Freemen end 81-day standoff

16 remaining members of Montana group surrender peacefully to FBI

■ Convoy of vehicles head for Billings, where 12 fugitives will face criminal charges.

Associated Press

JORDAN, Mont. — All 16 remaining members of the anti-government Freemen group surrendered to the FBI and left their ranch Thursday, ending the 81-day standoff without the bloodshed of Waco and Ruby Ridge.

As two vans and one sedan carrying the Freemen left the compound, an FBI agent in a vehicle that followed leaned out his window and waved an American flag — a seeming gesture of triumph that the longest armed siege in modern U.S. history had come to a peaceful conclusion.

After the convoy had departed, six FBI agents drove to the Freemen's sentry point on the 960-acre compound in rural eastern Montana. One agent climbed onto the trailer parked there and pulled down the Confederate battle flag that the extremists had hoisted earlier in the day when they removed an upside-down American flag, a traditional symbol of distress.

The surrender in early evening capped an excruciating day of tension as reporters — who were kept more than a mile away — watched a flurry of activity at the compound with little explanation of what was going on. Television news cameras showed frequent live shots of vehicles driving around within the compound. Reports had circulated since Tuesday night that a settlement of the crisis was immi-

Arizona governor

PHOENIX — Gov. Fife Symington, who was under investigation for allegedly cheating lenders and misusing his office, was indicted today on 23 counts including fraud and attempted extortion. Assistant U.S. Attorney Jeff Isaacs announced the federal indictment moments after a grand jury presented it in open court. It accuses Symington, a former real estate developer, of making false statements to a federally insured institution, wire fraud, attempted extortion and false statements in a bankruptcy proceeding, Isaacs said. He would not elaborate. Page 12A

Budget passed

WASHINGTON — The Senate gave final approval Thursday to an election-year balanced budget plan aimed at sharply defining the differences between Democrats and Republicans while avoiding a repeat of last year's government shutdowns. Not one senator — Republican or Democrat — strayed from the party line in the 53-46 vote approving the GOP document, which would spend $1.62 trillion in fiscal 1997 and produce a $5 billion surplus in 2002. Page 11A

Today is Flag Day, a day to "honor America," according to the presidential proclamation that was initially issued in 1916. It was on June 14, 1777, that the Continental Congress accepted the Stars and Stripes as the flag of the new United States.

Supreme Court rules against 4 minority districts in Texas, N.C.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court threw out predominantly minority congressional districts in Texas and North Carolina on Thursday in rulings that could crush other efforts to maximize the political clout of blacks and Hispanics.

Voters are "more than mere racial statistics," the court declared in two 5-4 rulings that invalidated three districts in Texas and one in North Carolina. The justices said the states unlawfully made race the main factor in drawing the boundaries.

Such districts "cause constitutional harm" because they "convey the message that political identity is, or should be, predominantly racial," Justice Sandra Day O'Connor wrote in one of the court's main opinions.

The decisions, sure to affect many federal, state and local elections nationwide, delighted some conservatives but outraged civil rights groups.

Abigail Thernstrom of the conservative Institute for Justice called the rulings "a victory for those who favor a colorblind society."

But Elaine Jones of the NAACP Legal Defense Fund said the decisions "really torch the fundamental right of African-Americans, Hispanics and others to be included as participatory citi-

Perry talks about drought during visit to city

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

"How are things up the way other than dry," Agriculture Commissioner Rick Perry asked Western cowboy artist Tom Ryan Thursday.

"They are dry," Ryan said.

And so they are, in Texas's worst drought since the 1950s.

"The entire state is impacted by it," Perry said on a visit to the Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library and J. Evetts Haley History Center where many of Ryan's works are exhibited.

Perry said that Central Texas has gotten "a little reprieve" through recent rains and showers, "but we ain't got a pardon yet."

'We have got to really start thinking about conservation ... .'
— Rick Perry, agriculture commissioner

"Not only is agriculture being impacted in a wide scale, I assume if we don't see some major weather-pattern changes, drinking water could start getting critical for some places in Texas," Perry said.

Perry said that he was "not trying to scare folks ... but conservation certainly ought to be on everybody's mind now, whether it is taking a shower or if you are irrigating crops.

"We have got to really start thinking about conservation if this is a long-term drought."

Weather analysts predict that the drought in the Southwest "could go through 1998 and 1999.

"So, that's pretty severe," he said.

Perry said that water reservoirs, "particularly the High Plains, Western Texas and South Texas," are diminishing, and some to 25 percent of capacity.

Among the more severe are Lake J.B. Thomas, northeast of Midland, which is at 5 percent of

Bush bans only aerial fireworks in Midland

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Rather than order a total ban on fireworks in Midland County during the drought, Gov. George W. Bush will ban only aerial fireworks, Midland County Judge Jeff Norwood said Thursday.

The Midland County Commissioners' Court voted unanimously on Monday to request that the governor, under an executive order, ban the sale, possession and use of all fireworks during the drought.

The court had rejected its own option to ban holiday fireworks except in a "safe place," such as plowed and barren cotton fields, during the July 4 celebrations.

"We are grateful Governor Bush is assisting us with (the ban on) aerial fireworks," Norwood said in a prepared statement. "His action helps highlight the threat from fire during this severe drought."

Midland-Odessa businessman Jim Harris, who is a partner in Truckload Fireworks, said Bush's "action to ban aerial items is fantastic and leaves ground-based items legal.

"It is a great day for small business," said Harris, who earlier this week told the Commissioners' Court that he had secured a safe area — cotton fields — for igniting fireworks.

"And we are looking forward to following what Governor Bush has suggested for us to do," Harris said. "And we are excited about working with (Midland County Fire Mar-

Tribunal president calls for arrest of Serb leaders before fall elections

FLORENCE, Italy (AP) — The president of the U.N. war crimes tribunal demanded Thursday that Bosnian Serb leaders be arrested for war crimes trials before Bosnian elections this fall.

Judge Antonio Cassese said if the suspects aren't arrested, the world should impose sanctions — possibly including banning Serb-led Yugoslavia from the Olympics in Atlanta.

Cassese told a conference assessing Bosnia's fragile peace that unless Bosnian Serb leaders Radovan Karadzic and Gen. Ratko Mladic are arrested, there could be a return to violence and possibly a new Balkan war.

"Moral leadership is required," he said. "It is imperative to take rapid measures, draconian enough, to ensure that a genuine and definitive peace reigns once again in the former Yugoslavia."

Banning sports-minded Yugoslavia from the Olympics in July would have "enormous psychological impact" and cost the international community nothing, Cassese said.

The Dayton peace accord calls for Bosnia to hold elections by Sept. 14 — a deadline the United States wants to stick to.

Driven in part by President Clinton's need to keep Dayton's timetable and get U.S. troops out as promised by December, the United States has argued that elections are needed to keep Bosnia's ethnic partition from hardening.

But Cassese has backed the demands of Bosnia's Muslim-led government for Karadzic's and Mladic's arrest before any vote.

"If Karadzic is not tried by (the war crimes tribunal in) The Hague, he will continue to exercise real power," even though Dayton bars him from running in the elections, Cassese said.

Undersecretary of State Peter Tarnoff, the head of the U.S. delegation to the conference, said, "We must do better. We must press for the surrender of indicted war criminals. We must urge the parties to provide long overdue evidence, including the names of suspect war criminals, to the tribunal."

Under the peace accord, the primary responsibility for arresting those indicted for war crimes lies with local police.

In Belgium, NATO defense ministers issued a statement affirming that apprehending war criminals and investigating war crimes "are essential to bring justice and durable peace to Bosnia."

The ministers, however, said they had no plans to change NATO's policy of only arresting suspects its forces come upon in the course of routine duties.

"NATO is not a detective agency. It's not a police force," British Defense Secretary Michael Portillo said.

The call for the arrests of Karadzic and Mladic punctuated glum assessments of Bosnia's peace halfway through the NATO mission.

While delegates from about 45 nations and various international groups praised NATO for halting fighting and separating armies, all noted that fear, hatred and division persist. Bosnians cannot move or speak freely in their country, and refugees cannot go home, meaning that elections will be flawed, they noted.

"The forces of ethnic separation are greater than those of ethnic reintegration," said Carl Bildt, the top official for implementing civilian aspects of the Dayton peace accord.

He criticized the international community for falling behind in funds pledged for reconstruction, and stressed the world will have to help far beyond the end of NATO's mission in December.

The commitment "must be wider and longer than we have so far discussed," he said.

Irregularities delay election results in Bangladesh

DHAKA, Bangladesh (AP) — Bangladesh's surprisingly smooth parliamentary elections hit some bumps on Thursday, when the Election Commission suddenly stopped giving results to allow for a re-vote in some districts.

The Bangladesh Nationalist Party, which appeared to be losing the elections, went even farther by charging widespread fraud and demanding a repeat of voting in fully one-third of the nation's poll stations.

Wednesday's elections, run by a caretaker government, were aimed at ending a two-year standoff between the Bangladesh Nationalist Party and its main rival, the Bangladesh Awami League. Political turmoil had incapacitated the nation and its economy.

At first, all seemed to gave gone well. International observers praised the high voter turnout — a record 73 percent — and said it appeared to be fair. There were fewer incidents of political violence and complaints of fraud than expected.

Now, violence could come with the dispute over the election's outcome.

The Bangladesh Awami League was leading in the preliminary count and expected to win the elections and form the next government.

Charging fraud, BNP vice chairman Budruddoja Choudhury said his party will launch street protests if election officials fail to repeat the vote in some districts.

The two parties and their heavily armed cadres often clash in the nation's cities and villages.

Awami League leader Sheikh Hasina forced Wednesday's elections by leading an anti-corruption campaign that started in 1994 and ended in March with the ouster of the BNP government.

On Thursday, Hasina told reporters she believes her party will win, despite the call for re-polling. She promised Bangladeshis that her government would "heal the wounds, not create new ones; unite the nation, not divide it."

By midday Thursday, the Election Commission had announced that the liberal Awami League had won 133 of the 300 Parliament seats. Former Prime Minister Khaleda Zia's centrist Bangladesh Nationalist Party controlled 104. The Jatiya Party won 29 seats, while the Muslim fundamentalist Jamaat-e-Islami had two. Small parties or independents won three.

For hours, the winners of the 29 other seats weren't announced, raising concern among the parties and making it unclear which party would finish first.

Then, the Election Commission announced that the results from 27 seats would be withheld until next week.

Controversial film divides Turkey

ANKARA, Turkey (AP) — A blockbuster movie has conservative Turks up in arms over what they say are hints that a feared 17th-century Ottoman sultan was bisexual.

The dispute is about more than the movie — it is part of a battle over Turkish society being waged between Turks who want a secular society and a growing movement that wants to impose strict Islamic law.

"Istanbul Under My Wings" is breaking box-office records for Turkish-made films. It tells the story of Hazerfan Ahmet Celebi, a Turkish scientist who built his own wings using Leonardo da Vinci's blueprints and supposedly was able to fly.

Central to the movie is Sultan Murad IV, who offered shaky support for Celebi's endeavor. Murad is depicted in the constant company of a handsome young man. He is shown patting the man's head and talking to him in an intimate manner.

The producers contend they never meant to suggest that Murad was bisexual. In numerous scenes, he is shown in bed with women from his harem.

But a lawmaker from the pro-Islamic Welfare Party demanded in Parliament that the government explain how such a movie could receive state funds.

Culture Minister Agah Oktay Guner, known for his ultranationalist leanings, condemned the movie for "insulting our history" and said he would ask that the funds be returned to the treasury.

"Nobody has the right to swear at Turkish history by portraying a sultan as gay using the (state's) money," he said. The money was granted during the previous administration, when the ministry was run by a social democrat.

A Welfare mayor in the central city of Kayseri banned the film.

The Islamic political movement, led by the Welfare Party, has been gaining strength in the last few years. While it could muster no more than 10 percent of the vote in the 1970s and 1980s, it has drawn 25-30 percent of the vote in recent elections.

Now the largest party in Parliament, Welfare is looking for partners to form a coalition government after a center-right coalition collapsed last week.

Welfare wants to push Turkey toward the East, and says the country would be better off leading the Islamic world than trying to tag along behind it.

Magazine ban back in effect

JAKARTA, Indonesia (AP) — Indonesia's Supreme Court restored a ban on the country's most respected magazine on Thursday. Journalists condemned the ruling as a setback to freedom of speech.

> 'Today is a day of mourning for the Indonesian press.'
> — Gunawan Muhammad, Editor, Tempo

The verdict strikes down two lower court decisions that found the Information Ministry's ban to be illegal and arbitrary.

"Today is a day of mourning for the Indonesian press," said Gunawan Muhammad, editor of the magazine Tempo.

The magazine was banned June 21, 1994, for publishing stories critical of the government. In banning Tempo — and two other weeklies, Editor and DeTik — the government accused them of publishing articles endangering national stability.

The case was a litmus test for freedom of speech in Indonesia, where publications rarely print critical reports for fear of losing their Information Ministry licenses. The licenses can be revoked after a warning.

Free speech advocates were heartened last year when the lower courts struck down the ban last year. But the information minister appealed.

Chief Judge Surdjono said the ban was legal, since the information minister "had issued six warnings to Tempo because of its reports, but those had been largely ignored by the magazine editors."

Like many Indonesians, Surdjono uses only one name.

Thursday's verdict from a three-judge panel was announced to a courtroom filled with human rights activists and journalists.

"That is the Supreme Court," Tempo lawyer Mulya Lubis said bitterly. "We have no other choice. We have to accept, but with concern."

Tempo has gotten around the ban by putting a limited edition on the Internet. The government admits it can do nothing to stop it.

Elizabeth II's rein passes milestone

LONDON (AP) — Queen Elizabeth II's lengthy reign overtook that of her namesake Queen Elizabeth I on Thursday.

But after 44 years and 128 days on the throne, Elizabeth II still has a long way to go to beat the formidable Queen Victoria's 63 years.

The first Elizabeth, who came to the throne in 1558, presided over one of the greatest periods of English power and culture.

She had many problems with her relatives — her sister Queen Mary had her locked up in the Tower of London — but was spared the pains of quarreling children. She died childless in 1603.

WEATHER WATCH

High temperature to be in 90s today

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies and a high between 90 and 95 with winds from the southeast at 5-15 mph, according to the National Weather Service.

Tonight's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies and a low between 65 and 70.

Saturday's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies and a high between 90 and 95.

The high for Thursday was 94, compared to the record high for that date of 103, set in 1947.

Thursday's low was 65, compared to the record low of 57, set in 1979.

STATE

Strong thunderstorms, generated by afternoon heating, raced across parts of Texas on Thursday with some packing damaging straight-line winds over 60 mph.

Trees were uprooted in South Central Texas when one severe storm moved through the area. Wind gusts in excess of 60 mph were generated by a storm north of Waco, the National Weather Service said.

Severe storms, some packing large hail, also developed in East Texas near Tyler and Longview and in western parts of the state. Storms were also tracked near Livingston, Waller, Jersey Village, Andrews and Glen Rose.

Winds toppled a tree across a road in downtown Cuero.

Afternoon temperatures ranged from the 80s to 90s statewide, with heat-humidity indexes over 100 degrees in some areas.

Winds were mostly southerly and southeasterly at 10 to 15 mph along the gulf coast and 5 to 15 mph elsewhere.

A chance of thunderstorms, some possibly severe, was expected to continue statewide through Saturday night.

Overnight lows should range from the 60s and 70s in northern and western regions to 80s in the south, with daytime highs from the 80s and 90s to near 105 degrees in the Big Bend.

NATION

Flooding forced 150 people from their homes in Montana on Thursday and closed roads in Texas and Louisiana. Light rain and cooler weather in New Mexico helped keep some wildfires from spreading.

The Yellowstone River flowed over its banks and damaged homes in Livingston, Mont., about 60 miles north of Yellowstone National Park. The river is swollen with runoff from snow melting rapidly in the mountains as high temperatures persist.

Thunderstorms rolled across northern Texas and northern Louisiana, forcing the closure of county roads near Paris, Texas. At least 6 inches of rain fell in Spring Hill, La.

Other showers and storms moved through central and eastern Arkansas, and northern Mississippi. Scattered showers and thundershowers were in New England, and over northern portions of New Mexico.

The rain aided firefighters struggling to get the upper hand on a series of wildfires in New Mexico's northern and southwestern mountains.

"The weather has been doing us a favor. We have not had the strong winds for two days," said Tony Recker, acting superintendent of the Southern Ute Agency.

More rain was expected in the Pacific Northwest, the Plains and the Southeast.

capacity, and Lake Spence near Robert Lee, which is at 22 percent. Both lakes are in the Colorado River Municipal Water District's system (CRMWD).

The system's Lake Ivie, from which Midland gets its surface water, is at 81 percent of capacity, according to Martha Hamilton, CRMWD spokesman. Lake Ivie is near Ballinger.

"We still have plenty of water," Ms. Hamilton said Thursday in Big Spring following Perry's visit to Midland. "We are not in a bind for water.

"If you live in West Texas, you ought not to waste water anyway."

Perry said that the drought "looks a lot like the '50s. Of course, I was just a kid in the '50s, and it didn't impact me like it did my dad and my grandfather.

"If this is a replay of the '50s drought, and we may have three or four more years (of dry conditions), we are going to need some regulatory relief from government agencies, from banking examiners, from USDA (U.S. Department of Agriculture) and from EPA (Environmental Protection Agency).

"Regulatory relief is what is going to help ranchers (and farmers) more than anything outside of a 6-inch rain."

Observing Ryan's western art, Perry said, "As the ranching heritage becomes known by fewer and fewer people and as ranching numbers continue to decline, which is happening, the historical ability to chronicle the West and West Texas in particular is going to be in the future immeasurable.

"So, what they are doing (at the library and history center) is invaluable to those of us who have a Western heritage and a cowboy heritage. And my hat's off to them."

Evetts Haley Jr., chairman of the board of trustees of the Haley Memorial Library and History Center, presented Perry with a medallion "in appreciation of what he does to help the survival of the unfettered cattle industry." The medallion was crafted in tribute to Haley's father, the late cowman-historian J. Evetts Haley.

AERIAL: Governor issues partial ban

shal) Dale Little and local officials to make sure we have a safe Fourth-of-July holiday."

In his statement, Norwood said that the governor "left the decision to ban ground-based fireworks to commissioners' courts" across the state and that those courts "are the most familiar with local conditions."

Norwood said the Midland County Commissioners' Court has the authority under the Texas Disaster Act to ban all fireworks during the drought.

"We will probably study it," Norwood said Thursday night.

Norwood said that he and the four commissioners, Henry Goulet, Guy McCrary, Louisa Valencia and James Brezina, have "received substantial public testimony that a complete ban is the only way to mitigate the dangers of wildfires caused by fireworks."

The governor's ban on aerial fireworks and the Commissioners' Court possible total ban would not interfere with the city of Midland's authority to permit a fireworks' show by professional pyrotechnists, traditionally at Christensen Stadium on July 4.

The governor, who initially had indicated that he would ban fireworks during the drought county-by-county upon petition of commissioners' courts, later modified that stance.

Alberto Gonzales, general counsel to Bush, said that he had advised Bush "that statutory authority exists to ban the sale and use of fireworks in drought conditions in the event of imminent threat of disaster."

However, Gonzales said that since then he received updated information about "fireworks under drought conditions.

"Aerial fireworks constitute an immediate threat because it is not possible to adequately control their flight," Gonzales said. "However, an imminent threat of disaster currently does not exist from the proper and supervised use of ground-based fireworks."

As a result, action on the ban by the governor's office "is limited under the (Texas) State Disaster Act of 1975 and the State Emergency Plan.

"Consequently, the governor will only prohibit the sale and use of aerial fireworks at this time," Gonzales said.

Meanwhile, the "fireworks industry ... will voluntarily refrain from selling aerial fireworks during the holiday season."

FREEMEN: 81-day standoff ends peacefully

nent.

"We will all say a little prayer tonight for this peaceful settlement of a difficult situation," President Clinton told the audience at a state dinner.

FBI Director Louis J. Freeh lauded the policy of "patience and resoluteness" that he credited for the outcome.

"I think the American people can take great comfort that the law was enforced and that it was done in a way that did not do harm to anyone," he said at an evening news conference at FBI headquarters in Washington.

In Billings, FBI Agent Thomas T. Kubic said the FBI force at the compound included 633 agents rotated in and out and working 12-hour shifts. At any one time, there were up to 150 agents in the Jordan area, he said.

Following the surrender, the convoy of vehicles headed for Billings, 175 miles to the southwest, where 12 of the fugitives were to face criminal charges, including circulating millions of dollars in bogus checks and threatening to kill a federal judge.

The two people not facing charges, wives of Freemen members, were free to go but chose to drive with the group to Billings.

U.S. Attorney Sherry Scheel Matteucci in Billings stressed that negotiations with the group had not involved dismissal or reduction of any federal charges.

"That was never a possibility," Matteucci said, adding that "no Montana state charges have been dropped and no agreement to drop any of those charges has been made."

The formal end to the standoff came after Freemen trucks drove in a convoy from the main part of the compound to the gate and met up with an FBI convoy, which included two large passenger vans.

At the gate, Freemen members were escorted one-by-one by their leader Edwin Clark out of their vehicles and into FBI custody.

Federal agents did not handcuff the fugitives, but checked them for weapons before taking them by the arm and leading them to the van.

Clark escorted his son, Casey, 21, from a Freemen motor home to FBI agents. Casey shook his father's hand, then boarded the van.

Earlier in the day, a Ryder rental truck had entered the ranch and the FBI brought in packing crates, apparently for the Freemen's documents, which the group says contain evidence of government wrongdoing.

Under the agreement, the documents will be safeguarded by Karl Ohs, a state legislator who has acted as a mediator in the standoff, sources said on condition of anonymity. The Freemen feared the FBI would destroy the material otherwise.

"It's a huge amount of stuff," a source said of the documents. "People all over the country have been sending the information they consider evidence."

The truck was driven off the compound shortly before the surrender. Photographers near the site said Ohs was at the wheel.

Attorney General Janet Reno hailed the peaceful resolution.

"From the first day of the standoff in Montana, the Justice Department and the FBI have worked with steadfast determination to reach today's result," she said in a statement released in Washington.

"This episode was the first real test of the reforms the Department of Justice has instituted for resolving crisis situations," the statement said.

Right-wing activists and those who talked with the Freemen during the standoff had feared it would end in another Waco, but the peaceful conclusion was a vindication for the FBI's strategy of carefully calibrated pressure.

Since the standoff by two dozen extremists began March 25, federal agents stayed well away from the compound and kept the media similarly cordoned off. Third-party negotiators tried to talk the Freemen out for months. The FBI didn't shut off the compound's power until the 71st day of the standoff, June 3.

In 1993, the 51-day standoff at Waco ended in a fire that killed more than 80 cult members. In 1992, white separatist Randy Weaver held federal agents at bay at Ruby Ridge, Idaho, for 11 days in a siege that began with the killing of his son and a federal marshal. Weaver's wife also was killed during the standoff.

In 1973, supporters of the American Indian Movement took over the site of the battle of Wounded Knee. A standoff lasted 69 days, and two of the group's members were killed.

Asked whether the FBI had learned anything about handling such situations since Waco, Reno said, "We just learned that each situation has to be evaluated on its own merits."

Matteucci said that although not named in the original indictments, Edwin Clark, 45, and Cornelius John (Casey) Veldhulzen, 49, were arrested Thursday on charges related to the fraudulent financial instruments scheme.

Those arrested Thursday on outstanding warrants from earlier indictments were: Ralph Edwin Clark, 65; Emmett Bryan Clark, 67; Dale Martin Jacobi, 54; Charlyn Petersen, 51; and Rodney Owen Skurdal, 43, Matteucci said.

Those arrested on federal charges related to their actions since the standoff began were: Casey Martin Clark, 21; Dana Dudley Landers, 44; James Edward Hance, 24; John Richard Hance, 19; Steven Charles Hance, 46; Russell Dean Landers, 45; and Jon Barry Nelson, 40, Matteucci said.

Those removed from the property but not facing federal charges at this time include Kay Clark, 65, wife of Ralph; and Rosie Clark, 70, wife of Emmett, she said.

The Freemen at the ranch they call Justus Township included hard-luck farmers and some fast-talkers hawking cure-alls for financial woes. They spread pseudo-legalistic documents purportedly showing that they can renounce governmental authority, start their own government and issue their own checks.

They could no longer be dismissed as crackpots when they formed their own "courts," appointed themselves officers and declared elected officials criminals subject to arrest and execution.

Montana legislator describes mood among Freemen

HELENA, Mont. (AP) — Three things were key to the gradual withering of the Freemen's resolve inside their prairie stronghold, according to the state legislator who met the extremists for 19 negotiating sessions.

Primarily, "they began to understand that time was getting very short," federal agents would not go away and that most of their demands would not be met, said Karl Ohs, a first-term Republican representative.

They had also been deeply disappointed that other militants who shared their anti-government philosophies had not rallied to their side to break the FBI siege.

But perhaps most importantly, the most moderate of the four Freemen negotiators and the only local rancher among them took the lead in the deadlocked negotiations, Ohs said.

"Edwin Clark became more assertive," Ohs said, and was most willing to compromise on early Freemen demands — especially the insistence that a grand jury of Freemen sympathizers judge the charges against them.

"Edwin just decided that if he was going to get this thing resolved, he had to take charge," Ohs said.

Ohs, 49 and himself a rancher, spoke to The Associated Press on Wednesday on the condition that his remarks would not be published until after the siege ended. That happened late Thursday.

Most of his negotiating sessions, he said, were dominated by Freemen arguments why their views were correct and the existing government system was wrong.

Once, when a session became heated and other Freemen moved in, one of the leaders told the others to leave, he said.

"I never felt threatened in any way," Ohs added. "We had an unwritten law not to be confrontational with one another."

He recalled the many times Freemen leaders told him they were prepared to die if that was what it took to spread their anti-government message.

But Ohs said he never lost hope the stalemate would end peacefully.

"I just didn't see anything here that anyone needed to die for," he said.

DISTRICTS: Decisions are sure to affect elections

zens in this democracy."

The American Civil Liberties Union's Laughlin McDonald said, "The inevitable consequence ... will be to produce a Congress that is increasingly white at a time that the nation is becoming increasingly diverse."

President Clinton, who has enjoyed strong support from minority voters, said he was disappointed by the rulings. "I think the affected voters will see that they need to work ever harder to make sure their voices are heard," he said.

The immediate impact in Texas and North Carolina appeared to be political chaos. It is unclear whether new districts must be drawn for the general elections in November.

In Texas, the court struck down two predominantly black congressional districts, the 30th in Dallas and the 18th in Houston, as well as the majority-Hispanic 29th in Houston.

In North Carolina, the black-majority 12th district was declared unlawfully created.

All four districts currently are represented by Democrats.

The decisions were silent as to how officials in each state should respond. What happens next could be up to special three-judge federal courts that have presided over the disputes.

In Texas, the three judges are Edith Jones, David Hittner and Melinda Harmon — all Republican appointees.

