to convince taxpayers these tax rates were warranted.

On Jan. 21, nearly 65 percent of voters going to the polls cast their ballots for rollbacks that cost the county about $900,000 and the ECISD more than $2 million.

One year later, the county has only the formal vote left before ratifying a budget which calls for no change in its effective tax rate. The school district, because of the rollback provisions, had an extra year to make its cuts and only recently settled on a budget.

Elsewhere, the city of Odessa approved a budget that exceeds last year's by less than 4 percent. Odessa College's Board of Trustees set the district's tax rate at 7.78 percent above last year's effective rate.

In Midland, the MISD approached, but did not go above, the 8 percent ceiling — setting its tax rate at 7.59 percent above last year's effective tax rate. The college district exceeded its rate by three percent.

Coming closer than any other Midland/Odessa entity, the city of Midland's effective tax rate has been set 7.94 percent above last year's. And the county is in the final phases of its budget process and headed toward a 7.14 percent increase in its effective rate.

Implications of the rollback provisions have gone statewide. Ector County Judge Jan Fisher pointed to legislation from the special session which exempts school districts from rollbacks provided the reason the district exceeds the rollback rate is to offset the loss of state aid.

Lobbying efforts will likely sprout more rollback-prompted laws in the coming legislative session.

Ms. Fisher said she did not plan a repeat of last year during her term in office, though she emphasized different elected officials might see things in a different light.

In November 1983, the county cut nearly $1.86 million from its budget to avoid anticipated deficit spending and replenish depleted cash reserves. This move preceded the $900,000 in cuts forced by the rollback.

"The rollback just added emphasis to the way things needed to be," said Ms. Fisher. New management policies and incentives for early payment by major oil companies have the county convinced it can provide services without an increase in the effective rate in 1984-1985.

While the county appears to be through its economic hard times, the ECISD's money worries have only begun.

The district's tax rate for the coming budget year was set by last year's rollback. Next year, the ECISD will be faced with adding programs mandated by House Bill 72 at an estimated cost of at least $5 million.

But Dr. Bill Walker, ECISD business manager, said every effort would be made to keep from raising the rate for 1985-86.

"I don't think our school board has wanted to increase taxes just for the heck of it," said Walker. "We've got a real challenge ahead for 1985-86."

"Everybody's kind of keeping it under 8 percent (this year). This might be a play-it-safe attitude," said Walker, adding that economic conditions and legislative edicts also play a part in budget decisions.

Walker said the ECISD's quarrel was with the legislature, which he said "always leaves us between a rock and a hard place." While the HB 72 mandates figure to cost at least $5 million, Walker expected only $600,000 more in state aid next year.

Rollback organizer Bill Norton admitted a small victory, but noted the governmental entities continue to raise the taxes up to the 8 percent limit with no safeguards.

"They know they can go that and we don't have any alternative," said Norton.

Noting that the governments increased budgets each year, Norton said "They get more money every year. They're the only business that does."

He wondered why federal and state tax increases were opposed, while local entities continued to up their revenues.

"If the community grows, their taxes grow. If the community drops back, their taxes should drop back. But they never drop back," said Norton.

He suggested last year's rollbacks might have gotten the message across to elected officials. "I just hope from now on they come to the people and ask when they want to build things."

"Somebody had to say whoa," said Norton, "I think we were successful in that."

Car arson high, says marshal

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Of the almost 200 automobile fires reported in Midland County in 1983, about 50 percent are believed to have been deliberately set.

But it's not as bad as a few years ago, when the energy crisis and rising gasoline prices found many of the larger "gas-guzzlers" flaming on isolated country roads, according to the Midland fire marshal.

"I feel that it's higher than that," Jerry Petree said of the 50 percent arson rate. "But our arson seems to be down right now."

People set fire to their cars — before calling police and reporting it as stolen — usually for three reasons, Petree said: financial, mechanical and spite, often domestic.

"I'VE BEEN OUT and investigated some (car fires) where there wasn't any oil in it," Petree said, "and once when there was no battery."

"History has shown us that in uncertain economic times there is an increase in the number of vehicle fires," according to a research paper on national fire/arson investigations, prepared in part by Hilario M. Dominguez of the Midland Fire Department. "Today it is a problem of gigantic magnitude in the United States. Approximately 500,000 vehicle fires occur yearly."

Loss through vehicle fires "is nominal compared to other losses" such as car accidents, Petree said. "But our rates are governed by insurance and you and I are paying for this.

"Car fires are a problem to the fire service due to the fact that so many of them are set," he said.

In the Midland Fire Marshal office, Petree, the assistant fire marshal and the four inspectors are all certified arson investigators. This means they have been through the police academy and are considered an arm of the law enforcement.

"Origin and cause is the name of the game," Petree said.

ALL FIRES ARE thoroughly investigated, he said. If one is believed to have been deliberately set, it then becomes a criminal investigation. And while prosecution rates may not be as high as officials want, the system has taken steps to fight vehicle arson.

In 1974, legislation was passed adding vehicles to arson laws. Prior to that, it was the "No Claim, No Crime Act," Petree said. "You could burn your house but if you didn't turn in a (insurance) claim form, there wasn't a durn thing we could do about it."

Today, if someone is found guilty of torching their possessions, which include the old family car no one wants to buy, it's a second-degree felony. If a firefighter or anyone else is injured as a result of the fire, it's a first-degree felony.

And other methods have been implemented to cut down on arson.

The Midland Fire Department posts signs at sites of fires thought to be caused by arson. The signs give a 24-hour hotline number (684-6333) and offer a $1,000 reward for information leading to the arrest and conviction of those responsible.

Statistics breaking down the reasons for all arson fires indicate they are set for vandalism (42 percent), spite (23 percent), pyromania (14 percent), profit (14 percent) and to cover another crime (7 percent).

Although a 325 percent increase in arson has been recorded on the national level in the last 10 years, giving it the distinction of the fastest growing and costliest in total dollar loss of any crime, at least half of the vehicle fires are accidental, Petree said.

PRECAUTIONS SUCH as carrying a fire extinguisher and proper maintenance are about the only safeguards one can take against an accidental vehicle fire, he said.

Fires are most likely to begin in the following places:

— Fuel system. According to Petree, the rubber hoses often deteriorate and result in a fuel leak. Some people who change their fuel filters may not get the filter clamped properly, also resulting in leakage. Persons who take the air breathers off are only asking for a fire because if the car backfires and a fire starts, the filter isn't there to keep the fire confined.

Fire walls, however, located in front of the accelerator and brake, do help protect the passengers from a fire that begins in the engine compartment, the origin of a majority of vehicle fires.

— Electrical systems. Usually, a fire in this area occurs when the car's electrical system has been overloaded with additional equipment, Petree said. "A lot of times it wasn't done professionally, it wasn't properly installed and it caused an electrical short." Safety features in the factory electrical systems such as smaller wires and fused circuits, have reduced the occurence of this type of fire.

MC teachers' morale improved, survey shows

By RHONDA RIGENHAGEN
Staff Writer

A year ago, half the teachers at Midland College rated their morale as poor or bad. If the survey were repeated this year, a significant improvement in attitude would probably be shown, according to Van Johnson, president of the teacher organization that distributed the questionnaire.

Johnson, a business professor and president of Faculty Council, credited the improvement to positive reforms by administrators. Several procedures that had been causing resentment were changed as a result of the survey, he said.

The questionnaire, completed by 85 percent of the teachers, was circulated in October and released in the spring, according to management professor Ron Sweatt, who compiled the results. Among other findings, it was learned that 40 percent of the educators rated their morale as poor, 10 percent as bad, 23 percent as average, 11½ percent as excellent and 15½ percent as good.

Common complaints dealt with a new evaluation procedure, professors not being issued building keys, unnecessary paperwork and inconvenient office hours, Johnson said. Each of these issues has now been satisfactorily addressed.

"A new evaluation system was the number one thing causing anxiety on this campus last year. People don't like evaluations and they weren't really informed about it, so they feared it. Now that we have gone through it, we don't fear it as much."

"Those things are always very threatening to people, so I was not surprised" at the survey's results, said MC President Dr. Jess Parrish. "I would have been suprised if it had remained that low. You have ups and downs during the course of the year. Generally, student and faculty morale is very good.

"We have changed everything from the evaluation system to a lot of little things," he added.

Johnson said teachers are seeing a "significant" reduction in paperwork, being issued building keys and being allowed to have some say and flexibility in setting office hours.

"Little things like this add up." If the survey were conducted again, he said, "I would think there would be a change. I would hope, because of the changes that were made, that overall attitude would be better."

Although perhaps not reflecting positively, the survey's results were well received by the administration. "The president valued it enough that he did meet with us to go over every item of the survey. I think Dr. Parrish took it in a good light. Obviously, we didn't get all the changes we wanted, but it did inform him about what the faculty was thinking."

Researcher studies tourism

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Travelers are on a spending spree in Texas, making tourism the state's second-leading industry, a Texas A&M University researcher says.

"We take tourism for granted, yet in spite of two energy crises over the last decade and an inflationary economy, we are riding the crest of a spending spree that is without precedent in the world," Carlton Van Doren said Tuesday.

Van Doren is gathering information on all local, state and regional and national parks to be used for park planning and justifying expenditures.

Tourism, worth $13.7 billion a year, is the state's second-leading industry, trailing only oil in Texas.

Hotels, motels, restaurants, airlines, buses, parks, recreation facilities, souvenir shops, service stations and even convenience stores are involved in tourism, Van Doren said, but few know how much of their business is attributable to tourists.

"The industry is out there in bits and pieces that aren't working together as cohesively as they could be," Van Doren said Tuesday. "Additional research could help pull the pieces together, but that will take time and additional support."

Researchers only recently began studying tourists, said Leslie M. Reid, head of the Texas A&M department that is putting more emphasis on tourism development and preparing students for the industry.

"We've all got a little bit of that Willie Nelson spirit in us," Reid said. "I can remember World War II when we had gas rationing, coupons, a 35 mph speed limit, and nobody really could get out of the city unless it was in emergency.

"After the war, there was a pent-up madness to travel and people literally exploded out of the cities. We just had to get away. It's really never stopped since."

School of X-ray Technology in hospital at Big Spring celebrates anniversary

From Staff Reports

BIG SPRING — Malone-Hogan Hospital's School of X-ray Technology in Big Spring, is celebrating its 10th anniversary with the graduation of three technologists and matriculation of four new students.

Twenty-eight radiologic technicians have been trained in the two-year hospital-based program since it opened in 1974, according to Dr. Buerk Williams, founder and medical director of the school.

Williams, a radiologist associated with Malone and Hogan Clinic, emphasized the importance of the school to health care in West Texas.

With the exception of four technologists who are practicing at hospitals in England, Dallas, Plano and Longview, the technologists trained at Malone-Hogan have remained in West Texas, he said.

They have been hired by Midland Memorial Hospital, Odessa Memorial Hospital, Lubbock's Southpark Hospital, San Angelo's Shannon Memorial Hospital, Big Spring's Veterans' Administration, State Hospital and Malone-Hogan Hospital and by private medical practices in Big Spring and Midland.

The Big Spring school was established by Malone and Hogan Clinic to ease the problem of finding qualified radiologic technologists, Williams said.

"In 1974, we were looking at the new Malone-Hogan Hospital and Clinic to be opened soon, perhaps doubling the workload of our old facility," Williams said. "We had to plan for increased manpower."

He described the recruiting situation as "impossible" before the area school was established."

"We would go months and months without applications and the ones who did apply we might not be interested in," he said, adding sometimes a Big Spring native would return after working elsewhere.

Five of the six radiologic technologists now employed at Malone-Hogan Hospital were trained at the hospital's own school.

Graduates of Malone-Hogan Hospital's School of X-ray Technology for 1984 are Lynn Shipman and recipient of the outstanding second year student award Frances Thorns, both of Big Spring, and Charlotte Halfmann of St. Lawrence. The three will work at Malone-Hogan Hospital and Midland Memorial Hospital.

"Area hospitals in recent years have sought out graduating students from Malone-Hogan's school because their predecessors have been such competent and hard working technologists," Williams said. "The school is well known within a 200-mile radius of Big Spring."

With the exception of one, all of the graduates who have taken the national registry exam have passed, he said. Certification from the exam is accepted worldwide as documentation of proficiency in X-ray technology.

The school, accredited by the Joint Review Committee on Education in X-ray Technology, is one of more than 800 that operate in the country, Williams said. About a third of the schools are hospital-based.

Most of the students live within a 50-mile radius of Big Spring, he said. The four students accepted for the 1984-85 training period are from Big Sping, Sterling City and Lamesa.

Applications for the two-year training period that will begin in August 1985 are now being accepted from prospective students. The school operates three annual semesters of 16 weeks each.

Starting salaries for graduate radiologic technologists are about $850 to $900 per month, Williams said. Salaries increase automatically when the graduate passes the national registry examination.

Prerequisites for acceptance into the program are high school diploma or G.E.D. and American citizenship. For applications and more information, contact Program Director Carlos Gonzalez at Malone-Hogan Hospital, 1601 W. Eleventh Place, Big Spring, Texas 79720, or call (915) 263-1211, extension 190.

"We want to accept four students next year, but if we have five strong candidates, we would take five," Williams said.

Tuition for the two-year program is $400. Books cost about $200 and uniforms another $80-$100. Financial aid is available through two annual tuition scholarships from the Malone-Hogan Hospital Auxiliary and occasional loan aid from the Malone-Hogan Foundation. The school is approved for G.I. Bill of Rights loans.

Follow-up to cancer study to be completed

From Staff Reports

During the first two weeks of September, a volunteer group of Midland residents will call on families to complete the first phase of follow-up work to Cancer Prevention Study II (CPS II), a large-scale, long-term research project of the American Cancer Society.

The study, the largest of its kind ever undertaken, is examining the lifestyles of more than 1.2 million Americans to learn about possible relationships of cancer to such personal and environmental factors as nutrition, medication, occupational exposures, pollution, low-level radiation, low tar and nicotine cigarettes and passive smoking.

"Though the scientists are not able to report on definitive findings about cancer development and prevention this early in the study, data from this first follow-up will allow them to make preliminary analyses about potential cancer risk factors in our lifestyles and environment," said Carmen Edwards, chairman for the Midland unit.

Information obtained in this follow-up and subsequent ones will be added to baseline data that already has been collected and computerized to enable researchers to begin the process of data analysis. Two other follow-ups are scheduled for September 1986 and 1988.

CPS II began in September 1982, when 75,000 "volunteer researchers" of the cancer society enrolled more than 1.2 Americans as participants. In Midland, 52 volunteers enrolled 586 residents, primarily families and individuals whose whereabouts would be known to them over a long period of time.

During the September follow-up, the volunteers will check those Midlanders enrolled to verify addresses and any name changes. They will also report on the deaths of any participants since the study began. This information will update the CPS II data bank, which stores all the information contained in the questionnaires.

"We intend to keep track of all participants during the course of the study," Ms. Edwards said. "Because of the energy and dedication of volunteers involved in the study and the overall interest in cancer prevention expressed by the participants themselves, our follow-up goal of 100 percent should be easily reached."

By the completion of the third follow-up, sufficient mortality records will have been accumulated. At that time, an analysis of suspected cancer risk factors will be made by comparing the number of deaths attributed to various cancers to answers in the questionnaires.

In the meantime, preliminary analysis of various topics covered in the CPS II questionnaires will be made. Researchers, for example, will examine current American eating habits, paying special attention to the consumption of those foods thought to lower cancer risk. They will also evaluate the public's use of products such as artificial sweeteners and vitamins and learn how smoking habits compare among various occupational groups.

The first analysis to be obtained from CPS II was a report on changing smoking patterns among Americans. Presented at the Fifth World Congress on Smoking and Health in July 1983, the report revealed a sizeable decrease in the number of current cigarrette smokers. Based on preliminary data from CPS II, it also showed a switch to filter cigarettes and low-tar brands among smokers.

CPS II is equal in size but wider in scope than the first cancer prevention study, which was conducted by the American Cancer Society from 1959 to 1965, then extended to 1972.

The study identified many factors related to the development of cancer and other diseases. It may best be remembered as the study which supplied evidence conclusively linking cigarette smoking to lung cancer, heart disease and other circulatory diseases.

Beginning of September Buddy Holly Week

By WILLIAM D. KERNS

LUBBOCK (AP) — For years, Charles Hardin "Buddy" Holly was remembered by many Lubbockites as simply another good old boy who danced to the beat of a different drummer back in the '50s, a theory which stunned both his fans and those laboring within the wide parameters of the contemporary music industry. For Buddy Holly was more, much more.

The number of what must be termed musical tourists spending their holidays flying from England or Germany or points even further away to visit not the Grand Canyon or Broadway or Universal Studios, but instead an isolated West Texas city called Lubbock — simply to see where a young man named Buddy Holly was born and raised — seems to mushroom each year. The president of the Buddy Holly Memorial Society even relocated to Lubbock. And no doubt all of these Holly fans continue to regard 1979 as the year Lubbock came of age, the first year a Buddy Holly Memorial Concert.And artist Grant Speed was commissioned to sculpt a lifesize bronze statue of Holly to be erected near the Lubbock Memorial Civic Center.

The statue was unveiled the following year, with Roy Orbison and Bo Diddley filling the Civic Center exhibition hall for another Holly Memorial Concert.

But this was not to be the end of the Holly celebration. There have been occasional problems in keeping the concert alive. Nevertheless, the first week of September — including Holly's birthday on Sept. 7 — continues to be treated as Buddy Holly Week by the city. Last year found the city keeping its promise to transform the area around the Holly statue into a Walk Of Fame honoring musicians hailing from Lubbock and the West Texas area.

MORALE

"I was glad the survey was done, because we try to respond to things like that," Parrish said.

The negative attitudes expressed in the survey are not typical for MC, Johnson felt. "At that time it was worse than it is normally because of the new evaluation. That was the straw that broke the camel's back."