In North Carolina, the judges are Democratic appointees James Phillips and Earl Britt and Republican appointee Richard Voorhees.

The court first struck down North Carolina's reapportionment plan in 1993. Since that year, a slim majority of the justices has seemed intent on minimizing race as a factor for drawing election districts.

"Our precedents, which acknowledge voters as more than mere racial statistics, play an important role in defining the political identity of the American voter," O'Connor wrote.

She said the court's work "evinces a commitment to eliminate unnecessary and excessive government use and reinforcement of racial stereotypes."

But Justice John Paul Stevens, one of the dissenters, wrote: "The court's aggressive supervision of state action designed to accommodate the political concerns of historically disadvantaged minority groups is seriously misguided."

"A majority's attempt to enable the minority to participate more effectively in the process of democratic government should not be viewed with the same hostility that is appropriate for oppressive and exclusionary abuses of political powers," Stevens said.

O'Connor was joined by Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist and Justices Anthony M. Kennedy, Antonin Scalia and Clarence Thomas in voting to strike down the congressional districts at issue.

Stevens was joined in dissent by Justices David H. Souter, Ruth Bader Ginsburg and Stephen G. Breyer.

The decisions were not all bad news for civil rights activists.

O'Connor, writing for herself, Rehnquist and Kennedy, said race-conscious redistricting might be constitutional in some cases even if minority-majority districts were created intentionally.

Those who challenge such districts must prove that race was "the predominant factor" that subordinated other, legitimate redistricting considerations, she said.

That important holding apparently is supported by seven of the court's members — the O'Connor three and the four dissenters.

And at least five justices — O'Connor and Thursday's dissenters — moved the court away from the notion that major parts of the federal Voting Rights Act of 1965 might be unconstitutional.

In both of Thursday's rulings, the court said the redistricting plans are "not narrowly tailored to serve a compelling state interest."

Plane carrying ex-president Bush, Powell makes emergency landing

BANGOR, Maine (AP) — Former President George Bush and retired Gen. Colin Powell made an emergency landing at Bangor International Airport when the plane they were traveling in developed engine trouble, an airport official said Thursday.

Powell, Bush and former first lady Barbara Bush were traveling from Portland to Europe on Wednesday when an indicator light in the plane's cockpit showed a problem with the left engine, said Bob Ziegelaar, director of the Bangor airport.

Bush, his wife and Powell were heading to Europe for a vacation, said Bush spokeswoman Mary Sage. She declined to say exactly where they were headed.

Sage also declined to say why Powell and Bush were traveling together, calling it "just a private trip."

CBS Evening News, citing a source it did not identify, said Bush hoped to convince Powell during the trip that he should seek the Republican vice-presidential nomination as Bob Dole's running mate.

Bush hoped to change Powell's mind by pointing out that 14 vice presidents have gone on to become president, CBS said.

About 45 passengers, surrounded by Secret Service agents, were escorted to a nearby hotel after the plane landed. The Boeing 757 is owned by a private company.

Powell spokesman Bill Smullen would only say the European vacation was planned for some time.

"This is a social vacation; a much deserved vacation for General and Mrs. Powell," he said.

"This is not the first time they have talked," Smullen added. "They talk periodically, about a variety of things."

Russia's communists ache for Soviet Union's resurrection, stability

MOSCOW (AP) — Every day small knots of the faithful gather near Lenin's tomb in Red Square, fervently reassuring each other the Soviet Union will rise from the ashes after Sunday's presidential election.

"Communists are saints. This is the true definition of communism," snarled Nikolai Dmitrenko, his leathery face flushing red with anger over the changes that have swept Russia.

Maria Toropunko, a former crane operator, smiled and nodded. "We will vote for holy mother Russia and the communists," she said.

The excited babble would have astonished Lenin and the atheist founders of the Soviet Union, who never imagined becoming saints. Nor would they recognize much of what passes for communism in Russia these days.

But the true believers who gather at Red Square and millions of others across Russia are convinced they will storm back into power with the Communist presidential candidate, Gennady Zyuganov. And then, they say, a lot of scores will be settled.

Zyuganov heads the Communist Party of Russia, largest of the country's communist groups. But he is the candidate of the People's Patriotic Bloc, a fractious coalition ranging from Stalinists to monarchists and anti-Semitic fascists. The Communists fall somewhere in the middle.

Anywhere else these groups would be ideological foes, but they are united by their hatred of President Boris Yeltsin, whom they accuse of destroying Russia as a great power. To the Communists and their allies, Yeltsin is a traitor who sold Russia to the West by introducing liberal reforms.

"Nothing satisfies us. We can't say anything positive about what has happened here, when the country is in ruins," said Valentin Kuptsov, the No. 2 man in the Communist Party.

Above all the Communists long to revive the Soviet empire and believe that restoring the all-powerful state will solve all of Russia's problems.

Nationalism and a belief in Russia's destiny as a great power is at the heart of the Communist creed. The modern heirs of Lenin talk little about Marxism, dwelling instead in almost mystical tones on what they see as the country's unique heritage.

"We must unite our efforts to bring to power truly popular-patriotic forces, which will recognize the 1,000-year history and will draw from the most glorious tradition of Russian statehood, Russian nationhood and Soviet patriotism," Zyuganov told a campaign rally in St. Petersburg.

The call to restore the past appeals to many non-communists.

To millions of Russians, democracy and free-market reform have plunged them into a terrifying new world of poverty, unemployment, crime and despair. They long for the certainties of the Soviet system, when jobs, housing and some form of social security was provided.

"Zyuganov will build a society of social justice, like what we had before: free education, free health care, free apartments," said Anatoly Shabalov, a rank-and-file Communist.

Critics dismiss the new Communist leaders as yesterday's men, unable to live outside the suffocating embrace of the Soviet system, eager only to get back their old posts and privileges.

But Zyuganov and other minor ex-officials have rebuilt the moribund party into the largest, best organized in Russia since the 1991 collapse of the Soviet Union. The Communists are the largest party in the Duma, the lower chamber of Parliament, and aren't about to disappear from the political scene, even if they don't defeat Yeltsin.

In his campaign, Yeltsin harped on the bloody history of the Soviet era, of the millions who were killed and the vast network of prison camps that enforced Soviet rule.

Communist leaders angrily rejected the accusation, saying they would ensure personal freedom.

France alarmed to find they had purchased suspect animal feed

PARIS (AP) — The cows may be mad but the French are furious — they may have unknowingly imported vast amounts of animal feed banned in Britain for fear it might carry "mad cow disease."

The science magazine Nature, citing British government statistics, reported Thursday that Britain sold France thousands of tons of potentially contaminated feed from 1989 to 1991 that it couldn't sell at home.

France reacted angrily to the British weekly's report.

"France, the Trash Can of British Groceries," Paris' Le Figaro newspaper proclaimed in a headline.

The anger was sharpened by a report Thursday from French and British researchers claiming to have established an even stronger link between the brain-wasting cattle disease and Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease, a killer illness in humans.

Most of the feed imported back then by France — essentially ground-up intestines, brains, spinal cords, bones and other cow parts — was used to feed pigs and chickens, not cows.

But the French government lashed out at what it suggested was a deliberate attempt by Britain to dump feed it was unwilling to use itself.

"In 1988 and 1989, the Britons didn't tell us the truth," said Henri Nallet, France's agriculture minister at the time, calling it "absolutely scandalous."

Underscoring the rising tensions between Paris and London, France's Socialist Party denounced Britain's move as "reprehensible" and urged tougher actions to end the mad cow crisis.

"Better a diplomatic incident today that protects consumers' health than a diplomatic concession that would increase the risks," said the party's chief spokesman, Francois Hollande.

But British officials defended the exports Thursday. In London, the Ministry of Agriculture said the British ban — first imposed in 1988 — still permitted exports of pig and chicken feed, and that the European Commission knew about the exports.

Burma's military steps up media campaigning

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Burma's military regime escalated its media campaign against pro-democracy leader Aung San Suu Kyi, reporting Thursday that her marriage to an Englishman was part of a British colonialist plot to control Burma.

The report was the latest action against the 1991 Nobel Peace Prize winner, who has brought new attention to her democracy movement by holding a congress of her political party. Ever-larger crowds of supporters come to hear her weekend lectures at the gates of her home.

In recent weeks, the military regime erected 30-foot-high billboards around the Burmese capital, Rangoon, accusing Suu Kyi of being a "stooge" of foreign governments. One, in English, was placed just outside the U.S. Embassy.

The latest media attack, in the state-owned New Light of Myanmar newspaper, said that Suu Kyi's marriage to Michael Aris, an Oxford professor and a specialist in Tibetan studies, was plotted by British colonialists intent on maintaining control over Burma. Burma, also known as Myanmar, was a British colony from 1824 to 1947.

Suu Kyi is the daughter of Burma's independence hero, Gen. Aung San. She and her husband have two children.

"All along the British colonialist caused trouble," said the newspaper commentary, seen in Bangkok. "It was they who connived to get an Englishman married to the one who could provide assurance for (Britain) setting foot again in (Burma). The proof was that Madame Suu Kyi got married to an Englishman, unaware of their scheme."

A constitution being drafted by a military-run convention bars anyone married to a foreigner from holding public office. Most analysts say the clause is aimed at Suu Kyi.

Last month, the junta arrested 262 people to try to prevent the congress of Suu Kyi's party, the National League for Democracy. The meeting was Suu Kyi's biggest challenge to the regime since it freed her from six years of house arrest last July.

Last week, the junta announced harsh new laws threatening 20 years' imprisonment for anyone seeking to "undermine the stability of the state."

Colombia's president cleared of charges for illicit enrichment, falsifying documents

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — When senior campaign aides accused President Ernesto Samper of taking drug money to win office, even some of his closest allies thought his career was over.

But the political obituaries were premature. With an 111-to-43 vote, Congress has cleared Samper on charges of taking $6 million from the Cali drug cartel for his campaign, ending impeachment proceedings.

Samper appeared Thursday to have emerged with a firm hold on power. And although most Colombians believe he is guilty, there has never been a ground swell of outrage. Apathy and cynicism have prevailed.

The Wednesday night vote means that Samper cannot be tried again for the same charges: illicit enrichment, falsifying documents, electoral fraud and cover-up.

He has vowed to build a coalition government, rewrite campaign laws to prevent another scandal and reach out to business leaders who are clamoring for his resignation. Radio reports said a Cabinet reshuffle is expected.

But that may not satisfy the business sector, which blames Samper for an economic downturn, or the United States, which hinted at possible sanctions.

The opposition Conservative Party said Thursday that Liberal Party loyalists who dominate Congress and voted to clear Samper have "destroyed what little popular confidence remained in the judicial system."

Colombian prosecutors say evidence indicates Samper knowingly took cash from the world's most powerful drug syndicate. But only Congress, which is itself plagued by drug corruption, has the legal mandate to judge the president.

Jaime Alberto Cabal, president of the Association of Small and Mid-Sized Industries, joined other business leaders calling on Samper to resign.

"The country won't be governable as long as he remains," he said.

Since the crisis began, the peso and the stock market have weakened and investment has fallen. Samper's absolution is unlikely to change that trend, financial leaders say.

"The (Bogota) stock exchange will continue to reflect uncertainty until the political crisis is resolved," said Carlos Caballero, its president.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Nicholas Burns said the verdict "leaves unanswered many questions regarding pervasive narco-trafficker influence on Colombia's institutions."

He said the United States was "considering a range of initiatives to show that we stand firm."

U.S. officials have said options include lifting $30 million in trade preferences, barring Colombian airlines from the United States and revoking the visas of about 30 politicians suspected of links to drug traffickers.

"This shows that Samper is not the only politician in Colombia who can be bought. He has been parceling out pork-barrel projects and cash to buy votes — and apparently it worked," said Marc Thiessen, spokesman for Senate Foreign Relations Committee chairman Jesse Helms.

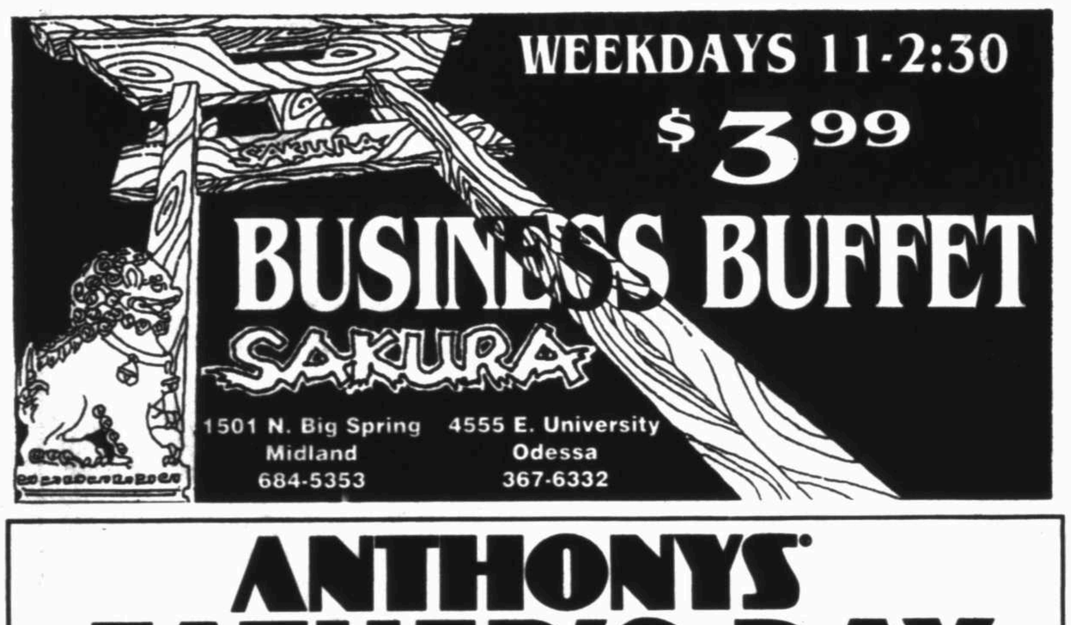

Colombians appeared unfazed by the absolution of Samper, just one more twist in another scandal for a society plagued by drug violence, leftist guerrillas and right-wing death squads.

Opposition leaders called on commuters to honk their horns to protest the vote, but there were no major street protests.

The scandal broke just days after Samper was elected in June 1994 when taped phone conversations of Cali kingpins discussing the payoff to Samper's campaign emerged.

Prosecutors jailed the campaign's top leaders, one by one.

In January, the scandal exploded when Fernando Botero, the jailed campaign director and one of Samper's oldest friends, broke months of silence and testified against him.

Indonesian airliner crashes during takeoff from Japan; three die, 108 injured

TOKYO (AP) — Barely off the ground, the jumbo jet slammed back onto the runway, skidded on its belly though a muddy field and came to a stop. Somebody yelled "Fire!" and a stunned Kazumi Yoshitake jumped on an emergency slide.

That split-second saved her life.

"When I looked back at the plane, it was engulfed in flames," said Yoshitake, 28, one of the 272 people who escaped Thursday from the cabin of the crippled Indonesian airliner an instant before it burst into flames.

Three people were killed and 108 injured when the Garuda Indonesian Airways DC-10 aborted takeoff and careened off the runway in southern Japan.

A brief lull between the crash and the fire gave nearly all the terrified passengers time to run out exits or jump out windows to the field below.

The cause of the accident was not immediately clear, but witnesses and air traffic control workers said they saw flames coming from one of the jet's engines during takeoff. Analysts interviewed on Japanese television wondered if the pilot was slow in responding to an engine fire.

Japan's Transport Ministry sent investigators to the crash site in Fukuoka, 562 miles southwest of Tokyo. National police chief Takaji Kunimatsu said investigators would look into whether criminal negligence was to blame. Weather did not appear to be a factor.

In Indonesia, Communications Minister Haryanto Dhanutirto said preliminary reports indicated the crash apparently was caused by trouble in an engine at the tail of the plane, but it was too early to be certain. He said Indonesian officials were headed to Japan to investigate.

The jetliner, bound from Fukuoka to the resort island of Bali and then on to the Indonesian capital of Jakarta, was airborne for just a few seconds, jerking and bouncing as it rose from the runway, passengers said. Bags toppled from overhead cabinets, part of the ceiling caved in and smoke curled into the cabin as the plane dropped back to the ground.

The plane skidded through a fence and across an access road, tearing through a field beyond the runway. A litter of fuselage and landing gear was strewn behind it as it stopped on its belly.

"I heard a woman scream out, and for a moment my mind went blank," Yoshitake told Kyodo News. "Another passenger yelled out that the plane was on fire, and to get out quickly."

An electric company worker who witnessed the crash said the fire took a few moments to fully ignite, which gave passengers time to escape.

"Starting from the middle and moving toward the back, the flames were visible — then afterward it really began burning," Juji Yamashita, who was working on a nearby power line at the time, told TV Asahi.

A videotape of the crash's aftermath, taken by a passenger and broadcast on NHK, showed firefighters battling the flames as terrified survivors, many crying with fear, moved from the wreckage.

Ethiopian Jew crosses lines to become first in Parliament

BAT YAM, Israel (AP) — Addisu Messele grew up in an African mud hut, the youngest of 11 children of a sharecropper. On Monday, he will become the first Ethiopian Jew to be sworn in as a member of Israel's Parliament.

Messele said his rise to a position of influence has given a new sense of belonging to 60,000 Ethiopian Jews who were brought to Israel in dramatic airlifts, but have since run up against a wall of discrimination and hostility.

Messele, 35, said he was inundated with phone calls from Ethiopian immigrants after the election two weeks ago.

"For many of them it had seemed impossible," he said. "They didn't believe any of us would see the inside of Parliament in this generation."

Like many of his constituents, Messele feels both gratitude and bitterness toward Israel.

"Show me another country that would have made such an effort to rescue its kin," he said, referring to the 1984 and 1991 airlifts that took Ethiopian Jews away from civil war and hunger.

After their arrival, immigrants received generous financial aid, including grants that covered 90 percent of mortgages.

But Messele, who arrived in Israel in 1980 and now lives in Bat Yam, a working class suburb of Tel Aviv, said the list of slights keeps getting longer.

The Chief Rabbinate, Israel's highest religious authority, insists that Ethiopians undergo a "conversion" ceremony, even though they already are Jews. The ceremony includes a ritual bath, and men must have blood drawn from their penis even though they are already circumcised.

The Rabbinate refuses to register marriages of "unconverted" Ethiopians.

Several years ago, Messele organized a demonstration outside the Rabbinate that lasted 32 days. It ended when the rabbis agreed to drop the "conversion" ceremonies, but the rabbis later reneged on their promise.

Messele's fight for his community began early. At 17, he walked for four weeks across the desert to Sudan, then started smuggling other Ethiopian Jews along the same route. Once in Israel, he continued to look out for his people.

In one incident reminiscent of the U.S. civil rights movement, Messele "borrowed" two Ethiopian children from a friend and showed up at a Bat Yam day-care center to test allegations that the owner was turning away Ethiopians.

> 'Show me another country that would have made such an effort to rescue its kin.'
> — Addisu Messeler, Constituent

A center official told Messele she would not accept the children because she was afraid that non-Ethiopian couples would withdraw their own children in protest.

Messele's test was widely reported by Israeli newspapers, and prompted a public outcry. But the day-care center continued to bar Ethiopian children — and to receive government subsidies.

"In Israel, there is a law forbidding incitement to racism, but not racism itself," Messele said.

This spring, the Ethiopians' anger sparked violence for the first time after they learned that their blood donations were secretly being thrown away on orders of the Health Ministry, which feared the blood might be infected with the AIDS virus.

At a demonstration organized by Messele, thousands of Ethiopian immigrants threw stones at club-wielding police outside the prime minister's office. Several policemen and demonstrators were hurt.

The riot pushed the Ethiopians' demands to the top of the public agenda for the first time, and also helped Messele get elected in Labor Party primaries.

The party had reserved one of its parliamentary slots for an immigrant and held a separate election for it.

Government predicts gasoline will drop by 10 cents

WASHINGTON (AP) — Barring unforeseen events, gasoline prices should drop by as much as a dime a gallon in the coming weeks, the Energy Department predicted Thursday.

In a report the department said recent soaring prices for the fuel were triggered by "a combination of events" in the oil markets, including low inventories, expectation that Iraq would re-enter the market and high demand for both heating oil and gasoline.

These events have been cited frequently by private analysts as major reasons for the jump in crude oil prices earlier this year.

The 84-page Energy Department report did not address whether oil companies acted improperly. The Justice Department in a separate investigation is looking into whether any price collusion or price gouging occurred.

President Clinton on April 29 ordered the Energy Department to examine the sharp run-up in gasoline prices and report within 45 days. The deadline was Thursday.

"Our assessment of the current gasoline markets indicates that barring unforeseen events, prices should continue to decline by as much as 10 cents a gallon and even more in California," Energy Secretary Hazel O'Leary said in a statement.

Since their peak, average retail gasoline prices have fallen by 3 cents a gallon, and by 5 cents a gallon in California, the report said.

Ed Rothschild, an energy specialist for the consumer advocacy group Public Citizen, criticized the government's report. He said it "blames anything and everything" for the steep price increases, but fails to answer the question of whether oil companies deliberately set the stage for the price jump.

"Why hasn't DOE even tried to determine who has benefited from the price run-up which has taken an extra $3 billion out of consumer pockets?" asked Rothschild.

Portable alarms may help deter abuse at home

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Pittsburgh-area children in troubled homes will be given an electronic emergency device — a plastic pendant the size of a yo-yo — that they'll be able to use to alert authorities when they're being mistreated.

Allegheny County's Children and Youth Services agency will select five families for the experimental project on the city's low-income North Side and expand the program slowly.

Advocates of the Watchful Shepherd system say it will help keep families together, but one child abuse expert isn't so sure.

"It's putting a cop in the house rather than training the parents not to abuse their kids," said Irwin Hyman, a psychologist at Temple University in Philadelphia and head of the National Center for the Study of Corporal Punishment and Alternatives. "If it works, fine. But there are a million things that come down the pike, like lie detectors, and they don't work."

A child can alert a hospital and summon police whenever he or she feels endangered by pressing a button on the portable device, or a wedge-shaped base unit near a telephone.

A hospital dispatcher can then communicate with the child through the base unit while police respond. The button also activates a siren in the home.

"We've brought families together. This isn't something that's put there to put people in jail," said Joseph Femiani, a motor repair shop owner who was abused as a child and first promoted the idea to social workers.

Police and social workers said false alarms are a concern but aren't seen as a major problem. And if an angry parent disabled the device to try to avoid detection, the hospital dispatcher would be alerted immediately with an electronic signal.

James Reiland, a deputy director of Children and Youth Services, said the agency will select candidates from families where social workers suspect abuse is a problem but may not have proof.

Allegheny General Hospital and private donors will pay up to $15,000 for Watchful Shepherds for every 25 children.

Christopher Dunn, a lawyer with the American Civil Liberties Union said the idea sounds reasonable in homes where a child is at risk of being removed because of abuse.

Los Angeles to revisit King case

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A U.S. Supreme Court decision Thursday will force Los Angeles to revisit the painful Rodney King beating case, but two former police officers probably won't have to serve any more time in prison.

The justices voted unanimously to set aside an appeals court ruling that could have meant former Los Angeles policemen Stacey Koon and Laurence Powell would have to serve as long as 57 more months.

The high court, instead, returned the case to U.S. District Judge John Davies to reconsider the validity of giving both ex-officers stiffer sentences.

In so doing, the high court also provided federal judges with new latitude to use their discretion under sentencing guidelines that were aimed at yielding greater consistency nationwide. Many judges and defense lawyers have contended that the guidelines often result in sentences that are too harsh.

The court said Davies must exclude impermissible factors he considered the first time around, such as the fact that the officers had lost their jobs and had a low risk of committing such a crime again.

Davies is expected to schedule a hearing this summer.

Koon and Powell both served 30-month sentences and were released late last year.

Billionaire could receive millions from government for election campaign

WASHINGTON (AP) — Over the protests of disgruntled former Ross Perot supporters, federal election officials ruled Thursday that the Dallas billionaire could qualify for millions of taxpayer dollars if he runs for president this year.

The Federal Election Commission's decision opened the way for Perot to seek about $30 million from taxpayers but did not resolve whether another candidate from Perot's new party could qualify for the money in his place.

The commission also put off deciding whether the Reform Party could get taxpayer help in paying for its nominating convention. The Democrats and Republicans will each receive about $12 million for their conventions in August.

The commission's 5-0 vote disappointed both Perot's detractors and leaders of his infant Reform Party.

"Unbelievable!" Alex Rodriguez, a former Perot campaign volunteer from New York City, exclaimed after the hearing. "They just rubber-stamped his sham request for $30 million in taxpayer money."

Russ Verney, national coordinator for the Reform Party, said the commissioners "dodged their obligation" by not answering the party's other questions.

"If they grant us public financing Nov. 6, the day after the election, that's justice denied," he said.

As the major party nominees, Bob Dole and Bill Clinton each would receive almost $62 million to pay for their campaigns in exchange for promising to comply with a ban on post-convention campaign fund-raising.

Perot might get about half that. He has not declared himself a candidate but says he'll run if party members select him at a nominating convention planned for mid-August.

Perot spent $60 million of his own money on his 1992 campaign. If he chose to accept public funding, the Texas billionaire would be limited to spending only $50,000 of his own money.

Perot already has spent close to $1 million on activities of the Perot Reform Party Committee and that might disqualify him from getting the federal money, say some observers.

But the FEC's assistant general counsel, Susan E. Propper, said the commission has held in the past that money spent to put a party on state ballots does not count as spending toward the general election.

The unresolved issues turn on whether the Reform Party — so far entirely bankrolled by Perot — can prove it's a valid political party that grew out of Perot's 1992 campaign.

Senator wants Freedom of Information Act update

WASHINGTON (AP) — Thirty years after the Freedom of Information Act was enacted, lawmakers and journalists testified Thursday it's time to bring the law into the electronic age.

"We need to make clear that the FOIA is not just a right to know what's on paper records but applies equally to electronic records," said Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., coauthor of a bill that would do just that.

Leahy called the act "one of the most significant tools Americans have to inform themselves about what their government is doing or not doing."

Legislation that Leahy and Sen. Hank Brown, R-Colo., introduced "would address the biggest single complaint of people making FOIA requests: delays in getting a response," Leahy told a House subcommittee. "For some agencies, the delays can stretch to over two years. Long delays in access can mean no access at all."

Their bill has been voted out of committee and is ready for a Senate vote. Rep. Steve Horn, R-Calif., chairman of the House Government Reform and Oversight subcommittee on government management, information and technology, said he plans to offer similar legislation in the House shortly.

"I think it's unconscionable when I hear the FBI has a four-year wait" to provide requested documents, Horn said.

But J. Kevin O'Brien, who heads the FBI's Freedom of Information and Privacy Acts section, said changing to electronic transmission of data would ease the physical work but not the mental processing.

"Great care is taken to ensure that no material to which the requester is entitled is erroneously withheld and that no material that should be withheld is inadvertently released," he said.

Documents show evidence tying Kaczynski to Unabomber evidence

HELENA, Mont. (AP) — Federal agents found extensive evidence of possible links between the Unabomber and Theodore Kaczynski even before they searched Kaczynski's mountain cabin, according to court documents released Thursday.

An FBI investigation in the two months before they searched the cabin and arrested Kaczynski on April 3 found striking similarities between his writing and documents penned by the person who killed three people and injured 23 during an 18-year bombing campaign.

Investigators also concluded that the genetic content of saliva on a postage stamp for a Unabomber letter last June was similar to DNA found on a letter Kaczynski sent to his brother, David.

In addition, the documents revealed that Kaczynski received more than $16,000 from his mother and brother over a 10-year period. That offers a possible explanation of where Kaczynski, who lived the austere life of a hermit, may have found money to travel to cities where the bombs exploded or were postmarked.

The information is contained in more than 200 pages of legal documents released by order of U.S. District Judge Charles C. Lovell in response to a request by several news organizations in April.

Much of the information verifies evidence disclosed by anonymous Justice Department sources over the past three months.

Kaczynski, 55, has been jailed in Helena since his arrest on a charge of illegally possessing bomb components. He has not been charged in any of the Unabomber bombings, but Lovell said the documents should be made public now that the Kaczynski investigation is complete.

Federal agents were directed to Kaczynski as a prime suspect in the serial-bombing case by his brother. David Kaczynski contacted authorities in February, alerting them to his suspicions based on similarities he noticed between his brother's writings and published Unabomber documents.

David Kaczynski also told authorities his brother had a long-held distaste for the influence of technology over society, and the views appeared to parallel writings of the Unabomber.

Based on a comparison of documents provided by David Kaczynski, the FBI found 160 similarities between the 35,000-word Unabomber manifesto published last September and a 1971 essay written by Theodore Kaczynski.

The documents not only contained almost matching phrases, they also had identical misspellings. For example, both Kaczynski and the Unabomber spelled analyze as "analyse," used "wilfully" rather than willfully, and spelled license as "licence."

'Enemies list' has unsettling ring

Shades of Richard Nixon and the infamous "enemies list" of the 1970s!

All those bad old memories came flooding back after it was revealed that the Clinton administration had collected FBI files on 341 people, including prominent Republicans, as part of an effort to update security records.

Although officials say the information was collected by a junior military aide and was not used for political purposes, it still smacks of the kind of underhanded, political sabotage actions carried out during the Watergate years. Nobody should want to go back to the political "dirty tricks" of that era; they eventually led to the resignation of Nixon during this nation's darkest days, in the face of almost certain impeachment. The nation still bears the scars from that unfortunate episode.

The Clinton administration has acted swiftly to clear itself of any hint of wrongdoing, with Clinton himself contending "I would never condone or tolerate any kind of enemies list." He also vowed to correct the problem so that "nothing like this will happen again." Others were quick to remind that representatives of President George Bush allegedly used the FBI to seek out draft-dodger information on Clinton.

Actions taken to date are positive steps that should help to resolve this situation provided no more information surfaces to implicate Clinton or others in his administration of wrongdoing. Neither this administration nor any forthcoming one can condone an enemies list like that prepared during the Nixon presidency. It simply isn't acceptable.

ANOTHER VIEW

Dole should avoid tax-cut bidding war with president

The recent punching and counterpunching between President Clinton and Sen. Bob Dole has been an entertaining warmup to the autumn main event, but now the sparring threatens to inflict long-term fiscal damage on the nation.

Desperate to close Clinton's lead in the polls, Dole is considering forsaking his long, credible record of fighting budget deficits. He's trying to decide whether to offer a bold package of tax cuts, including, perhaps, a 15 percent across-the-board cut in income tax rates.

Meantime, Clinton will stick to his own "modest" tax-reduction ideas. But you can bet it will be difficult for Clinton, who promised middle-class tax cuts that he never delivered, to ignore Dole's strategic about-face. The temptation will be to counter quickly. And that could lead to a destructive slugfest over tax cuts that would make a mockery of Washington's professed plans to balance the budget by 2002 and ensure a return to the runaway deficits of the '80s. ...

This is the wrong time to get into a bidding war over tax cuts. The deficit has been shrinking, and Congress and the White House have separate plans to balance the budget in seven years. There's economic anxiety, but inflation is low, the economy is growing and unemployment is holding at about 5.5 percent. Deep tax cuts now would do little to stimulate growth.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Friday, June 14, the 166th day of 1996. There are 200 days left in the year. This is Flag Day.

Today's Highlight in History:

On June 14, 1777, the Continental Congress in Philadelphia adopted the Stars and Stripes as the national flag.

On this date:

In 1775, the United States Army was founded.

In 1801, former American Revolutionary War Gen. Benedict Arnold died in London.

In 1841, the first Canadian parliament opened in Kingston.

In 1846, 150 years ago, a group of U.S. settlers in Sonoma proclaimed the Republic of California.

In 1917, Gen. John Pershing arrived in Paris during World War I.

In 1922, Warren G. Harding became the first president heard on radio, as Baltimore station WEAR broadcast his speech dedicating the Francis Scott Key memorial at Fort McHenry.

In 1940, German troops entered Paris during World War II.

In 1940, in German-occupied Poland, the Nazis opened their concentration camp at Auschwitz.

In 1943, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled schoolchildren could not be compelled to salute the flag of the United States if doing so would conflict with their religious beliefs.

In 1954, President Eisenhower signed an order adding the words "under God" to the Pledge of Allegiance.

In 1982, Argentine forces surrendered to British troops on the disputed Falkland Islands.

In 1985, the 17-day hijack ordeal of TWA Flight 847 began as a pair of Lebanese Shiite Muslim extremists seized the jetliner shortly after takeoff from Athens, Greece.

In 1993, President Clinton chose Judge Ruth Bader Ginsburg, an advocate of women's rights, to serve on the Supreme Court.

Ten years ago: Death claimed Broadway librettist Alan Jay Lerner in New York City at age 67.

JACK ANDERSON

Banks becoming more like loan sharks

WASHINGTON — Former Gambino crime family underboss Sammy "the Bull" Gravano once defined loan sharking with brutal simplicity: "It's just lending somebody some money at a very high interest rate."

Anderson

It also defines what banks are doing to credit card customers. While bankers are not kneecapping customers who fall behind on payments, record numbers of people addicted to paying with plastic are going broke. The number of people filing for personal bankruptcy may top 1 million this year.

While nobody who fails to pay these rip-off rates will get snuffed out, consumers hopelessly in hock are nonetheless wearing the financial equivalent of cement shoes. There's little prospect they can stay afloat.

Economists increasingly fear that this burgeoning consumer debt, largely the result of credit card interest rates, could be a drag on the whole economy. By one estimate, Americans owe more than $380 billion on credit cards. The figure climbed an estimated $40 billion in 1995 alone.

Interest rates on cards now average 17.6 percent, according to Robert McKinley of the Maryland-based RAM Research Group. Meanwhile, banks are only paying small depositors 2 to 3 percent for their savings.

"The score is always banks 1 and consumers 0," said Robert Heady, publisher of the Florida-based Bank Rate Monitor newsletter.

In the latest development of the rich-get-richer story, the Supreme Court recently ruled that it's permissible for nationally chartered banks to assess credit card customers additional late charges, even if the customers live in states which do not allow such charges.

By one estimate, some banks which charged additional fees for 80 services are now charging fees for close to 200. Higher checking account fees and ATM surcharges are among the most visible. Some banks are even dunning customers $2 every time they deal with a human teller.

This comes at a time when banks are looking at record profits. Commercial banks made $48.8 billion in 1995, the fourth consecutive year of record earnings. The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. attributes the higher earnings largely to increased interest and fee income.

The banking system is viable because the taxpayers, through the federal deposit insurance system, will bail out the banks in a crunch. Yet the banks have repeatedly demonstrated an unwillingness to show reciprocal goodwill.

Their powerful lobby recently won a deal under which most banks pay little or nothing for deposit insurance. The large commercial banks' hired guns in Congress recently killed legislation which would have forced them to help with the savings and loan industry bailout.

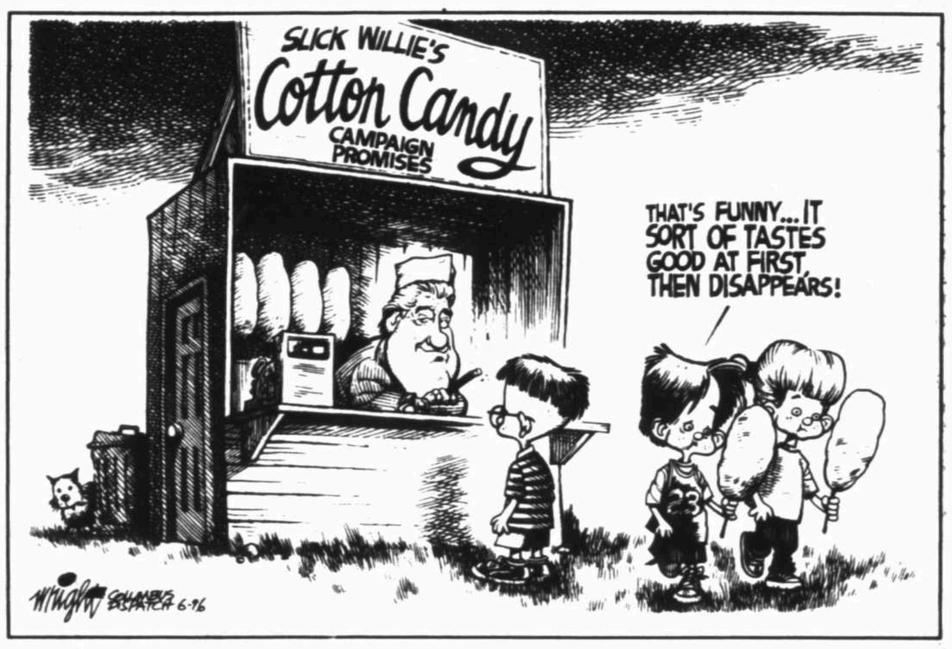

They mouth laissez faire rhetoric when regulations they find distasteful are pending, but they looked a lot more like socialists when they ran to federal regulators with a tin cup in the 1980s. One Republican on the House Banking Committee explains: "Will (we) do anything? No. A Republican Congress will not come in and tell the marketplace what to do."

But some industry observers say the rates are artificially inflated, and set by the market only in the sense that consumers tolerate them. McKinley says consumers are often lured by the promise of rebates or other premiums and fail to scrutinize interest rates.

At least not as long as the banks serve as veritable ATM machines for politicians. From January 1995 to March 1996 the top 10 banking PACs contributed more than $2.3 million to candidates from both parties, according to the Center for Responsive Politics.

Banks are always pioneering new methods for hooking credit junkies. Janice Shields of Ralph Nader's Consumer Finance Project noted that many card users tend to stick with one card for years, and said this accounts for the card marketing push on college campuses. In another tactic, card marketers entice people to sign on with comparatively low "introductory rates," which are later hiked.

WILLIAM MURCHISON

'He's our crook' attitude needs to change

Deep thinking from the grass roots, courtesy of The New York Times: "(T)he common reaction (among steelworkers queried on Whitewater) seems to be: All politicians are crooks and Clinton may be, too, but he is our crook."

Murchison

Not quite the stuff of July Fourth orations. But Clinton — meaning Bill — does lead the presidential polls by 15-20 points, and that says something about modern life and political science.

What it says, roughly, is: Forget all that stuff about Arkansas real estate deals and cattle futures and presidential friends convicted by juries on fraud charges. It doesn't really matter. Show me a politician who never took money under the table. Maybe Dole's done stuff we don't know about yet. And where's the TV Guide?

A generation ago, numerous Texans referred to Lyndon Johnson as "our S.O.B." We have progressed in that span, if you call it progress, to "our crook." Given the time and opportunity, we'll work up, no doubt, to "our Caesar" and "our maniac."

Well, political morality certainly isn't what it used to be, but neither, in fairness to those accused of violating it, is voter appreciation of how much morality means to the political order. What can you trust any crook, political or otherwise, to be? A crook. Encourage or reward crooked behavior, and by golly, that's what you get.

Bill Clinton may or may not be a crook, no criminal jury having been called on yet to consider the question, far less pronounce on it. But any willingness there may be — for now — to absolve him of imputed offenses, just because Everybody Else Does It, is dangerous. Maybe not least to Clinton.

There's the FBI matter, to mention the latest headline — "the most egregious invasion of privacy of U.S. citizens in a generation," as The New York Times' resident civil libertarian, William Safire, calls it.

The FBI — our FBI, the "G-Men in Action" — shared with the White House up to 340 confidential personnel files from the George Bush administration, including that of James Baker, the secretary of state. Clinton's chief of staff, Leon Panetta, calls the offense "inexcusable," even while claiming that none of the information in the dossiers was misused. (The White House, see, was just doing a little checking on a few lower-level holdovers.)

That's nice, if true. Also poignant to think upon. Because where vast power exists, what guarantees are there against its abuse? The largest guarantees lie in the moral understanding — in "No, I can't and won't do a wrong thing."

"Our crook," "their crook" — a crook is a crook. Morality matters. A firm understanding of right and wrong matters: the more so, given the size and complexity of the federal government and its vast, intricate reach into society. A crook is easier to tolerate where government is comparatively weak than where governmental muscles are as hard and inflexible as a barbell.

Meanwhile, what of Clinton? How long will public cynicism shield him? Maybe less long than he would prefer. It's a fair guess that much of Clinton's present political strength depends on his not being Bob Dole, Sourpuss from the Barren Midwest. "He just doesn't elicit joy," a Democratic poll taker says, joyously, of Clinton's rival.

Could Dole elicit trust? Faith? A sense of old-shoe, down-home, hamburgers-on-the-grill reliability? The challenge of the brand-new ex-senator from Kansas — to which no one can say authoritatively he will rise — lies in showing the good man and solid citizen behind the countenance of the political whip-cracker and deal maker.

If he manages the task, the gap between him and Clinton will start to close. Enough that he could win? Hard to say at this stage. Should the GOP nominee, nevertheless, by word or deed, grab hold of what might be called The Character Issue, a different ball game is in store. The FBI files remind us just how isolated this matter isn't, in an administration focused on power — getting it and wielding it.

William Murchison's column is distributed by Creators Syndicate.

CHARLEY REESE

Balkans quiet for now, but NATO may change that

While the Balkans are quiet now, don't expect them to stay that way. The United States has played a dirty game in the Balkans, and there will be payback sooner or later.

We now know what was reported in the British press long before, that the U.S. government covertly agreed to the arming of the Bosnian Muslims but claimed in reports to the American people that it was enforcing an arms embargo against all the belligerents.

Reese

Military Resources Inc., out of Virginia (close to the CIA), trained the Croatian army and now has a contract to train the Muslim army, which President Clinton intends to equip with $98.4 million worth of U.S. weapons.

The United States has never mentioned seeking war crimes trials for Vietnamese who committed atrocities against U.S. and South Vietnamese people; has never sought such a tribunal for Pol Pot, who murdered one-third to one-half of his countrymen in Kampuchea; has never sought to bring Chinese officials to justice for genocide in Tibet. Yet the United States has supported an international war crimes trial for a minor civil war in the Balkans.

From the beginning of the conflict, the United States successfully has made villains of the Serbs, even though the Serbs twice allied themselves with us in two world wars and warned against a premature breakup of Yugoslavia.

The Serbs were depicted as the aggressors when in fact the Serbs doing the fighting were fighting for their own homes and self-determination in the very spots where they had lived for centuries.

The big question is: Why?

Why is the United States involved at all in a purely civil war in southeast Europe that has, for us, absolutely no strategic and economic value? Why have we been treated to this propaganda barrage about alleged atrocities, which, even if true, pale in comparison to the atrocities in Africa that are being ignored?

Why, if we had to take sides in a purely confined civil war between ethnic groups, did we side with two groups that had fought with the Nazis against us, and against the Serbs who fought with us (and suffered horrendously in Croatian death camps)?

I don't know all the answers, for surely there are several, but some I know. First, Germany backed the breakup, and next to Israel, Clinton seems to kiss Germany's behind more than any other country. So Germany now has Croatia and Slovenia in its sphere of influence.

Second, the U.S. foreign policy establishment didn't want peace in the Balkans; it wanted to create an excuse to use the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, which is a war alliance with no enemy and hence no mission. Unwilling to give up this Cold War relic, it was desperate to justify keeping it, and so it created an opportunity to use it at the expense of Serbian, Muslim and Croatian lives.

I suppose these foreign policy elitists, whose record, by the way, is miserable, have hit upon the scheme of expanding U.S. influence via NATO right up to the borders of Russia while the Russians are in a temporarily weak position.

This is stupid for two reasons. One, we ought to be getting the heck out of Europe, not entangling ourselves. Two European wars are enough. Europe has a bigger population and a healthy gross domestic product (combined). It can take care of itself.

The second reason this is stupid is because the retention and expansion of NATO can only be interpreted by the Russians as hostile. The assumption on the part of those wanting to expand a war-fighting alliance to the east is that someday someone will attack. The only someone capable of an attack is Russia.

Thus, U.S. policy is helping not Russian democrats who want to be partners with the West, but those who fear and are hostile to the West.

One reason we need to be isolationists is that our internationalists are so incompetent. Watch for trouble in the Balkans. It's coming.

Senate approves new balanced budget plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate gave final approval Thursday to an election-year balanced budget plan aimed at sharply defining the differences between Democrats and Republicans while avoiding a repeat of last year's government shutdowns.

Not one senator — Republican or Democrat — strayed from the party line in the 53-46 vote approving the GOP document, which would spend $1.62 trillion in fiscal 1997 and produce a $5 billion surplus in 2002.

But the night before, the same budget squeaked through the House, 216-211, as GOP leaders barely withstood a revolt by conservatives upset that it permitted a temporary rise in the deficit. The leaders' victory came only after four GOP dissidents were persuaded to switch their votes at the last moment.

The budget, adopted two months behind schedule, does not need President Clinton's signature. It sets the guidelines for spending and tax bills Congress is supposed to send to the White House between now and the Oct. 1 start of fiscal 1997.

Over the next six years, it would wring $158 billion in savings from Medicare, $72 billion from Medicaid and $70 billion from welfare and the earned income tax credit for the working poor, while providing $122 billion for a new $500 per child tax credit and allowing defense spending to rise slightly.

It would cut taxes and spending more moderately than last year's GOP budget, which Clinton vetoed, but more sharply than the president's proposed budget.

At issue for the House conservatives was $4 billion in annually approved domestic spending added to the plan for 1997 after earlier House and Senate versions of the budget, approved separately last month, were melded.

The extra $4 billion will make it easier to write the 13 bills providing annually approved domestic spending. Vetoes of some of those bills twice shut down parts of the government last year. But the extra money exacerbated a projected temporary increase in the deficit from $130 billion this year to $153 billion next year and $147 billion in 1998.

Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., overseeing passage of the first major piece of legislation since succeeding Bob Dole on Wednesday, acknowledged the compromise "wasn't received with a great deal of pleasure in some circles." But he said it "continues to represent dramatic changes in the way we govern."

Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., said the budget still was too extreme. He said it would pay for "more tax breaks for those who don't need them" by "dismantling many of the investments we've made in this country for three decades." Many of the most criticized spending cuts would be made in legislation revamping benefit programs, which would continue unchanged if Clinton vetoes the legislation.

Senate Budget Committee Chairman Pete Domenici, R-N.M., who last year initially wanted to delay tax cuts until the budget was balanced, defended the GOP attempt at election-year tax relief.

"In addition to a deficit up here, there's a deficit in the checkbooks ... of working men and women with children under 18," he said. "This is a deficit that's going to destroy family life unless we work at trying to solve it."

While liberal Democrats zeroed in on the spending cuts, more conservative Democrats ridiculed the temporary deficit increase, even though Clinton's budget projects a slightly larger deficit rise.

O'Leary defends travel actions

WASHINGTON (AP) — Energy Secretary Hazel O'Leary defended her controversial foreign travel Thursday and in passionate testimony accused some of her congressional critics of wanting "to take me out ... to destroy me."

O'Leary acknowledged repeatedly that four trade missions she led in 1994-95, costing $3.2 million, were marred by management and accounting miscues, but insisted they were of value to the country and U.S. businesses.

"I apologize for every misstep, every misspent dollar," she told the House Commerce investigations subcommittee that for months has been critically examining the overseas trips. An internal DOE investigation has questioned tens of thousands of dollars of expenditures on the trips.

While Democratic lawmakers defended O'Leary and said the panel's investigation has dragged on far too long, Republicans accused the Clinton Cabinet member of playing loose with taxpayer dollars on trips for which no clear economic value could be shown.

The trips were replete with "management failures, indifference to cost and disregard for ordinary taxpayers," insisted Rep. Joe Barton, R-Texas, the subcommittee chairman. And he said that in at least one instance involving expenditures for receptions, there may have been a violation of law.

The four trade missions — to India, Pakistan, China and South Africa — each involving 59 to 67 business executives and government officials, were among 16 foreign trips O'Leary has taken. Most of the others involved trips to international energy meetings or discussions in Russia over nuclear issues.

Referring to the trade missions, O'Leary said, "We are proud of our accomplishments on them and remain confident that this work will return dividends to the American taxpayer as projects succeed and new opportunities are seized in the future."

O'Leary said that the controversy over her foreign travels have been a "personal and emotional" trauma and that news reports of alleged wrongdoing had left her mother with the false impression "that her darling baby daughter was going to jail."

Arizona Gov. Symington indicted after grand jury investigation

PHOENIX (AP) — Gov. Fife Symington, who was under investigation for allegedly cheating lenders and misusing his office, was indicted today on 23 counts including fraud and attempted extortion.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Jeff Isaacs announced the federal indictment moments after a grand jury presented it in open court.

It accuses Symington, a former real estate developer, of making false statements to a federally insured institution, wire fraud, attempted extortion and false statements in a bankruptcy proceeding, Isaacs said. He would not elaborate.

The 50-year-old Republican governor, first elected in 1991 and now in his second term, said Wednesday he would almost welcome an indictment and wouldn't quit.

"Whatever happens, happens. I've never ducked a good fight," he said.

He becomes the second Arizona governor to be indicted in less than a decade. In 1988, then-Gov. Evan Mecham was indicted on charges he hid a campaign loan. He was eventually acquitted of those charges, after he was impeached and removed from office on unrelated grounds.

Back then, Symington was among the first to demand his resignation.

After meeting this morning, the federal grand jury presented the indictment to U.S. Magistrate Morton Sitver, who accepted it and put documents in the case under seal.

Isaacs and another deputy U.S. attorney declined to comment further pending an FBI news conference scheduled for later this afternoon. Symington and his attorney John Dowd planned their own news conference for later in the day.

That a federal grand jury has been investigating aspects of Symington's failed real estate business and his administration as governor has been common knowledge for five years, though grand jury affairs are secret.

Among his real estate projects was the Mercado, a failed development in downtown Phoenix. After being elected governor in 1991, Symington defaulted on loans totaling millions of dollars.

Then, last September, Symington filed for personal bankruptcy, citing debts of nearly $25 million and assets under $62,000.

A source with knowledge of the investigation told The Associated Press it has focused on allegations that Symington defrauded lenders and abused his office for personal gain. The grand jury met this morning, said the source, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Of the prospect he could be indicted, Symington had said, "Frankly, in America today, it's very easy to indict someone."

He said the probe "started back in 1989 and it's got to be one of the longest running investigations ever in history and it's cost me over $3 million."

As word of the grand jury meeting spread, Symington gathered his staff for a pep talk and canceled a trip to Tucson. He met with his Cabinet this morning.

"I've maintained all along I've never done anything wrong," Symington said. "If they decide to move forward, then we'll all be out there in the open on a level playing field. In fact, I probably would welcome that after facing all these innuendoes over all the years."

Investigators have looked at financial statements used by Symington between 1989 and 1990, which show his net worth dropping $35 million — from about $12 million in positive worth to a negative $23 million.

City moves up on livable list

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

Midland climbs to 144th in Money magazine poll, up from 189th on last year's list.

The attributes of Odessa/Midland make the metropolitan area the 144th most livable city among 300 in the United States, according to readers of Money magazine. The findings of the annual Best Places survey are revealed in the July issue of the magazine, expected to be available locally next week.

The No. 1 ranking was Madison, Wis. Rounding out the top 10 were: Punta Gorda, Fla.; Rochester, Minn.; Fort Lauderdale, Fla.; Ann Arbor, Mich.; Fort Meyers/Cape Coral, Fla.; Gainesville, Fla.; Austin; Seattle, Wash., and Lakeland, Fla.

Many Texas cities made the list. In this part of the state, cities that made the list included Abilene at No. 46, Lubbock at No. 78 and Amarillo at No. 93.

The ranking of Odessa/Midland at 144 is up from the previous year's ranking at 189.

"I'm glad to see us go up. That's certainly good," said Marvin Wynn, president and CEO of the Midland Chamber of Commerce.

"It gives us a pretty good feel of what people are looking for in a place to live," he said.

Although Midland came in at 144, one must consider the competition of varying size cities and available amenities, Wynn said. "So I think the fact we are in the mid-point is a very good rating," he said.

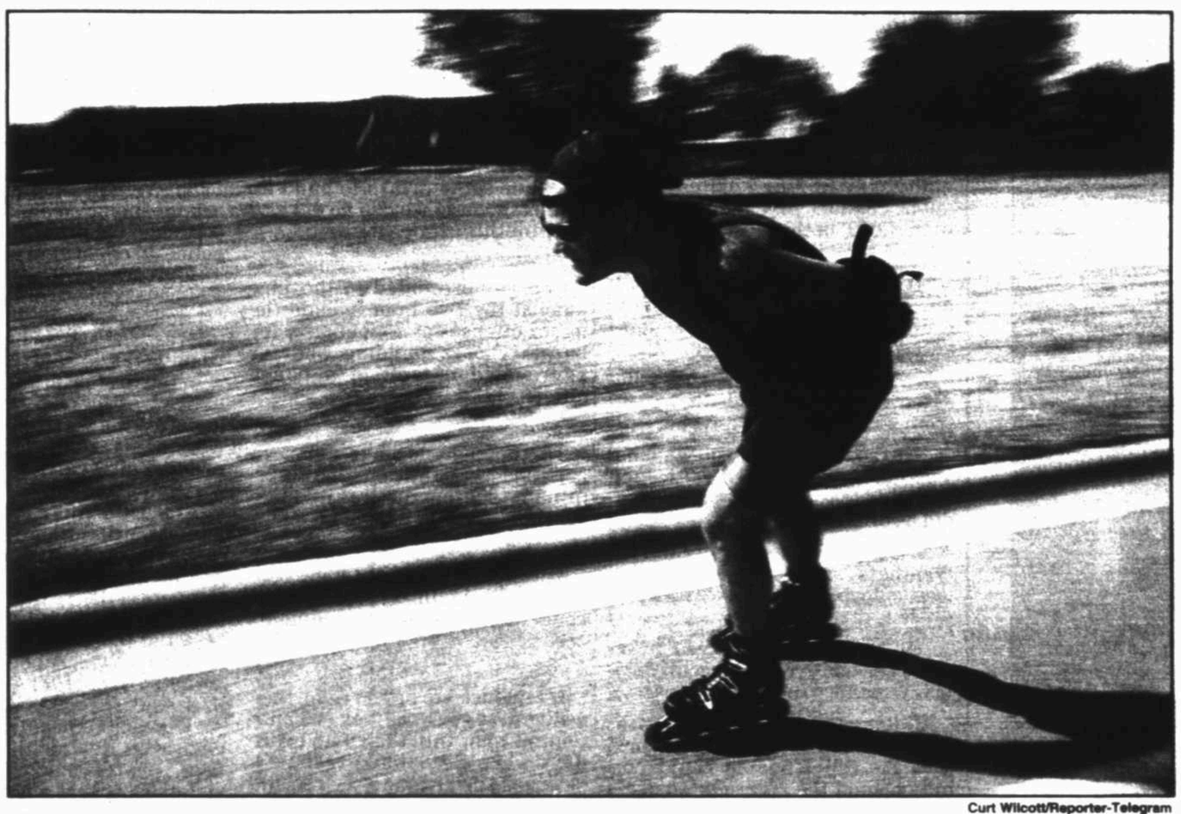

The ranking — which asked readers to rank criteria that make a city livable and compared that to national statistics — was based on economy, health, crime, housing, education, weather, transit, leisure and arts.