Poor attitudes, he conceded, could have an adverse effect on the quality of education. "Any time your employees have bad morale it's going to show up in job performance, and our job performance is in the classroom. But we're professionals, and professionals try not to let personal feelings affect instruction. Indirectly, it's going to affect some, sure. We're not going to probably do quite as good a job and be as enthusiastic."

Police prevent Odessan's suicide

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Police managed to talk a 24-year-old Odessa woman out of intentions of suicide after she walked into her psychiatrist's office Tuesday afternoon threatening to kill herself.

According to police reports, the woman entered her doctor's office at about 4 p.m. Tuesday with a gun. She and the psychiatrist moved to his office, while the receptionist called police.

Police arrived and were told she was under medication. The officers entered the room and eventually calmed the woman to the point Maj. Floyd Garrett was able to take away the loaded .22 caliber revolver.

The woman, who resides on North Golder, was taken to Medical Center Hospital, where she was listed in critical condition in the intensive care unit this morning.

Mini-worshop preview of PEAKE course

A mini-workshop called "Creating a World That Works" will be held Saturday from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. at the Las Colinas clubroom at the intersection of Godfrey and Wadley.

The workshop is designed to give people an introductory taste of the human potential movement. Anyone who is plagued by doubt or self criticism can get a glimpse of what life would be like if all areas were working at their highest potential.

The workshop is a preview of the full PEAKE (Perceive, Experience, Acknowledge, Know, Expand) program, which is scheduled for the weekends of Oct. 5-7 and 13-14.

"The PEAKE experience has demonstrated its effectiveness in assisting hundreds of participants in reaching higher levels of consciousness, career advancement and improved personal relationships," said Dr. Lee Gibson, a former California public school teacher who organized PEAKE in 1975.

The full PEAKE program costs $450 per person with an advance deposit of $100, but this Saturday's mini-workshop costs $25.

Prosecutor arrested for alleged solicitation

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas County prosecutors are conducting an investigation into the arrest of a high-ranking assistant district attorney for allegedly soliciting a prostitute, officials say.

Kenneth Dean Carden, 36, chief felony prosecutor, resigned after he was jailed Friday night for allegedly offering an undercover police officer posing as a prostitute $100 for a sex act, said police Sgt. T.E. Williams of the Vice Control Division.

Carden, a wheelchair-bound attorney, gained national attention as the prosecutor in the initial trial of Lenell Geter, an E-Sytems engineer who was wrongly convicted of a Balch Springs armed robbery.

Carden did not deny Tuesday he offered the woman money but said he was working on an investigation of the murder of a pimp. He said he planned to tell the woman he was a prosecutor once she was with him and then elicit information from her in exchange for not pressing charges.

He was arrested at the scene. Police say they confiscated a loaded .45-caliber handgun and sex devices from his car. Police said he only had $2.20 with him and had the case file on the murder of the pimp with him.

Although Dallas District Attorney Henry Wade accepted Carden's resignation, Carden could be reinstated depending on the investigation, Wade said.

"The case is being investigated. He (Carden) may be reinstated pending the outcome of the case," said Wade in a statement released from Colorado, where he is vacationing.

A top assistant to Wade, Norman Kinne, told the Dallas Times Herald Wade's office is considering giving Carden a polygraph examination.

Carden, who was married just a few weeks ago, had been working on a murder case when he was arrested, said Assistant District Attorney Ryder Scott.

"I can assure you there is another side to the story," Scott said.

Carden told the Herald he was investigating a case. He said investigators sometimes get information from prostitutes by pretending to offer them money for sex, and then identifying themselves as prosecutors.

But Carden said he may have erred by not telling police or other officials about his intentions.

"I think I've overstepped my bounds on investigating this case," he said.

Carden said he did not know what job he would seek if Wade did not reinstate him but said a job as a defense attorney was out of the question.

"I won't represent criminals," he said.

Carden was arrested on a class B misdemeanor on the solicitation charge and was released on bail Saturday, officials said.

Mattox proposes new child abuse laws

AUSTIN (AP) — The state should consider some new laws to fight an increase in child abuse in Texas, including a surcharge on marriage licenses and forcing spouses to testify against each other, legislators are being told.

Attorney General Jim Mattox, testifying Tuesday before the joint legislative Committee on Child Abuse and Pornography, said the immunity granted one spouse from testifying against another is "a major obstacle to the successful prosecution of child abusers."

However, Mattox said, "I am confident that no one who supported spousal immunity when it was first included in our legal code years and years ago ever anticipated that it would become a way to protect child murderers or wife beaters."

Gerald Hill, an aide to Gov. Mark White, told the committee that the number of child abuse cases is growing.

"It's amazing, but it's true, that the number of child abuse cases reported between 1976 and 1982 have more than doubled," he said.

Hill said legislation to combat child abuse and neglect "is an important part of the administration's program" which will be proposed to the Legislature next year.

Hill and Laura Tynes of Waco, state president of the Texas PTA, both recommended that the Legislature consider establishing a children's trust fund.

Mrs. Tynes said such a fund could be created from a marriage license surcharge "with the very specific purpose of improving the lives of our children through the prevention of child abuse and neglect."

Mattox said that under current state law, one spouse may testify against the other only in cases of assault or violence against any child of either spouse.

"Prosecutors find that many cases of child abuse involve nieces, nephews, foster children or other youngsters who are not the child of either spouse. Under current law, spouses cannot testify against each other in these cases even when they want to," Mattox said.

Mattox proposed eliminating a spouse's immunity from testimony in cases of assault or violence against any member of a household.

Script for blind was officer's idea

One of the first scripts developed that the blind could read was devised early in the 19th century by a French artillery officer, Capt. Nicolas Barbier de la Serre, whose purely military problem was giving orders at night without talking or making a light.

Using thin metal plates, he worked out a comprehensive system of raised dots engraved between scored parallel lines.

Bush attacks Mondale on Central America

HOUSTON (AP) — Vice President George Bush is trying to score political points by attacking Walter F. Mondale on defense spending and Central America, but finds himself backtracking to correct and hedge some of his charges.

In a fiery speech Tuesday, Bush claimed the Democratic presidential candidate was advocating drastic cuts in defense spending. Later, Bush admitted he was not sure what Mondale was proposing but said he was sure it was less than President Reagan's plan.

Similarly, Bush also acknowledged he incorrectly quoted Mondale in describing the Sandinista government of Nicaragua. Even so, Bush said there wasn't much difference in the term Mondale used and the one he originally said Mondale used.

The incident stole some of the spotlight from Bush's main point — a charge that the Kremlin will not resume arms control talks until after the presidential election in hopes of getting a better deal from Mondale, the Democratic challenger for the White House.

After a night in Houston, Bush was flying today to Kentucky for a question-and-answer session with high school students in Paducah and groundbreaking ceremonies for a new library at Transylvania University in Lexington. They were the last stops on Bush's three-day campaign trip that also included visits in Illinois, Louisiana and Texas.

In College Station, Texas, Bush got a tumultuous reception from 2,500 students at Texas A&M University. They whooped, cheered, and applauded his war record, his college role as captain of his baseball team at Yale and the possibility he will be a candidate for president in 1988.

Criticizing the Sandinista government in Nicaragua, Bush shouted, "If you walk like a duck and you quack like a duck and you say you're a duck, you're a duck. They are Marxist-Leninists. They are not liberals as Mondale says."

Vice President Bush jokes with audience at Texas A&M about a bumper sticker which says "Honk if Mondale's promised you something."

At a news conference later, Bush said, "Maybe I used the wrong word" in quoting Mondale.

However, he said, "Our research shows that he doesn't want to call them Marxist-Leninists. He wants to call them leftists ...It's something less than they are. I don't see a great difference in my own semantical use."

Attacking Mondale's policy for the military, Bush criticized the Democrats anew for opposing the B-1 bomber and MX missile, and then claimed that Mondale wanted to "drastically cut spending" for the Pentagon.

Imports hurting Texas shrimp industry

DALLAS (AP) — Texas shrimpers are rapidly losing their share of the U.S. marketplace to imports from South American fish farms, and the head of the state's shrimp association says the industry's survival is at stake.

In the last 10 years, foreign imports have grown from 50 percent of all shrimp eaten in the United States to 73 percent, said Ralph Rayburn, executive director of the Texas Shrimp Association in Austin.

"Probably the greatest challenge that we face in the next five years is from farms established in underdeveloped countries like Ecuador, Colombia, Costa Rica and Brazil," Rayburn told the Dallas Times Herald.

"It will be a challenge for domestic harvesters of shrimp to continue to exist."

About $1.4 billion worth of shrimp is consumed annually in the United States, more than any other seafood.

The price of Gulf Coast shrimp landed on Texas docks from Brownsville to Galveston currently is $3 a pound, $1.25 less than last year's prices, the Times Herald said.

The National Marine Fisheries Service predicts that in 1984, Texas shrimpers will harvest 50 million tons of shrimp. But the value of the catch will be approximately $15 million less than 1982's harvest. That year, 44.5 million tons of shrimp were harvested at a value of $175.6 million.

Armand Farley, statistical agent with the National Marine Fisheries Service in Galveston, said imports are to blame. But he believes imports have a stabilizing influence on the market.

"Heavy imports have more to do with it than anything else," Farley said. "But if it were not for imports, shrimp would be $8 per pound and nobody could buy it."

Although the price of shrimp traditionally has fluctuated from year to year, shrimp prices have gone up more than 500 percent since 1967, twice the rate of inflation measured by the Consumer Price Index.

Restaurant owners differ in their opinions of foreign farm-bred shrimp.

"It's small, white and tasteless," said Jan Lovell, owner of seafood restaurant in Dallas. "The shrimp you get in natural waters tends to be pink and tends to be large. As a restaurant operator and owner, I feel the best shrimp we can get for our purpose is the Gulf shrimp."

"We do not use imported shrimp," said Errol Ratcliffe, another Dallas restuarant owner. "For what we do, the quality is not there, so we do not buy it."

But Ratcliffe believes imports are beneficial to consumers.

"I'm very much against limiting the imports," he said. "The fishing industry is the most deregulated industry already, and the only strong arm we have on the shrimpers...to keep from creating a monopoly situation, is imports."

Rayburn argues that because foreign governments subsidize their shrimp industries, foreign shrimp costs an average of $1 to $1.50 less when they are delivered to the United States than the same category of shrimp in Texas.

Rayburn said that Texas shrimpers would like the U.S. government to limit imports, allowing only the amount needed to come into the country. He envisions a "trigger mechanism" such as that used in the beef industry.

Texas shrimpers also face potential competition from domestic mariculture and shrimp farm programs, which currently are too small to be profitable, according to Addison Lawrence, shrimp farm expert at Texas A&M Research and Extension Service in Corpus Christi.

But Rayburn said he's not concerned about those programs.

"We can work together, and each of us can have a share of the market," he said.

For the future, Rayburn sees the shrimp market divided into gulf shrimp for restaurants, and farm-bred shrimp for fast-food chains.

"We're trying to maintain a focus on catching larger shrimp," Rayburn said.

Former ROTC cadet suing Air Force, colonel

AUSTIN (AP) — Billy Fox says he entered Air Force ROTC at the University of Texas to become a pilot.

"But I won't be flying planes, I'll probably be washing them," Fox said after he was ordered to report to Lackland Air Force Base as an enlisted man because he breached his ROTC contract.

After months of administrative and legal wrangling, Fox got the order on Tuesday.

The 22-year-old finance and accounting graduate, who was in the military honor society at UT, has brought suit against the Air Force and Col. Larry Smulczenski, commander of the Air Force ROTC program at UT.

The suit contends that the military fraudulently induced him to sign a contract and misrepresented his chances of becoming a pilot.

But Smulczenski and lawyers for the Air Force say it was Fox who breached the contract by not finishing his final semester of ROTC classes.

"...The contract states that the cadet is obligated to finish his studies. If he doesn't, he will go on active duty..."

— Col. Larry Smulczenski

"Billy Fox and his attorney have totally misread the contract," Smulczenski said.

"The contract is clear. The contract states that the cadet is obligated to finish his studies. If he doesn't, he will go on active duty. There are no administrative remedies. If he is medically qualified, he will serve," the colonel said.

Fox sought a prelminary injunction, but the motion was denied last week by U.S. District Judge James Nowlin. His lawsuit remains before the court.

In February 1982, Fox was one of 12 students selected for an ROTC program for future Air Force pilots at Texas. But between then and January 1984, his eyesight deteriorated, and he was told he no longer was medically eligible for pilot training.

Fox said that upon Smulczenski's recommendation, he changed his category from pilot to navigator. Smulczenski said he told Fox that his chances were good of enrolling in pilot training after he proved himself as a navigator.

"My only reason for going into the Air Force was to become a pilot — not a navigator or an enlisted man. That's the only reason I signed anything," Fox said.

Fox's lawyer, John Economidy, estimates that fewer than 5 percent of the navigators who want to become pilots make the transition. Fox said he decided, "I didn't want to be a navigator. I wanted out."

However, getting out of the Air Force has become difficult for ROTC students since a 1981 directive from Congress.

In arguments presented at the preliminary injunction hearing, assistant U.S. attorney Hugh Shovlin said Congress directed the Defense Department to order active duty in enlisted status for obligated junior or senior ROTC scholarship cadets who withdraw from an ROTC program.

Fox said he was not receiving a scholarship, however, and that he was prepared to return the $1,800 he had received from the military. The money was a monthly stipend of $100 Fox received for the 18 months he was enrolled in ROTC.

"They don't need me in the Air Force. If there was a war on, I wouldn't mind going in. But there's not," Fox said. "I was willing to pay them back the money, but they didn't want it. What they want to do is punish me, to make me an example."

Judge postpones jury selection in sanctuary trial

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — A federal judge will decide whether moving the trial of a Sanctuary Movement leader out of South Texas will enable him to get a fair trial.

U.S. District Judge Hayden Head Jr. Tuesday said he would take a change of venue request under advisement in the case of Jack Elder, who is charged in a three count federal indictment of transporting illegal aliens.

Meanwhile, Head postponed jury selection in Elder's trial, which was scheduled to begin next Monday.

Elder, 40, is accused of transporting undocumented Salvadorans from the Casa Oscar Romero halfway house in San Benito, where he is director, to a bus station in Harlingen five miles away. If convicted, he faces up to 15 years in prison and a $6,000 fine.

One witness testified Tuesday that a survey indicated it would be difficult for Elder to get a fair trial in the Southern District of Texas.

Defense witness Diane Wiley of the Minnesota-based National Jury Project told the federal judge that she and her staff had surveyed 100 Corpus Christi residents selected from a list of past jurors.

Ms. Wiley said survey results showed that 92 percent of those polled already had an opinion on Elder's guilt or innocence. Less than 65 percent of those surveyed said they felt they could be fair and 87 percent expressed negative attitudes toward the movement, she said.

Elder has been a leader in a nationwide sanctuary effort that offers assistance to Salvadoran immigrants fleeing violence in their homeland. He has also been an outspoken critic of U.S. policy in that region.

Last year he quit his teaching job in San Antonio and became director of Casa Oscar Romero, a church-sponsored refugee halfway house.

The telephone survey, with a 4 to 10 percent margin of error, cost $1,500 and was funded by the Rio Grande Valley Defense Fund, set up to pay Elder's court costs and legal fees.

Ms. Wiley said survey questions were designed to determine juror attitudes in four areas: Opinions on illegal aliens, knowledge of and contact with the Border Patrol and the Immigration and Naturalization Service, awareness of and attitudes toward the sanctuary movement and predisposition toward Elder.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Robert Berg questioned the objectivity of the defense-funded survey.

He charged Ms. Wiley with wording the questions to prejudice those sampled. Under cross-examination, Ms. Wiley said she had not conducted a similar survey in any other community and did not know if attitudes and opinions would be any different.

Police arrest man who may be responsible for robbing elderly

HOUSTON (AP) — A 19-year-old man believed to be the "doughnut bandit" who could be responsible for up to 60 robberies of elderly people has been jailed and charged with aggravated robbery, police said.

Eddie Lee Richardson was being held in the city jail on $20,000 bond Tuesday, Houston robbery detective S.L. Morrison said.

The "doughnut bandit" received his nickname after police said he used a box of doughnuts to convince a woman he was from Meals-on-Wheels, a program that distributes food to the elderly at their homes.

Morrison said Richardson allegedly told the woman he was delivering a meal, and forced his way into her home. Police said the bandit then threw the woman to the floor and searched the house for cash and valuables.

Officer kills ax-wielding man

PORT ARTHUR (AP) — A Port Arthur policeman shot and killed an ax-wielding man after the man charged two officers outside a grocery store, authorities said.

Pham Van Phuong, 30, was dead at the scene of the shooting Tuesday afternoon, Justice of the Peach Johnny Knowles said.

Police Chief Jimmy Newsome said the officer, responding to a disturbance call, fired a single shotgun blast at Phuong about 3 p.m. Knowles said the blast hit Phuong in the chest and stomach.

Newsome said "The man was attempting to attack the officer with a hatchet and knife despite (police) orders to put the weapons down," Newsome said. "He was shouting at the officers, saying 'Shoot me, kill me. I want to die.' The officer he lunged at fired one shot."

Bullock: Sales tax collections up

AUSTIN (AP) — Sales tax collections for the 990 Texas cities which impose the one-cent levy are up nearly 14 percent this year over last, according to a report from state Comptroller Bob Bullock.

For the year to date, payments have totaled $606.8 million, a 13.82 percent increase over the $533.1 million paid through the same period in 1983, Bullock said Tuesday.

Bullock also said $52.4 million was distributed to the cities Tuesday, reflecting taxes collected on sales made in July. That was up from the $41.2 million paid out in September 1983.

In the most recent payments, Houston received $8.6 million, Dallas $6.6 million and San Antonio $3 million. Austin's $2.6 million was a 64 percent increase over last September, and Fort Worth's $2 million was a 66 percent increase. Checks were also sent to the state's four metropolitan transit authorities. Houston's got $9.6 million, Dallas $8.2 million, San Antonio $1.5 million and Fort Worth $480,000.

Sites no longer on disposal list

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Low-Level Radioactive Waste Disposal Authority has removed two proposed sites in Archer County and one in Wilbarger County from consideration as disposal sites.