"It's always encouraging when you're moving up on a list that measures quality of life," Assistant City Manager Glen Hackler said. But Hackler added that surveys that attempt to measure quality of life should also be taken with a grain of salt.

Nevertheless, it's good to see a favorable rating, he said.

"Hopefully people outside West Texas are learning what we've known for a long time — that Midland is a good place to live," Hackler said.

To take a closer look at the magazine's findings, the Best Places rankings can be on the World Wide Web at http://pathfinder.com/money/

Deliberations begin in mall murder trial

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

Jurors deliberated for about two hours Thursday on the fate of two 16-year-old Midland youths charged with delinquency for felony murder for their parts in a burglary at Midland Park Mall that led to the death of Marco Antonio Sanchez on Oct. 25, 1995.

Defense attorneys and prosecutors completed their final arguments about 4 p.m. Thursday in the trial of Rafael Carlos Carillo and Antonio Salazar.

Jurors will continue their deliberations today.

Both young men are alleged to have broken into a back door at Beall's department store, setting off silent alarm.

Midland Police Department Cpl. Jim White responded to the silent alarm and allegedly found the three men in an electric meter room in the mall, trying to break through into the adjacent department store.

A Midland grand jury determined that a crowbar-wielding Sanchez attacked White and that he was justified in firing the shot that killed Sanchez.

In her final arguments to the jury, Assistant County Attorney Danna Gallegos explained that the youths, especially Carillo, are responsible for Sanchez's death.

The youths are being charged with delinquency for felony murder under state statutes that hold accomplices responsible for a death that occurs during the commission of a felony, Ms. Gallegos said.

Speaking of White's testimony in the case, Ms. Gallegos said that Carillo, as he struggled with White, was attempting to push the officer into the room where Sanchez waited to strike with the crowbar.

"He feels himself being pushed back into that room," she said.

White was struck on the shoulder, leaving him with a permanent disability, she said.

The shoulder joint was dislocated and internal muscle was severed in the joint. Surgery to fix the would left White with 300 stitches.

Quoting the testimony of the surgeon who repaired White's shoulder, Ms. Gallegos said, '"If he would have received this blow to the back of the head or the cervical spine — I believe it would have killed him.'"

Police arrest man suspected of 11 burglaries

By Joe Gaines
Staff Writer

A 39-year-old man was arrested Monday by the Midland County Sheriff's Office in connection with 11 burglaries and three instances of forgery.

William Dennis "Bud" Hayes is being charged with two of the burglaries and violation of probation. Additional charges are pending following further review by the district attorney's office.

Hayes is being held on $10,000 bond at Midland County Detention Center.

Deputies were able to arrest Hayes after a tip from an informant linked him to the burglaries, sheriff's Lt. Ed Krevit said.

After looking up Hayes' file, officers saw he was wanted on a forgery charge and a description of Hayes was given to patrol units. Later that night, Hayes was found driving around Midland; he was arrested and brought in for questioning, Krevit said.

During questioning on Monday, Hayes confessed to committing the burglaries, Krevit said.

Hayes

Of the 11 burglaries Hayes is accused of committing, nine were in the county and the other two occurred in the city limits. The burglaries — at both residences and businesses — occurred over the last month between midnight and 4 a.m., Krevit said.

Most of the business burglaries were oil-industry related and the residences were mobile homes, Krevit said.

"He would case the residences and check to see if anyone was home. He would knock on the door and if no one answered, he would enter through a window or door," he said.

Hayes would then take the stolen items and sell them to either pawn shops or individuals, Krevit said.

Officials at the Sheriff's Office said Hayes would use the money to pay for his cocaine addiction.

Hayes reportedly took checks from the residences he robbed and tried to cash them at grocery stores, Krevit said.

So far, property valued at more than $5,000 has been recovered. Hayes has been cooperating by telling deputies the individuals to whom he had sold the stolen property, Krevit said.

Officials went to Hayes' residence Thursday and found more stolen property and his wife then led them to another location where more stolen property was found, Krevit said.

Property recovered has ranged from jewelry, microwave ovens and televisions. Deputies are continuing to recover stolen items and expect the value of the found property to reach $10,000 to $15,000.

Deputies said they think Hayes acted alone in the burglaries and are not sure if his wife was an accomplice.

Deputies are continuing their investigation.

Cards help kids, cops make friends

By Joe Gaines
Staff Writer

They may not be worth as much as a Babe Ruth baseball card or an Emmitt Smith football card, but trading cards with pictures of local law-enforcement officers are building a positive relationship between police and the community, police said.

Originally, the only cards of law enforcement were for the four officers in the Midland Police Department's Drug Abuse Resistance Education and Canine units.

The idea of police trading cards for all officers had been tossed around the Police Department for years, but no funding was available, said Phyllis Blair Spinuzzi, communications service officer.

Other Texas cities, like Dallas and Houston, use the cards to build rapport between police and children, Ms. Spinuzzi said.

In February, after a showing of cards from Dallas police and prototypes made of deputies with the Midland Sheriff's Office, organizers were able to get the support of the Midland Crime Prevention Commission, Abell-Hanger Foundation and Tall City Road Riders, Lisa Wilkes, project chairwoman said.

"Kids know a lot about what's going on in their neighborhood and the cards let them feel comfortable around police," Ms. Wilkes said.

The cards also tell children that police can be role models too, officers said.

"If cards can be made of football and baseball players, why can't they be made of police officers?" police Sgt. David Garcia said. "They're the best role models, I know. They are charged with upholding the law."

BASIN BRIEFING

A-1 trial update

A federal jury continued deliberating Thursday in the conspiracy and bank fraud trial of 11 people charged in a scheme worth millions of dollars in the A-1 Mobile Homes case in U.S. District Court in Midland. The defendants are accused of defrauding several financial institutions in a scheme to obtain money by submitting false information in connection with the financing of mobile home purchases. No verdict has been reached.

Animal violence

VICTORIA — Four-year-old Andrew Garcia used to spend his time after school with his favorite playmate — an orange-and-white kitten named Dyner. But then the 3-month-old kitten vanished. Virginia Garcia told her son and the younger of her two daughters that Dyner ran away. The truth, she fears, is more than a 4- or 7-year-o d should have to hear. Four teen-agers allegedly kicked the tiny animal to death early Tuesday. "One guy was seen drop-kicking the cat like you would drop-kick a football," police Capt. Bill Pratka told The Victoria Advocate. The kitten's death was the latest in a recent series of animal-cruelty incidents in the Victoria area. Four piglets were shot to death and stolen in the last two weeks. Earlier this spring, several members of the East Bernard High School baseball team were accused of beating a cat to death with baseball bats. Pratka said a 13-year-old boy who lives across the street from the Garcias' home told police what happened to the kitten.

Escapee captured

HUNTSVILLE — A Utah state trooper early Thursday captured a Texas prison escapee missing since May 1, authorities said. Robert Glinski, 52, and his common-law wife, Sharon, were in the Provo County Jail awaiting extradition to Texas, said Larry Fitzgerald, spokesman for the Texas Department of Criminal Justice. Glinski, who disappeared while mowing grass outside the Ellis Unit north of Huntsville, began a life sentence for aggravated assault with a deadly weapon in 1982. The two were arrested without incident in American Fork, Utah, after a trooper ran a license plate check on the their pickup in the Provo suburb.

Greenville fires

Greenville, Texas Police Officer Mike Rehfield stands in front of a feed store that was the scene of the seventh of a string of fires in the city in the last week. Officials said the fires have not been proved to be linked.

MALL: Deliberations begin

(From 1B)

Carillo, J.K. "Rusty" Wall, told the jurors that they must be convinced of intent before finding his client guilty.

Jurors must find the defendant guilty only of "the kind of delinquent conduct that fits what this man did ... in this case, the glove has got to fit the hand," Wall said.

"It's not just a simple stroll down the primrose path to felony murder ... it's a lot more complicated than that," Wall said.

Wall maintained that Carillo acted out of instinct, rather than from a desire to hurt anyone.

"Marco was going to do what he was going to do whether Rafael was able to run away — like Tony did — or not," Wall said.

Salazar's attorney, Sharon Weathers, said her client was the least culpable of all those who were present that night.

"He had already run when the more serious events ... occurred," Ms. Weathers said.

Midland County Attorney Mark Dettman, however, told jurors that these defendants could not hide behind the "mere presence" defense — since that term describes someone who simply happens upon a crime, he said.

"That's for innocent people — and these two aren't innocent," he said.

Dettman walked the jury through the events of the evening as they had been laid out in testimony.

"We go bowling, because it's too early to commit burglaries... We have some drinks to build up some macho so we can go out and commit this crime," he said.

Charges presented to the jury against the two men include the lesser offenses of delinquency for burglary of a building and for aggravated assault of a police officer.

The defendants have not been certified as adults and face determinant sentencing in juvenile court.

Through the determinant sentencing guidelines, the youths could face up to 40 years of incarceration.

If sentenced to prison time, they would first go to the Texas Youth Commission until their 18th birthdays when they would receive a hearing to determine if they should be released or kept at TYC until their 21st birthday.

If incarcerated beyond the age of 21, the youths would be transferred to state prison.

He had lived in Midland for 38 years and had worked at Coca Cola Bottling Co.

CARDS: Cards make cops heroes

(From 1B)

dren, the cards also have appealed to adults, Wilkes said.

"We've had people in their 60s ask for them," Wilkes said.

Besides children, the cards offer police an opportunity for community involvement and to be open and accessible, Garcia said.

"You can never have enough interest and support from the citizens," Garcia said.

In the first printing, cards of 22 police officers, four sheriff deputies and six special units were made. Plans for the second printing of 32 cards is under way, Ms. Spinuzzi said.

At least 75 more police officers and 50 sheriff officers are waiting to have cards made. The program will later include local troopers of the Texas Department of Public Safety and officers of the Midland Independent School District, which will hopefully be sponsored by school PTAs, Ms. Spinuzzi said.

"We want to print cards of officers who deal with the public first," Garcia said.

Patrol officers who have cards said they keep them in their pockets because children come to them asking for their trading cards.

"We have officers knocking on our door wanting their card made because they see the response other officers get with them," Ms. Wilkes said.

And because youths want the cards, officers' morale and pride in their job has increased, Ms. Wilkes said.

The program can only print as many cards as they have sponsors. Photography and printing of 4,800 cards costs $150 per officer, Ms. Spinuzzi said.

"We still have a lot of officers who need sponsors," she said.

Organizers have asked several businesses to donate and have a good response rate, Ms. Spinuzzi said.

Each card is numbered and has the name of the sponsor printed on the back. Sponsors also receive a sheet of cards — which can be framed — that includes their officer and other officer cards printed in the same press run, Ms. Spinuzzi said.

Cards will be signed and given away at special events and at businesses that sponsored officers, Ms. Spinuzzi said.

The next signing is to be Scout Night, July 25 at Christensen Stadium.

For information on sponsoring an officer or unit, contact Phyllis Blair Spinuzzi (MPD) at 685-7131, Sgt. B.J. McDaniel (Sheriff's Office) at 688-1014, Chief Dan Walkenshaw (MISD) at 689-1059, Trooper John Barton (DPS) at 697-2211 or Lisa Wilkes at 694-0477.

Supreme Court ruling on Houston, Dallas election districts clouds election picture

WASHINGTON (AP) — Election-year upheaval potentially looms for Texas state officials, congressional candidates and voters now that the Supreme Court has ruled unconstitutional three predominately minority congressional districts in Houston and Dallas.

The court's ruling Thursday throws into question whether a new redistricting plan — also affecting districts adjacent to the three minority districts — will be ordered used for the November election.

Drawing of a new plan would throw out the results of the March congressional primaries and April runoffs in districts whose boundaries are changed.

While Republicans applauded the ruling and the potential for new elections in some or many of Texas' 30 House districts, Democrats decried the effect and said the current plan should be used in November.

The answer likely lies in the hands of a three-judge federal panel in Houston, which in 1994 ruled the three districts unconstitutional after seven voters challenged the map drawn by the Texas Legislature in 1991.

The Supreme Court on a 5-4 vote upheld the ruling, saying the three districts are unconstitutional because race was the predominant consideration in drawing their boundaries. In an unusual move, the court waived its typical 25-day waiting period, making the ruling effective immediately.

The Texas judges now could draw a map of their own, allow the current plan to remain in effect or order Gov. George W. Bush to call the Texas Legislature into special session to adopt a new redistricting plan. The governor has indicated he would like to avoid a special session.

For now, the Texas judges aren't speaking about their intentions. One is on vacation until June 24 and the two others offered no public comment Thursday.

"We're in a holding pattern until we hear from them," said Democratic Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock, expressing hope that the matter will be taken up during the regular session that begins in January.

Attorney General Dan Morales, who had appealed the federal panel's ruling to the nation's high court, said he believes new lines will have to be drawn this year.

"It seems to me that it would be difficult to ask voters to go to the polls in November and cast ballots for candidates who are representing districts which have been deemed to be invalid and unconstitutional by the United States Supreme Court," he said.

A dozen or so districts could be impacted in a remap, Morales said, citing plaintiffs' estimates. But, he added: "We believe a remedy can be drawn ... to primarily affect only the three districts that were invalidated."

The preferred path, Morales said, would be for all parties to sit down and come up with a solution, eliminating the need for a special session.

'We're in a holding pattern until we hear from them.'
— Lt. Governor Bob Bullock

At issue are the majority-Hispanic 29th District in Houston held by Democrat Gene Green, who is Anglo; and two predominately-black districts: the 18th held by Houston Democrat Sheila Jackson Lee, who is black; and the 30th in Dallas, held by black Democrat Eddie Bernice Johnson.

All three decried the ruling.

Ms. Jackson-Lee said the ruling left her "very somber, deeply hurt and confused as to what kind of nation this country hopes to be in the 21st century."

At a Capitol news conference, surrounded by other members of the Congressional Black Caucus, Ms. Jackson-Lee said the court's action will be interpreted to mean that minorities are "nonexistent, unconstitutional, illegitimate."

The president of Texas' NAACP chapter, Gary Bledsoe, said: "Today's decision has eliminated the small rights of representation that African-Americans and other minorities have accumulated over the years."

But Daniel Troy, the attorney representing the Texans who challenged the district lines, said the court correctly held that race cannot be the key factor in creating districts.

"We believe this vindicates Martin Luther King's vision of a colorblind society and rejects the notion we are a country where political power should be allocated by race or ethnicity," he said.

Echoed plaintiff Edward Blum, an unsuccessful Republican congressional candidate: "The American system of representation was founded on the principle that race and religion ultimately should not matter in our public life."

Their jubilation wasn't matched in Texas Democratic circles, particularly since Republicans believe they would pick up new seats under a new redistricting plan.

"This is a real blow not only for the members of Congress but the voters of Texas," said Texas Democratic Party spokeswoman Anne Marie Kilday.

Democratic Party Chairman Bill White expressed confidence, however, that the court's decision won't affect the upcoming election.

His GOP counterpart, Tom Pauken, welcomed the court's decision. "I hope it will mean we have new lines for the general election," he said.

But Democratic Rep. Martin Frost, whose Dallas-area district could be significantly impacted by any changes to Ms. Johnson's, said courts in previous cases have allowed elections to proceed unfettered.

"In almost all the instances where the process has gone this far, the election process is not interrupted," said Frost, who was a key voice in the 1991 redistricting. Changing plans mid-stream would be very disruptive, he added.

Texas House Redistricting Committee Chairman Delwin Jones, R-Lubbock, agreed that the timing may dictate use of the current lines. "I would think (the judges) will issue us an order to redraw them in the next session of the Legislature," Jones said.

Agreed Rep. Joe Barton, the Ennis Republican who has been an architect of GOP attacks on the current redistricting plan: "The court in Houston could require what's known as immediate relief. The more likely probability is they'll just tell the Texas Legislature in the next session to draw new lines."

Barton took pains to stress that he doesn't think the court's ruling jeopardizes the continued existence of the three predominately minority districts in question. The ruling's effect is likely to be most pronounced on the districts that neighbor the minority districts, he said.

Dallas to open first rail transit line in Southwest

N.Y. Times News Service

DALLAS — After decades of feuds and false starts in an automobile-addicted state that remains the hub of the world's petroleum industry, Dallas plans to introduce the first modern rail transit line in the Southwest on Friday.

The Dallas system, planned back when rail transit was seen as a nostrum for every urban problem, makes a late debut, with other cities sometimes disenchanted with the returns on their huge investments.

While some Dallasites hope their fellows will climb aboard and leave more highway space for them, few can see themselves abandoning their cars or trucks.

"It's probably a waste of money," said Paul Nadelman, a stockbroker who was among those learning to dodge trains on practice runs along a transit mall downtown. "It's kind of neat to see the trains go back and forth, but Dallas isn't New York," he said. And he, for one, needs his car to see clients, he said.

The carless, however, say the train will save them from some of the circuitous transfers they have to make on buses. "I'm so excited," said Ayesha El-Amin, waiting at a combination bus and train stop in the Oak Cliff area south of downtown to begin her long commute to Richardson, a northern suburb. "Once it gets going, people will appreciate it more."

At $860 million for a 20-mile line expected to attract only about 7,000 new transit riders, plus 26,000 switching from buses, critics love to calculate how many BMWs each of those new riders would receive if the money were divided among them. Train tickets, including free bus transfers, are one dollar.

The 11.2-mile section that Dallas Area Rapid Transit, or DART, is opening this week includes the downtown transit mall, paved with bricks, and two branches into mostly black and Hispanic neighborhoods south of downtown.

Politicians from these areas challenged earlier plans for concentrating the rail system in white neighborhoods to the north that have more traffic tie-ups but lower proportions of transit riders.

Along the transit mall Thursday, the light rail cars — which look like sleek, youthful trolley cars back from a stay at the health spa — glided past with a whirr and a few clicks instead of the screech and clatter of older systems.

They brazenly passed in front of Thanksgiving Tower, where once, reputedly, oil barons like J.R. Ewing, and still various Hunt brothers hatch their plans for feeding the nation's craving for gasoline and oil.

Dallas' transit plans went in for some weight reduction after a 1988 referendum, when voters rejected a high-capacity New York-style system with a downtown subway. The DART Lite plan that followed had only enough money for the transit mall downtown.

Thursday, transit police tried to keep trains, traffic and pedestrians safely separate. They blew their whistles, waved their arms and dressed down jay-walkers and traffic violators in tones otherwise reserved for serial murderers caught in the act. "I've been driving this road for a hundred years, making this left turn," complained one motorist.

"Well, now you make this left turn and you're going to get killed," the officer shot back.

ALMOST ANY BOY CAN BE A DADDY...

Yes, that is true. But the rest of the story is, "it takes alot of love and work to be a Father!" Fact is, becoming a father ought to be a choice shared by a man and woman whose love for each other creates a solid commitment for life. Without it, life for a child can be "hell on earth." You see, every child deserves a father and a mother. That's why God says, "honor your father and your mother, as the Lord your God has commanded you, that your days may be long, and that it may be well with you in the land which the Lord your God is giving." Deuteronomy 5:16.

How do you honor a father? Respect, Respond and Reflect. Yes, the real father will earn your respect by his life and example coupled with Christian character. So, "respond" by giving your devotion and obedience. God declares, "children's children are the crown of old men, and the glory of children are their fathers." Proverbs 17:6. Add time to "reflect", and you will find help for your own work as a father and mother. Remember... "It takes alot of love and work to be a Father...almost any boy can become a daddy!"

State proceeds with tobacco lawsuit

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas will push ahead with its $4 billion federal lawsuit against the tobacco industry after a state judge put on hold an industry lawsuit that had sought to fend off the case.

"We now essentially have the green light to proceed in the federal court which is really what we have been arguing all along," Texas Attorney General Dan Morales said Thursday.

But State District Judge Joseph Hart refused Morales' request to dismiss tobacco companies' state lawsuit against him, in which the industry claimed he oversteps his authority in the federal case.

The judge said he wants to see how the federal court rules first.

Hart also refused to fine the tobacco companies for Morales called their "frivolous" lawsuit.

"I do not find the plaintiffs' pleadings were brought for the purpose of harassment, to cause unnecessary delay, to increase the cost of litigation or for any other improper purpose," Hart said in a letter to lawyers in the case.

The tobacco companies filed their state court lawsuit last year, trying to prevent Morales from suing them. They contend he doesn't have the authority to bring much of the federal lawsuit.

The lawsuit was filed in March in Texarkana, alleging the tobacco industry violated federal racketeering, wire fraud and conspiracy laws; federal and state antitrust laws; and state consumer protection laws.

Morales is seeking reimbursement of Medicaid money spent on treating tobacco-related illnesses and a halt to advertising that he says targets children.

The tobacco industry has denied the allegations against it.

Hart said he was setting aside the tobacco companies' state lawsuit because even if he ruled, his decision wouldn't address all the issues raised in the federal lawsuit.

Hart said he decided against dismissing the state lawsuit because the federal court might decide to dismiss Morales' federal law claims and to abstain from ruling on his state law claims.

If the federal court doesn't rule on state law issues, Hart could then revive the tobacco industry's lawsuit in his court, Morales said.

Austin lawyer Jack Maroney, representing Philip Morris Inc., said he was pleased that Hart denied Morales' motion to dismiss the case and the motion to impose sanctions. He said the industry welcomes the opportunity to address the antitrust allegations in federal court.

Added Philip Morris lawyer Gregory G. Little, "The judge's decision is not a ruling on the merits of our case, and we still believe very strongly that Mr. Morales' lawsuit is not only without legal merit, but that he has no power even to file it."

YOUR HOROSCOPE

FRIDAY, JUNE 14, 1996

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: You need to be very selective about your friends and business allies. Clean house, then concentrate on developing your talents. A small enterprise that is launched now could show a profit by the fall. New pals bring you good luck. Family love makes Dec. a wonderful period for domestic pursuits. Valuable social connections help advance your career early in 1997. A change of residence is possible next spring. Wait until May of '97 to sell a special property.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DAY: rocker Boy George, figure skater Eric Heiden, tennis star Steffi Graf, actress Marla Gibbs.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Timely help will make it possible for you to complete a difficult task. A potential failure becomes a triumph! Differences of opinion arise, but are not insurmountable.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): There is no way to ignore an issue that has caused tensions on the job. Be realistic about your schedule and energy. It may be necessary to resort to shortcuts.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Be patient and practical when making plans. Quickly shift to a different strategy if things are not working out. Others are impressed by your ability to cope with change.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): If you want to change your mind about something, be tactful when explaining why. Your friendship with a former schoolmate could lead to a new partnership.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Creative endeavors enjoy highly favorable influences. Pursue art, acting, literature, travel and study. A money-making idea deserves further thought. Someone who suggests joining forces may have selfish motives.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Keep all of your actions open and aboveboard today. Adopting deceptive practices would be a big mistake. Do not allow groundless fears to disturb equilibrium.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): An excellent day for taking care of business. Tackle routine chores before turning to a creative project that requires close attention to detail. Avoid going to extremes where food or fashion is concerned.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): It pays to be objective in business matters. An overly sentimental approach could lead to costly expenditures. Resist the temptation to take chances.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Do not let a previous episode make you supersensitive to criticism. Welcome constructive suggestions. Others may not understand your need for seclusion today. Refrain from arguing. Platonic relationships will flourish. Quietly guard your privacy.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Welcome a calmer work environment. Complete important paperwork and return phone calls promptly. Getting together with that special someone will help you unwind.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): An intolerant attitude could stir up old antagonisms. Before you criticize someone's motives, try to understand their mindset. Friends may be well-intentioned but misinformed. Seek new avenues of recreation this weekend. Romance blossoms anew.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): The emphasis today is on doing things efficiently. Work by yourself, without expecting others to come to your aid. Straighten out snarls and untie knots. Leaving work early helps you avoid a traffic tangle.

Opening lead: Jack of ♠

Taking a look at all four hands, it is difficult to see how four spades can be defeated. But a brilliant deceptive play by East, who is unknown to us, led declarer down the path to destruction.

South's bidding showed a hand with 4-3-5-1 distribution and invitational values. With excellent spade support, North had just enough to accept.

In an effort to protect potential diamond tricks, West elected to lead a trump. Declarer took the king and cashed the ace and, leaving a trump outstanding, cashed the ace and king of diamonds and ruffed a diamond. Instead of overruffing, East discarded a club!

With the missing trump seemingly marked in the West hand, declarer saw no reason to risk leading a heart to the jack, which would have guaranteed the contract as the cards lie. The problem was that West was likely to win this trick and remove dummy's last trump, stranding declarer with four losers.

Instead, declarer came to hand with the ace of hearts and confidently ruffed another diamond — and the roof fell in. East overruffed with the trump that West 'had to' hold, and the defenders quickly took two heart tricks and a club for down one.

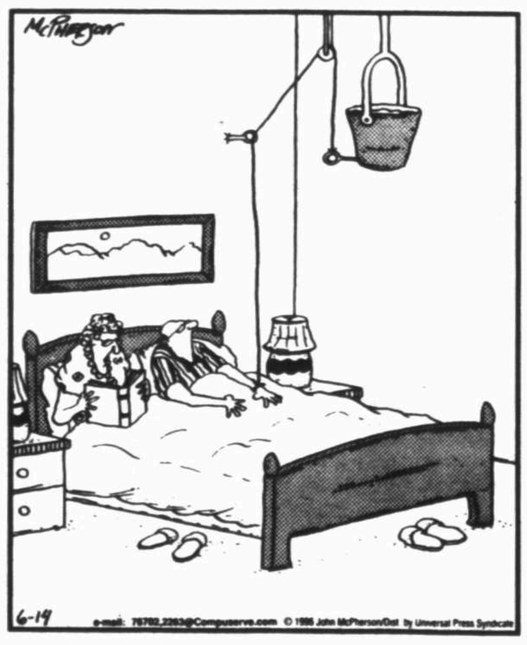

Since we would probably have played the hand in exactly the same way, our sympathies to South and kudos to East for a smart piece of deception.

Mr. Rogers' real-life neighborhood isn't as friendly as television one

NANTUCKET, Mass. — Mr. Rogers' real neighborhood is not nearly as friendly as his television one.

The father of two young boys who were ordered off a private beach in front of Rogers' summer home says he wants to take the property by eminent domain.

Two boys were ordered off private beach in front of Rogers' summer home.

"I'm sick of this not-in-my-backyard mentality," Selectman Tim Soverino said Thursday. "Nantucket is a gorgeous island, and everyone should be able to enjoy it.

It was a relative of Rogers' who told Soverino's boys, aged 3 and 5, to get off the beach known as Smith Point.

Residents of the area claim granting public access would harm wildlife, including endangered bird species. But many townspeople say the homeowners just want to keep the beach to themselves.

Rogers, the host of the children's show "Mr. Rogers Neighborhood," lives in Pittsburgh most of the year. He was unavailable for comment.

DALLAS — A split between two Texas evangelists has turned ugly.

Leigh Valentine Tilton, a former Missouri beauty queen, says her two-year marriage to Robert Tilton is ending because he's losing his soul to alcohol and money.

"I think Bob is on the road to total destruction unless he truly repents and gets his life right," Tilton told The Dallas Morning News on Wednesday.

Mrs. Tilton used to be a $100,000-a-year assistant pastor to the Word of Faith Church run by her husband until he sued for divorce three months ago.

In divorce papers she said her husband interfered with her use of their $1.6 million residence; sold their personal home in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., without permission; and cashed an insurance check on her rented Jaguar.

"The minute he walks out of that pulpit ... he lives a totally opposite lifestyle," she said.

"He isolates himself, he doesn't trust anyone, he's feeling like everyone has an ulterior motive, that everyone's out to get him and just wants him for his money," she said.

A lawyer for Mr. Tilton and the church called the accusations lies.

LOS ANGELES — John Travolta and Roman Polanski are not on speaking terms.

The film director said Travolta walked off the set of his latest movie, "The Double," in a dispute over the script.

Travolta's June 2 departure from the Paris production site prompted the film's production company and distributor to sue Wednesday in Superior Court.

The lawsuit by Liteoffer Ltd. and Mandalay Entertainment claims Travolta undermined Polanski's authority by demanding rewrites to the screenplay outside of the director's presence.

A meeting was scheduled to smooth out the dispute, but Travolta left France before it was to be held.

A lawyer for Travolta said there was never any contract except for an agreement that the "Pulp Fiction" star would be paid $17 million and have the right to approve the screenplay.

SANTA ANA, Calif. — Utah tourists Bill Isaacs and Taryn Hensley did their darndest to find a celebrity. The couple went to California looking for movie stars, but try as they did, they had no film to develop when they headed home.

"We just got back from Universal Studios, and all that, and we didn't see anyone famous," Isaacs said Tuesday. "Then we got to the airport to go home and we're at a Tom Cruise movie."

The Ogden, Utah, couple stumbled onto the John Wayne Airport location filming of Cruise's movie "Jerry Maguire," a romantic comedy about a sports agent, as they were leaving Orange County on Tuesday.

Cruise, 33, dressed in blue jeans and boots, grinned and waved to commuters when he took the set.

Said Shirley West of Buena Park: "He's cute, he's really cute. I heard he was short but it doesn't matter."

Women in law school question traditional teaching methods

By Emily M. Bernstein
N.Y. Times News Service

Lauren Aste sat for a year in the third row of a classroom at New York University Law School, with her casebooks and outlines of the important points in each case. But Ms. Aste, 24, never raised her hand to speak in class. Like many women at the school, she said, she found the large classes and the confrontational atmosphere intimidating.

"There is more laughter when a woman will speak," said Ms. Aste, who just finished her first year of law school. "Women's comments aren't taken as seriously as men's. It depends on the professor. Sometimes a professor makes light of a response that comes from a woman."

Ms. Aste and women at other schools who feel alienated have begun to question a way of teaching that is the backbone of most law schools, the Socratic method.

And major law schools across the country are embroiled in a fundamental debate: As women come close to being half of the law school population, institutions face a choice between keeping a long-cherished tradition of teaching or changing it to accommodate a growing portion of their student body.

The Socratic method used in many law schools is loosely based on the ancient Greek practice of students discussing themes at the feet of a master. In the law school setting, students are called on by their professor and required to analyze cases in front of 100 peers.

Professors grill the students to force them to think more deeply, sometimes embarrassing them if they do not answer correctly. Although professors call on students at random at the beginning of class, they often take volunteers for follow-up questions. Many women, like Ms. Aste, refuse to volunteer.

Not all law schools use the Socratic method, but those that do use it most during the first year, which is the most crucial for students, who count on first-year grades to help earn law review membership, summer jobs and judicial clerkships.

Women who are pushing for change are taking their cue from an article published last year in the University of Pennsylvania Law Review. The lead writer was Lani Guinier, a professor at the school whose nomination to be assistant attorney general was withdrawn by President Clinton in 1993.

The report found that although women came into the law school with the same qualifications as men, they did not perform as well once they were there. The number of women in the top 10 percent of the class, or those who were chosen for the law review, prizes or prestigious clerkships was not proportional to the number of women in the school.

At New York University, Ms. Aste is part of a student taskforce looking at the issues of women at the law school. The group is calling for smaller classes, more discussion, different ways of grading students and more emphasis on political and social issues that affect the law. Many female students say they would like to have more female mentors, but some say female professors who use the Socratic method can be just as off-putting as men.

In 1995, 44 percent of the 44,000 first-year law students nationwide were women. In the 179 law schools accredited by the American Bar Association, women make up 28 percent of faculty and administrative positions, and 16 percent of tenured faculty.

'When law schools become more effective educational institutions for women, they will be more effective for all members of today's diverse student bodies.'

— excerpt from Bar Association study

The American Bar Association's commission on women in the profession has studied the situation of women in law firms — where they lag behind men in promotions to partner — and at law schools. In a study published in January that used testimony from special hearings, women from all tiers of law schools in different parts of the country told remarkably similar stories. They criticized not only professors and teaching methods, but also the attitudes of many male students.

"Barriers perpetuate a profession in which male lawyers do not relate well to women colleagues, clients or supervisors and in which the law is, in a word, male," the Bar Association study found. "When law schools become more effective educational institutions for women, they will be more effective for all members of today's diverse student bodies."

Studies so far have offered few specific solutions to make men's and women's experiences more equal. But some critics say that women have trouble with law school because they often learn differently. Women tend to deliberate before speaking, for instance, while men tend to raise their hands and open their mouths immediately. Schools need to offer a variety of different types of classrooms, these critics say, to accommodate different learning styles.

"Why is speed better than depth?" Ms. Guinier said recently. "Why is it better to be quick-witted rather than thoughtful? As legal educators, I feel that we are responsible to educate all students."

Change has come quite slowly, in part because law professors are not trained in education. And most law professors were very successful in law school, critics say, so they see little reason to change the predominant teaching methods.

In the year since the Pennsylvania article, more than a dozen law schools have given data on women's performances to a team of researchers at the University of California at Los Angeles. Others have done their own studies.

At Stanford and Columbia University Law Schools, a group of feminist theorists have made a point of holding forums and discussions on issues of interest to women students. Both schools have shown no real disparity in men's and women's performance. Students at Columbia, though, have compiled a petition asking the school to hire more female faculty.

"Things have not changed all that much in the 20 or so years since we went to law school," said Martha Fineman, a professor at Columbia. "Law schools, particularly elite law schools, are institutions that really resist change."

At Yale University Law School, Dean Tony Kronman formed a committee on the status of women last fall, not only because of the article, but also because of a memo that circulated there, rating five women in the first-year class on a "lusciousness" scale.

Paul Kahn, one of the committee members, said they were in the process of compiling data similar to the Pennsylvania study, but had yet to reach any conclusions.

Partly in response to the Guinier article, the University of Pennsylvania Law School has created smaller first year classes — 75 to 80 students instead of 115 or 120. But Dean Colin Diver said that although the article was a topic of substantial debate on campus, he was not ready to change classroom methods without more study.

At New York University, female students have led the discussion, and administrators seem to be responding. The students are asking for a range of changes, but the Socratic method is their most visible target.

"I'm uncomfortable when a professor takes my ideas and subjects me to some sort of public humiliation," said Sarah Thiemann, one of the organizers of a conference in April at NYU on how law is taught. "A man who's more used to competition maybe can take that kind of intense scrutiny."

Many of the students on the 2X Taskforce, as they call it, are high achievers, but they continue to feel uncomfortable in the classroom.

"We're very successful as a group," said Alison Shanes, who just finished her second year and is a member of the Law Review. "We're not whining because we're not doing well. We're whining because we're not happy."

The law school administration is considering many of the students' proposals, and next fall it will bring in Catherine G. Krupnick, a professor at the Harvard School of Education, and Matina Horner, the former president of Radcliffe College, to examine the women's concerns. Members of the faculty are also organizing a broader colloquium on legal education.

But teaching in smaller classes is unlikely to happen soon, administrators at NYU and elsewhere said, because it is much more expensive than the 1-to-100 faculty-student ratio now used in most first-year classes.

Some professors are changing the way they teach, not only to reach women, but also to teach a wider range of skills.

Frank Upham, for instance, developed a new segment for his first-year property class at NYU. The South Street project, as he calls it, forces the students to cooperate with one another and to consider the political and social implications of their arguments.

Upham divides the class into working groups and has them argue for a nurses' group that wants to open a hospice for dying patients in a suburb of Boston. They are ostensibly considering zoning law, but in fact they must help their clients work with the community. In the actual case, the nurses ran a float in the Fourth of July parade to curry support, something Upham said no first-year law student would ever consider.

But many professors at NYU continue to use the Socratic method exclusively. They argue that calling on students helps bring more women into the discussion. If the class were run solely on a volunteer basis, they say, men would speak even more often.

Larry Kramer, a professor who describes himself as "probably the most traditional person" at NYU, said he encouraged his colleagues to use the Socratic method more, saying it is the best way to teach students to build an effective legal argument.

"I pick a student and have exactly the same discussion I would have with a group of lawyers in a firm to discuss a case," Kramer said. "Except that I have control, because I know the answers and I know where I want the discussion to go."

Police still wonder about woman who has been missing for 8 years

By Sally Jacobs
N.Y. Times News Service

'Not knowing what happened, that is the worst thing. If I had seen her run over by a car or saw her in a coffin I would know my mother is dead.'
—Frank Douglas Jr.
son of missing woman

It has been eight years since she vanished, enough time for the "missing" poster to have sunk from sight on the police department bulletin board, enough time for investigators to have forgotten the white-haired woman who apparently vanished from a bathroom in a Maine shopping mall.

But they haven't.

Say the name Virginia Douglas and investigators reel off the bizarre circumstances of the 69-year-old Lexington, Mass. woman's disappearance as though it happened last week instead of nearly a decade ago.

Like the women's underwear that her husband bought within an hour after he noticed her missing. Or how her daughters stopped talking to their father within days. Or their later sojourns into the woods armed with shovels and psychics. Or the perennial question of just where Douglas might be.

"Virginia Douglas is the only missing person in Belfast, Maine," said Deputy Police Chief Allen Weaver, who was the Belfast Police Department's prime investigator in the 1988 case. "I mean we get missing people but we locate them. We haven't had a case in which I couldn't find the person in all the 15 years I've been here."

NOR DOES anyone expect to find her. Virginia Douglas' two daughters long ago laid down their shovels and despaired of finding their mother's body. So, too, has her son surrendered to the uncertainty of his mother's end.

But while the daughters have not spoken to their brother — or their father — since they left them at the Belfast Motor Inn two days after their mother's disappearance, they are still bound by the agony of ambiguity that shrouds the case.

"Not knowing what happened, that is the worst thing," said Frank Douglas Jr., 48, who lives in Sunrise, Fla., and is the only one of the three children who still talks to their father. "If I had seen her run over by a car or saw her in a coffin I would know my mother is dead.

"But not knowing what happened, there is just no closure," he said. "I am tormented by it every day. I think of her almost every day."

So does Douglas' daughter, Marilyn Wilson. But when Wilson thinks of what happened to the woman who sculpted a verdant landscape around the family's trim white house, she thinks of something quite different. She thinks about murder.

"WE BELIEVE that my mother was murdered and that the killer will get off scot-free, but we cannot say who it is for legal reasons," said Wilson, a nurse who lives with her family and younger sister in Manchester, N.H. "But all we really want now is to know where her body is so she can have a proper burial. We are always looking for her, always hoping we will find her."

How Frank Douglas Sr., who was driving north for a Labor Day weekend in Bar Harbor, Maine, with his wife when she disappeared, has withstood the passing years is uncertain. He did not return repeated phone calls.

Now 78, Douglas still lives in the Lexington house he shared with his wife of 46 years. He still plays tennis. But for the once-aggressive banker — a vice president in commercial loans with State Street Bank for more than 35 years — the twilight years have been grindingly lonely ones, according to his son.

"To lose his wife, and then his daughters, said Frank Douglas Jr., a J.C. Penney's sales clerk. "It's just torn his life totally apart."

THE SENIOR Douglas' version of events that fall day still stand as the only account of Virginia Douglas' final hours.

Midway through an impromptu trip up the coast, Douglas said he turned the couple's blue Oldsmobile into Reny's Shopping Plaza in Belfast so that his wife could use the bathroom in Reny's department store. Asked later why he did not pull into the McDonald's down the street, Douglas said his wife "liked to use department store bathrooms."

And that was the last time anyone ever saw the small woman with the trim cap of white hair. In fact, no one in the shopping mall could ever firmly identify her. Nor does anyone think she ran away. Even if she had, family members insist that she would have made contact with her children by now.

Frank Douglas said he scoured the shopping plaza. He questioned pedestrians and employees. Then, pausing for a moment, Douglas bought some panties and slips in his wife's size at Reny's. An hour later he returned to the lingerie section and bought some more. Douglas told the sales clerk that he did it as an "omen" so that his wife would return.

THE NEW underwear was found by investigators in Virginia Douglas's suitcase. Despite an extensive search by police, and separate searches up and down the coast by both Douglas and his son, and Douglas' daughters, she was never found.

The only trace of her was found lying on the floor of her house — a piece of carpet bearing blood of her type and a clump of her hair snagged in a doorstop. Police removed those and several other items hours after her youngest daughter, Ginny Douglas, returned from Belfast to a house in such disarray that it alarmed anyone who knew the fastidious woman well.

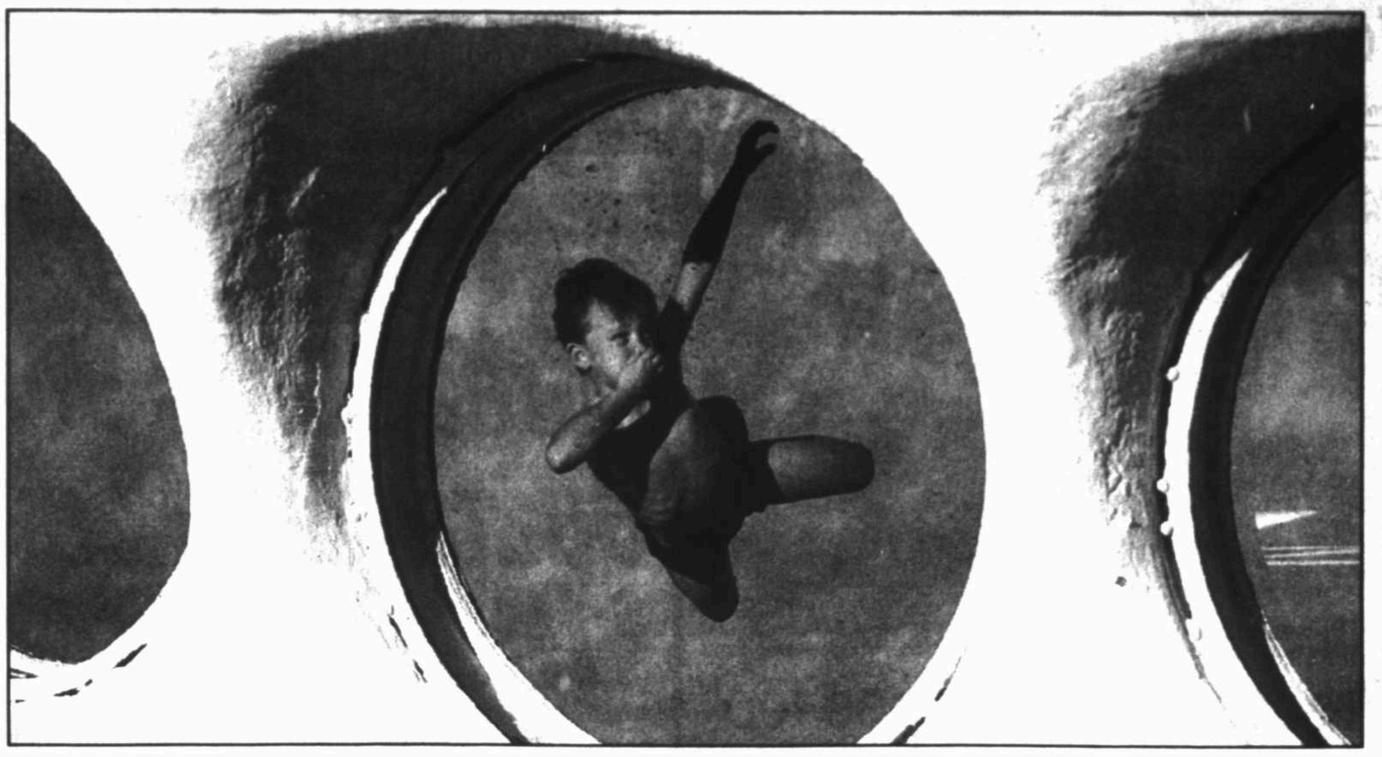

"My sister was very precise about closing the house up," said Robert Kevin, of St. Petersburg, Fla., Virginia Douglas' younger brother. "When Ginny came home that day the windows were open, the shades were up and the refrigerator was full of food. She would never, ever, have left the house like that.

"Also, Frank said they left at 8:30 p.m. But little Ginny was due in at 9:30 from St. Louis," he said. "I mean, my sister would never have taken off, that's not her style. She would have waited at least to say goodbye to Ginny."

TODAY ALL the circumstantial evidence sits on various shelves in police department storage rooms. Every year, Deputy Weaver pulls the 3-inch-thick black case file down and pores over the contents, hoping to discover something new, perhaps glimpse some clue that has eluded him all these years. And every now and then someone wanders in to his Belfast office or the Lexington Police Department and asks about that lady who disappeared in the shopping mall bathroom.

What they are told is that Virginia Douglas remains listed in the police computer as a woman who disappeared in Maine. But some investigators question whether she was ever in Maine at all. And family members aren't the only ones who think the case is incorrectly classified.

"She's in the computer as a missing person," said Lexington Police Lt. Steve Corr. "But myself, I suspect it to be a homicide case."

Red-legged frog gets official 'threatened' designation

WASHINGTON (AP) — The California red-legged frog, celebrated for its jumping abilities by Mark Twain more than 130 years ago, was declared officially threatened Monday and put under federal government protection.

The decision by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service was the first listing of a species under the Endangered Species Act since the recent end of a yearlong moratorium on listings. The law has been under intense attack from some members of Congress, who claim it is overly intrusive on property owners.

California red-legged frogs numbered in the hundreds of thousands in the 1860s when Twain wrote about their leaping prowess. Today only three areas within its historic range are believed to hold more than 350 adults.

There has been concern that listing the frog as a threatened or endangered species might interfere with the construction of the Los Vaqueros Reservoir project in central California, as well as some highway construction.

But Mollie Beattie, director of the Fish and Wildlife Service, promised to "use the full flexibility of the law" and develop protective strategies "that balance conservation with economic activities."

"The red-legged frog holds a unique place in America's folklore," said Beattie. "Protecting it will help save both our environment and a priceless part of our cultural heritage."

Two years ago, the agency proposed listing the red-legged frog as endangered, a designation that would have afforded it more protection than declaring it threatened. But Beattie said recent surveys suggested that the frogs were more numerous than previously believed, warranting the less restrictive "threatened" designation.

A century ago, the California red-legged frog was harvested routinely for food in the San Francisco Bay area and the Central Valley of California. An average of 80,000 frogs were killed annually in the 1890s, but the market eventually dwindled.

The frog population continued to decline as agriculture and urban development eliminated much of its habitat. By 1960 it had disappeared from the floor of the Central Valley and populations in the Sierra foothills became fragmented and, in many cases, eliminated by reservoir construction, predators, grazing and drought, Fish and Wildlife biologists said.

Bob L. Vice, president of the California Farm Bureau Federation, called the action to protect the frog "another nail in the coffin of ... farmers' property rights."

But Michael Spear, regional Fish and Wildlife Service director in California, said many farmers already are taking the frog's habitat needs into account as they plan new activities. He said sound grazing practices are compatible with protecting the frog.

Fred Dienes, left, and Freddie Spears put real palm tree bark on an artificial tree trunk at Preserved Treescapes International in Oceanside, Calif.

Preserved palm trees fool eye, maybe Mother Nature

By Dana Calvo
Associated Press

OCEANSIDE, Calif. — When Dennis Gabrick sees a grove of shady palm trees, he thinks business.

As president and founder of Preserved Treescapes International, he expects to make $6.5 million this year by filling restaurants, hotels and hospitals around the world with preserved trees and plants.

"We can coerce Mother Nature to live indoors," he said.

His office about 45 miles north of San Diego bursts with greenery — palms, ficus, grass and ivy. It looks real, feels real. If you think about it, most of it IS real.

First, fresh palm leaves are soaked in a non-toxic preservative that allows them to retain their fresh appearance long after the plant stops drawing nutrients from soil. The dark green liquid also makes the leaves fade-proof and fire-retardant.

"The solution only took eight painstaking years to perfect," says Vito Milan, vice president and general manager of the company that was founded in 1987.

After soaking in the treatment for seven to 10 days, the leaves are stored for about four to six weeks to ensure they have absorbed enough preservative. Then, they are attached to metal or fiberglass trunks covered in preserved bark.

About 200 of Gabrick's preserved trees grace the lobby of the Mirage Hotel and Casino in Las Vegas, the long, arched trunks creating a canopy over the indoor walkways.

"We can take pieces of a tree and bark and refashion a trunk in the shape they want," Gabrick says.

Greenery from Preserved Treescapes International bedecks hospitals, movie sets, stores and Planet Hollywood restaurants around the world.

"There are 2,500 enclosed shopping centers," he says. "We're in 10 percent of them. We have a long way to go."

The preserved trees in Southern California and Japan are seismically correct — designed to withstand earthquakes. That's good news for the owners of a shopping mall in Kobe, Japan, where the tallest preserved palm soars 66 feet into the conditioned air.

Some 800,000 palms trees are being grown to Gabrick's specifications within 100 miles of company headquarters in Oceanside, They are bought from growers on contract in Borrego Springs, Palm Springs and smaller farms near Oceanside.

Gabrick notes his tree is a one-time cost for what he calls "ecoscaping." That means no watering, pesticides or trimming. Preserved or replica trees are less expensive to ship because the synthetic trunks are lighter than water-filled live trees.

This year could be bad one for ticks, their diseases, scientists say

NEW YORK (AP) — For anybody afraid of ticks and the diseases they carry, this is not the time for a walk in the woods.

The number of ticks — and the chances they will be carrying disease — are expected to be especially high this year, possibly because of an unusually high population of infected mice in the Northeast last summer, scientists say.

Ticks pick up the bacteria that cause Lyme disease and other illnesses when they feed on infected mice and deer. The tiny bloodsuckers are dormant through the winter and return in June looking for more blood.

"It looks like a good tick year, if you like ticks," said Andrew Spielman of the Harvard School of Public Health in Boston.

People can avoid the infection by using insect spray, wearing light-colored clothes, long pants and long-sleeve shirts, and checking themselves for ticks after walking through fields or woods in the summer.

Symptoms of Lyme disease, discovered in Lyme, Conn., in 1976, include a bull's-eye rash around the bite, flu-like symptoms, arthritis, migraine headaches, vision loss and fatigue.

In its earliest stages, Lyme disease can be treated with any number of antibiotics. But later, it becomes a much more serious illness. Untreated cases often lead to heart, nervous system and joint problems.

Ticks can be found in at least 44 states, but for reasons that researchers don't completely understand, Lyme disease is most common in parts of the Northeast and Upper Midwest.

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention reported slightly more than 13,000 cases of Lyme disease in 1994, the worst year for the disease. But the ecology of Lyme disease makes it difficult to predict from one year to the next just how much of a threat the disease will be.

Epidemiologists are finding that the affliction is more complicated than they first believed, making it more difficult for doctors to recognize and treat.

Recent research shows that two other infections — babesiosis and human granulocytic ehrlichiosis, or HGE — can combine with Lyme bacteria to form a more virulent illness.

The newly discovered microorganisms may explain why some people have trouble getting over an infection, and others don't respond to the antibiotics that doctors usually prescribe for Lyme. Many patients have complained of a chronic Lyme disease that lasts for years or months after their initial symptoms disappear.

"The past couple years have been a real eye-opener," said Dr. David Persing of the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minn. "This has probably been occurring as an undercurrent for longer than we realize."

Form of vitamin A shows promise

BOSTON (AP) — A new synthetic form of vitamin A shows promise in keeping people healthy after surgery for liver cancer.

The drug, developed in Japan, appears to reduce the risk of developing new liver tumors by two-thirds.

Liver cancer, often triggered by hepatitis viruses, is a major killer in many parts of the world. After surgical removal of the tumor, the disease often comes back.

While some of the recurrences are a return of the original tumor, victims also run a high risk of developing entirely new liver cancers unrelated to the ones that were taken out.

The new drug, polyprenoic acid, appears to reduce the risk of these so-called second primary tumors.

The drug was developed and tested by Dr. Yasutoshi Muto and colleagues from Gifu University in Gifu, Japan. Their findings were published in Thursday's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine.

They randomly assigned 89 patients to receive either polyprenoic acid or dummy pills. After 38 months of follow-up, second primary tumors had developed in seven of those getting polyprenoic acid and in 20 in the comparison group.

In an editorial in the journal, Dr. David A. Shafritz of Albert Einstein College of Medicine in New York City said the drug "may be an important new advance in the care of patients with this disease, for which there is no effective treatment."

FAMILY MATTERS

Trust, communication important in marriage

By Jim May, Ph.D.