"We have determined these three sites do not meet the technical requirements for low-level radioative disposal points," said Tom Blackburn, director of special programs for the authority.

"We want to let the people of these communities know our decision," Blackburn said Tuesday.

For Working Couples: Entertaining with Elegance and Ease

With more than half of all females over 16 working outside the home, it is only natural to expect that responsibilities for meal planning and preparation would begin to be shared. This is, indeed, the case: not only are more men cooking and taking interest in meal planning, but men currently comprise 40% of the shoppers in supermarket checkout lines!

Along with the entry of men into the kitchen is a growing interest among couples in staying at home and having informal dinner parties. The result: a new wave of working couples who want to entertain at home with elegance and ease.

Fortunately, with a little list writing and advance planning, you can take care of most of the details for your dinner party beforehand. This way, you will leave plenty of time to relax and enjoy your guests. Probably the most important detail, besides cleaning up and setting the table, is preparing the dinner. Here, it is wise to spend time planning a menu that can be made in advance and served with little fuss.

As you plan your party menu, you will want to include some of these recipes from the kitchens of Welch Foods. Tasty, easy to prepare and pretty to look at, the recipes feature the fresh fruit taste of Welch's grape juices and jam. All can be made in advance and served at your leisure. Exotic and delicious, Chicken Breasts Indienne is as easy as it is elegant. Swedish Fruit Soup makes a colorful and refreshing beginning or end to any dinner. If you are having a brunch, Cinnamon-Grape Coffee is a full-bodied beverage that makes the most of the morning, yet is so simple it can be prepared in minutes. This spicy treat is also a perfect non-alcoholic drink for after dinner. Finally, for a new variation on a traditional theme for dessert, try the Very Berry Charlotte Russe.

Your guests will love the fresh taste and appeal of these recipes and you will love the time you save in serving them.

Chicken Indienne

Makes 6 to 8 Servings

- 1-3/4 cups Welch's White Grape Juice
- 1-1/2 to 2 tablespoons curry powder
- 2 egg yolks
- 6 pounds chicken parts
- Salt and pepper to taste
- 2 cups crushed cornflakes (6 cups whole flakes)
- 1 cup flaked coconut
- 1 tablespoon grated orange peel
- 2 teaspoons cornstarch

In a large shallow baking dish (use two if necessary), combine white grape juice, curry powder and egg yolks. Lightly season chicken with salt and pepper and add to baking dish. Cover and marinate in the refrigerator several hours or overnight, turning chicken occasionally. Preheat oven to 375°F. Drain chicken, reserving marinade. On plate, combine cornflakes, coconut and orange peel. Coat chicken with cornflake mixture; arrange on rack in shallow baking pan. Sprinkle with any remaining cornflake mixture. Bake 1 hour or until chicken is tender. Meanwhile, place reserved marinade in saucepan. Stir in cornstarch until smooth. Stir over low heat until thickened. Serve sauce with chicken. If desired, serve with chutney. Other nice accompaniments include brown rice, chopped cucumber and tomatoes marinated in yogurt (an Indian dish called raita) and green peas.

Swedish Fruit Soup

Makes 6 to 8 Servings

- 1-1/2 cups Welch's Purple Grape Juice
- 1-1/2 cups apple juice
- Generous dash allspice
- Generous dash ground cardamom
- 1/2 cup cantaloupe balls
- 1/2 cup coarsely chopped unpared apple
- 1 medium orange, sectioned, cut in chunks

- 2 teaspoons instant coffee
- Orange twists for garnish

In medium saucepan, combine grape juice concentrate, water, orange, cinnamon and cloves. Simmer 5 minutes. Add coffee; stir to dissolve. Strain into coffee cups. Garnish with orange twists. This spicy beverage goes especially well with fruit danishes, quick breads and butter cookies.

Very Berry Charlotte Russe

- 2 cups heavy cream, whipped
- 16 whole ladyfingers, split

In a large bowl, combine gelatin mixture, remaining grape juice, strawberries and orange juice. Chill, stirring occasionally, until mixture mounds slightly when dropped from spoon. Fold in whipped cream; turn into 9-inch springform pan lined with ladyfingers. Chill several hours or overnight. To serve, garnish with whipped cream and strawberries.

Safflower oil creates... HEALTH-PACKED DRESSINGS

Today's busy, health-conscious lifestyles are putting new focus on salads — from appetizers to desserts. Now it's time to pay attention to the health of the dressing. Wholesome salad ingredients can be turned into "junk food" if the dressing is saturated with heavy oils, and laden with lots of unnatural additives and flavors.

Here are some dressings that won't wilt the nutrition in your salads and can be served with various food combinations: Cucumber Dressing is delicious in salads of mixed vegetables and/or greens; Strawberry-Walnut goes best with fruit-and-nut salad; and Cleopatra is good with any type of salad, Caesar or not!

SAVORY STRAWBERRY-WALNUT DRESSING

- 1/2 cup sliced strawberries
- 1/3 cup water
- 1/4 cup safflower oil

- 1/2 teaspoon salt
- 1/2 teaspoon sugar
- 1/16 teaspoon garlic powder
- 2 tablespoons finely chopped walnuts

In the container of an electric blender place strawberries, water, safflower oil, vinegar, onion powder, salt, sugar and garlic powder. DILLED CUCUMBER DRESSING

Recipes with dill are not dull

By OLIVIA AND PAUL BENSEN
Copley News Service

If "dill" appeared in a word association test, most people probably would respond by saying "pickle." Dill's uses in the kitchen, however, go far beyond the pickling of cucumbers.

Anethum graveolens is an aromatic herb native to the Mediterranean region — but now grown in herb gardens around the world. Both the seeds and the leaves are used as seasonings.

Dill made its way to England before the Norman invasion of 1066. In both Old English and Middle English the herb was known as dile. For reasons now obscure, the word dill has become associated in British slang with silliness and sleepiness. In England the verb dill means to soothe or put to sleep. As a noun it indicates a simpleton or fool. As an adjective it means slow-witted or stupid.

In the kitchen, though, there's nothing dull about dill. It can be used to create a variety of sauces, vinegars and mayonnaises, and has a special affinity for fish, lamb, cauliflower and cabbage. A bit of dill adds a delicious pungency to sour cream, cucumbers, bean dishes and potato salad.

DILLY BEANS

4 lbs. string beans
5 cups white vinegar (5 percent acidity)
5 cups water
2 tsps. salt (or to taste)

In each of 10 (approximately) sterilized 1-pint canning jars, put:
¼ tsp. crushed red pepper
½ tsp. whole mustard seed
2 cloves garlic, cut in quarters
½ tsp. dill seeds

Wash and trim beans — use whole if they are small enough to fit in jars. ack beans fairly tightly in jars. In large saucepan combine vinegar, water and salt. Bringt to boil and pour liquid over beans, leaving ½-inch space at top of jar. Place inner (circular) part of lids on jars and place in boiling water bath for 5 minutes. When liquid has cooled, screw on outer rim of jar lids.

Makes approximately 10 pints.

DILL BREAD

1 cup small curd cottage cheese
3 tbsps. butter
2 tbsps. minced onion
3 tbsps. sugar
¼ cup water
6 tbsps. fresh dill (or 2 tbsps. dried)
1 tsp. salt
3 cups flour
1 egg
1 pkg. (1 oz.) yeast, dissolved in ¼ cup warm water

In medium skillet, melt butter over medium-low heat. Add cottage chese, onion, sugar, water, dill and salt and simmer, stirring constantly, until all ingredients are heated through and onion has started to turn translucent.

Remove to large bowl and beat in 1 cup of flour until mixture is smooth. Beat in egg, yeast and remaining 2 cups of flour until smooth.

Knead dough well; let rise until doubled in bulk, punch down and knead again. Place dough in 2-quart round casserole, let rise 1 hour and bake 40-45 minutes in 350 F oven.

DILL BUTTER SAUCE FOR SEAFOOD

¼ cup freshly snipped dill leaves
2 tbsps. shallots, minced
2 sticks (½ lb.) unsalted butter
1 tbsp. white wine vinegar
1 tbsp. freshly squeezed lemon juice
3 tbsps. dry white wine
Freshly ground white pepper to taste

In heavy saucepan, melt butter over medium heat until it just begin-sto sizzle. Add shallots and cook, stirring, 30 seconds.

Add all remaining ingredients and cook, stirring, another minute.

Serve hot over fish or other seafood.

Barbecued roast turkey truly memorable

For a truly memorable cookout, try serving Barbecued Roast Turkey.

BARBECUE ROASTED TURKEY
7 pound turkey
5 tbsps. Worcestershire sauce
5 tbsps. oil
1 tsp. liquid hickory smoke
½ tsp. paprika
⅔ cup apricot preserves

Place aluminum foil pan about the size of the turkey on grate of covered charcoal barbecue grill. Pile briquets around sides and light. When coals burn to grayish color, fill pan with water and place rack on barbecue. Tie legs of turkey together and secure wings; place turkey on rack over pan. Combine three tablespoons Worcestershire sauce, three tablespoons oil, liquid hickory smoke and paprika; brush over turkey. Cover grill and adjust vents to maintain medium low heat. (If fire is built with generous number of briquets, it may not be necessary to add any during cooking.) Cook, brushing turkey every half hour with Worcestershire sauce mixture, until turkey reaches internal temperature of 170-F. (1-1/2 to two hours). If turkey is browning unevenly turn occasionally. Press apricot preserves through sieve; combine with remaining Worcestershire sauce and oil. Brush over turkey and continue to cook 30-45 minutes until turkey reaches internal temperatuare of 185-F. Heat remaining apricot glaze and serve with turkey. Makes six to eight servings.

Barbecue Roasted Turkey is the star of this cookout.

Jellied meats rank among fanciest foods

By MERLE ELLIS

Jell-O salads are, it seems, not "in" in some circles. A sign over the desk of one food editor I know reads: "The only good Jell-O mold is a dead Jell-O mold!" I can understand where such sentiment comes from. Anyone growing up (as I did) in the Midwest consumed more than enough molded gelatin salads to develop either a strong dislike for or definite love of, same. I, personally, still like many, if not most, of them — even if they aren't "in."

What are "in" in gourmet circles are jellied meats — probably because they are so very European and have not been seen much in American markets. Markets in France and Italy take on the look of jewelry stores thanks to the gleaming, glistening array of jellied meats in the meat case. Jambon Persille, hunks of lean ham suspended with bits of fresh parsley in a clean, white wine jelly, is a favorite breakfast dish in the Burgundy region of France.

In the meat markets of Bolongna, Italy, different meats are found suspended in beautifully clear aspic, along with a garnish of colorful vegetables.

In Germany, a popular jellied meat product is schinken in aspic with mixed pickles.

I saw some schinkin recently at a fancy food show. They are, indeed, lovely: Chunks of lean ham with cauliflower and miniature corn suspended in an amber beer gelatin, beef in a wine gelatin with tiny whole mushrooms, all manner of meat and vegetable combinations suspended in jewel-like aspic. They inspired me to do some experimentation in my kitchen. My schinkin of summer sausage and cheese with dill pickles in jellied beer didn't work out too well, but the Jellied Ham in Parsley from my mother's recipe file was good, and the Creole Daube Glace from the late Leon Soniat's book, "La Bouche Creole," was fantastic. I was not surprised. Everything I have ever tasted from Leon's kitchen or his book has been fantastic.

CREOLE DAUBE GLACE
20 stuffed, sliced olives
1 cup finely-shredded cooked meat (roast or soup meat)
2 10½-ounce cans beef consomme
2 packages unflavored gelatin
1 bunch green onions, minced
2 tbsps. finely-chopped parsley
3 cloves garlic, finely chopped
2 tbsps. Worcestershire sauce
3 dashes Tabasco sauce
Salt, pepper to taste

Place the olives on the bottom of individual molds and put the chopped meat on top of them. Heat 1 can of the beef consomme and dissolve the gelatin in it. Add the remaining consomme, the green onions, parsley, garlic, Worcestershire, Tabasco and salt and pepper. Mix well and pour over the meat in the molds. Refrigerate until hard.

Guests can serve themselves at buffet dinners

Buffet dinners, a popular way of entertaining, should be planned so guests can conveniently serve themselves while still holding a dinner plate. For easier eating, one handy rule says none of the foods offered on a buffet should require any additional cutting with a knife.

Dessert can be offered with the rest of the buffet or served on a separate table for guests to enjoy later. Easy-to-serve desserts are excellent choices for buffet-style entertaining.

Chocolate Cherry Cheesecake Cups combine three favorite flavors — cheesecake, chocolate and cherries — in individual dessert cups.

Finger foods such as Easy Date Sticks are especially easy for buffet guests to enjoy.

CHOCOLATE CHERRY CHEESECAKE CUPS

16-oz. refrigerated ready-to-slice chocolate chip cookie dough roll
Filling:
1 cup sugar
¼ cup flour
2 (8-oz.) package cream cheese, softened
⅓ cup margarine, softened
1 tsp. vanilla
2 eggs
21-oz. can cherry fruit pie filling

Heat oven to 375-F. Line 24 muffin cups with paper baking cups. Slice well-chilled cookie dough into 24 slices. Place slices in bottom of muffin cups. Set aside.

In large bowl combine sugar, flour, cream cheese, margarine, vanilla and eggs; beat one minute at medium speed. Top cookie slice with cream cheese mixture, filling cups 2/3 full. Bake 35-45 minutes or until toothpick inserted in center comes out clean and tops are light golden brown. Cheesecakes will form natural indentation in centers. Cool completely. To serve top with cherry filling. Refrigerate leftovers. Makes 24 servings.

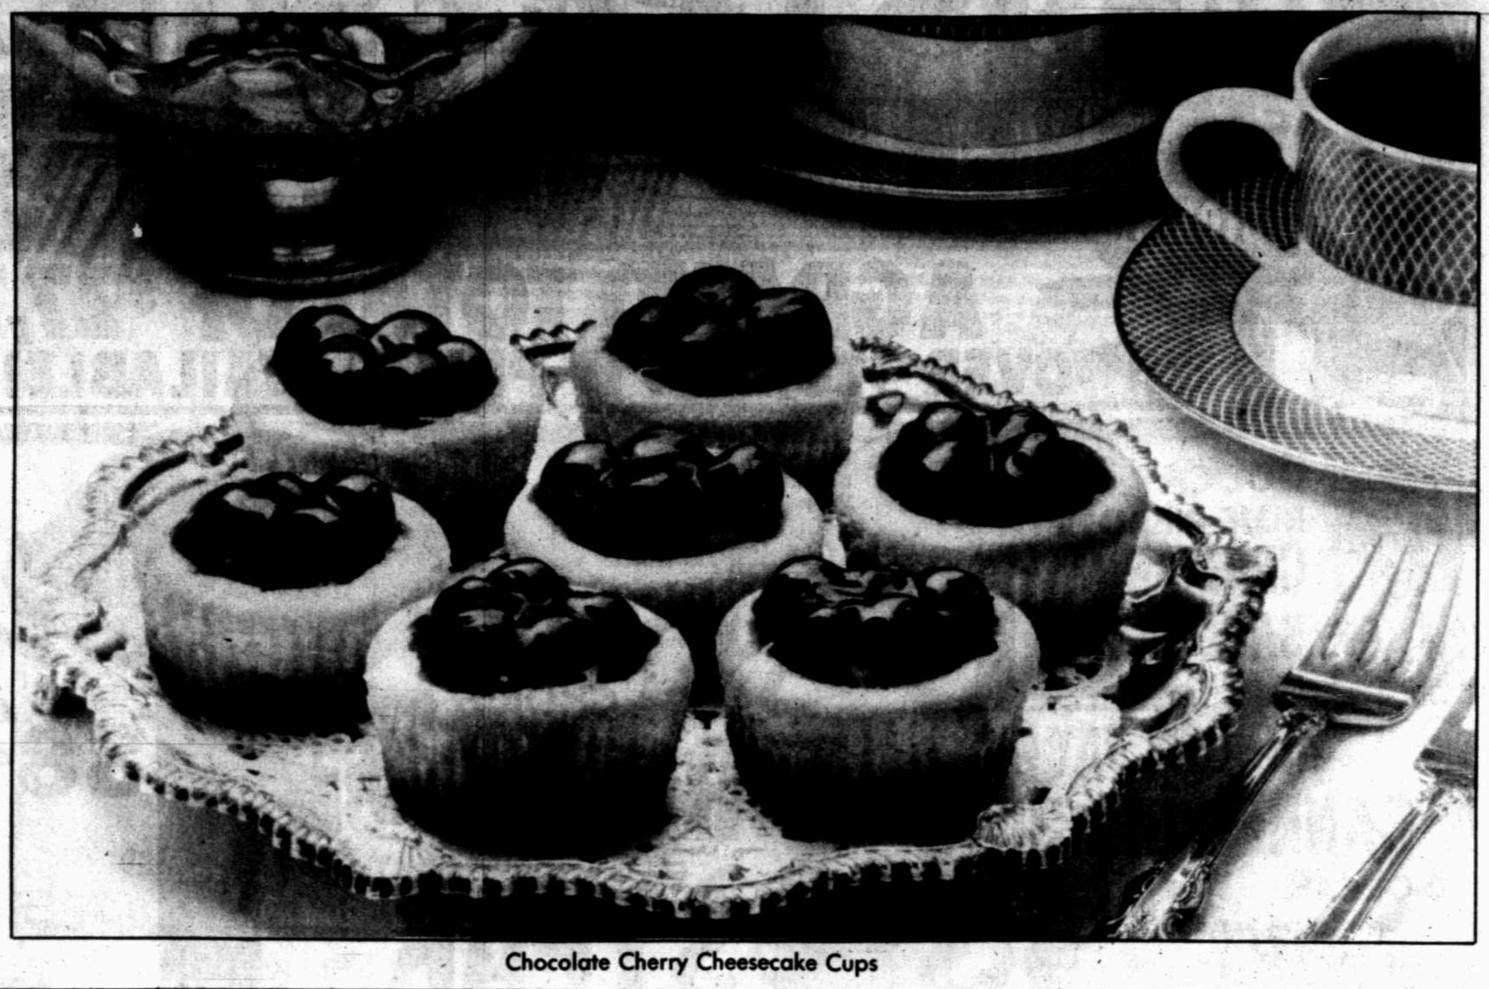

EASY DATE STICKS

17-oz. refrigerated ready-to-slice sugar cookie dough roll
Filling:
1 ⅓ cups chopped dates
⅓ cup sugar
⅓ cup water
1 tsp. lemon juice

Allow cookie dough to soften at room temperature for 30 minutes. Meanwhile, in small saucepan combine dates, sugar and water. Cook over medium heat, stirring constantly, until thick. Remove from heat; stir in lemon juice. Set aside.