DEAR FAMILY: I am 59 years old, and my wife and I have not made love in four years. How can we start again? Also would you make a few remarks about marital sexual activity? FRUSTRATED

May

DEAR FRUSTRATED: Since making love is so often a form of communication, you may want to start by discussing the situation with your wife. For example, are you making a direct request to make love and is she refusing your request? Are neither of you making any sexual advances to the other? Is she angry at you over unresolved issues in the marriage? Are there some physical reasons for her not having sex? There are as many reasons for not making love as there are for making love.

Schedule a time to discuss this situation with your wife. Find out exacly what is going on in the relationship. When love making disappears from a marriage without any explanation, more underlying problems in the relationship may be at fault.

A marriage without passion — often expressed sexually — could be missing an important positive component of the relationship. That certainly does not mean that a couple must have "light-socket sex" in order to be happy. It simply means that for many people, sexual satisfaction is an important part of marital happiness.

Sex and intimacy are important ingredients in this equation. While some people think of sex in terms of "genital function," it is clear that intimacy is an equally important component.

Dr. David Schnarch in his book, "Constructing the Sexual Crucible," describes intimacy as "great familiarity and disclosure of important personal information between confidants." You may want to consider using this approach — establishing intimacy — when you discuss your interest in making love to your wife. Clifford and Joyce Penner's book, "The Gift of Sex," offers some very practical ideas on sexual function and intimacy.

DEAR FAMILY: Your letter to "Surprised and Divorced" was very well written and I certainly thought you gave good neutral, sound advice. I know that you can't say something like, "How stupid and blind could you have been, buster?" But I can say it! A woman says she wants a divorce and he didn't take it seriously.

She asked him to change diapers and "stuff," but he didn't want to, so he didn't. H'mm, I guess she liked being up to her elbows in baby poop. What if she didn't do anything she didn't want to do either, and the kid just ran around naked? She was very upset that he never helped her around the house — duh, I'm shocked at that one. He probably thought that cleaning the water-ring from his beer can on Sunday was helping.

The kicker was in the last paragraph: "Do you think that there's something wrong with her?" This is where you should have jumped in and said, "YES, you idiot! She's tired of being Supermom, superdad and superclean all to suit you. Didn't your mother teach you anything? Apparently not! Since your wife is unhappy with YOU, your mother thinks it's your wife's fault!" Isn't that what's really wrong here? If his mother had trained him to "share" in the household chores, his wife wouldn't have been so unhappy. Why it took her 13 years to jump that ship is beyond me!

Quite honestly, when I was single, I heard more men say, "I didn't know she was so unhappy" or "She complained but I didn't believe her," or something like, "I was stunned to learn that she wanted blah, blah, but I didn't think she really meant it." My all-time favorite was "She got mad because I didn't want to do such and such, and she had to do it herself."

Yes, I do know that there are genuine helpers out there, I've just never met one. What's with these guys? BEEN THERE, DONE THAT

DEAR BEEN: You make a number of good points about men and our "role definition" confusion. Re-defining role or job descriptions when your partner indicates displeasure with the present situation is very appropriate. There are also some words of wisdom for those of us who have sons. Thank you for sharing your experiences with us.

THE FOLLOWING THOUGHTS ON RELATIONSHIP WITH OUR CHILDREN ARE OFFERED BY THE CENTERS FOR CHILDREN AND FAMILIES:

- Love and affection play an important role in disciplining effectively.
- You cannot separate discipline from the business of living.
- The relationship between you and your child is an outgrowth of everything you do for and with your child.
- As your child grows in his or her love and trust for you, your child will want to please you and behave to suit you.

DEAR ABBY

Better to lose wedding costs than gain abusive spouse

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: After reading the letter from the girl who got stuck with the $155 bridesmaid dress, I had to write.

Van Buren

When I was young (too young), I got engaged to a man I hadn't known very long. My parents were paying for the wedding and the attendants were paying for their own gowns and tuxedo rentals.

During the month before the wedding, my fiance began to show his true colors. He drank heavily and became physically and verbally abusive. I knew I should have called the wedding off, but I was worried about all the money my parents were spending on the wedding, so I foolishly kept quiet and went through with it. Big mistake!

Two years later, when I finally got the courage to leave him, my friends and family told they would not have minded losing the money if it saved me from the hell I endured while being married to this abusive man.

Real friends forgive each other. — MINNEAPOLIS

DEAR MINNEAPOLIS: Thank you for a letter that may save many women from making the mistake you made. This also applies to men. If either the bride or groom has second thoughts about their feelings, it would be far better to call the wedding off. While it may cause the other party to be upset, in the long run, it would be far better for all concerned.

DEAR ABBY: I saw the letter from "Worried in California," whose 14-year-old daughter was driven home from baby sitting by a drunk parent.

I grew up in New Orleans and was told at an early age that if I ever needed a ride home for any reason — but especially alcohol — at any time of day or night, to call home and one of my parents would come and get me with no questions asked. Mom gave me a quarter, which I carried with me whenever I went out. As I was leaving, I would hear, "Have a good time. Do you have your quarter?"

Only once did I have to call home, not because of alcohol, but when a date turned abusive. He took my purse and refused to give it back, but I still had my quarter —in my shoe.

Abby, please continue to advise parents to tell their children never to get into a car with a driver who has been drinking. Our children are irreplaceable. — C.L. DOWN SOUTH

DEAR C.L.: Be assured I will continue to harp on that theme until my typewriter falls apart. Thanks for an excellent letter.

DEAR ABBY: "Frustrated With Papa Hoarder," whose father refuses to throw away anything, should get him to a mental health professional who is skilled in diagnosing and treating obsessive-compulsive disorder (OCD).

Her father's failure to handle his affairs is probably not due to incompetence, but to the overwhelming fear of throwing away something important; therefore, he keeps everything.

His senseless saving of stacks of printed matter and refusal to accept help in discarding them could be symptoms of obsessive-compulsive disorder, a problem that affects 5 million Americans and is quite treatable.

To obtain referral for treatment and information on OCD, "Frustrated With Papa Hoarder" can contact the OCD Foundation, P.O. Box 70, Milford, Conn. 06460-0070. — PAUL R. MUNFORD, PH.D., CLINICAL PSYCHOLOGIST, SACRAMENTO, CALIF.

Serve Grilled Trout on Father's Day

Associated Press

Chef Paul Sartory says the recipe for grilled trout below was inspired by childhood memories of returning from an early-morning fishing trip with his dad, cleaning the catch and immediately grilling it in the back yard. It's an easy recipe to prepare for Father's Day.

Sartory is executive chef at the Wine Spectator Greystone Restaurant, the Culinary Institute of America at Greystone, St. Helena, Calif.

The recipe is included in "From the Recipe Files of the CIA," the companion cookbook to the public television series "Cooking Secrets of the CIA."

GRILLED TROUT WITH THYME

6 trout, coho salmon, mackerel or other single-portion sized fish, scaled and gutted (the head, fins and tail may be removed or not, according to the type of fish and personal preference)
Juice of ½ lemon
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
1½ tablespoons olive oil
12 thyme sprigs
1½ pounds asparagus, trimmed and blanched (if asparagus are no thicker than a pencil, they need not be blanched)
6 lemon wedges for garnish

Preheat a grill to medium heat. Clean the cooking rack thoroughly and brush it with oil.

Rinse the fish thoroughly under cold running wash; pat dry with paper towels.

Drizzle the cavity of each fish with the lemon juice, a pinch of salt and pepper, and a little oil.

Place 2 thyme sprigs in each fish.

Grill the fish over medium heat for about 3 minutes on the first side, or until the skin of the fish has blistered and is marked.

Carefully turn the fish and grill for 3 minutes on the second side.

Grill the asparagus for a total of 1 to 2 minutes, turning occasionally to cook evenly.

To serve, place the fish and asparagus on a warmed serving platter or individual plates.

Sprinkle with salt and pepper and garnish with lemon wedges. Makes 6 servings.

Streamlined health care for seniors sought

Associated Press

BOSTON — The six New England states are working together to design a health care program for the elderly that would combine Medicare and Medicaid money for those eligible for both, and also hold down rising costs.

Waivers from the federal government would be needed for the program, which is called Senior Care and being coordinated by the administration of Massachusetts Gov. William F. Weld.

The six New England governors are being asked to sign a letter urging U.S. Health and Human Services Secretary Donna Shalala to issue the waivers on a regional basis, a Maine official said.

Francis Finnegan, director of medical services for Maine's Department of Human Services, said planning has been proceeding for a year and that implementation is still "a couple years" away even if waivers are granted.

Minnesota has received a federal waiver for a similar program, but has not started it yet.

The New England program would direct the elderly toward home health care and other community-based services, instead of nursing homes, and it would be easier for them to get such non-medical services as Meals on Wheels.

The emphasis would be on preventive care, and participation in the new program would remain voluntary.

Retirement doesn't stop busy lifestyle

By Lana Cunningham

"What's on the menu today?" A boy about the age of 7 walked into the small open-air room and quizzed the woman in charge. She read off the list and added, "Sounds really good, doesn't it." The boy nodded and walked out to a car, following his mother and sister.

"Last week the kids brought me some pictures they had drawn. I'm collecting refrigerator art," the woman said with a laugh as she continued her job. "I do a lot of grannying with the kids that come in."

JoAnn Williams keeps track not only of the menu but also the volunteer drivers for Community and Senior Service's Meals on Wheels program.

At 64, she is employed part-time through the Senior Texas Employment Program, which enables older people to be "usefully and gainfully employed," she said.

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

JoAnn Williams hasn't let retirement slow her down. Through the Senior Texas Employment Program, she has found a new lease on life working part-time with Community and Senior Services' Meals on Wheels program, where she helps get meals ready for the agency's clients.

MRS. WILLIAMS is no stranger to Midlanders. For many years, she operated the snack bar in the NationsBank building, formerly known as The First National Bank.

Coordinating people is something she had never considered. "STEP put me in a position I had not thought of; it's new and different for me. And I have thoroughly enjoyed it."

But working with people isn't new. During her years at the snack bar, she chatted with customers, treating them all as friends.

"I talk constantly," she said, chatting with the volunteers as they dropped off the empty hot/cold chests after making their deliveries.

Several remarked to Mrs. Williams that all their clients were at home and the food was delivered. Another noted that one client never answered the door. Mrs. Williams wrote a note to have a caseworker contact the client to see if there is a health problem.

Two more volunteers reminded Mrs. Williams they will be on vacation the next two weeks. "I'll have to dock your pay," the coordinator warned with a laugh. Another volunteer left behind sticks of chewing gum for everyone.

"I ENJOY doing this," Mrs. Williams said of her job. "Some of the nicest people are volunteers for this program. Some of the retirees here (delivering meals) I met years ago when I was working at the concession stand."

She saw the ups and downs of Midland's economy and recalled how filled with people the office buildings downtown had been during that time. "The concession stand was a fun place to be."

But she sold it after her husband, Paul, died and she went to work for a major department store for several years. After leaving that job, Mrs. Williams said she was sitting around her home when she heard about the STEP program and contacted the area supervisor. That was two and a half years ago.

"It didn't take long to get into this, mainly because I get along well with people. I'll still be out here when I'm 99 ... and the drivers will be about the same age," she joked. "This keeps me off the streets and out of trouble."

MEALS ON WHEELS, which provides one hot meal a day to elderly and/or handicapped persons who are incapable of cooking, is delivered by volunteers. Mrs. Williams doesn't see her STEP position as just a job, but has taken the program to heart.

"Someday I would like to have some more volunteer drivers. They also would get satisfaction from doing this," she said. "Some volunteers drive a route once a month; others volunteer to drive when needed. And some substitutes drive every day. We have a wonderful bunch of substitutes willing to help."

She likes to joke about her age. "I graduated from high school in 1950, so you figure it out. The last time I looked, I was 32. But suddenly I have a daughter who's 30 and I figure I have to make an adjustment in my age.

"I don't celebrate birthdays. I celebrate anniversaries, like the 34th anniversary of my 30th birthday."

Her offspring include a daughter, Carrie, who is a paralegal in Austin, and son Eric, who is a captain in the Army stationed in Killeen. And then there's the black cat, Ace, who tolerates her living with him. "He's a big cat, about 15 pounds. The children in my neighborhood like to come play with Ace," she said.

The pace slowed after most of the volunteer drivers had returned with their empty cases and reports. A meal was left with a neighbor when one client failed to answer the door; another was given to the next client on the list when the previous one never responded to the knock on the door. " She looks like she could use it," said the volunteer.

Mrs. Williams made notes of all these comments, reports that will be given to caseworkers.

"I HAVE worked for so many years that I wouldn't know what to do if I were not working. This job enables me to keep busy and to keep in contact with people. That's fun for me.

"I like life and it's fun. You ought to have fun as much as you possibly can and do your best to keep on keeping on."

Bagels becoming big for breakfast

Associated Press

BURLINGTON, Vt. — Once thought of as an ethnic breakfast favorite in communities with Eastern European populations, bagels have become an all-American breakfast and sandwich-time staple, nearly as widely familiar as mom's apple pie.

According to a spokesman for Bruegger's Bagels, a major national bagel bakery chain, Americans now consume more than 3½ pounds of bagels per person a year, a 44 percent increase over five years ago.

A recent survey showed the plain bagel was the national favorite, followed by onion, blueberry and raisin.

Bagels topped with cream cheese were the top choice among bagel-lovers, with ham and cheese in second place and tuna salad the fourth choice.

Coach indicted

LUBBOCK— A Texas Tech assistant basketball coach was indicted Wednesday on an aggravated assault count after a fight in a Lubbock restaurant and bar.

The Lubbock County grand jury returned indictment against Greg Pinkney, a Red Raiders coach since 1992 and one of the team's primary recruiters.

Witnesses said Pinkney broke the arm of a Texas Tech medical school student in a scuffle over cigarette smoke.

"The gentleman came after me," said Pinkney, who expects an acquittal. "I defended myself by hitting him one time."

Tech interim athletic director Gerald Myers said the fight "was an unfortunate incident and totally out of character" for Pinkney. Head coach James Dickey and Myers said the school plans no action against Pinkney.

The incident occurred around midnight May 21 at the Whaler's Bay restaurant and bar. Phillip Cochran, 24, told police that Pinkney attacked him after pouring a schooner of beer onto his face.

Pinkney, who also has coached at Wayland Baptist in and Howard College, allegedly was upset about Cochran's blowing cigarette smoke.

ODU gets NIT

NORFOLK — Old Dominion will host the final two rounds of the first women's basketball preseason NIT in November, the event's organizers announced Thursday.

The Lady Monarchs, one of 16 teams in the field, will host the semifinals, championship and third-place game on Nov. 19-20 at Norfolk Scope.

The field features reigning national champion Tennessee, regional finalist Louisiana Tech and round of 16s Kansas and Iowa.

"With the great tradition surrounding Old Dominion's women's basketball program, we are extremely pleased to have the university and the city of Norfolk as our top choice to host the tournament's final four games," said Brent Amick, the staff coordinator.

Diablos slip by Angels

What did Midland's Geoff Edsell do to deserve losing to the El Paso Diablos 8-5 Thursday?

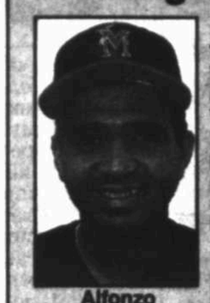

Strike out nine batters? Give up one earned run through eight innings? Twice come within one strike of becoming the only current Angel with a complete game win?

The baseball karma gods will have to answer those questions. But suffice to say the Angels lost another morale-buster at Christensen Stadium, leaving them 1-2 in the 6-game home stand with El Paso.

Edsell lost his bid for a complete game and

Lewis resumes quest for gold after four years

By Rob Gloster
AP Sports Writer

ATLANTA — Carl Lewis is calm as he approaches the event that four years ago seemed to signal the end of his glorious Olympic sprinting career.

Seventeen days shy of his 35th birthday, Lewis wants to prove he's still the fastest man in the world by winning the 100 meters at the Atlanta Olympics.

To do that he first must qualify in the U.S. trials that begin Friday. That's something he couldn't manage in 1992.

"This is my job, it's a job I love to do," he said. "I did this at 6 years old and now I'm doing it at 35. I love being in shape. I love running."

Lewis will be trying to make his fifth Olympic team, something no American male track and field performer has accomplished. He made the 1980 team that boycotted the Moscow Olympics, and won the 100 in 1984 and 1988.

Then came the 1992 Olympic trials in New Orleans. His strength sapped by a virus, he failed to place in the top three in the 100 or 200 and could not qualify for the Olympics in those events.

He made the U.S. squad as a long jumper, and won that event along with a relay title in

1996 U.S. OPEN

Soothing the savage beast

■ A softened 'monster' course at Oakland Hills yielded lower-than-expected scores in the first round of the U.S. Open.

By Ron Sirak
Associated Press

BLOOMFIELD HILLS, Mich. — Oakland Hills wasn't The Monster in the first round of the U.S. Open. But the grumpy old course showed enough of its gruff side to scare anyone.

While drenching rain on Wednesday softened the frightening greens and made par a suddenly assailable obstacle, Oakland Hills whispered a wicked warning: "This U.S. Open will be won on the last five holes."

Payne Stewart and Woody Austin shot 3-under-par 67s on Thursday to take the first-round lead by a stroke over Lee Janzen and John Morse. And they did it by surviving the torture test that ends this brutally difficult course.

Four par-4s over 400 yards — two over 465 — and a 200-yard par-3 close Oakland Hills. It ain't no picnic.

Ask Janzen. Or Frank Nobilo. Or Jumbo Ozaki. Or Paul Azinger. Or Jim Gallagher Jr. Or Michael Campbell.

And especially ask Tiger Woods.

One by one, they dropped down the stretch.

Only Stewart, who played the last five holes at 1-under-par, and Austin, who played them even, didn't give strokes back down the stretch.

Even Morse, who holed out from the bunker on No. 18 to get to 2-under, played the last five at 1-over.

"It's a difficult stretch that last five," Morse said.

It is a stretch where a bogey is a good score.

"You've just got to take your lumps when you hit it in this rough," Janzen said, "and just get it back to the fairway. I think the course probably will play harder every day."

Janzen played the last five holes at 2-over-par after getting to 4-under through 13. Azinger got to 3-under then played the Fearsome Fivesome at 2-over, as did Nobilo, Ozaki and Gallagher.

Campbell was 3-under and played the last five at 3-over.

Then there was Woods. The 20-year-old amateur who took his sophomore final exams at Stanford last week, was 3-under when he walked off the 13th green and 6-over when he left the 18th green.

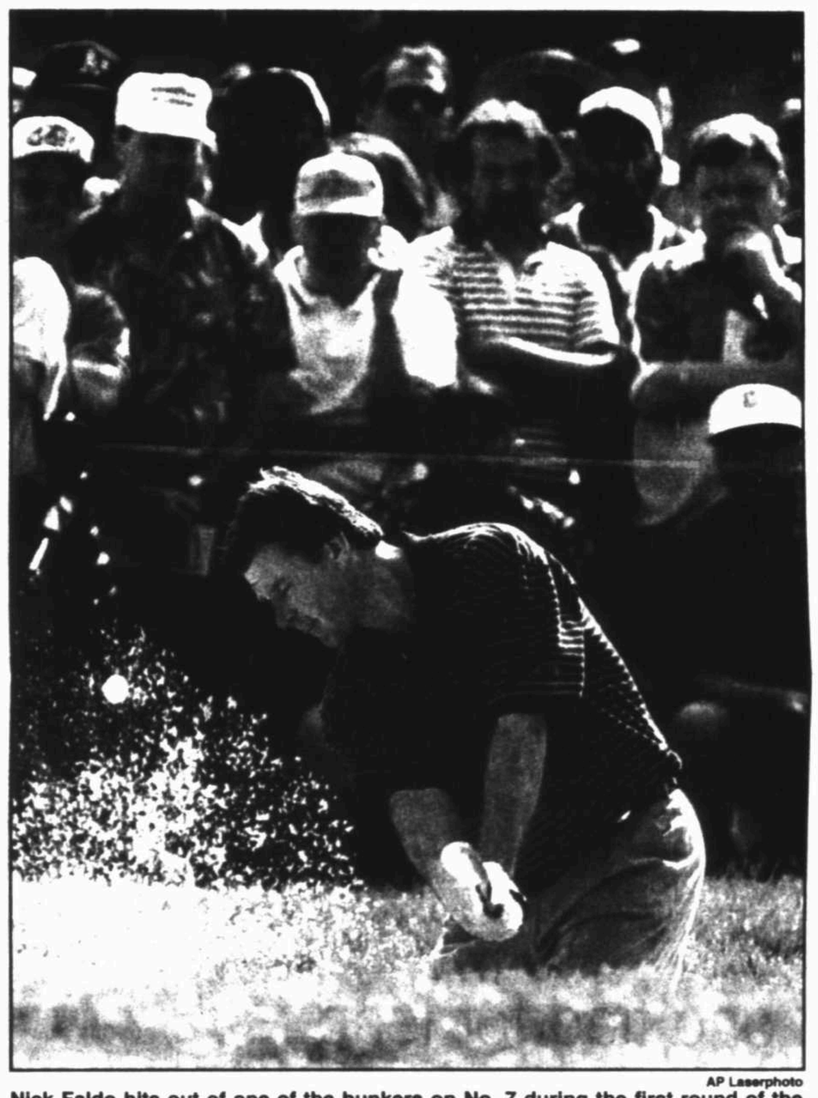

Starting on No. 14, Woods went went bogey, double bogey, quadruple bogey — hitting two in the water on No. 16.

"I was kind of surprised that the lead was actually 3 under out there," Woods said. "I thought it would be more like 4, 5 because it is so soft."

It would have been if it wasn't for those last five holes.

Oakland Hills was more like a squishy plaything than a monster, protected only by its thick rough and sharply sloping greens.

Open takes Tiger by his tail

By Doug Ferguson
AP Sports Writer

BLOOMFIELD HILLS, Mich. — The best amateur golfer in the world was standing in the 14th fairway. He was at 3-under-par and tied for the lead in the first round of the U.S. Open.

But when Tiger Woods tapped in for bogey at No. 18 on Thursday, he was at 6-over and tied for 126th place in the field of 156.

This was a golf autopsy report: Bogey. Double bogey. Quadruple bogey. Bogey. Bogey.

First, it was a couple of poor chips. Then a short putt that rode the lip. Next up were two aggressive approach shots that cost him even more strokes. Following that came a total breakdown in his swing.

Woods leaned over, gripped his right knee and froze as if he were trying to grasp how he could lose nine strokes over the final five holes, how he could go from a chance to lead the U.S. Open

Demonstration backfires in Blades trial

By Patrick Reyna
Associated Press

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. — A gun demonstration put on by the state in the manslaughter trial of Seattle Seahawks receiver Brian Blades may have actually helped the defense.

During the staged scuffle Wednesday between prosecutor Peter Magrino and gun expert Carl Haemmerle, Blades' unloaded semi-automatic pistol inadvertently fired.

That may bolster defense arguments that the shooting of Brian Blades' cousin, Charles Blades, was an accident that happened as the cousins struggled when Charles tried to intercede in an argument between Brian Blades and his brother, fellow NFL star Bennie Blades.

The prosecution rested its case Wednesday. The defense then rested without calling any witnesses, and the case went to the jury shortly after noon.

In closing arguments today, defense attorney Fred Haddad — who during the trial had each juror handle the gun and pull the trigger — noted the prosecution's demonstration in arguing that the shooting was a tragic accident, not manslaughter.

"You've seen the gun. You've pulled the trigger," Haddad told the six-member jury. "What do we know about the gun? The state's demonstration itself: When Mr. Magrino pulled on it, they had an accidental discharge!"

But Magrino, closing the state's case today, argued that it wasn't simply an accident.

"Charles Blades is dead because of the defendant's culpable negligence," he said.

"An accident would be someone taking the magazine out to clean the weapon and there's a bullet in the chamber," he said. "They don't know it and they start to clean the weapon and the gun fires and the bullet goes through a wall and kills somebody in the next room.

"That would be an accident. But this was not like that. This was culpable homicide."

Magrino added, "What happened to Charles Blades happened while he was trying to do an honorable thing: He was trying to be a peacemaker. Alcohol, anger, gun and a senseless death."

Blades, 30, faces up to 10 years in prison if convicted.

The shooting happened in the early morning hours of July 5, 1995, in Brian Blades' townhouse in the Fort Lauderdale suburb of Plantation.

The defense maintains a drunken Charles Blades died trying to play peacemaker between Brian and his younger brother Bennie Blades, a safety with the Detroit Lions.

Magrino had argued the shooting may not have been intentional but that Brian Blades was negligent.

The staged courtroom scuffle was not the only unusual event during Haemmerle's testimony.

Also Wednesday, Circuit Judge Susan Lebow granted a defense request to allow each of the jurors to pull the gun's

A funny thing happened on way to Bulls' title

By Chris Sheridan
Associated Press

SEATTLE — The historical comparisons took a leap 45 years into the past Thursday.

Suddenly, coming off a 21-point loss to the Seattle SuperSonics in Game 4 of the NBA Finals, the Chicago Bulls weren't being mentioned in the same breath as the 1972 Los Angeles Lakers, 1986 Boston Celtics or 1968 Philadelphia 76ers.

The comparison was being made to the 1951 Rochester Royals, the last team to take a 3-0 lead in the championship round only to lose a Game 4.

The Sonics' only hope was for a comeback that at least matched that of the Royals, who won Games 4, 5 and 6 in 1951 before dropping Game 7 against the New York Knicks.

"Do we think we can beat them? Yes, we think we can beat them," Seattle coach George Karl said. "Do we respect them? Yes, we respect them. Do we like where are priorities are? Yes."

"We are capable, with the home court, with the emotions and with the adjustments, to win on Friday night," Karl said. "We think we can win and we think we will win."

The Bulls tried to shake off the loss as an aberration, much like they did after their 11 previous defeats. Chicago lost two straight games only once all season, in early February when they played Phoenix and Denver during a six-game road trip to the West.

One of their other losses was to the Sonics in late November, and coach Phil Jackson said the only common denominator in that loss and Wednesday's was too many turnovers by the Bulls.

"We're still comfortable," Dennis Rodman said. "Sometimes we just get a little bored. There's no panic in this team. we haven't panicked all season long."

The Sonics controlled Game 3 almost right from the outset, turning the ball over only once in the first quarter and starting the second period with an 11-0 run.

Chicago pulled within 13 points in the third quarter, but Seattle responded with its most impressive stretch of the night and built its lead to 27 points early in the fourth quarter.

Janzen miffed by rules

Associated Press

BLOOMFIELD HILLS, Mich. — A lot of weekend hackers may find it hard to believe, but the rules of golf are actually intended to help players. That's why Lee Janzen was a little miffed during Thursday's first round of the U.S. Open.

Janzen hit his tee shot right down the middle on the 471-yard No. 14, a rather long par-4. The ground around his ball was damp, so Janzen asked a USGA official for permission to move it.

Permission denied.

A big splash of water was clearly visible as Janzen hit a 4-iron that came up 20 yards short of the green. He bogeyed that hole, as well as the par-3 17th, to finish at 68.

"The ruling is the water has to be visual," Janzen explained. "If I had been left-handed, I probably would have been given a drop. The rules of golf are supposed to be there to help you. You shouldn't get penalized for hitting it down the middle, in my opinion."

PHRUSTRATED PHIL: Phil Mickelson was one of the favorites this week. But he was wild off the tee, just like he was at the Masters.

Oakland Hills is far less forgiving. Mickelson was 5-over after the first five holes and 7-over after a double bogey at No. 14, his second of the day. He finished at 6-over 76.

"It's playing as easy as a U.S. Open golf course can play, which is not very easy," Mickelson said. "I got off to a poor start. I was 5-over after five holes. I played 1-over golf from there on in, which isn't very spectacular, either.

"I'm in a tough position now. I have to play exceptional golf now for me to have any kind of chance at it. As the saying goes, 'You can't win the tournament on Thursday.' I just hope I didn't lose it."

MINNESOTA 10: Some guys take a week off and go deer hunting. Not the Minnesota 10. These guys leave home each June to run the media tent at the U.S. Open.

It began with the 1991 Open at Hazeltine National Golf Club in Chaska, Minn. They volunteered for that one, because they were club members. The following year, the Open was at Pebble Beach.

Since that's a public course, there were no members. Someone remembered what a swell job the Minnesota 10 had done, and the call went out. It has been going out ever since.

"We pay our own way, but the clubs pick up the tab for our air fare, hotel and laundry," says Bob Seeger, an architect from Edina, Minn., in real life. "We've made a lot of friends over the years."

THAT'S ROUGH: The rough at any U.S. Open is always part of the story. Still, heavy rain has made the rough at Oakland Hills even more frightful than normal.

Peter Jacobsen left his approach shot 10 yards off the green at No. 18, but in the rough. Neither Jacobsen, his caddy, nor playing partners Tom Kite and David Frost, or their caddies, could find the ball.

Finally, with the help of fans pointing from the bleachers and from behind the ropes, they were able to locate it.

Jacobsen hacked it out, literally. The ball stopped 20 feet past the hole. But he made the downhill putt for par and finished at 71.

DON'T WAKE ME: Steve Scott, the first amateur to finish Thursday, had a respectable 71 on the famed South Course.

"It was like a dream to me," Scott said. "It was way more than a dream when I putted a 30-footer (for a birdie) on the first hole. I said to myself, 'Wow. I'm here, I'm playing, and I'm in the lead.'"

Scott, 18, who just completed his freshman year at the University of Florida, said he didn't watch the leader boards too much.

"I was just trying to stay in the hunt," said Scott, who finished with birdie on the par-4 No. 18.

It was about then that it finally dawned on Scott's girlfriend, Kristi Hommel, that this was, after all, the U.S. Open.

"I don't even have words to express," she said. "I knew he was going to play well. But, geez, Greg Norman and all ... "

PAPA TIGER: Earl Woods, who taught his son to play golf almost as soon as the youngster could walk, tried to be philosophical after Tiger dropped nine strokes to par in the final five holes.

"There's no sense in getting really upset, because it's all a learning process for him," Earl Woods said. "He's going to get a lot out of this, and I'm sure that these mistakes won't occur again. He'll be back tomorrow, and even though he's dug himself a hole, it won't surprise me if he makes the cut."

CHIP SHOTS: Paul Azinger says he has worked hard on his tempo. "I've made a million corrections the last two years," he said. "Maybe this one will last a little longer than some of the others." Azinger was 1-under after the first 18 holes at Oakland Hills. ... Ernie Els did a nice job of coming back from a poor start to shoot 38-34—72. "It took me four to get down from just off the green at No. 5," Els said. He also bogeyed Nos. 6 and 9. ... Hale Irwin, hoping to recapture the magic of his three previous U.S. Open wins, was unhappy with some pin placements. "The pin positions, especially on the par 3s, were difficult, shall we say, to be polite about it," Irwin said.

Mowry dizzies field in duMaurier

■ Mowry overcomes spells of dizzyness which have plagued him over the past four year years to lead the Senior duMaurier Classic by one stroke.

Associated Press

ANCASTER, Ontario — Larry Mowry, bedeviled by dizziness for four years, showed he's well on the road to recovery with a 4-under-par 66 on Thursday for a one-stroke lead in the opening round of the Canadian Senior Open.

Mowry had five victories in his first three years on the senior tour, but then vertigo almost ruined his career. He dropped out of some 35 tournaments between 1991 and 1995.

"I can't tell you how much this round means to me," Mowry said after a round that included six birdies and two bogeys.

Tom Wargo, Bob Leaver, Bob Dickson and Harry Toscano were a stoke back with 67s.

Gary Player at 69, Lee Trevino at 70 and Arnold Palmer at 1-over 71 were among the high-profile players in contention.

Mowry originally got his senior tour card by climbing up the money ladder the hard way: He was the first in tour history to qualify on a Monday and win the tournament that weekend. It was the start of a bright career that began to sputter in 1991.

"I was still playing OK, but I knew something was wrong," Mowry said. "I was in the beginning stages of vertigo. It was affecting my focus."

A tour of 17 doctors in all told him he had Meniere's disease and it couldn't be cured. A friend told him, however, that he'd heard of cases of vertigo caused by root canal.

A trip to the dentist ultimately revealed an infection not just in the root, but in the bone all the way up to his inner ear. The tooth was pulled last summer and he consumed 2,000 milligrams of antibiotics a day to fight the infection.

Cured, he still wasn't golfing very well, suffering his worst year since joining the circuit in 1986.

"I thought things would turn around for me very quickly and they didn't," Mowry said. "I thought I'd be able to pick up where I left off."

He had picked up some bad habits while attempting to golf through his vertigo problem. He didn't realize it until Thursday, just 15 minutes before his tee-off time after a chance meeting with Moe Norman, an old friend and former coach.

"He said: 'I didn't teach you to golf like that. You need to go more lateral,'" Mowry said. "He's a genius. I love the guy."

Mowry adjusted his knees, which stopped him from straightening up too soon.

Now, at 59, Mowry thinks his problems are behind him.

Standing 65th on this year's money list and 61st on the career list, Mowry is in jeopardy of losing his playing card. If he's in the top 31 in either 1996 or career earnings at the end of the season, he'll guarantee his playing priveleges for 1997.

WOODS: Nine shots lost in five holes to worrying about making the cut.

"I have a lot of work ahead of me," Woods said.

He likened the collapse to his final-round 80 at the NCAA Championships two weeks ago in Tennessee. But there, he still had a big enough lead that he won by four strokes.

"I was just trying to hit shot after shot, one swing at a time," Woods said. "Unfortunately, my swing kind of left me a little bit, some errant shots. Out here, you can't do that."

There were no signs that Woods' game, his power off the tee and pure, crisp iron shots, were faulty. His play was both steady and brilliant.

He one-hopped a wedge into the hole for birdie on the par-4 fifth hole after one of his few errant tee shots, then one hole later he wowed the gallery again by hitting the bottom of the flagstick, spitting the ball back 30 feet.

He moved into a tie for the lead at the 560-yard 12th hole, getting there in two with a driver and middle iron and two-putting from 35 feet.

"He played well out there," said defending champion Corey Pavin. "Unfortunately, he had a few bad holes at the end. Everybody has gone through something like that. It's no fun. But he knows how to take care of it."

Woods' troubles started with a ruling. His approach at No. 14 was just on the fringe and immediately behind a drainage cap. He was denied relief because his ball was not on the green, and decided against trying to putt over it.

It wouldn't have mattered. He Talented amateur Tiger Woods acknowledges the gallery on the fifth hole of the U.S. Open, but a collapse on the 14th hole soared his first-round score to 6-over par.

badly misread the line, and his bump shot turned right up the ridge 10 feet away. He missed it for a bogey.

On the 15th, he pulled his iron into wet, clumpy rough, again denied relief from casual water because he was not in the short grass. Woods hit one of most remarkable shots of the day, almost coming out of his shoes to get the ball to the short collar of rough around the green. Two feet more to the right and he's got a makeable birdie.

He hit his chip too firmly and three-putted from 12 feet, missing a 2 1/2-footer for bogey.

The 16th hole was his undoing. A well-placed drive down the left side left him a 6-iron to the green, where the pin was tucked right of a ridge. Pavin, hitting first, aimed at the ridge and let the slope take him to the hole.

Woods went at the flag and watched his ball bounce off a mound into the water. He dropped and went right at the flag again with a 60-degree wedge. It landed 10 feet short of the pin and sucked back into the water.

"I hit it right where I was aiming," he said. "Unfortunately, it wasn't enough stick."

On the par-3 17th, which has the most severe slope of any green, Woods again went at the flagstick and left himself above the hole, where his 25-foot putt slid 4 feet past. Another missed short putt. Another bogey.

His drive on the 18th was 20 yards left of the fairway and 20 yards in front of a tall, blue spruce. Woods played a fade to the back right of the green and a gutsy flop wedge 15 feet past the hole.

"It's happened to me a hundred times," said John Daly, who also played with Woods. "It's sad to see that happen."

A week ago, Woods was taking his final exams at Stanford. Oakland Hills proved a different kind of test.

OPEN: Stewart, Long tied for lead

(From 1C)

"I think the golf course is accessible right now because it is so soft," Stewart said. "You are throwing 4-irons and 5-irons at the greens and they will stick."

The 2 1/2 inches of rain Wednesday made it possible to leave the driver in the bag and play safely to the fairways with irons off the tee — avoiding the bogey-making thick rough.

Long approach shots, which would not normally hold the wildly contoured greens, settled softly and stuck on this day.

"You could hit a 4-iron to the greens and it would stop within 5 yards," said Masters champion Nick Faldo, five strokes back after a 72. Faldo took his 3-wood out of his bag and replaced it with a 0-iron, driving seven times with the 12-degree loft club first used by John Daly.

"It's the perfect club for this course," said Faldo, who can hit it 230 yards.

Eight players were two strokes back at 69, including Azinger, Nobilo and Ozaki. Eleven others were at even par, including Colin Montgomerie and Tom Watson

In 1985, the last time the Open was played at Oakland Hills, only seven players broke par in the first round and only seven others matched it. Andy North won that tournament with a 1-under 279.

It was at the 1951 Open, when Ben Hogan won with a 7-over 287, that the course earned the nickname "The Monster."

"I wouldn't call it that now," Stewart said after an erratic round in which he had seven birdies, two bogeys and a double bogey.

"There's some ugly out there and there's some pretty and it all totaled up to 67," Stewart said about a scrambling round in which he missed five fairways and made a remarkable par on No. 14.

"I got away with it, hitting some errant tee shots. You don't want to make a habit of that all week."

On No. 14 he drove into the left rough, hit a tree with his 4-iron second shot and bounded even farther left, this time his shot to the green was blocked by a TV tower.

After a free drop, he hit an 8-iron over the trees to the fringe — 50 feet from the hole — and putted it in to save par.

Austin's round was a lot more hum-drum.

"It was pretty much a bunch of boring pars to start with," Austin said. "I was playing perfect golf, hitting fairways and greens."

After 10 straight pars, Austin made three consecutive birdies, rolling in a 4-footer on No. 11 and 6-footers on 12 and 13.

Janzen, who had six birdies, four bogeys and three good par saves, got to 4 under par through 13 holes then bogeyed No. 14 when he was refused relief from what he thought was casual water and then bogeyed again at No. 17 when his 60-foot putt failed to make it up the ridge and stopped 30 feet short.

"I assumed I was going to three-putt," Janzen said about No. 17. "I wasn't going to try to be a hero and four-putt.

Jack Nicklaus, playing in his 40th consecutive U.S. Open, shot a 72. Greg Norman, playing in his first major championship since squandering a six-stroke lead at the Masters, started with a double bogey and finished with a 73, as did defending champion Corey Pavin.

It is scary to think how treacherous the greens would be if they ever dry out. Huge ridges divide most of them and a ball on the wrong side is an almost certain three-putt.

"You couldn't build greens like this today," Stewart said about the course constructed during World War I by famed golf architect Donald Ross. "They would ridicule you."

Mark O'Meara four-putted No. 9. He aimed his 45-foot first putt a good 25 feet above the hole then watched as it rolled 10 feet past the cup. He missed the 10-footer and the 3-footer coming back.

"The amount of break, that's the thing," said Faldo, shaking his head in disbelief.

Rangers sign GM to new multiyear deal

By Joe Lapointe
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Armed with the new multiyear contract, Neil Smith plans to bring in new players and new ideas to the Rangers. The club's president and general manager repeated on Thursday in stronger terms what he had said for the first time last week: The Rangers can't keep acquiring older, expensive players each season to build a Stanley Cup contender around Mark Messier, their 35-year-old captain.

Instead, the Rangers are planning to give younger players a chance to play through their mistakes and learn the game at the National Hockey League level. The average age of Ranger players last season was 28.7 years, Smith said, and he would like it to be "far below 30" next season.

"We can't go back with the same team," Smith said. "We intend to make some changes."

On the forward lines, they may use more of a defensive, trapping style than they have in the five seasons of the Messier captaincy. This could mean that they won't start next season as favorites to win the Atlantic Division, Smith said, as has been the case in recent years.

"We have never faced what I think we might face," Smith said. "It might be a struggle for a while."

Smith spoke at Madison Square Garden after a news conference announcing his new working agreement with the arena, which is owned by ITT and Cablevision. Smith, who was entering the last season of his old contract, received an extension for five seasons beyond the coming season.

Neither Smith nor the Garden president, Dave Checketts, would reveal Smith's new salary. Smith, however, led reporters to believe it is in the vicinity of the average of the $1 million per year he was seeking. Last season he earned about $500,000.

"I got put at the level I felt I belong," Smith said. "They were looking at what other people were making." Smith first sought to renegotiate or extend his contract in 1994, after the Rangers won the Stanley Cup. Nothing was done then because of ownership changes and other front-office turmoil.

As for the roster, Smith was asked if the changes in philosophy would be hard to sell to Messier. When Roger Neilson was coach, he was fired in part because Messier objected to Neilson's defensive approach. In most seasons of the Messier era, Smith has traded for veterans — sometimes late in the season — to contend for a championship immediately.

"Mark has said he wants to see this team win the Stanley Cup after he is gone," Smith said. "He's got to understand that the way we do that is develop your players." Messier's new teammates, Smith said, will be "not just his generation of players," as has been the case in most of Smith's trades.

"It's going to be a difficult time for all of us," Smith said. "We've got to do it together."

Messier will earn $6 million next season, the final one on his contract. His salary, along with those of his teammates, gave the Rangers a $33 million payroll last season, the highest in the 26-team NHL. Smith said his own compensation won't depend on cutting costs. In that the Rangers regular-season ticket revenue covers the player payroll, Smith was asked if the team was profitable last season.

"I really defer comment," Smith said. "We're not unhappy with our business. Our ownership is not unhappy with the business practices of the Rangers or the Garden."

But Smith expressed his own unhappiness about a trade made last March with the Los Angeles Kings. In exchange for Ray Ferraro, Mattias Norstrom, Nathan Lafayette and Ian Laperriere, the Rangers acquired Jari Kurri, Marty McSorley and Shane Churla. Norstrom is a young defenseman thought to have potential. Laperriere is a young forward with enthusiasm. Kurri is a veteran who can leave New York as an unrestricted free agent; McSorley is a veteran who played little because of injuries.

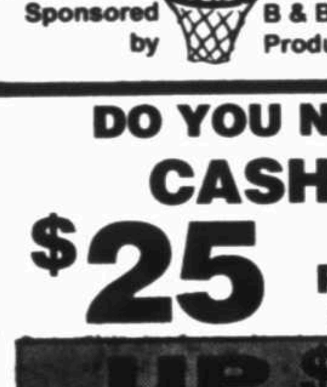

"I can't do that anymore," Smith said. "I wouldn't make that trade tomorrow for next year." In a deal before the season, Smith traded younger players with lower salaries, Sergei Zubov and Petr Nedved, for the higher-salaried veterans, Ulf Samuelsson and Luc Robitaille.

"When you do what I did last season, you are on a tight rope with everyone," Smith said. "When you fall into that alligator pit like I did this year, you get chewed up by a lot of people. It's very frustrating when you put all these players together and you don't win."

Alesi back at site of only Formula 1 win

By Mike Harris
Associated Press

Canadian Grand Prix

MONTREAL — Jean Alesi is back at the scene of his greatest success in Formula One, hoping to get himself and his Benetton-Renault team back to the winner's circle in Sunday's Canadian Grand Prix.

The Frenchman, who celebrated his 32nd birthday Tuesday, won at Montreal's Circuit Gilles Villeneuve last year in a Ferrari, apparently finally ready to fulfill some of the promise that he brought with him to the world-straddling glamour series in 1989 with Tyrrell.

Last June, Alesi switched to the Benetton team and has mostly fallen back into the crowd, leaving the headlines and most of the race victories to Williams-Renault drivers Damon Hill and rookie sensation Jacques Villeneuve — son of Gilles — and new Ferrari star Michael Schumacher.

"When I was with Ferrari, I was really with a top team," Alesi said. "But by joining Benetton, I know I have joined a great team."

Alesi was alluding to the two straight Formula One champions won for Benetton by Germany's Schumacher before he switched his allegiance to Ferrari this year.

"I have to work to continue this level of success for both the team and myself," Alesi said. "It is not easy. I have had many retirements, and some cars which were not really competitive. I know that I have great possibilities at Benetton."

So far, those possibilities are mostly unfulfilled, although he is coming off a second-place finish in the rain in the Spanish Grand Prix, in which only six cars finished.

"It was a very good race for us because, after Monte Carlo and suspension problems, the team was really down," Alesi said.

The Frenchman says he has been stronger this year, thanks to a new physical fitness regime.

"Training is a bit like racing," he said. "You have to get into the sort of condition that makes you feel best. But, of course, you can never say you are over-training."

Coming back to the place where he earned his only Formula One victory is an emotional experience for Alesi, who reflected on that victory as he prepared for Friday's opening of practice on the Isle du Notre Dame track.

"It was one of the best days of my life," he said of last year's race. "Those last few laps, I just tried to block out all the noise, the sounds of the engines, and just tried to concentrate on driving."

Many thought he had run out of gas the end of the race, but actually he stalled the engine when he decided to stop the car, stand on the seat and wave to the crowd.

"I stalled the engine because I wanted to go out of the car, but the car was still running. When I came back down in the seat, it stalled," he said with a smile.

"Yes, I am very emotional, but it's all for the team," Alesi added. "We are all together in this, and I love it."

UIL targets non-school participation

By Chip Brown
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN — The University Interscholastic League's policy committee on athletics has approved proposed rules aimed at discouraging students from participating on non-school teams during their school season.

The proposals, which must still be approved by the UIL's full Legislative Council and the State Board of Education, followed numerous complaints that the Legislature's revision of the state education code in 1995 stripped the UIL's ability to regulate a student's participation in non-school sanctioned sports.

The problem, the coaches said, is that students are now free to participate on a non-school team while also participating on a school team.

As a result, students are overexerting, spending too much time on sports rather than studying and getting lured onto teams that lack adequate training and supervision, the officials said.

On Wednesday, the UIL's Legislative Council Standing Committee on Athletics approved a proposal that would prohibit UIL schools from competing against non-school teams that have students with eligibility remaining under UIL rules.

"We are the only state in the country that allows students to play on non-school teams during their school team's season," said UIL Executive Director Bill Farney.

The committee also adopted a proposal that would crack down on students transferring from one school to another to play for someone who coached them on a non-school team.

Another proposal adopted by the committee will ask other interested groups or associations to join in a resolution to the Legislature seeking to reestablish the UIL's "concurrent rule," which barred students from competing on non-school teams during their school season.

The committee also adopted several other proposed rules, including:

— Having a coin flip to determine whether one game or a two-out-of-three game series will be played in the state baseball playoffs if coaches can't agree. Previously, teams played one game if the coaches couldn't agree on a two-out-of-three game series.

— Adding one 20-second timeout in each half for varsity basketball games. There are none now.

— Implementing a mercy rule in soccer games. If a team is leading by a total of eight goals by halftime, the game would be called.

— Allowing two golf medalists in district and regional competition, who are not on teams already advancing, to advance to the next level of the playoffs.

— Allowing three teams and 10 individuals to go to the regional cross country meet.

Rule proposals that were rejected, included:

— Allowing part-time employees to coach at the high school level.

— Adding wrestling for boys as a UIL-sanctioned sport.

— Adding pole vault in track for girls.

— Adding a 4x800-meter relay in track for boys.

Pacers, Nuggets pull 4-player deal

Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — Two consecutive seasons with a franchise-record 52 regular-season victories wasn't good enough for the Indiana Pacers.

The Pacers traded veteran guards Mark Jackson and Ricky Pierce to the Denver Nuggets on Thursday for Jalen Rose and Reggie Williams. The teams also exchanged first-round picks in the June 26 draft, moving the Pacers to the No. 10 position with Denver dropping to 23rd.

"I felt that change was needed," Pacers president Donnie Walsh said.

The Pacers finished 52-30 for the second straight year, but were eliminated in the opening round of the playoffs by Atlanta after reaching the Eastern Conference finals the previous two years.

Walsh said the decision was not a reflection "on how we played, or the way the season ended. It was just a sense of where do we go from here, and are we stretching it too much to ask the team to go ... with pretty much the same personnel."

The 6-foot-8, 210-pound Rose was Denver's first-round draft pick in 1994. He averaged 10 points on 48 percent shooting this season.

Williams is a nine-year NBA veteran with a 12.7 career scoring average. The 6-7, 195-pounder was used mainly as a reserve last season, averaging a career-low 4.6 points in 52 games. He has 7,432 points and 2,362 rebounds in his career.

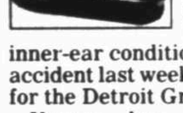

The Pacers made it clear that they weren't making the trade because they were unhappy with Jackson, who was acquired in an offseason trade with the Los Angeles Clippers two years ago. Starting at point guard for most of two seasons, he missed only one game and averaged 8.8 points and 7.7 assists.

"The reason we made the trade was, it changes the nature of our team somewhat," Walsh said. "We bring a player in who can play more than one position in Jalen Rose, and we bring in a shooter in Reggie Williams. And with the 10th player in the draft we get a chance to get a better player than we might have got at 23."

Walsh said the Nuggets wanted Jackson, a veteran of nine seasons who was the league's rookie of the year with the New York Knicks, to fill a need for a pure point guard. He averaged 10 points and 7.8 assists last season. Pierce, an 11-year veteran and a former winner of the NBA's sixth man award, mainly provided scoring off the bench with a 9.7-point average.

Vasser being monitored for ear condition after accident

Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — Indy-car points leader Jimmy Vasser is being monitored for an inner-ear condition created by an accident last week during practice for the Detroit Grand Prix.

Vasser has post-traumatic vestibulitis, meaning his inner ear has been shaken, Dr. Steve Olvey, IndyCar's director of medical affairs, said Thursday. The condition causes vertigo, and all Vasser can do is rest at home until he heals, Olvey said.

Vasser, who crashed during practice Saturday, said he won't miss any races.

"I look forward to racing at Portland next week," Vasser said. "I feel fine."

Vasser leads the PPG IndyCar World Series by 23 points over Michael Andretti, who won Sunday's race at Detroit. Vasser finished 12th.

After a weekend off, the Budweiser-G.I. Joe's 200 is June 23 at Portland, Ore.

FINALS: Seattle still alive, but barely

(From 1C)

"There's a happiness that comes with overcoming the frustration and problems, but I think we know our backs are still against the wall," Karl said. "We know we have to play like we played, with a little more craziness and aloofness and more fearlessness than concern."

Shawn Kemp finished with 27 points on 12-of-17 shooting, including four emphatic dunks that fired up the crowd. Gary Payton got his shooting touch back, making three 3-pointers among his 21 points, and handing off 11 assists.

Nate McMillan also gave the Sonics a lift, coming back unexpectedly from a painful nerve injury and finishing with eight points, three rebounds and three assists in 14 minutes.

The Sonics shot 63 percent and forced 18 turnovers, and they also benefited from a flagrant foul and technical foul on Michael Jordan.

One of the only complaints Seattle had was that Jordan didn't draw a second technical for repeatedly yelling at the officials after he got his first.

"Michael did enough to get thrown out of the game, and if he wasn't Michael Jordan he would have been thrown out," Karl said. "But I have no problem giving that hypocrisy respect because I think Michael has earned that respect.

"We all know that refereeing is not a pure science and will never be a pure science, but it is a part of the game and it's something that Michael has an ability to abuse."

To a man, the Sonics said they expected to see a much more focused Bulls team Friday night.

Some of the Chicago players admitted they were affected by the distractions of recording public service announcements asking the people of Chicago to stay calm, rehearsing the awarding of the championship trophy and talking about their place in history, although Jordan said: "By no means were we trying to jump ahead of the last step."

Aside from Rodman's eight-point, 14-rebound effort, no one had a good Game 3 for the Bulls. Jordan missed 13-of-19 shots, Scottie Pippen missed 13-of-17, Luc Longley had more fouls (five) than rebounds (three), Steve Kerr was 1-for-6 and Ron Harper played only 13 ineffective minutes.

"It wasn't a case of being too relaxed," Jordan said, "we were just out of sync, didn't get the calls and it came apart. The frustration is with the way we played, not with the way they played."

Jordan was clearly irritated by the loss and had a snappy comeback for nearly every question and counterpoint.

For instance, Payton said the Sonics were reawakened.

"They may have awakened us, too," Jordan said. "We don't live in the past."

Is it possible, Jordan was asked, if he could come back with a 45-point game?

"Why stop there?" he responded.

BLADES: Defense helped by miscue trigger in single- and double-action mode.

Earlier in the day, Wilbur Peterson, one of the four men with Blades the night of the shooting, testified Brian was "acting normal" when the group reached Bennie Blades' house in Plantation. But when Magrino showed Peterson a transcript of his statement made to police hours after the shooting, Peterson changed his testimony.

"(Brian Blades) was kind of tipsy," Peterson said.

Peterson testified he entered the upstairs' office of Brian Blades' condominium moments after the shot was fired.

"I saw Charles slumped over some boxes on the floor. Brian was screaming, 'Why? Why? Why?'"

Red Sox battle back to beat Rangers 8-7

AL Roundup

BOSTON — Alex Delgado singled home the winning run in the 10th inning with his second major league hit and the Red Sox came from behind four times before defeating the Texas Rangers 8-7 Thursday night.

The Red Sox, who lead the major leagues with 15 extra-inning games, tied the score 7-7 on John Valentin's seventh homer of the season with one out in the 10th.

Mo Vaughn then walked against Mike Henneman (0-4) before Bill Haselman drew an intentional walk with two outs. Delgado, who entered the game in the ninth as a pinch-runner, then ripped a single down the left field line off Dennis Cook.

Delgado, in his first major league season, was 1-for-6 before the hit.

Heathcliff Slocumb (2-5) got the win despite allowing the go-ahead run to score in the top of the 10th on a bases-loaded RBI grounder by Ivan Rodriguez.