Heat oven to 350-F. Roll out cookie dough between two sheets of waxed paper to form 12x10-inch rectangle. Remove top sheet of waxed paper. Spread date filling lengthwise in four-inch wide strip down center of dough to within one inch of ends. Fold shorter sides of dough one inch over filling. Bring long sides of dough rectangle over filling, overlapping edges; pinch edges to seal. Invert roll onto cookie sheet, placing sealed side down; remove waxed paper. Fork flute around roll, dipping fork in flour to prevent sticking.

Bake 25-35 minutes until light golden brown. Cool; cut into slices. Makes 24 servings.

DEAR ABBY

White weddings are sin, salvation for readers

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I was disappointed in your answer to "Perplexed," who refused to be her best friend's maid of honor because she didn't approve of her friend's lifestyle. (The friend was living with her fiance and getting married in a church in a white gown like a pure and innocent bride.)

Why did you have to go and say, "Church weddings are not for virgins only"?

I think it's terrible the way some girls sleep with every Tom, Dick and Harry, then get married in white wedding gowns and veils. Now along comes Dear Abby, who absolves them of their sins and gives them permission to have a church wedding regardless of what they have done.

I don't expect to see this in your column, but I had to get it off my chest. — AN INDIANA CHRISTIAN

DEAR CHRISTIAN: I'm sure there are many who would agree with you, but here's a Christian who does not:

DEAR ABBY: I just read the letter from "Perplexed." She didn't want to be maid of honor at her best friend's wedding because the friend wanted a church wedding with all the trimmings and she was presently living with her fiance.

Let me share my story. I am a Christian, went to church all of my life and have tried to live a good life. I became pregnant when I was 17. Christians are human, too, and make mistakes like everyone else.

Two months after our daughter was born, my fiance and I had a big church wedding with all the trimmings. It was the first marriage for both of us. We wanted to be married in church and start our marriage in the best possible way by asking God to become a part of our marriage and our life.

We've been married for seven years, have a wonderful marriage and two lovely children. We attend church regularly as a family. You were right, Abby: Church weddings are not for virgins only!

I hope "Perplexed" will change her mind and be her friend's maid of honor. She shouldn't judge her friend's past. I'm sure her own past is not spotless. — PATTI IN TUCSON

DEAR ABBY: Do you know who is forcing those gross swimsuits on the women of today?

The fashion designers, that's who! They are making fools of women! Do something, Abby! — DISGUSTED IN SAN JOSE

DEAR DISGUSTED: Fashion designers can design from now until eternity, but without buyers, their wares would go the way of the Nehru jacket. (Remember?) No one can force anyone to buy anything; the success or failure of the "gross" new swimsuits will depend upon how many women are willing to grin and bare it.

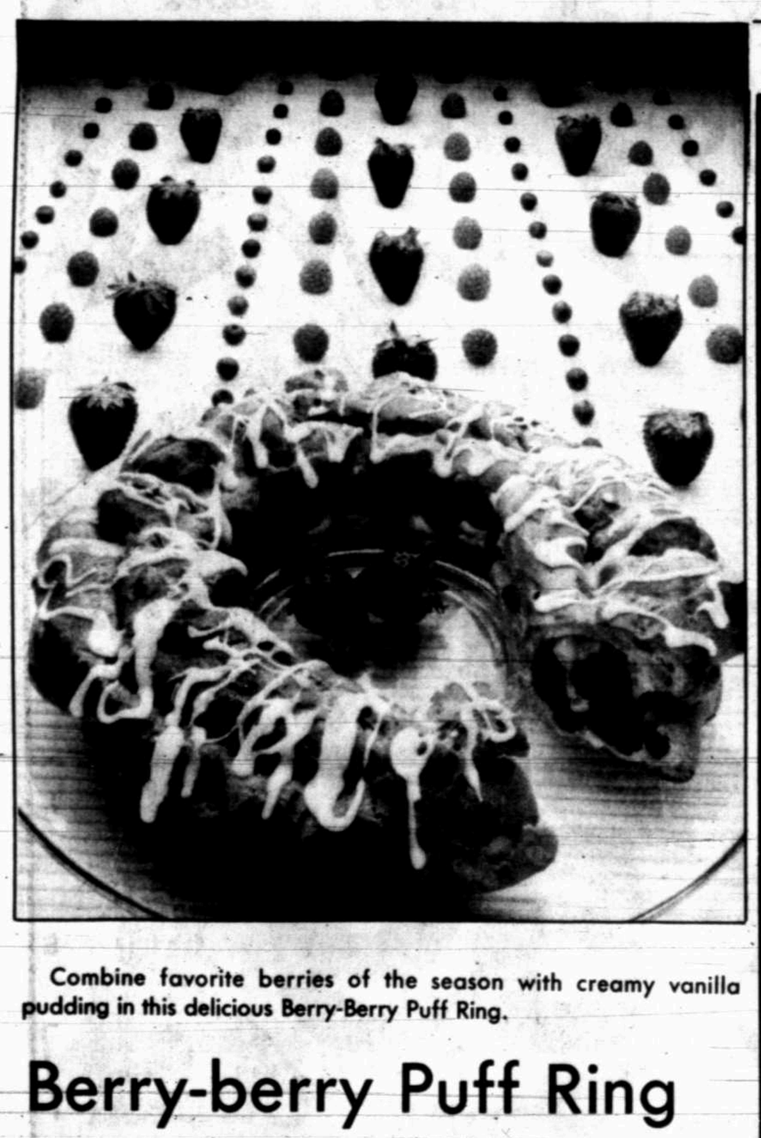

DEAR ABBY: If you know where one can buy a modest bathing suit, please let me know. I am a senior citizen whose doctor has recommended swimming as a healthful exercise, but I am no Venus in a bathing suit.

I've searched all the mail-order catalogs, and the stores here and elsewhere for over a year, and have yet to find that modest one-piece suit. — MAD IN MADISON

DEAR MAD: I'll keep my eyes open for you. Send me your name and address.

(Getting married? Send for Abby's new, updated, expanded booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 (this includes postage) to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Combine favorite berries of the season with creamy vanilla pudding in this delicious Berry-Berry Puff Ring.

Berry-berry Puff Ring easy seasonal dessert

A delicious way to enjoy the season's fresh berries is this Berry-Berry Puff Ring, made easy with a buttermilk and flour baking mix.

BERRY-BERRY PUFF RING

½ cup water
3 tbsps. margarine or butter
¾ cup buttermilk and flour baking mix
3 eggs
1 package (3-1/2 oz.) vanilla instant pudding and pie filling
1 tbsp. grated lemon peel
3 to 4 cups mixed fresh berries (raspberries, blueberries, blackberries or sliced strawberries), sweetened if desired
Glaze (recipe follows)

Heat oven to 425-F. Cover cookie sheet with aluminum foil. Draw circle about eight inches in diameter with tine of fork on center of foil, being careful not to tear foil. (Invert 8-inch round pan on foil to draw circle.) Heat 1/2 cup water and margarine to boiling in 1-1/2 quart saucepan. Add baking mix, all at once. Stir vigorously over low heat until mixture forms ball, about one minute. Remove from heat; add eggs, one at a time, beating vigorously after each addition, until mixture is smooth and glossy. Spoon batter evenly onto circle to form ring (do not smooth batter). Bake until deep golden brown, 25-30 minutes (do not underbake). Cool ring on cookie sheet on wire rack - five minutes. Remove ring and foil from cookie sheet; carefully remove foil. Cool ring completely (ring may fall slightly during cooling).

Prepare pudding and pie filling as directed on package for pudding. except add lemon peel before beating. Refrigerate at least one hour.

Cut off top half of ring with serrated knife. Pull out any filaments of soft dough; use dough to cover any holes in bottom of ring. Spoon pudding into bottom half of ring. Top with berries. Replace top half of ring; drizzle with glaze. Makes eight servings.

Glaze: Mix 1 cup powdered sugar, 1 teaspoon lemon juice and 3 to 4 teaspoons warm water until smooth and of desired consistency.

Step 1: Cut along bone to about 1/4-inch from bottom.

Step 2: Make a second shallow cut, 1/4-inch from bone.

Step 3: Rotate. Cut into rib, stopping 1/4-inch from edge.

Step 4: Each rib will be 3 to 4 inches wide and 1/4-inch thick.

Beef short ribs delicious

BEEF SHORT RIBS PIQUANT
3 pounds lean beef short ribs (about 5 to 6 pieces)
½ cup catsup
½ cup cider vinegar
¼ cup water
1 small onion, finely chopped
1½ tsps. garlic salt
½ tsp. ground red pepper
½ tsp. dry mustard

Cut along rib bone of each short rib to about 1/4-inch from bottom. Spread open carefully. Make second shallow cut, 1/4-inch from bone, being careful not to cut through edge. Rotate rib one-half turn and continue cutting into thick meaty portion of rib, stopping 1/4-inch short of cutting through edge. (This technique is similar to unrolling the meat.) Each finished "steak" will be about three to four inches wide, five to six inches long and 1/4-inch thick.

Combine catsup, vinegar, water, onion, garlic salt, red pepper and dry mustard in saucepan. Bring to boil; reduce heat and simmer 10-12 minutes or until sauce is reduced to 3/4 cup. Place "steaks" on grid over medium-hot coals and broil two minutes on each side. Continue broiling five to six minutes or until doneness desired, turning and brushing with sauce occasionally. Makes five or six servings.

Lean short ribs can be turned into delicious barbecued steaks such as Beef Short Ribs Piquant.

White generics pleasant

By DAN BERGER
Copley News Service

Varietal wines such as Chardonnay, Cabernet Sauvignon and Zinfandel are prized, but most wine consumers drink generics — which are usually blended wines — on a daily basis.

The names for the popular generics are Burgundy and Chablis, but these have been less than successful in marketing premium generic wine, bottled in 0.75-milliliter bottles with corks.

The quality of these generics can vary, so I staged a tasting of a number of the white and red generics. My panel found some interesting results.

We were surprised that the white wines turned out fresh and well made, and drier than we found them in a similar experience with generics two years ago.

All the whites were between $4 and $5.50 a bottle, and vary by price depending on the shop. The best wines in the view of the judges:

1. 1983 Jefferson Cellars Vin Blanc — A huge floral aroma, probably of Riesling or Gewurztraminer, made this wine tops by a tiny margin over the next group. The wine, made by Monticello Cellars, is fresh and relatively dry.

2. Tie among 1983 Chateau St. Jean Vin Blanc, 1983 Callaway Vin Blanc, 1983 Zaca Mesa Toyon Blanc and 1982 Monterey Vineyards Classic White.

The Chateau St. Jean was the most like a typical dry table wine one might like to have with dinner. It is two-thirds Sauvignon Blanc, and the aroma is typical of that variety.

The Toyon Blanc is the best Zaca Mesa has made. It is well balanced, relatively dry and has a slight citric tone in the finish. The Callaway may be the best white wine Callaway has made. It is floral, relatively soft and slightly sweet.

Monterey Vineyards has had good success with its Classic White, and this one is most interesting. A blend of Chenin Blanc, French Colombard, Pinot Blanc and Chardonnay (among other varieties), it offers a slight weedy (one person said peanutty) aroma, but a dry, crisp finish.

6. 1983 Grand Cru Vin Maison — A Sauvignon Blanc, this wine is slightly grassy, and slightly sweet, but the finish is crisp. Good value.

7. Fetzer Blanc de Blanc — a slightly earthy-chalky aroma and medium finish make the wine interesting, but it has a relatively flat finish.

8. 1982 Geyser Peak Sonoma Vintage White — slight weedy, vegetative character, flabby.

9. Tie among 1982 Navarro Vin Blanc (Chardonnay), Charles Lefranc (Almaden) Vin Maison, 1982 Stag's Leap White Table Wine, Gallo Reserve Chablis and Davis Bynum Bellefleur. The Navarro was heavy and coarse; the Lefranc, a Pinot Blanc, has a slight cardboardy aroma; the Stag's Leap had a scent of late-harvested grapes; the Bynum wine was soft with a lackluster finish; the Gallo was light and clean, but thin and undistinguished.

The tasters felt the top six wines to be good values, notably the St. Jean — the most expensive at $5.75 — which most said would improve with a few more months in the bottle.

'Label drinkers' know little about great wines

By DAN BERGER
Copley News Service

Is a bottle of wine worth $35? Or $50?

That depends on your frame of reference, of course, and with some wines the quality is nearly surpassed by the label. In fact, there is a derogatory remark some wine lovers make about people who buy wine not because of its taste but because of its label.

They are called "label drinkers," and the phrase implies that such persons know little about wine, and merely buy labels that indicate they are supposed to be great. The wine inside may very well be blah, but the label will impress the proletariat.

On the other hand, there are expensive wines that have the breeding and the class to command a high price tag, and the wines are worth buying if for no other reason than they almost always offer wonderful tastes. True, $35 or $50 a bottle is a lot of money, but on those rare occasions when only a great wine will do, these wines may be appropriate.

Take, for example, Opus One, the wine made as a joint venture between Robert Mondavi and the Baron Philippe de Rothschild of France. When it was released about a year ago, amid all the hooplah that two such popular men can command, at $50 a bottle, many said the wine was merely decent, and that the price was high because the egos of the men were involved. They had to make an expensive wine.

Some competitors in the Napa Valley are a bit bitter over the publicity the wines have gotten, and have taken to calling it Opious One.

Yet tasting the wines now almost a year later, I find they are awfully good. The 1979, the first vintage of Opus One produced, is tighter and more typical of a Bordeaux. The 1980 is expansive, more California-like and certainly the more likeable at this stage. Both should develop well.

Another example of expensive wine is the Heitz Martha's Vineyard Cabernets, which these days command prices in the $30 to $40 range. Are they worth it?

Most people who have only read about the small Martha's Vineyard in Napa feel the wine is overpriced, but one sip proves otherwise. This is one of the most heralded wines ever made in California, and for good reason.

Martha's Vineyard is a 12-acre patch of ground adjacent to the base of the Mayacamas Mountains west of Oakville. Interestingly, the Martha's Vineyard plot of Cabernet sits adjacent to two other renowned parcels of Cabernet — Block P of Robert Mondavi and BV No. 1 of Beaulieu. Mondavi makes his famed Reserve Cabernets off Block P; BV makes its George de La Tour Private Reserve wine off BV No. 1.

The Martha's Vineyard was planted in 1961 by Belle and Barney Rhodes, who sold it two years later to Tom and Martha May (hence the name "Martha's"). Joe Heitz, who had worked at BV and opened his own wine cellars in 1964, began making a vineyard-designated wine from the Martha's Vineyard grapes in 1967. (It is considered California's first modern vineyard-designated wine.)

That 1967 wine developed very slowly. The 1968, '69 and '70 Martha's Vineyard wines became legendary for their concentration, and their typical eucalyptuslike aroma. There was no 1971 Heitz Martha's Vineyard; Joe didn't think much of the wine, and blended it into his regular Cabernet, which was a delight.

The 1972 vintage was hard for many wine makers, since there was rain during the harvest, but the Martha's Vineyard wine didn't suffer much, and this was one of the first widely recognized "off-vintage" wines.

Copycat cooking: Salad resembles take-out style

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

Enterprising cooks across the country are copycatting some of the salads offered by the new take-out specialty food shops. A visit to one of these shops can give a cook plenty of fresh ideas.

That's how I happen to have the following recipe for a salad that teams chicken, black-eyed peas, other vegetables and a special dressing.

MAIN DISH SALAD
Dressing, recipe follows
15- to 16-ounce can black- eyed peas, drained and rinsed (1½ cups generous)
1½ cups cooked cubed (½ inch) chicken
1 medium (2 ounces) carrot, pared and coarsely shredded (¾ cup)
¼ cup thin strips onion
2 tbsps. finely chopped sweet red pepper
2 tbsps. finely chopped parsley
Salt and pepper to taste
4 medium (1¼ to 1½ pounds) ripe tomatoes, sliced ¼-inch thick

Make Dressing and refrigerate.

In a large bowl toss together black-eyed peas, chicken, carrot, onion, red pepper and 1 tablespoon of the parsley. Toss with Dressing and the salt and pepper. Cover and chill.

At serving time, arrange tomatoes around the edge of a platter or large shallow bowl; heap salad in center; garnish with remaining parsley.

Makes 4 to 6 servings.

Dressing: in an electric blender whirl together until blended 1 large egg yolk, 2 tablespoons white wine vinegar, 1 tablespoon Dijon mustard, ⅛ teaspoon coarsely ground pepper and a pinch of dried crushed tarragon. With the motor running at medium speed, pour in 1-3rd cup olive oil in a thin steady stream so mixture thickens and is smooth. Makes ½ to ⅔-cup.

Clam Chowder was a survival food for pilgrims during the bitter New England winters.

Curried oysters: Special treat for seafood lovers

By TOM HOGE
AP Wine and Food Writer

The West Coast states, renowned for their farms and orchards, yield a bountiful and diverse range of delicacies, including a wealth of seafood.

For seafood lovers, here is a recipe for curried oysters featured at the historic Shelburne Inn on the Long Beach Peninsula off Washington's coast.

CURRIED OYSTERS
4 tablespoons clarified butter
2 teaspoon shallots, finely minced
2 teaspoons minced garlic
2 teaspoons green pepper, diced
1 teaspoon curry spice mix
12 small oysters
⅓ cup heavy cream

To clarify butter, melt slowly over heat so milk solids sink to bottom, leaving a clear liquid. Saute shallots, garlic and green pepper lightly in butter until softened. Add curry spice (see below) to shallots, garlic and green pepper, and stir. Add oysters and coat well. Add cream, and poach oysters until plump and firm. Remove oysters to heated serving dish on half shells and cover with foil. Reduce sauce until mixture coats a spoon. Remove foil from oysters and spoon sauce over them. Garnish with lemon and chopped parsley and serve. Serves 2. Good with a chilled California white wine.

To make curry spice, blend 1 tablespoon curry powder, 1 stick cinnamon, crushed, 1 crushed bay leaf, ¼ teaspoon ground cloves.

Chowder used as survival food

The Puritans landed in the New World during the most bitter months of the year, but quickly learned the skills of survival — how to build, hunt, fish, plant and plow — to carry them through their years in the region.

Women learned from the Indian women how to use the unfamiliar regional foods to feed their families. The Indians introduced the new arrivals to the beans and corn of life-sustaining succotash and taught them how to simmer beans in a pit with a touch of bear fat or an infusion of maple syrup.

But it was the sea, according to Alison Pulver, researcher for Du Pont "SilverStone" nonstick surface, which gave the early New Englanders both food and livelihood.

Here's a recipe for the corn-clam chowder that helped those first New England colonists survive their first difficult months.

NEW ENGLAND CORNY CLAM CHOWDER
2 medium onions, chopped
2 tablespoons butter or margarine
1¼ cups chicken broth
2 cups diced potatoes
1 bay leaf
¼ teaspoon celery salt
2 (7-oz.) cans minced clams
1 (16-oz.) can creamed corn
2 cups milk
Salt and pepper to taste

In three-quart saucepan saute onions in butter or margarine until soft but not brown. Add broth, potatoes, seasonings and clams. Cook, covered, about 15-20 minutes or until potatoes are cooked through. Add corn and milk; heat through. For richer soup use one cup half-and-half in place of milk. Makes six to eight servings.

ORIGINAL CORN BREAD
⅓ cup sifted flour
¾ cup yellow corn meal
1½ teaspoons baking powder
1 tablespoon sugar
½ teaspoon salt
1 egg, beaten
⅔ cup milk
2 tablespoons oil

Preheat oven to 400-F. In large bowl combine flour, corn meal, baking powder, sugar and salt. In smaller bowl combine egg, milk and oil. Add to flour mixture and stir. Pour batter into greased 9-inch square cake pan. Bake for 30 minutes. Remove pan or rack and let stand for 10 minutes. Cut into 3-inch squares. Serve warm.

Punch up potatoes with 'puff' stuff

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press Food Editor

POTATO PUFF
2 lbs. (5 medium) all-purpose potatoes
½ of a ¼-pound stick butter, room temperature
4 oz. cream cheese, room temperature
4 to 6 tablespoons milk
Salt and pepper to taste

Peel and quarter potatoes. In a saucepan cover them with water and boil, covered, until tender — 20 minutes. Drain well. Put through ricer or mash until smooth. Beat in butter, cream cheese, milk, salt and pepper. Turn into a 1¼-quart round casserole (about 8 x 2 inches); bake in a preheated 350-F. oven until puffed and top is slightly golden — 30 minutes. Serve at once, while puffed. Makes 6 servings.

Fewer qualify for new homes

Associated Press

As the government attributed an increase in construction partly to the building of apartments, the National Associations of Realtors reported that for many people it's getting tougher to buy a home.

The industry group Tuesday unveiled its latest "affordability index," reporting that in July the typical family earning $25,583 had just 83.3 percent of the income needed to qualify for an 80 percent mortgage on a home costing $74,700, the median.

July was the third straight month housing has become less affordable, the realtors reported Tuesday. The index, at 83.3, had dropped 2.3 points from June.

The group calculates the index each month by comparing the maximum mortgage a median-income family could obtain with the cost of a median-priced home.

Half the nation's families earn more than the median income and half earn less; likewise, half the homes cost more than the median and half cost less.

The group said the typical family would have qualified if mortgage interest rates were 2.3 percentage points below July's average effective interest rate of 12.54 percent.

A family at the median income would have qualified for an 80 percent loan on a $62,000 home, under the standards established by the Federal National Mortgage Association.

The realtors said more than 33 percent of the homes sold in July went for prices below $60,000.

The Commerce Department reported Tuesday that new construction rose 0.7 percent in July and attributed the rise largely to the pace set by apartment and office buildings.

Total construction spending rose to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of $311.4 billion, Commerce said. The slight rise followed a decline of 0.5 percent in June.

Construction activity has slowed in recent months following monthly increases early in the year of as much as 6.9 percent. Economists blame the slowdown on rising interest rates.

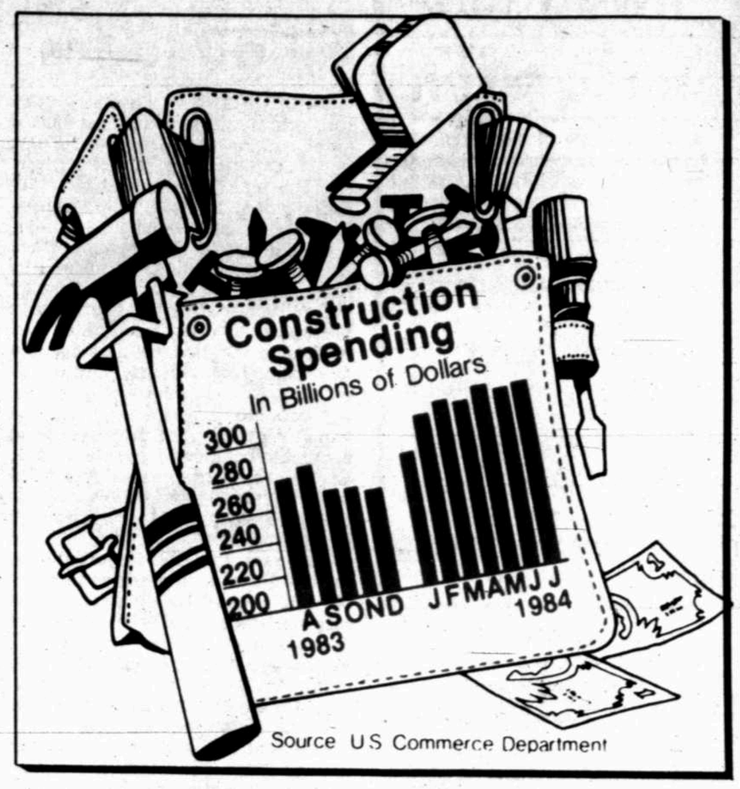

In other economic developments Tuesday:

—Nestle SA's acquisition of Carnation Co. for more than $3 billion in cash would be the largest acquisition ever of a food company, said W.T. Grimm & Co., a merger and acquisitions consultant in Chicago. Carnation, a Los Angeles dairy-products company, announced that its board of directors unanimously approved the offer and recommended that its shareholders accept the $83-a-share bid.

—Ford Motor Co. said it told its dealers to expect no increase in the base prices of its two smallest cars in 1985, and increases in the base prices of most other models ranging from less than 1 percent to 6.5 percent. General Motors Corp. has announced tentative price increases for its 1985 base models averaging 2.3 percent; Chrysler Corp., 1.7 percent; and American Motors Corp., 4.1 percent.

—The government sold $13.2 billion in new securities — half in three-month bills at an average discount rate of 10.63 percent, up from last week's 10.6 percent, and half in six-month bills at an average discount rate of 10.75 percent, up from 10.7 percent.

—Steel production fell to 1.475 million tons in the week ended Sept. 1, a decrease of 3.2 percent from the previous week's 1.523 million tons, the American Iron and Steel Institute reported. The industry's production amounted to 57.2 percent of capacity compared with 59.0 percent the week before.

Pioneer transmission operations purchased

AMARILLO—Pioneer Corp. and Cabot Corp. have jointly announced a definitive agreement for Cabot Corp. to purchase Pioneer's intrastate natural gas transmission operations, conducted by its Westar Transmission division.

The consideration to be paid to Pioneer is approximately $115 million.

Pursuant to the transaction, Cabot will make an initial cash payment of $150 million and commit to certain deferred delivery obligations to Pioneer, totaling 2.5 million barrels of crude oil, 17.7 billion cubic feet of natural gas and 200 million gallons of natural gas liquids over the next five years on a declining volume schedule. Cabot will provide a commercial bank letter of credit as security for the dedeferred delivery obligations. The sale will be reported by Pioneer on an installment sales basis for tax purposes.

The natural gas transmission operations divested include 3,405 miles of transmission lines and 771 miles of gathering lines, which traverse the Texas Panhandle and West Texas areas, encompassing the Amarillo, Lubbock and Midland-Odessa markets.

Taco Villa approved for Boston Stock exchange

Taco Villa Inc., the Midland-Odessa, based Mexican style family restaurant chain has announced that its common stock has been approved for listing on the Boston Stock Exchange.

Taco Villa Inc.'s stock will begin to trade on the Boston Stock Exchange on Tuesday, September 4, 1984 under the symbol TKO. Bobby D. Cox, chairman and chief executive officer of Taco Villa Inc., said, "We believe that our listing on the Boston Stock Exchange will provide greater exposure within the securities market of our region, thereby increasing market liquidity for Taco Villa Inc.'s stock. Another important advantage to the listing is that it will enable buyers to purchase our stock on margin." The company's stock will continue to trade in the Over The Counter market.

Taco Villa Inc. operates 44 company-owned restaurants and four franchised units. An additional store is nearing completion in San Angelo, and one additional site each is under contract in Midland, Amarillo and Lubbock. The company expects to begin construction on these three sites in the immediate future.

Yields on short-term T-bills climb for second week

WASHINGTON (AP) — Yields on short-term Treasury securities have risen for the second consecutive week, the government says.

The government at auction Tuesday sold $13.2 billion in new securities — half in three-month bills at an average discount rate of 10.63 percent, up from last week's 10.6 percent, and half in six-month bills at an average discount rate of 10.75 percent, up from 10.7 percent.

The yields were the highest since the 11.14 percent of July 19, 1982, for three-month bills and the 10.94 percent of Aug. 9, 1982, for six-month bills.

The new discount rates understate the actual return to investors — 11.08 percent for three-month bills and 11.53 percent for six-month bills.

Contractor hit for bid-rigging

AUSTIN (AP) — L.P. Gilvin, president of Gilvin-Terrill Inc., pleaded guilty Tuesday in federal court to charges of bid rigging on state highway projects.

U.S. District Judge H.F. Garcia said he would sentence Gilvin later this month. The maximum penalty for the offense is three years in prison and a $100,000 fine.

According to court testimony, Gilvin conspired with other contractors, who submitted artifically high bids for state highway construction in Potter County in 1979. Gilvin then won a $411,000 contract.

Gilvin is now among 16 other top Texas executives convicted of bid rigging following a U.S. Justice Department investigation.

Who's yo-yoing the toy stocks?

Traditional toy stocks roar back

By DONALD C. BAUDER
Copley News Service

Is somebody yo-yoing the toy stocks — or is it really true that the yo-yo has come back?

It appears to be a case of the latter: The old, traditional toys — yo-yos, tops, dolls, word games — have come roaring back and the electronic games that were supposed to replace them have come a cropper.

According to Merrill Lynch data, the toys stocks have been right at the top of this year's performers. In the last 19 weeks, the toys stocks have been in the top 15 no fewer than 14 times.

Standard & Poor's has the answer: Through the first five months of this year, orders for traditional toys are running 115 percent ahead of year-earlier levels, says S&P. "The boom in traditional toy sales is also a measure of the bust in video games," says S&P analyst Paul Valentine.

A market-research firm estimates that video-game retail sales plunged 54 percent in the first quarter. A year ago, video games constituted 34 percent of total toy industry sales. Now they're down to 21 percent.

Fran Bernstein of Merrill Lynch points out that Toys 'R' Us reported a second-quarter sales boost of 37.3 percent. On a comparable store basis, only counting stores that were in existence a year ago, the growth was a handsome 23.5 percent.

"Demand for traditional toys remained quite strong in the May through July 1984 period, as exemplified by an exceptional 31.2 percent store-for-store sales increase in non-electronic items," says Blechman.

Despite the slump in video-games sales, she is looking for Toys 'R' Us earnings to rise by 26 to 28 percent annually for at least the next three to five years. She gives the stock the firm's highest rating (1) for the long term and second highest (2) for the intermediate term, despite its stiff price: It sells for 22.6 times her 1984 estimate and 18.3 times her 1985 estimate.

One stock that has been on a yo-yo for some time is Tonka, maker of traditional toys. This year, Tonka shares are zooming again, in part because of its new robot toys, which augment its basic line of toy trucks and other vehicles.

The company lost a bundle last year, as it closed its Minnesota manufacturing facility and moved to Mexico and Texas, absorbing huge expenses in the process. Debt has ballooned from $1 million to $8 million, notes Richard E. Ozaroff of Value Line, as the company has scrambled to correct the problems that led to its previous losses.

"The shares aren't for the faint of heart," notes Ozaroff. Despite the recovery of traditional toys, Tonka is only for speculators, he says.

Coleco is both suffering and profiting from the new trend in toys. It has taken a beating because of the drop in video-games sales.

Fear of high interest rates prompts sluggish trading

By ALEXANDER R. HAMMER
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Stock prices fell sharply Tuesday in sluggish trading, as investors continued to display growing apprehension over interest rates.

The Dow Jones industrial average, which was in the minus column throughout the session, ended off 12.03 points, to 1,212.35. Reflecting the market's weakness, declining issues on the New York Stock Exchange outscored those that rose by more than a 2 to 1 ratio.

"The continuing fear that interest rates may rise sparked by the persistent strength of the economy is weighing down the economy and holding it in a vise of a narrow trading range," noted Monte Gordon, director of research of the Dreyfus Corp.

Other analysts said investors are also concerned that the government's financing requirements will rise substantially in the fourth quarter and that business borrowing, which generally accelerates at this time of the year in preparation for the Christmas selling period, will induce further upward pressure on interest rates.

Volume on the Big Board Tuesday amounted to 62.1 shares, compared with 57.5 million shares on Friday, which was the slowest trading day this year. The market was closed Monday in observance of Labor Day.

The two other major market indicators also posted large losses Tuesday. The exchange's composite index dropped 0.90, to 94.96, while Standard & Poor's 500-stock index lost 1.80, to 164.88.

Richard Schmidt, director of research of Advest Inc., Hartford, Conn., said that although the market may move lower over the near-term, its long-term fundamentals appear strong "because of favorable corporate earnings prospects and the possibility that short-term interest rates could reverse their upward trend in the next quarter."

Carnation Co. led the most active list Tuesday advancing 4, to 79½ after agreeing to be acquired by a unit of Nestle S.A. at $83 a share, or over $3 billion. Carnation's stock had been rising for months on rumors of a takeover.

Revlon climbed 1⅝, to 39 in active trading on rumors that Hoffman La Roche Company was planning to make an offer to acquire it. Neither company would comment on the report.

Quaker Oats fell 1½, to 66¾ after Goldman Sachs removed the issue from its recommended buy list.

Among the weaker large capitalization issues, International Business Machines fell 1¼, to 122½ in heavy trading; Merck lost 1⅛, to 82¾; Minnesota Mining was off ⅞, to 81⅝ and American Express, ¾, to 32.

Data General, which is about ready to introduce a lightweight portable computer, was down 1¼, to 56⅝.

Smith International must tell all

Los Angeles Times,
Washington Post News Service

A federal appeals court has given Smith International Inc. and Gearhart Industries Inc. partial victories in their acrimonious and protracted takeover fight. But the long-awaited ruling handed down in New Orleans late last week failed to resolve many major issues in the dispute.

Based in Newport Beach, Calif., Smith, one of the nation's largest oil-services companies, has been increasing its stake in Gearhart, a high-technology oil-services company, since last December. In mid-April, Gearhart went to court to fight what Gearhart Chairman Marvin Gearhart called a "creeping merger."

The ruling issued late Friday by the U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals allows Smith, which owns about 33 percent of Gearhart, to pursue its 4-month-old tender offer for 3.7 million shares of Gearhart at $31 per share.

However, in a partial victory for Gearhart, Smith first must disclose to Gearhart shareholders the potential financial effect of the damages it may have to pay Hughes Tool Co. since losing a patent infringement suit last year. In another key issue in the dispute, the appeals court asked the district court in Fort Worth, Texas, to review Gearhart's recent purchase of Geosource Inc., a Houston-based oil-services company, from Aetna Life & Casualty Co.

The appeals court wants to know whether Gearhart board members might have profited from the July 16 purchase without first subjecting the acquisition to a vote by shareholders.

In an attempt to make itself less vulnerable to a Smith takeover, Gearhart purchased Geosource for about $350 million in stock and cash. Smith went to court to try to block the Geosource purchase because it was not subject to a shareholder vote.

"We are studying the decision and trying to figure out where to go from here," said Paul Russell.

AP corrects GM auto prices

DETROIT (AP) — The Associated Press erroneously reported Monday that General Motors Corp.'s initial price increase for 1985 averages $1,325 per car including options.

The average introductory price increase for 1985 models is $292, excluding options, according to GM.

However, GM said the average buyer is expected to add options to its car that would boost the average spent on a 1985 model to $12,931, an increase of $1,325 over the 1984 average.

Auto makers optimistic

DETROIT (AP) — The United Auto Workers union has reached tentative accords on local issues at 43 of 235 bargaining units at General Motors Corp. and Ford Motor Co., and both sides voiced optimism that national agreements could be reached without a strike.

The union Tuesday announced that there were tentative agreements at 31 of the union's 147 bargaining units at GM. At Ford, where the union represents 115,000 workers, 12 local agreements had been reached at 88 bargaining units as of Tuesday.

Contracts with the UAW at both automakers expire Sept. 14.

The local agreements, which cover work practices peculiar to that plant or office, usually come to a ratification vote at the same time a tentative master agreement goes to a vote. However, a few of the locals will vote on their own agreements first.

Donald Ephlin, the UAW's chief bargainer at GM, said he is optimistic about hammering out a master contract without a strike because "31, at this stage of the game, is a high number.

"We have (in the past) reached the termination date of the national agreement and had one (local) settled," Ephlin said.

Alfred Warren, Ephlin's counterpart at GM, said he was encouraged by the progress of the local and national talks and that he was "more confident now" than he was before Labor Day that a strike can be averted.

The UAW represents 350,000 workers at GM. One bargaining unit has just three workers while another has as many as 20,000.

Bargaining was held at both companies over the Labor Day weekend.

Normally, with the deadline just 10 days away, one company would have been singled out as a strike target by this time with bargaining concentrated there under threat of a strike.

But the union last week declined to pick one company or other, deciding to call both companies strike targets and investing in UAW President Owen Bieber the power to single out one himself before the contracts expire.

Both Ford and GM have offered no base wage increases and no offer of job security, but proposed profit-sharing and lump-sum payments in lieu of raises.

The union and bargainers at both companies continued to exude confidence about avoiding a strike, but it was unclear whether much, if any, progress had been made on the two key issues — job security and wages.

Warren said that as in years past, wages would be left until the closing days of bargaining.

Chief Ford bargainer Peter Pestillo said the possibility of a three-year master contract with a longer guarantee of job security "has been raised and discussed."

Small cars have worse accident loss record

WASHINGTON (AP) — Small cars have a substantially worse record of accident losses than medium-size or large autmobiles, according to an insurance industry examination of damage and injury claims.

The car rankings, made public Tuesday by the insurance industry's Highway Loss Data Institute, covered 1981-83 cars and are based on both the frequency of insurance claims and the average amount of money companies paid as a result of car accidents.

Industry officials said that the statistics take into account the number of cars of any particular model on the road and driving characteristics.

According to the institute's figures, drivers of medium-sized and large cars are much less likely have accidents that cause severe injury or extensive damage.

Of 92 medium-sized and large car models examined, only one showed a "substantially worse than average" injury loss record and five were found to be in a similar category for collision damage.

In contrast, when examining 95 small cars, 20 were in the "substantially worse than average" category for injury losses and 28 were in the same category for collision damage.

Only four small cars — three station wagons and a 4-door Saab 900 — were found to have "substantially better than average" loss records, while large and medium cars had 17 models in that category.

The 38 small, two-door cars included in the study had the worst record as a group with 25 of them having higher than average injury losses and 16 higher than average collision losses. Small four-door models did better and small station wagons had the best record among the small cars.

While small sports and speciality cars generally were found to have "average" injury losses, these cars did poorly in collision losses with eight of the ten cars models having losses of "substantially worse than average."

The study showed a wide range of losses among cars.

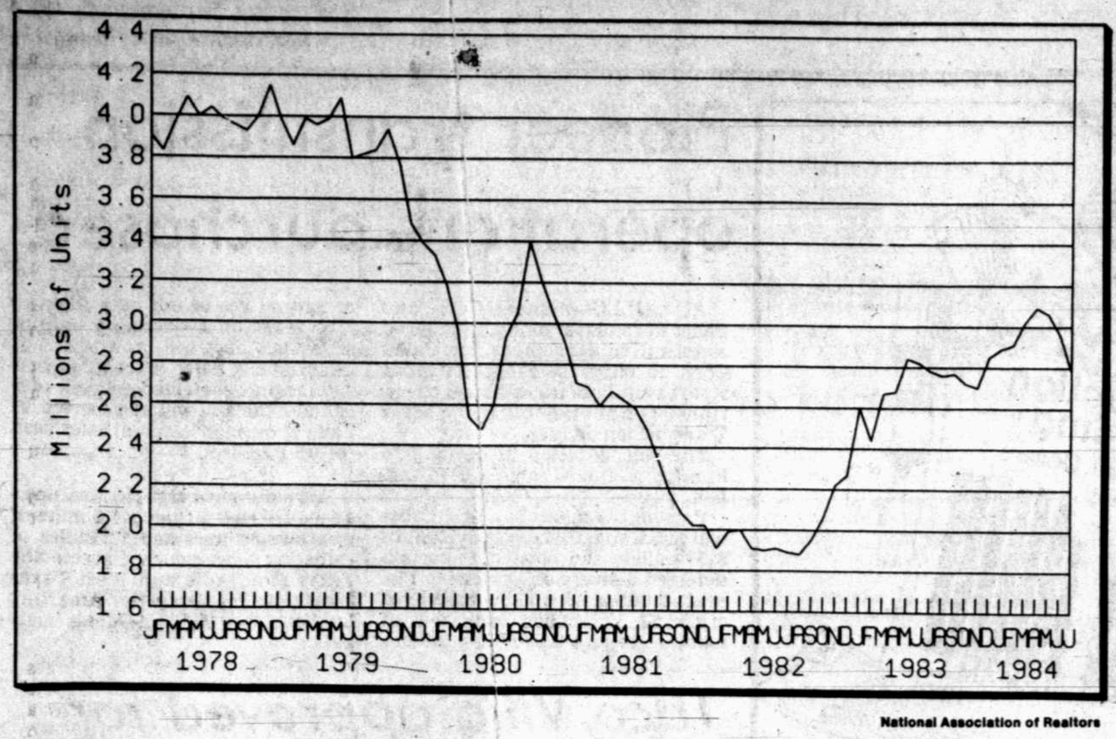

Using 100 as an average, the highest injury loss figure was attributed to the Pontiac 1000, which had 156, followed by the Dodge Colt and Nissan Pulsar, both at 148. By comparison, some of the largest cars — including four Oldsmobile models, the Mercedes 300SD and two Buick models — were given figures ranging from 59 to 62.

Generally, Japanese imports fared worse than American cars, but that was largely attributed to the Japanese accounting for a large number of small cars. For example, Japanese imports accounted for 17 of the 38 small, two-door models examined. Ten of these 17 imports had substantially greater than average loss records.

The cars with the best injury loss records were the Mercedes Benz 300 SD, Buick Regal and Lesabre models, Chevrolet Caprice, Lincoln Continental, Ford Crown Victoria and the four Oldsmobile models – the Cutlass, Delta 88, Custom Cruiser station wagon, and Olds 98.

The cars with the worst injury loss record were the Pontiac 1000, Dodge Colt, Nissan Pulsar, Plymouth Sapporo, Renault LeCar, Chevrolet Chevette, Subaru hardtop, Toyota Corolla and Nissan Sentra.

EXISTING SINGLE—FAMILY HOME SALES

National Association of Realtors

High interest lowers home sales

WASHINGTON—The continued heavy weight of high mortgage interest rates pushed the annual pace of existing single-family home sales in July to the lowest level since November, the National Association of Realtors reported.

The seasonally adjusted annual rate of existing-home sales fell 6.1 percent in July to 2.78 million units, marking the third consecutive monthly decline since the 3.09 million-unit pace in April. The revised rate for June was 2.96 million units.

Last month's home resale pace matched the July 1983 pace and was 33.0 percent below the peak annual rate of 4.15 million units in November 1978. However, the July pace was 47.9 percent above the recession low of 1.88 million units in August 1982.

"With three months of declining resale activity data now in, it appears that the home resale recovery passed its peak at a level more than one million units short of the previous recovery peak and without having satisfied the nation's underlying and pent-up demand for housing," said Jack Carlson, the National Association of Realtors' chief economist and executive officer.

The economist explained that in each of the three previous housing cycles during the 16 years the National Association has kept extensive records, the recovery peak has been higher than its predecessors.

"High interest rates have prevented the existing single-family home sales market from recovering to full health and have led to a decline in the nation's homeownership rate since 1980," Carlson said.

"While interest rates on fixed-rate mortgages were averaging 9-10 percent - which was only about 2 percentage points higher than the overall inflation rate - when resale activity reached a record high level in November 1978, they were in the 13.5-14.5 percent range this spring and summer," he said.

"Long-term interest rates now are more than 10 percentage points above the inflation rate, compared to a average of 3-4 percentage points above inflation during the 1950-1980 period," he continued.

Carlson blamed federal goverment tax and spending policies during the last four years for boosting deficits to gargantuan levels, which in turn have caused interest rates to climb so high.

"Even adjustable-rate mortgages, which carry lower initial interest rates than their fixed-rate counterparts, have not been able to soften the blow of high interest rates sufficiently to allow the housing recovery to continue," he said.

Carlson predicted that existing single-family home sales activity likely will decline modestly in the months ahead because interest rates are likely to be in the 15-15.5 percent range for fixed-rate mortgages and 13.5-14.5 percent range for initial ARM rates through 1984 and 1985.

For all of 1984, he expects about 2.9 million home resales, and in 1985, he expects about 2.4 million resales.

While the unit volume expected for 1984 is more than 25 percent below the peak unit-volume year of 1978, the dollar volume of existing-home sales in 1984 is expected to be at a record high level of more than $248 billion, up from about $226 billion in 1983 and about $160 billion in 1982, Carlson said.

For July, the seasonally adjusted annual rate of home resale dollar volume was $246.3 billion, compared with $259.6 billion in June and $234.1 billion in July 1983.

Carlson noted that the median existing single-family home price in the United States rose $900 from June to July, to $74,700, 4.0 percent higher than the $71,800 median price in July 1983. This compares with a 4.1 percent increase in overall consumer prices from July 1983 to July 1984.

Carlson said existing single-family home prices nationally can be expected to rise a total of about 5 percent during all of 1984 and another 4.5 percent in 1985, compared with annual increases of 2.3 percent in 1982 and 3.2 percent in 1983.

More than half, 52.7 percent, of the existing single-family homes sold in July were priced between P40,000 and $90,000, the association reported. Just 2.0 percent had prices of less than $20,000, and 2.5 percent had prices of $250,000 or above.

More than 53 percent of the existing homes sold last month had three bedrooms; nearly 30 percent had four bedrooms or more, and less than 17 percent had one or two bedrooms, the report said.

IPAA warns about U.S. oil attitudes

WASHINGTON — Lowering gasoline prices and a widely publicized "glut" of fuel have lead to a "dangerous complacency" about continuing U.S. energy vulnerability, the Independent Petroleum Association of America has warned.

In a letter to Energy Secretary Donald Hodel, commenting on the Administration's National Energy Policy Plan V, IPAA executive vice president Lloyd N. Unsell noted that "talk of a so-called 'oil glut' has led to a dangerous complacency in the country. In fact, we are still importing too much petroleum at cost which represent the major cause of a chronic balance of payments deficit. The so-called 'oil glut' has in no way eliminated this nation's vulnerability to supply interruptions..." Unsell said.

Last year the U.S. imported one-third of its total oil needs at a cost of $60 billion. And Unsell warned that just to maintain that level of imports over the next decade, domestic producers would have to increase production to 11.4 million barrels daily. "But because of the natural decline in production from existing wells," Unsell said, "13 million barrels per day of new production will be needed. Or stated another way, we will need 590,000 new wells drilled in the lower 48 states and an investment of $495 billion to meet our needs over the next decade."

Unsell noted that such a goal would not be impossible to achieve, but said future government policies and tax laws will govern the level of activity by independent producers. He said that deficit concerns "have led to an unfortunate and growing trend among some to consider energy producers and others in the industry.

The IPAA official noted that energy tax policy should be designed to extend the economic life of existing energy producing properties and attract investment or risk capital, but should never be imposed just to enhance federal revenues.

Unsell noted that it is crucial government energy and economic policy be formulated with a view toward the future. He said the long lead time required to bring new petroleum supplies to the public requires that government policy does not adversely affect or impede the exploratory efforts of the nation's independent producers.

"Independent producers have demonstrated a remarkable consistency in reinvesting funds in new exploration, drilling and development activity in excess of their gross wellhead revenues," Unsell added. "For 1981, independents invested funds equal to 112 percent of gross wellhead revenue. The ratio for the entire period is 108 percent.

Classic car hobby turns into business

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Len Immke's collection of classic cars started as a hobby a quarter-century ago and now has become, in his words, "a time- and money-consuming business."

The cars — he thinks there are about 60 — are stored at his business, parked in his garage or driveway at home or displayed in his showroom alongside the Buick and Rolls Royce cars he sells for a living.

Space is now at such a premium that he is considering selling some of the shiny marvels that he once thought he could never part with.

Immke says his dreams-come-true were all made in the 1930s, 1940s and 1950s. Car collectors' tastes are as individual as are collectors, he said. Some may look down on the cars Immke craves, but his interests are not in vehicles of the teens and 1920s, ranked by most collectors as antiques.

"They're before my time," he said. "One man's junk is another man's gold."

Immke speculates that the classic car collector of the future may be "turned on" by the Ford Mustangs and Buick Rivieras of the mid-1960s, the Ford retractables of the late 1950s and the Lincoln Continental four-door convertibles of the 1960s, the last four-door covertibles made. They are unique cars because they preceded advances in mass production techniques, Immke said.

Immke says he is proudest of his '33 LaSalle and '32 Buick convertible, but admits that he loves them all.

"I collect them for my memories of the cars," he said. "I was born in '29. I guess I started to notice cars in about '35. I had an appetite for new cars, but no wherewithal to buy 'em with."

Now Immke has the wherewithal from a successful auto dealership. Testimony to that is his spacious office with a smoked-glass window overlooking his sales, rental and service business.

Immke began selling cars in Cleveland in 1949, and 15 years later moved to Columbus and his own dealership.

"I am extremely fortunate that my business interest is also my hobby," he said.

Cars, he says, are more than a business or a hobby for him. He recalls his parents saying he could name every model on the streets when he was 5 years old. There were more auto makers then, but generally fewer models from each.

"Aside from my family and a few friends, there isn't anything that interests me more than cars," he said.

He bought his first classic car in 1957, a 1940 Buick convertible. Immke said an early wish list was headed by "almost anything made in the early 1940s."

Those cars were built in simpler times, and built to last. Most saw their owners through World War II, he said.

"It was a fun hobby when I had three or four. Now it's more of a business," he said.

He has long since fulfilled his wish list, and his hobby has grown to a collection of nearly 60 cars — he isn't sure of the number — that requires time, money and care.

He is now considered a serious collector and no longer searches for cars he wants. Collectors with cars to sell come to him.

The cars he buys in poor condition are shipped to a restorer in Hyannisport, Mass. The collection requires a full-time mechanic to keep the cars in running order.

"If you just take an old car and lock it up in the garage, terrible things happen to it," Immke said.

Immke said he doesn't have the time to drive all the cars himself, or even show them, and for the first time is seriously considering selling some, if only to make room for others.

"Sometimes I think I would do better to sell half of them and concentrate on the others," he said. "It used to be I would start to think aout selling one and end up buying another instead."

ClayDesta Bancshares applies to acquire ClayDesta National

AUSTIN—An application has been filed with the Texas Department of Banking for an "interim charter" to allow acquisition of ClayDesta National Bank, Midland, by ClayDesta Bancshares, Inc., Midland, a proposed bank holding company.

Interim charters are a commonly used method of allowing acquisition of an existing bank by a holding company through an exchange of stock.

Southwest Bell withdraws application

Southwestern Bell Telephone has announced it has withdrawn its applicaion for optional local measured service now pending with the Public Utility Commission.

In taking this action, the company cited the need to consider issues raised by customers and to allow more time for an in-depth study of pricing for local telephone service.

"This request does not mean Southwestern Bell is backing away from the difficult issue of how we price our service," said Larry J. Alexander, vice president-public relations. "Today, providing local exchange service is our primary business and the rate we charge must now cover the costs — if we are to keep providing the kind of dependable service customers deserve. But more importantly, we must offer rate options that meet customer needs."

To underscore the company's concerns, Alexander said that Southwestern Bell plans to form an advisory panel representing Texas consumers and organizations who have expressed interest in the pricing issue.

Leaders from the American Association of Retired Persons (AARP) and the League of United Latin-American Citizens (LULAC) already have indicated they will serve on the panel.

Invitations will be issued to other leaders and experts in this area in the coming weeks, according to the company.

"We want to be responsive to our customers on this and every other issue," said Alexander. "In this case, it means making the decision to re-examine this proposal in light of customer comments and industry changes."

As part of the announcement, Southwestern Bell Telephone reaffirmed its commitment to offer customers pricing options, including some based on telephone usage.

"Customers are asking for more choices. They want the freedon to select more than a single, take-it-or-leave-it rate," Alexander pointed out. "But providing choices won't be easy because we have a century of flat-rate tradition. That's why, frankly, the rhetoric becomes so emotional on this issue."

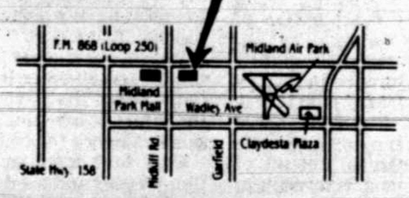

Alexander characterized optional local measured survice as only one stone among a mountain of related issues confronting the telecommunicaions industry.

Jelly fish shut down nuke plant

FORT PIERCE, Fla. (AP) — A jellyfish invasion has shut down the St. Lucie nuclear power plant for the second time in a week, plugging up the seawater filtration system.

The latest shutdown came only hours after the filtration system screens were cleaned up enough from Thursday's jellyfish attack to put the Florida Power & Light plant on Hutchinson Island back on line, company spokesman Tony Bruns said Tuesday.

"This is really a peculiar thing," Bruns said. "They are even thicker out there now than they were last week."

The ocean water is used to condense steam used in generating electricity and is not part of the plant's nuclear system, the spokesman said.

The shutdown means the utility has to buy electricity from Georgia and Alabama utilities to make up the energy deficit, which means an extra $1.2 million a day to be passed on to customers.

Biologists who work with the utility are not sure why the jellyfish, one of the ocena's most primitive forms of life, have congregated near the nuclear power plant.

Researchers spent Tuesday aboard a helicopter, tracing the schools of jellyfish to find out where they're coming from. The largest concentrations are 1,200 to 3,000 feet offshore, right where the plant's three intake plants begin, officials said.

Dollar upward; gold lower

LONDON (AP) — The dollar shattered records again today, setting new standards against the British pound, French franc and Italian lire. Gold prices were lower.

In London, the pound hit an all-time low of $1.2828 compared with $1.2927 late Tuesday, then recovered to 1.2837 dollars.

In Paris, the dollar surged above the 9-franc mark for the first time, climbing to 9.0325. Tuesday's late rate was 8.9500 francs to the dollar.

In Rome, it took 1,813.25 Italian lire to buy a dollar, compared with 1,808.40 lira late Tuesday.

In Frankfurt, the mark was quoted at 2.9415 to the dollar, compared with the 2.9245 Tuesday.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day begins, the dollar closed at 243.90 yen, up from Tuesday's 242.80. Later, in London, it reached 244.23 yen.

Other midmorning dollar rates compared to their close on Tuesday:

—2.4613 Swiss francs, up from 2.4405.

—3.3175 Dutch guilders, up from 3.3000.

—1.29935 Canadian dollars, up from 1.2960.

Gold opened at $338.00 an ounce in London, compared with a late bid price of $340.50 on Tuesday. At midmorning Wednesday, gold was "fixed" by the city's five bullion dealers at $338.50 dollars.

In Zurich, the bid price for gold was $338.75 an ounce, down from $341.50 late Tuesday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold dropped $2.69 to close at $340.27 an ounce.

In New York, Tuesday, gold fell $10.20 to close at $338.20.

Silver was quoted in London today at a bid price of $7.11 per ounce, down from Tuesday's $7.16.

Ford lists tenative prices

DETROIT (AP) — Ford Motor Co. has given its dealers a list of tentative prices for 1985 cars showing no increases in the base prices of its two smallest cars and increases on other models no greater than 6.5 percent, a Ford spokesman said.

Ford plans to announce its final prices for the 1985 fleet sometime before the official introduction of the new models Oct. 4, spokesman Gene Koch said Tuesday.

The company's two smallest cars, the subcompact Escort and its twin, the Lynx, tentatively list at $5,620 and $5,750, respectively, Koch said.

The lowest-priced Mustang from 1984, the L model, will be dropped from the line, making the LX the least expensive version of that sporty car, Koch said.

Comparably equipped Mustang LX models tentatively carry a base price of $6,885, down from $7,281 in 1984, he said.

Tentative prices for other cars range from a $52 increase for the lowest-price, two-seat Ford EXP to a $1,181 increase for the Lincoln Town Car, increases of 0.78 and 6.5 percent, respectively.

Other tentative base price increases include 2.3 percent for the Ford Tempo, 3.6 percent for the LTD, 4.9 percent for the Thunderbird, 5.5 percent for the Mercury Grand Marquis and 5.7 percent for the LTD Crown Victoria.

The most expensive car in the 1985 line would be the Lincoln Continental Mark VII, with a tentative base price of $22,631, up 4.4 percent.

General Motors Corp. has announced tentative price increases for its 1985 base models averaging 2.3 percent; Chrysler Corp., 1.7 percent; and American Motors Corp., 4.1 percent.

Bell Petroleum renews credit with First City Bank

Bell Petroleum Services, Inc. has announced renewal of its revolving line of credit agreement with First City National Bank of Midland.

Bell Petroleum President E.E Runyan said that the $5.5 million line of credit would be used primarily for the renewal of existing indebtedness, working capital requirements and capital expenditures and acquisitions.

Under terms of the agreement, the newly established revolving line of credit will be available until August, 1986, with interest charged at the prime rate plus one half percent until that time. Upon termination, the line of credit will convert to a term loan, with interest set at the prime rate plus one percent. The loan agreement will be collateralized by accounts receivable and inventory, in addition to property, plant and equipment in the oilfield rubber products segment.

Arab soft-drink hot item

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Dr Pepper soft-drink officials are trying to recall cans of their soda marked with Arabic lettering, but a reluctant distributor says he's not about to give up "the best marketing tool" he's ever had.

At issue are cans of the soda that mistakenly have tops on which the ingredients are written in Arabic. When word of the cans with the mysterious markings got out they became a hot item among collectors and the just plain curious.

But officials of the Dallas-based firm have ordered that sales of all cans bearing Arabic markings be stopped and the irregular cans sent back to the Reserve, La., plant that made them.

"We're anxious to put an embargo on those cans. I guess you would call it an Arab embargo," said Charles T. Grier, senior vice president for research and quality control.

However, a Southern Mississippi Bottling Co. official responded defiantly, "I'll tell him to stick those cans where the sun don't shine. We're selling them."

Bill Brown, vice president of the Jackson bottling firm, said he got several truckloads of the cans through a mixup with MSB Manufacturing, a Reserve, La., company that makes the drinks for Mississippi and Louisiana. Officials at the Reserve plant used the Arabic tops on a small group of cans made last month when the company temporarily ran out of domestic lids.

Brown said he can't stop sales now because those Arabic squiggles, which describe the ingredients in each can, have turned out to be "the best marketing tool" the local company has ever had. "And I didn't even think of it," he said.

Dr Pepper officials don't see it as creative marketing.

Interior to move ahead with offshore leasing

Los Angeles Times,
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Interior Secretary William P. Clark, declaring that the United States must break its dependency on foreign oil for 30 percent of its supplies, expressed determination Tuesday to move ahead with oil leasing off California "with all the environmental protections that we can find."

Clark, in a breakfast interview with The Times' Washington Bureau, said he will continue discussions with Gov. George Deukmejian to find air quality controls for offshore oil drilling that will protect the state's residents without being so costly that they discourage oil companies from bidding on leases.

Addressing the threat of oil spills similar to the 1969 disaster off Santa Barbara, Clark was optimistic. Improved technology and the greater distance of most lease tracts from shore have reduced the danger from drilling to less than the threat the public currently faces from tanker spills, he said.

"Last year off California, a total of 12 barrels were spilled (from drilling), and we're spilling greater amounts of oil, frankly, from the tankers bringing in foreign import," he said.

In the 90-minute interview, Clark also said that with President Reagan facing a Sept. 16 deadline for announcing action to protect the hard-pressed U.S. copper industry, the administration may get foreign producers to adopt voluntary restraints.

Referring to his department's planned lease sale later this month of 3.9 million acres off Southern California, Clark said he has removed 17 tracts that Deukmejian felt were environmentally sensitive. Other tracts were excluded, he said, because naval testing or military training is conducted nearby.

"The vast majority of leases will be beyond sight distance from the shore," Clark said, including one tract 130 miles from land.

He said public opinion polls show most Americans "recognize that our 30 percent dependency on foreign oil is simply too high" and warned against becoming complacent about the current glut of oil on world markets "because our consumption of imported oil is up to about 5½ million barrels a day now."

Clark has been active in Cabinet-level discussions on how to help the financially pressed copper industry in the face of dramatically lower prices for the metal. The industry has asked the International Trade Commission for protection from imports, and the commission has recommended that help should come in the form of tariffs or quotas.

Although a recent Cabinet council meeting on the issue made no official recommendation, Clark said, there was a consensus to avoid any tariff or quota action in favor of getting foreign producers to adopt voluntary restraints.

Wilmington field test considered a success

BARTLESVILLE, Ok. — Although operating problems associated with fluid production from an unconsolidated sand and corrosion by sulfate-reducing bacteria led to poor recovery economics, the Wilmington (Calif.) field test of oil recovery by chemical injection performed by the city of Long Beach is considered a technical success according to the Department of Energy.

The project was supported by the Department of Energy, and Keplinger & Associates, a petroleum consulting firm, has reviewed the test for the DOE.

Discovered in 1936 in the Los Angeles Basin, the 11-mile long and 3-mile wide Wilmington Field is the largest oilfield in California. In 1969, at its peak, Wilmington produced 250,000 barrels of oil per day. Cumulative production is about 2 billion barrels, and oil remaining after waterflooding is estimated to be about 2.5 billion barrels. The somewhat heavy (17 degrees API gravity) oil is produced from about 2,900-foot depth. Producing zones Tar, Ranger, and Upper Terminal are unconsolidated oil-bearing sandstones.

Primary production from the Upper Terminal began in 1945 and continued into the mid-1950's. Pilot water injection into a small sub-pool of the HXa sand was begun in 1953. By mid-1954, it became evident that injection into the aquifer was favorably affecting a much larger area. In 1955, injection was extended to HXb and HXc sands, and plans were formulated for a major expansion.

By 1958, full-scale water injection was being initiated to most of Old Wilmington. By 1970, there was no question that waterflooding was resulting in a substantial economic increase in recovery of the relatively low-gravity oil. However, based on original oil-in-place estimates of 2,200 to 1,800 barrels per acre-foot, the oil content at abandonment still would be 1,860 to 1,200 barrels per acre-foot for sands in the first 1,500 gross feet of producing interval.

With this large resource base for enhanced oil recovery, the oil department of the city of Long Beach and its consultant contacted Marathon Oil Co. regarding the application of its Maraflood Process. Marathon's Denver Research center, at its own expense, proceeded to formulate a micellar slug that would effectively displace the low gravity oil.

More than 60 laboratory displacement tests run on large-diameter preserved core samples under overburden pressure were required to obtain the optimum chemical design for the Maraflood system.

Subsequently, it was determined that the estimated initial oil content of the unconsolidated sands was erroneously high because it was based on conventional core analysis porosity values rather than porosity measured under overburden pressure. Thus, caluclated initial oil-in-place was reduced by about one-third and residual oil after waterflooding, nearly 50 percent. Even with the much lower oil-in-place numbers, the laboratory displacement tests indicated that the potential additional oil recovery was sufficient to justify the field test.

The DOE cost-shared contract was awarded in July 1976. Four injection wells and six production wells were drilled in the 10-acre project area. The reservoir was preflushed with produced brine.

In July 1979, injection of a slug of surfactant material was begun. The slug injected amounted to about 2.5 percent of the reservoir pore volume to be processed.

The surfactant lowers the interfacial tension between the injected fluid and the reservoir oil and water to almost zero. The surfactant acts much as a detergent acts when used in household applications.

In October 1979, the surfactant slug was followed by a larger slug of water containing a polymer to improve the sweep efficiency.

The process is a high-risk, long-term operation. Each reservoir has unique properties, and specific chemical systems must be designed for each application. Pilot tests are necessary to determine how effective full-field applications might be.

Of the estimated 470,000 barrels of oil remaining in the pilot reservoir when the test was begun, recovery resulting from the tests was 192,000 barrels, or 330 barrels per acre-foot, or 10 percent pore volume.

Princess prepares for second child

Princess Diana

LONDON (AP) — Princess Diana has returned from the royal family's holiday home at Balmoral Castle in Scotland to prepare for the birth of her second child, expected in two weeks, a spokesman said.

On Tuesday, the 23-year-old princess left behind heir to the throne Prince Charles and their 2-year-old son, Prince William, to keep an appointment with the queen's gynecologist, Dr. George Pinker.

Michael Shea, press secretary at Buckingham Palace, scotched a newspaper story that Diana was bored with Balmoral after two weeks and a day and quit the royal family's traditional summer vacation spot to get away from the bagpipes.

"It was known weeks ago that the princess intended to come back to London this afternoon," said Shea. "After all, she is expecting a baby in about a fortnight. As we have already announced, it is due in the second half of September and we haven't been more precise."

Prince Charles planned to fly to London with his son on Friday, Shea added.

A crib for the new baby has been installed in the nursery at Kensington Palace where Diana and Charles live. The princess is expected to give birth at the hospital in the state-run National Health Service, St. Mary's in west London's Paddington district, where William was born.

Graham Greene

LONDON (AP) — Graham Greene, the highly distinguished English novelist, says few of his books have fared well when adapted for the silver screen.

"Very few good films have been made out of my books, so they can't be that cinematic," Greene said in a rare public appearance Monday night at a gathering of movie buffs at London's National Film Theater.

Greene, 79, called the inauguration of a film retrospective of his adapted stories "an ambiguous festival," adding, "You're celebrating with what I consider eight very bad films..." among the 23 to be shown.

He named only two he liked: director Carol Reed's "The Third Man" and "The Fallen Idol."

Greene said he seldom sees movies any more, but he stayed on after his talk to watch the premiere of the most recent adaptation of his work — Michael Lindsay-Hogg's television film of "Dr. Fischer of Geneva," with Alan Bates and, in his last TV appearance, the late James Mason.

"I want here to say that any pleasure I have in seeing the film is overcast by the death of James Mason," Greene said, expressing amazement at "the patience, good humor, and thoughtfulness to others shown by him" during shooting.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Cristina Ferrare De Lorean described herself as "a great cook" during her debut as a television talk show hostess and promised to share with viewers secrets of Italian cooking and other cuisines.

The former fashion model made no mention Tuesday of her husband, John De Lorean, or his celebrated trial that ended Aug. 16 with his acquittal on cocaine conspiracy charges.

"We're going to get to know this woman in different ways," said Steve Edwards, co-host with Ms. Ferrare on KABC's "A.M. Los Angeles," a one-hour local show that follows the network's "Good Morning America."

Promising to teach viewers her cooking secrets in a feature to be known as "Cristina's Kitchen," she declared "I love food. I live for food."

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — A national tour of "The King and I" starring Yul Brynner will have to bypass Minneapolis next month because the veteran stage and screen actor will be undergoing medical tests, the Orpheum Theater announced.

The theater said Tuesday that it had canceled performances of "The King and I" from Oct. 1 to Oct. 21 because Brynner must undergo medical examinations in California and Europe.

Suspense, sex dominate films

By YARDENA ARAR
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES — Suspense, supernatural high jinks and sex dominated the final weekend of what is shaping up as the biggest summer in film industry history.

Clint Eastwood's "Tightrope" held first place for a third straight weekend even though its gross of $7.1 million for the four-day Labor Day holiday was slightly down from the previous three-day weekend.

But feisty "Ghostbusters" almost regained the top spot by scaring up $6.8 million, nearly $2 million more than a weekend earlier.

"Bolero," a sexually explicit adventure starring Bo Derek, scored $4.6 million in its maiden outing to replace "Red Dawn" at third place. But critics predicted a short theatrical life for the film, which was released without a rating because its raciness supposedly would have earned it an X.

The review in the trade publication Daily Variety began: "There's a real good cartoon at the Hollywood Pacific this week in which a horse does funny things with Woody Woodpecker, followed by 'Bolero' in which Bo Derek does funny things with a horse, her hair and a couple of men. Judging from the audience's reaction, the cartoon will be around longer."

The weekend's other newcomer, Tri-Star's "Flashpoint" starring Treat Williams and Kris Kristofferson, was unable to crack the top 10 with a take of $1.9 million.

Final figures for the summer aren't yet in, but most observers expect that total ticket sales for the 50-odd summer releases will surpass the $3.77 billion reported last year in Daily Variety.

"The movie business always expands when you give the public what they want," Ashley Boone, Columbia Pictures vice president for marketing and distribution, said Tuesday. "This year, they gave them what they wanted."

Columbia put out the most wanted film of all, "Ghostbusters," which has raked in $188.6 million since its release 13 weeks ago. The success of "Ghostbusters" surprised many who at the summer's outset had assumed that Paramount's "Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom," the sequel to the hugely successful "Raiders of the Lost Ark," would be the season's big money-maker.

"I think 'Ghostbusters' grabbed the imagination of the entire spectrum of movie goers," Boone said, adding that he believed the title song by Ray Parker Jr. and its accompanying video had also helped.

"And, thank God, there weren't any articles about it being too scary or anything like there were for 'Indiana Jones' and 'Gremlins,'" Boone said.

Receipts for "Indiana Jones," a George Lucas-Steven Spielberg collaboration released two weeks before "Ghostbusters," stand at $167.3 million. Spielberg also produced the summer's third most successful film, Warne's "Gremlins," which has taken in $136.7 million.

All three hit films appeared in the Labor Day weekend top 10, "Indiana Jones" returning to 10th place after several weeks' absence.

Columbia's other unexpected summer smash, "The Karate Kid," barreled back to fourth place by drawing $4.2 million. "The Karate Kid" has earned $64.4 million in 11 weeks, drawing close to such other successes as "Police Academy," ($80 million); "Romancing the Stone," ($75 million); and "Star Trek II," ($75 million).

"Purple Rain," the Warner Bros. film starring rock 'n' roller Prince, drummed up $4.1 million to hold fifth place.

Meanwhile, Paramount's 800-theater quickie reissue of "Footloose," a hit that played for some 200 days earlier this year, ran up $1.2 million.

The weekend's 10 top-grossing films, with distributor, weekend gross, total gross and number of weeks in release:

1. "Tightrope," Warner Bros., $7.1 million, $30.8 million, three weeks.
2. "Ghostbusters," Columbia, $6.8 million, $188.6 million, 13 weeks.
3. "Bolero," Cannon, $4.6 million, 3 days.
4. "The Karate Kid," Columbia, $4.2 million, $70.0 million, 11 weeks.
5. "Purple Rain," Warner Bros., $4.1 million, $45.7 million, six weeks.
6. "The Woman in Red," Orion, $3.6 million, $13.7 million, three weeks.
7. "Red Dawn," MGM-UA, $3.3 million, $29.7 million, four weeks.
8. "Gremlins," Warner Bros., $3 million, $136.7 million, 13 weeks.
9. "Revenge of the Nerds," Fox, $2.9 million, $28.8 million, seven weeks.

'Disney' to return to cable TV

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "The Wonderful World of Disney," television's longest-running prime-time series which appeared on all three networks, will return to Sunday nights at 7 p.m. Eastern time on pay-cable's The Disney Channel.

The Disney Channel has announced that repeats of the programs will begin Oct. 14 with "Man in Space," the first of three science programs presented in the mid-1950s.

The Disney series lasted 29 years on network TV. It began on ABC in 1954 as "Disneyland," prospered in the '60s on NBC as "The Wonderful World of Disney" and finished on CBS in 1981 as "Walt Disney."

Originally broadcast in black and white from 1954-61, many of these weekly programs were filmed in color and will be presented in color for the first time.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Large portions of NBC's 10-hour miniseries, "Peter the Great," will be filmed in the Soviet Union as the "first totally independent America drama" ever to be photographed in that nation.

Executive producer Lawrence Schiller, who is also directing, spent more than a year in the U.S.S.R. doing research and obtaining Soviet cooperation for filming in the restored city of Suzdal, the historic monastery at Zagorsky, Leningrad and Moscow.

Maximilian Schell stars as the mature Peter, the legendary czar who opened Russia to the world. It also stars Vanessa Redgrave, Laurence Olivier, Omar Sharif, Trevor Howard, John Mills and Lili Palmer. In addition, 21 Soviet actors will also appear in the production, due to appear on NBC in the 1985-86 period.

"This is the first totally independent American drama ever to film in the Soviet Union," Schiller said.

Academy Award-winning screenwriter Edward Anhalt wrote the screenplay based on Robert K. Massie's Pulitzer Prize-winning book.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 NT	Pass	2 ♣	Pass
2 ◇	Pass	4 NT	Pass
6 NT	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Jack of ◇.

At times, you may have to tackle more than one suit to develop the tricks you need for your contract. The order in which you play the suits might be crucial.

When North's Stayman inquiry failed to locate a major-suit fit, he made a quantitative raise in no trump. We might have passed with the South hand, but at the table South judged to go on to slam on the strength of his fair five-card suit.

West led the top of his diamond sequence, and declarer could count nine fast tricks. With a normal 3-2 break, two more tricks can be developed in clubs, and the heart suit will always produce a second trick, to bring the total to 12.

However, declarer cannot afford to go after clubs first. Why? Because if he does and the heart finesse fails, the defenders have two tricks before declarer can reel in his dozen. Therefore, declarer should win the opening lead in dummy and immediately take the heart finesse.

If the heart finesse succeeds, declarer would simply surrender a club in the proper fashion (cash one top honor, then lead low from hand) and claim his contract. But when it fails, declarer can no longer afford to lose a trick in clubs. Now his only realistic hope is to find East with both missing club honors.

Assume West continues with a diamond. Win on the table and lead the 10 of clubs. If East does not cover, run it. If he does cover, cross to the board with the jack of hearts and repeat the club finesse. As the cards lie, this line allows you to bring in the whole club suit and, with it, the slam.

Rubber bridge clubs throughout the country use the four-deal bridge format. Do they know something you don't? The photo of the 36-acre weekend retreat for the Soviet United Nations shows one of the cameras mounted on poles on the ground.

A Soviet weekend retreat

GLEN COVE, N.Y. — For years, the weekend retreat of the Soviet delegation to the United Nations has been shrouded — 36 acres protected by padlocks, wrought-iron gates and chain-link fence topped with barbed wire.

And though there has been a diplomatic chill over everything from cruise missiles in Europe to the 1984 Olympics in Los Angeles, relations with the Soviets have been warming on Long Island. Soviet diplomats to the U.N. Mission decided recently that they were ready to dispel some of the mystique of the estate, known locally as Killenworth, and allowed two reporters and a photographer a rare visit inside the mansion, once owned by millionaire George DuPont Pratt.

It was a warming trend that began when the Russians invited Mayor Vincent A. Suozzi and the Glen Cove City Council to lunch: They ate shish kabob and toured the grounds on March 31. Soviet Ambassador Oleg A. Troyanovsky called the meeting a "mini-detente," and on April 24, the city council voted to rescind a 2-year-old resolution that banned Soviets from city beaches.

Former Mayor Alan M. Parente had proposed the ban after American intelligence officials reported that the residence, owned by the Soviets since 1946, was being used as a spy outpost. It was a unilateral action that caused outcries in Washington and prompted a suit against the city by the Justice Department. When Suozzi took office Jan. 1, he declared that the city should not interfere with foreign affairs and worked out a settlement.

Vladimir Shustov, permanent Soviet representative to the U.N., pleased with the city council action, told a reporter, "There is no mystery about the mansion," and arranged for a visit.

At 3 o'clock on a Friday afternoon, Boris Kuleshov, caretaker of the estate, answers the intercom located on the stone pillar at the entrance. Ten minutes later he arrives at the wrought-iron gate and unlocks the padlock. Escorted, the visitors drive past a security camera that scans the entrance and travel almost a half-mile along a narrow asphalt road to the 49-room residence.

The 2 1-2 -story mansion, built in 1912, is situated on a bluff and hidden from view by lush evergreens. With the help of a gardener and other household staff, Kuleshov and his wife Zinaida have been caring for the estate for almost three years.

They moved here from Moscow, leaving behind a three-room apartment, two married children, a grandson and a dog. In exchange, they live in the former Pratt mansion, which is not known to the Soviets as Killenworth, but as "the Glen Cove residence."

When they first arrived they were impressed with the marble foyer, the oak walls, stone fireplaces and gilt chandeliers. "It was like a castle," Mrs. Kuleshov says through an interpreter.

But they also have known the fear of attacks on the estate. Shortly after they moved into the mansion in November 1981, two high school students shot 12 bullets through a sun-room, shattering windows of the French doors and leaving nicks that are still visible in the stone walls. Last September, some Korean-Americans crashed through the iron gate of the estate, protesting the Soviet downing of a South Korean jetliner, a crash that killed 269 persons.

But, says Mrs. Kuleshov, "Most of the time, it's a peaceful place."

For Kuleshov, 53, caring for Killenworth is a multifaceted responsibility, from its 25 bathrooms to the kitchens that service the diplomats who come out for the weekend. But he dismisses the thought that housekeeping on such a grand scale could be difficult. He says, repeatedly, "No problem."

The Kuleshovs live in the mansion, spending six to seven hours a day caring for the grounds, vacuuming the rugs or making the parquet floors and oak paneling glisten with lemon oil. "It should be very clean here," Mrs. Kuleshov says. "Like the mirrors — everything should glitter." Her husband adds, "If you do not feel this house is your own, it will never be so clean or so beautiful."

How many others live there full time is an open question. City officials believe there are eight permanent residents at Killenworth, but Semyon Dzakhayev, second secretary of the Soviet mission, says there are five or six. "I don't come here often," says Dzakhayev, who is present this time to interpret for the visitors.

The sparkle of the leaded glass windows is dampened by sheer white curtains, and the ornate carvings on wood beams are minimized by unspectacular furniture. The mansion, once the home of wealthy capitalists, retains most of its former splendor, except for the furnishings. "We have no conflicts or contradictions with the house because it's ours now and we try to keep it clean and keep it healthy," Dzakhayev says. In Moscow, buildings like the Pratt mansion are used as museums, he says.

The tour is limited to the first floor. Permission to see other parts of the mansion, including the fabled attic where electronic spy gear is reportedly closeted, is denied.

"It's private living rooms," Dzakhayev says. Ambassador Troyanovsky and his four deputies and their families have separate living quarters that include kitchens. "They usually get up at different times and eat in their own rooms. They cook for themselves in their own separate apartments," he says.

Despite the stillness apparent from outside the gates, Killenworth bustles inside. On an average weekend, about 20 Soviets cine bt car from Manhattan. There's a playground with swing sets and monkey bars, a movie room for screenings of Soviet films, three pianos and a newly renovated tennis court. Recently, the 28-meter swimming pool was restored at a cost of $30,000.

"The main problem of the people who live here is to make the weekends happy — just keeping the house clean and warm, showing films and movies," Kuleshov says through Dzakhayev. "We like it when there are a lot of people and parties."

While they have grown attached to "the Glen Cove residence," the Kuleshovs say they are looking forward to returning to Moscow. "We miss our home and our children," Mrs. Kuleshov says. "We're hoping sooner or later we'll be home again."

The Kuleshovs have planted 40 fruit trees in a small orchard beside the formal garden as a remembrance of themselves. It is a quiet tribute, in keeping, they feel, with the essence of their mission, which Mrs. Kuleshov describes as "peace between American and the Soviet people and mutual understanding."

For most of its four decades under Soviet ownership, Killenworth appeared to be away from the heat of politics. The events of recent years have changed that, perhaps irrevocably.

Dzakhayev finds that troublesome: "All this hostility — even the media — they write about us like we are from another world." That's not so, he says. The owners of Killenworth just want to be "good neighbors."

Parapsychologist Loyd Auerback displays some of the video equipment he uses for field investigations.

'Ghostbuster' thanks film for new interest

Associated Press

ORINDA, Calif. — He's never been slimed and he's never seen a phantom, but parapsychologist Loyd Auerback says people are more interested in what he does these days thanks to the hit movie "Ghostbusters."

Auerbach, a faculty member in the parapsychology program at John F. Kennedy University, is a private consultant on psychic matters. He says his job has its difficulties.

"They're hard to get hold of," he said of the apparitions that have eluded his investigations. "It's not as if you can get them to walk into your lab, sit down, and start up a conversation."

Auerbach, 28, is one of a small band of professionals who conduct "spontaneous case investigations" or investigations of paranormal occurrences outside of laboratory conditions.

The professionals call themselves "psychical field researchers," or "parapsychological field investigators." These days, however, they're known as ghostbusters.

In the movie, Bill Murray, Dan Aykroyd and Harold Ramis portray three New York City parapsychologists who launch a private enterprise, "Ghostbusters," during an onslaught of ghosts and nasty spirits that reaches epic proportions.

They use high-tech wares to battle the beasts and creatures that invade a hotel, library and apartment house.

But in reality, Auerbach says, there are no PK-valence detectors, no nuclear-powered particle accelerators and no devices that suck up subatomic matter.

"We'd love something like that — it'd make our lives a lot easier," he said.

About half of the spontaneous case investigations seem to include an element of psychic phenomena, the others stem from a person's psychological stress, Auerbach said.

There are about 300 practicing parapsychologists, most of them residing in the United States and Great Britain, according to the 100-year-old American Society for Psychical Research.

Dr. Karlis Osis, emeritus professor at the New York-based society, has conducted more than 100 field investigations.

Osis decries a lack of ghost education that leaves many people wondering whom to call after they run into a suspected paranormal occurrence.

"To me, it is silly the way in which Americans are totally unprepared to handle apparition experiences," he said. "They run — even from their own mothers. This is cruel. We should prepare people for all life situations — not just driving an automobile or crossing a street, but having an apparition experience as well."

John F. Kennedy is a 1,900-student university that offers mostly evening classes in the fields of law, management, liberal arts, psychology and consciousness-raising studies.

Boston University students start school year in hotel

Associated Press

BOSTON — Because of a shortage of dormitory space at Boston University, 364 freshman students are starting university life in higher style than they may have expected.

They are staying at the North Tower of the Sheraton Boston Hotel, where rooms go for $85 a night, including maid service, air conditioning and use of the pool.

"They may hesitate to go back to dormitory living when they are reassigned, said Mary Eaton, dean of residence life, in an interview published today.

"We are trying to make the new students at the hotel feel part of the campus. They have flexible meal cards to eat at any dormitory and they are trying them all out. There is a regular shuttle bus to BU."

Living two to a room in the luxury hotel about a mile from campus, they eventually will join about 250 other freshman now living in dormitory lounges until enough space is found.

Meanwhile, the students at the hotel were told to follow campus regulations — no alcohol in the rooms and no more than four students in one room at one time.

Boston University is not alone in its shortage of dormitory space.

Wellesley College, faced with 100 more freshmen than expected in a class of 640, is lodging some students in a renovated house by a lake, and the University of Massachusetts at Amherst is housing students in music rooms, lounges and the Campus Center hotel, ordinarily used for conferences.

At Bates College in Lewiston, Maine, where 26 more freshman than expected arrived for the fall term, triple rooms have become quadruples, said Associate Dean Celeste Branham.

Bulldozer clears grave of 'Black Beauty' writer

LAMAS, England (AP) — Private contractors have bulldozed the grave of Anna Sewell, the Victorian author of the childhood classic "Black Beauty," in the process of clearing an old Quaker cemetery.

The chairman of the local parish council today described the move as despicable vandalism.

The grave and its headstone were in a small Quaker burial ground at the rear of a disused Quaker chapel in this village in the county of Norfolk in rural eastern England.

Miss Sewell lived from 1820 to 1878. A year before her death, she published her novel "Black Beauty" about a horse rescued from a wretched life as an ill-treated hack pulling a London hansom cab.

The story touched the hearts of generations of children and helped shock Victorians into providing water troughs for thirsty cab horses in big cities.

Council chairman John Perkins said the ground was sold a long time ago, but that a few dozen people still visit the author's grave each year.

But he said that contractors had cleared the site, uprooting headstones and dumping them next to the derelict chapel and felling cypress trees surrounding the graves.

"I know the land belongs to a private person, but I would almost say it is as bad as vandalism," Perkins said. "I know Quaker ground is not consecrated, but for anybody just to pull down gravestones of any Quaker, whether it's Anna Sewell or not, well, I think it's despicable."

Course accentuates un-Southern speech

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (AP) — If you look like a business exec but sound like a Beverly Hillbilly, y'all might want to lose that Southern accent.

Speech pathologist Beverly Inman-Ebel says she can help.

"Southern Success Without the Southern Accent" is the name of a 10-week course Ms. Inman-Ebel is teaching this fall at Chattanooga State Technical Community College.

"The Southern voice is typically very friendly, very gentle — an easier, slower type of speech — and that's fine in most situations," says Ms. Inman-Ebel, director of the Communication Clinic in Chattanooga.

But people in business want to appear assertive, not easy-going, she said. They want people to listen to them. A Southern accent, said Ms. Inman-Ebel, can distract non-Southerners, who often think it's cute.

"If you're a young executive — or an older executive — you don't wish to sound cute," she said.

The State of Texas has applied for Final Authorization under the Resource Conservation of Recovery Act (RCRA). EPA has reviewed the State's application and has made the tentative determination that the State of Texas' hazardous waste program satisfies all of the requirements necessary to qualify for final authorization. Thus, EPA intends to grant Final Authorization to the State of operate its program in lieu of the federal program in the State. The State of Texas' application for Final Authorization is available to solicit comments on the States program submittal and EPA's tentative decision.

DATES: A public hearing is scheduled for October 10, 1984 at 7:00 p.m. The State of Texas will participate in the public hearing held by EPA on this subject. All comments on the State's application and EPA's tentative determination must be received by the close of the public hearing on October 10, 1984.

ADDRESSES: Copies of Texas' final authorization application are available during business hours at the following addresses for inspection and copying: Texas Department of Health, 1100 West 49th Street, Austin, Texas 78756 and the Texas Department of Water Resources, 1700 North Congress, Austin, Texas 78711; U. S. EPA Headquarters Library, PM 211A, 401 M Street, S. W., Washington, D.C. 20460, Phone: (202)382-5926; U.S. EPA Region VI Library, 1201 Elm St., Dallas, Texas 75270, Phone: (214) 767-7341. Written comments should be sent to H. J. Parr, Hazardous Materials Branch, Environmental Protection Agency, 1201 Elm St., Dallas, Texas 75270 phone (214)767-2645. EPA will hold the public hearing on October 10, 1984 in room 118 of the Stephen F. Austin Building, 1700 North Congress, Austin, Texas 78711.

FOR FURTHER INFORMATION CONTACT: H. J. Parr, Hazardous Materials Branch, U.S. EPA, 1201 Elm St., Dallas, Texas 75270, Phone: (214)767-2645.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION: Section 3006 of the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act (RCRA) allows EPA to authorize state hazardous waste programs to operate in the state in lieu of the Federal hazardous waste program. Two types of authorization may be granted. The first type, known as "interim authorization," is a temporary authorization which is granted if EPA determines that the State program is "substantially equivalent" to the Federal program (Section 3006(c), 42 U.S.C. 6226(c)). EPA's implementing regulations at 40 CFR 271.121-271.137 established a phased approach to interim authorization: Phase I, covering the EPA regulations in 40 CFR Part 260-263 and 265 (universe of hazardous wastes, generator standards, transporter standards and standards for interim status facilities) and Phase II, covering the EPA regulations in 40 CFR Parts 124, 264, and 270 (procedures and standards for permitting hazardous waste management facilities).

Phase II, in turn, has three components. Phase II, Component A, covers general permitting procedures and technical standards for storage of hazardous waste in containers and tanks. Phase II, Component B, covers incinerator facilities, and Phase II, Component C, addresses facilities, that dispose of hazardous waste in landfills, land treatment facilities, surface impoundments and waste piles. By statute, all interim authorizations expire on January 26, 1985. Responsibility for the hazardous waste program returns (reverts) to EPA on that date if the State has not received final authorization, as described below.

The second type of authorization is a "final" (permanent) authorization that is granted by EPA if the Agency finds that the State program (1) is "equivalent" to the Federal program, (2) is consistent with the Federal program and other State programs, and (3) provides for adequate enforcement (Section 3006(b), 42 U.S.C. 6226(b)). States need not have obtained interim authorization in order to qualify for final authorization. EPA regulations for final authorization appear at 40 CFR 271.1-271.23.

Texas received Phase I interim authorization on December 24, 1980, Phase II, Component A and B interim Authorization on March 23, 1982, and Phase II, Component C, interim Authorization on September 1, 1983. One June 22, 1984, Texas submitted a complete application for final authorization. Prior to its submission, Texas solicited public comment and held a public hearing on its draft application. EPA has reviewed Texas' application and has tentatively determined that the State's program meets all of the requirements necessary to qualify for Final Authorization. Consequently, EPA intends to grant Final Authorization to Texas. In accordance with Section 3006 of RCRA and 40 CFR 271.20(d), the Agency will hold a public hearing onthe tentative decision on October 10, 1984, at 7:00 p.m. in room 118 of the Stephen F. Austin Building, 1700 North Congress, Austin, Texas 78711. The Public may also submit written comments on EPA's tentative determination and the State's submittal up until the close of the public hearing on October 10, 1984. Copies of Texas' application are available for inspection and copying at the locations indicated in the "Addresses" section of this notice.

EPA will consider all public comments on its tentative determination. Issues raised by those comments may be the basis for a decision to deny final authorization to Texas. EPA expects to make a final decision on whether or not to approve Texas' program in approximately 90 days. The notice of the final decision will include a summary of the reasons for the final determination and a response to all major comments.