Mike Stanton replaced Roger Clemens to start the ninth with the score 4-4 and allowed all four batters he faced to reach base.

Darryl Hamilton led off with a single, but was thrown out at home when he tried to score on a double by Rodriguez, who took third on the throw. Rusty Greer, who had been 0-for-3, then ripped a single to center that made the score 5-4 and extended his hitting streak to 10 games.

Brewers 16, Athletics 3

MILWAUKEE — John Jaha hit two homers, including a 458-foot shot that nearly cleared the County Stadium bleachers in Milwaukee's rout of Oakland.

Pat Listach drove in three runs and Matt Mieske went 3-for-3 with a triple and a homer as the Brewers roughed up Oakland starter Steve Wojciechowski for nine runs, six earned, on nine hits and a balk in 4 2-3 innings.

The barrage only got worse against Oakland's beleaguered bullpen.

Todd Van Poppel surrendered four runs on four hits in 2-3 of an inning, and Carlos Reyes gave up three runs on six hits in 2 2-3 innings.

Indians 6, Yankees 2

NEW YORK — Orel Hershiser and two relievers combined on a five-hitter and Eddie Murray drove in three runs to lead Cleveland to a victory over New York.

Hershiser (6-4) allowed one run on four hits, struck out five and walked one in 7 1-3 innings.

Murray hit his seventh homer of the season after Yankee starter Kenny Rogers (4-3) issued a full-count walk to Manny Ramirez leading off the seventh. He hit a bases-loaded single in the eighth off reliever Jeff Nelson to drive in another run.

Cleveland took a 1-0 lead in the sixth when Kenny Lofton singled, moved to third on the third of Julio Franco's three singles and scored when Carlos Baerga grounded into a double play.

Derek Jeter's RBI double drove in the Yankees' first run in the eighth and finished Hershiser, who was relieved by Paul Assenmacher. After Wade Boggs singled to left, Assenmacher was relieved by Paul Shuey with runners at first and third and one out. Bernie Williams then hit a sacrifice fly to score Jeter.

Shuey finished up to get his first save.

After Tino Martinez' leadoff double in the second, Hershiser walked Ruben Sierra and struck out Jim Leyritz before Mariano Duncan grounded into an inning-ending double play.

Hershiser retired 12 Yankees in a row after the walk to Sierra before Jeter reached on a fielding error by Indians shortstop Omar Vizquel with one out in the sixth. Jeter moved to second on an infield out, but Hershiser got Williams to ground out to end the inning.

After Sierra's double in the seventh, Hershiser struck out Leyritz to end the inning.

New York turned five double plays in the game, their high for the season.

Carlos Baerga's two-run single in the ninth scored the Indians' final runs.

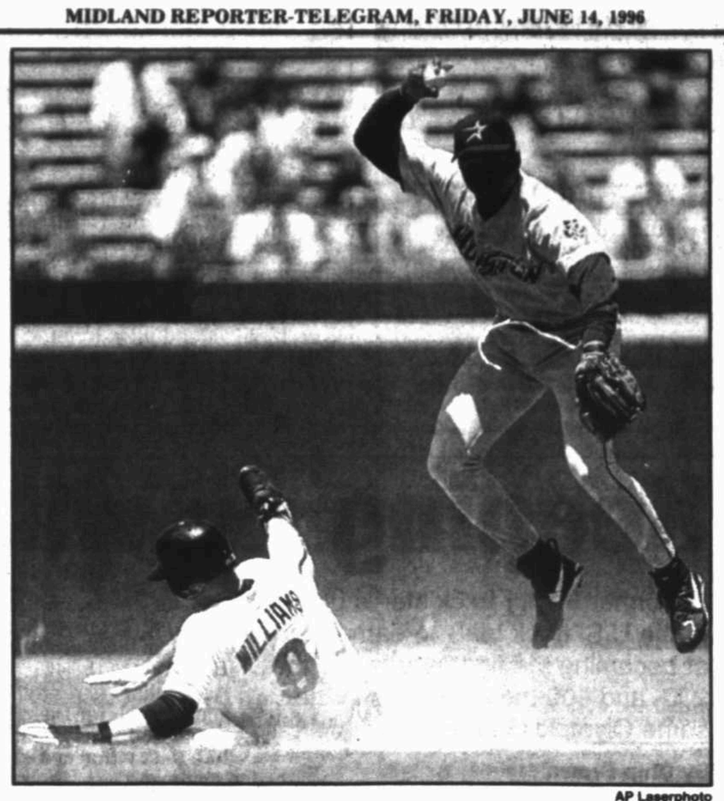

Royals 10, Orioles 2

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Craig Paquette had four RBIs and Doug Linton pitched two-hit ball, powering Kansas City past Baltimore as Cal Ripken tied the world record by playing in his 2,215th consecutive game.

The Baltimore shortstop, set to break Sachio Kinugasa's record Friday night, drew a big ovation when he singled in the second inning for the first hit off Linton (2-2).

Linton, making his fifth start, walked two, struck out six and surrendered the only Baltimore run on a Brady Anderson homer. He retired 13 of the last 14 batters he faced before being replaced by Mike Magnante with two out in the seventh.

Paquette keyed a four-run first inning with his second three-run home run in two days as the Royals snapped a four-game skid.

Bonds leads Giants to slugfest win over Astros

NL Roundup

SAN FRANCISCO — Barry Bonds had four hits, including his first home run in over a month, and the San Francisco Giants scored six runs in the first inning Thursday and beat the Houston Astros 12-8.

San Francisco, leading 9-0 after the second inning, had to withstand a six-run fifth by the Astros that included a pinch-hit grand slam by Sean Berry.

Bonds' homer, a two-run shot, came in the eighth off Dean Hartgraves and was his first since May 11 when he had his then-major league leading 17th homer at Pittsburgh. The 102 at-bat homerless string was the longest of his career eclipsing a 92 at-bat stretch from Aug. 26 to Sept. 25, 1989.

Darryl Kile (6-5) failed to get out of the second inning. He gave up nine hits in 1 2-3 innings, walked two, struck out three, threw two wild pitches and hit a batter.

Marlins 4, Pirates 3

PITTSBURGH — Devon White's two-run single in the ninth capped off Florida's late-inning comeback against Pittsburgh's bullpen, and the Marlins stopped the Pirates' five-game winning streak.

The Marlins had lost four of five overall and were only 1-7 in Pittsburgh since last season, while the Pirates had won nine of 10. Pittsburgh was coming off a 7-1 California road trip, its best in five years.

Kurt Abbott, who went 3-for-4 after being recalled from the minors earlier in the day, doubled and scored on White's single in the eighth, then singled during the Marlins' two-run ninth.

Dodgers 6, Braves 3

ATLANTA — Roger Cedeno hit his first career homer, a three-run shot in the seventh inning, and Los Angeles rallied to beat Atlanta.

Cedeno, a rookie outfielder, homered on the 181st at-bat of his career, sending an 0-1 pitch from starter Tom Glavine over the left-field wall.

The Dodgers were cheered on by ailing outfielder Brett Butler, who lives in suburban Atlanta. Butler, who is being treated for throat cancer, watched the game from a seat next to the Dodgers dugout.

It was the second poor outing in a row for Glavine, who gave up 12 hits and seven earned runs to Colorado last weekend, and the Braves' fifth defeat in seven games — their worst slide since losing six of eight in April.

Atlanta built a 3-0 lead against the Dodgers but Glavine (7-4) couldn't hold it. He allowed all six runs on nine hits in 6 1-3 innings.

Los Angeles starter Ismel Valdes (7-4) recovered from a shaky start to earn the win, giving up eight hits in six innings. Todd Worrell pitched the ninth for his league-leading 18th save.

Mets 2, Cardinals 1

ST. LOUIS — Robert Person, called up from the minors earlier in the day, allowed three hits over seven innings and New York got home runs from Todd Hundley and Jeff Kent on consecutive at-bats in a 2-1 victory over St. Louis.

The Mets have won five of seven, while the Cardinals have lost four of five and fell to 13-15 at home. St. Louis has scored three runs in the four losses.

Person, a 26-year-old rookie who grew up in St. Louis and still lives here, was recalled from Triple-A Norfolk, where he was 5-0 with a 3.35 ERA.

Rockies 4, Phillies 1

DENVER — John Vander Wal hit a two-run homer and drove in three runs and Bryan Rekar continued his mastery of Philadelphia as the Colorado Rockies beat the Phillies 4-1 Thursday night.

Rekar, returning to the Rockies on Monday after a six-week stint at Triple-A Colorado Springs, handcuffed the Phillies on four hits through eight innings. At one point, Rekar (2-2) retired 13 straight batters.

Cubs 6, Padres 3, 14 innings

CHICAGO — Terry Shumpert hit a three-run homer in the bottom of the 14th inning to lift Chicago to a victory over San Diego, the Padres' seventh straight loss.

Jose Hernandez opened the inning with a single off Willie Blair (0-4). Hernandez moved to second on a sacrifice by Doug Glanville. After Brian McRae was intentionally walked, Mike Hubbard grounded out to second. McRae reached second safely after being caught in a rundown when first baseman Archi Cianfrocco threw to third to try to get Hernandez off the bag.

Shumpert, who came on as a defensive replacement, then hit his first National League homer on an 0-2 pitch.

Doug Jones (2-2) pitched two scoreless inning for the win.

The Cubs tied it 3-3 in the eighth after two outs as Sammy Sosa doubled and scored on Dave Magadan's single.

Hamilton allowed three runs on four hits, struck out seven and walked four in eight innings.

He experienced early control problems, hitting the first batter he faced and walking the second.

ANGELS: Diablos win on three-run HR

(From 1C)

a win when he walked two batters with two outs in the ninth inning. He gave up the tying run on a base hit before reliever Mike Holtz served up a 3-run home run by the Diablos Brad Seitzer to break a 5-5 tie.

On a two-out, 3-2 count to El Paso's Danny Perez, Edsell just missed getting a call third strike on the outside corner to end the game.

"I have to be mad because the umpire earlier called that pitch a strike," said Angel catcher Jose Monzon. "That was better than the one he called a strike before."

Edsell, who declined comment, got his ninth strike out to begin the ninth inning with the Angels leading 5-4. He got a fly out and then ran the count to 3-2 on Lauro Felix before walking him. He then walked Perez and Seitzer greeted Holtz with a 3-2 home run that bounced off the top of the scoreboard.

Edsell came into the game second in the Texas League with 42 walks. He seemed to have his control problems in check, walking three batter through the first eight frames.

But the base-on-ball bugaboo got him in the end, along with two costly errors, one on an apparent miscommunication between him and first baseman Leon Glenn on a pickoff attempt.

"He did a good job on the mound," Monzon said. "It's just that they didn't get together on that pickoff play and that cost us the game. I don't know what happened on the play."

The throwing error on Edsell came in the seventh with Midland leading 5-2. The bases were loaded with no outs and Edsell threw to first but the ball was wide of Glenn. Two runs came around to score.

Edsell, maybe from anger, picked up his velocity. He got a strikeout, a groundout and a fly out to end the inning without giving up an earned run. But he couldn't hold the 1-run lead.

"I think late in the game he tried to overthrow and tried to pin the corner," Monzon said. "That gave him problems."

The Angel catcher, who threw out three base runners in the game, said he had called for a fastball from Holtz when Seitzer hit the home run, but Holtz shook it off.

"(It was) a hanging curveball," Monzon said. "Those guys know Holtz and they know he likes to throw the breaking ball on 3-2 count. He shook me off and you know he's gonna throw the fastball."

The Angels had taken the early lead thanks mostly to third baseman Edgar Alfonzo's offensive contribution. He had two doubles which drove in three runs and ended up going 3-for-5. Derrin Doty had the Angels' other RBI on a single in the third. Midland led 3-0 after three innings.

Wichita beat San Antonio 4-0, clinching the Western League first-half title and putting the Diablos out of the running with four games left before the second half.

ANGEL NOTES: Midland lost its best pitcher Wednesday when reliever Mike Freehill was call up to Triple-A Vancouver. Freehill was 5-0 with 11 saves and a 0.87 ERA. He will be replaced by Jerrod Washburn, rated in Baseball American magazine as the California Angels' third-best prospect.

Baltimore Orioles' shortstop Cal Ripken (right) shares a moment with Japanese League great Sachio Kinugasa before Ripken proceeded to tie Kinugasa's mark ofconsecutive games played.

Ripken ties world mark

By David Ginsburg
AP Sports Writer

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Cal Ripken and Sachio Kinugasa, who gained fame in different countries and in different leagues, now share a record that can be appreciated by baseball fans of any culture.

Ripken tied Kinugasa's record of playing in 2,215 consecutive games Thursday night, going 1-for-4 in the Baltimore Orioles' 10-2 loss to the Kansas City Royals. With Kinugasa watching from the stands at Kauffman Stadium, Ripken equaled the mark set by the Japanese third baseman from 1970 to 1987.

Ripken, who broke Lou Gehrig's major league record of 2,130 successive games last September, can surpass Kinugasa on Friday.

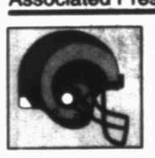

Ripken and Kinugasa held a joint news conference after Thursday's game, and the soon-to-be former record holder had nothing but praise for the Baltimore shortstop.

"I sensed in Cal the same attitude toward baseball — a sense of joy and devotion to the game — that I had," Kinugasa said through an interpreter.

There were only 20,108 fans in attendance Thursday. In the middle of the fifth inning, when the game became official, the crowd stood and cheered for 2 minutes, 15 seconds.

Phillips arrested for DWI

By Beth Harris
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — St. Louis Rams running back Lawrence Phillips, already on probation for assaulting a former girlfriend, was arrested for drunken driving early Thursday.

Phillips, this year's top draft pick of the Rams, allegedly had a blood-alcohol level twice the legal limit when a California Highway Patrol officer spotted him speeding with a flat tire on the westbound 60 freeway shortly after 2 a.m.

"He was upset," said Sgt. Ernie Garcia, CHP spokesman. "That's all we're going to say."

The front left tire of Phillips' 1995 gold Mercedes was smoking as he drove past a CHP patrol car near the 605 freeway interchange, according to CHP Officer Pablo Torres.

"He was driving at a high rate of speed and lane straddling," Garcia said.

The officer pursued Phillips for five miles before pulling him over at the San Gabriel Boulevard exit in Rosemead. Phillips lives in suburban North Hills. He lived at a group home in West Covina as a teen-ager.

Phillips failed two breath tests at the scene, registering blood alcohol readings of .15 percent and .16 percent, Torres said. California's legal limit is .08 percent.

Phillips was booked at the Los Angeles Country sheriff's Century station, and released about 7:30 a.m. Arraignment was scheduled for Monday.

The Rams had not been aware of the arrest.

"We won't have any comment," team spokesman Tony Wyllie said. "We won't comment until we have further details."

Phillips, 21, is on a year's probation after pleading no contest to charges of misdemeanor assault and trespassing for dragging his former girlfriend down three flights of stairs. He is attending group counseling sessions.

The assault resulted in a five-game suspension last season.

Danny Harris, a silver medalist in the 400 meter hurdles in 1984, withdrew from the 1996 Olympic Trials after testing positive for cocaine.

Harris withdraws from Trials after positive test

Associated Press

AMES, Iowa — Hurdler Danny Harris, his Olympic hopes dashed by cocaine use once before, is seeing it happen again.

Harris admitted Thursday he tested positive for cocaine after winning a race in Brazil last month and said he'll skip the Olympic trials, which begin Friday in Atlanta.

The 1984 Olympic silver medalist in the 400-meter hurdles, Harris missed the 1992 Games while serving a two-year suspension for cocaine use. He would have been among the favorites to earn one of the three spots on this year's team.

Harris, who had been undergoing drug abuse counseling, said in a statement faxed to news outlets that he "experienced a relapse" in late April. Although he was not banned from the trials, Harris said he would not compete while track's governing bodies, the International Amateur Athletic Federation and USA Track and Field, decide whether he should be banned.

Harris has until June 21 to provide a written response to the positive test.

"It is my desire to continue competing in the sport, but I don't intend to make future plans for competition until USATF and IAAF make a ruling about my future," he said.

In addition to ending his hopes of making the Olympic team, Harris' withdrawal from competition will cost him thousands of dollars in earnings on the European track circuit this summer.

Harris, 30, said that regardless of whether he is allowed to run again, he intends to confront his drug problem "in a forthright manner." He could not be reached for additional comment.

The IAAF suspended Harris for four years after he tested positive for cocaine following the 1992 U.S. indoor championships. The suspension later was reduced to two years.

His latest positive test came May 5 after he won a Grand Prix race in Rio Janeiro in 48.08 seconds — the fastest time in the world this year. He was told of the results Tuesday.

"Obviously, this is a social problem that faces many of us," said Iowa State coach Steve Lynn, who has been working with Harris. "It just illustrates how powerful this drug is. He's not the first that's had a hard time with it.

"How many doctors, lawyers, top executives have faced this type of thing? The pressure gets to them and they remember the relief and the release it gives them."

Lynn said Harris had been running well and had an excellent chance of qualifying for the Olympics. Harris had finished sixth at a Grand Prix meet in Atlanta last month, then bounced back to win the 400 hurdles at the Prefontaine Classic in Oregon.

The Iowa State coach said Harris has succeeded in spite of his battle with cocaine.

"This is not what got him to the level he was at," Lynn said. "You go back to Ben Johnson, he was who he was because of what he did. This has cost Danny before and it could end up costing him again. Obviously, it cost him a shot at the Olympics again."

Harris burst on the track scene as a freshman at Iowa State in 1984. He won the first of his three straight NCAA championships that year, then finished second to Edwin Moses at the 1984 Olympics in Los Angeles.

In 1987, Harris ended Moses' 107-race winning streak, then won the silver medal at the World Championships.

Feds arrest 765 in pre-Olympic sweep

Associated Press

ATLANTA — A jailhouse TV is as near as some fugitives will get to the Summer Olympics.

In a sweep coordinated by federal marshals, officers from 23 law enforcement agencies made 765 arrests over the past 10 weeks to reduce the crime threat to Olympic visitors, authorities said Thursday.

The sweep, dubbed "Operation Olympus," resulted in 428 arrests in the Atlanta area, 241 in Macon and Columbus, Ga., and 96 in Birmingham, Ala.

An Atlanta fugitive, Orlando Harris, who was wanted on assault and rape charges, was fatally shot by police after he pointed a gun at them, police said.

Because some of the suspects face multiple charges, the arrests cleared up 985 outstanding warrants, federal authorities said.

"Olympus targeted career criminals," said Robert McMichael, U.S. marshal in Atlanta. "Criminals with a history of crimes against persons were the main object."

With about 2 million visitors expected for the Olympics, security has been a long-standing concern. Until now, attention has centered mostly on preventing terrorism rather than street crime.

Such multi-agency sweeps are not unusual, but this one was larger than most.

"The message is people should feel good about coming to Atlanta," said U.S. Attorney Kent Alexander. "People who could do harm during the Olympics are now off the streets."

Keeping up with the Johnsons

■ Former Baylor track star is going to the U.S. track trials to earn a shot at becoming the first man to win the 200- and 400-meter dashes in the same Olympic Games.

By Chip Brown
Associated Press

WACO — In a sport measured by Olympic gold, Michael Johnson is ready to prove his mettle.

The world's top-ranked 200- and 400-meter sprinter, Johnson has conquered the U.S. and world championships and now has one score left to settle: becoming the first man ever to win the 200 and 400 in the Olympics.

Johnson, a Dallas native, begins that quest at the Olympic Trials Saturday night in Atlanta when qualifying in the 400 meters gets under way.

"There's no more preparation that I can do," Johnson said after finishing his final workout at Baylor University on Thursday. "It's just a matter of getting out there and getting started. I feel like I'm in the best shape of my career."

Over the past three years, no one has dominated two events like Johnson.

He's won 20 straight races in the 200 and is undefeated in 52 consecutive races in the 400.

Among those challenging Johnson at the Olympic Trials will be Carl Lewis and Mike Marsh in the 200 and world-record holder Butch Reynolds in the 400.

"Michael is ready," said Clyde Hart, Johnson's coach for the past 10 years. "He's motivated and is physically in good shape. I don't like to say that too early, but he's been working hard."

Johnson's rise to household name status in track has been gradual over the past decade. His ascent was delayed in 1992 by a bout with food poisoning that kept him from reaching the finals in the 200 at the Olympics in Barcelona.

He recovered enough to win a gold medal on the 1,600-meter relay team that also set a world record.

Johnson downplays what happened in 1992 as motivation for this year.

"If I had won the last Olympics, I would still be here trying to win three golds in this Olympics," Johnson said. "What I'm doing this year and my objective has absolutely nothing do with what happened in the last Olympics. There's nothing I can do about it. I can't go back and win that medal."

Those close to Johnson are more emotional about it.

"You have to live with four years of disappointment," Hart said. "We've been mad since Barcelona, not mad at anyone in particular. We can't go find the cook who made Michael's food. But we feel like an opportunity was taken away from us."

Friend and training partner Tony Miller, who also will run the 400 at the Olympic Trials, said Johnson knows what's at stake.

"Michael's been through a lot with the food poisoning in 1992, and he knows that the measuring stick in track is the Olympic gold," Miller said.

"He knows to get his name mentioned in the same breath as Edwin Moses and Carl Lewis he needs to bring home gold medals. I hope to God he gets it. It's not going to be easy."

Johnson had to persuade the International Amateur Athletic Federation and the International Olympic Committee to reschedule the 200 and 400 at the Olympics so he could compete in both without overlapping. He also hopes to compete in the 1,600-meter relay.

The 400 will be run first at the Olympics followed by the 200, which could have a loaded field with Lewis, Marsh, the American record holder and reigning Olympic 200-meter champion, and Frank Fredricks of Namibia.

"My objective is to win three gold medals at the Olympics, and if I do that I'm happy," Johnson said. "My objective is not to go out and have people put me somewhere in history where they think I belong."

With the Olympics in Atlanta, Johnson won't lack for exposure. He is featured on the cover of a special edition of Time magazine due out this month.

"It's a big opportunity of course," Johnson said. "It's the Olympics and it's here in the States. That's something that will probably only happen once in my career."

LEWIS: Heading into track Trials relaxed

(From 1C)

Barcelona to give him eight gold medals overall. But his reign as the sprint king was over.

The last few years have been difficult, as the next generation of sprinters tries to push Lewis aside. After showing flashes of his old speed this spring, though, he's again a top contender in the 100 and 200 — as well as the long jump.

"I've run well this spring and I know I can run well enough to make the team. I go into this meet pretty relaxed," he said. "The whole season is set up for this meet."

Among his top opponents will be world-record holder Leroy Burrell, who is coming off two seasons of injury; 1992 Olympic bronze medalist Dennis Mitchell; 1992 Olympic 200-meter champion Mike Marsh, and the brash Jon Drummond, who ranked above all his American peers last year.

Drummond, who once ran a race with a comb in his hair and wears just one sock, said he's not sure if he'll be able to compete in the 200 meters next weekend.

"It depends on how much celebrating I do after the 100 final, if I can walk to the starting line," he said with a smirk.

Some of those speedsters won't even make the U.S. team. Only the top three in each event at the trials get an Olympic spot.

When the male sprinters compete in the first two rounds of the 100 meters Friday evening, Jackie Joyner-Kersee already should be more than halfway toward a spot on her fourth and final Olympic team.

Joyner-Kersee, who has won the past two Olympic heptathlons, is again the favorite this summer. Despite nagging injuries the past two years, she is clearly the best American in the event and should have little trouble qualifying.

"My ultimate goal," said Joyner-Kersee, who also has a gold medal in the long jump, "is to make the 1996 Olympic team and to finish my career on American soil."

The first four events of the heptathlon are Friday, with the remaining three on Saturday.

Friday's highlights also will include the first two rounds of the women's 100, which should evolve into a duel between world champion Gwen Torrence and 1992 Olympic champion Gail Devers, if Devers can overcome a series of injuries that have restricted her in recent months.

Lawrence Johnson, who set the American record in the pole vault last month while competing for Tennessee and then easily won the NCAA title, is the favorite as qualifying begins Friday in the pole vault.

HOW TO READ THE MARKET IN REVIEW

Here are the 1,675 most active stocks on the New York Stock Exchange, 925 most active on the Nasdaq National Market and 405 most active on the American Stock Exchange. Stocks in bold are worth at least $5 and changed 5 percent or more in price. Underlining for 50 most active on NYSE and Nasdaq and 25 most active on Amex. Tables show name, price and net change, and one to two additional fields rotated through the week, as follows:

Name: Stocks appear alphabetically by the company's full name (not its abbreviation). Names consisting of initials appear at the beginning of each letter's list.

Last: Price stock was trading at when exchange closed for the day.

YTD: Percent change in price since December 31.

How to use: The year-to-date percent change compares the most recent price with the company's price as of Dec. 31. The number is a good way to compare and track the performance of different companies in the same industry or the same town.

Benchmarks are important in investing and the year-to-date percent change can be a useful field of information when used as a benchmark. If you were considering investing in the automotive industry, for example, you could watch to see which auto stock was enjoying the best performance so far this year by looking at this field.

These numbers can be helpful in following stocks but as with all financial data are only one of many factors to use in determining how to invest. Consult your financial advisor before making any investment decision.

STOCKQUOTE HOTLINE

Cityline 560-2400

WHAT IS STOCKQUOTE HOTLINE?

Stockquote Hotline gives you the latest stock prices direct from the wires of the Associated Press. Over 9,000 stocks are listed from NYSE, AmEx, and OTC sources; all available 24 hours a day. You can receive up to 10 quotes with one easy phone call.

HOW TO USE STOCKQUOTE HOTLINE:

1) Call the Stockquote Hotline at 560-2400; enter the category number which is 9988.

2) You will be asked to enter your stock ticker symbol. These are based on industry-standard symbols, which can be found in a Standard & Poor's Ticker guide, or by calling your local stock broker.

3) Once you've entered the numerical code for the ticker symbol, press the Star Key (*) and you will hear the current price and net change from the last Associated Press update; which is a few minutes behind market activity.

4) After the stock is quoted, you will be asked to enter another ticker symbol. You now have 2 options:
• You may request a quote for another stock by repeating steps 2 & 3.
• You may request additional information on the stock just quoted by once more pressing the Star Key (*).
Now the volume, high and low will be given, and then you will be asked to enter another ticker code.
• You may enter up to 10 ticker symbols per call.

5) To exit Stockquote Hotline, simply hang up the phone.

Prices fall

NEW YORK — Gasoline futures slid to three months lows Thursday, a decline that was accelerated as prices fell below psychological barriers, triggering additional selling.

Although the decline pulled crude prices lower, crude drew some support from tensions between U.N. weapons inspectors and Iraqis that some market players felt might delay the reopening of Iraqi oil sales on world markets.

Unleaded gasoline for delivery in July fell 0.79 cent to 58.89 cents per gallon on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

July crude oil fell a less-significant 8 cents per barrel to $20.01.

Iraq on Thursday refused United Nations weapons inspectors access to two more military facilities, a day after barring the inspectors from a third site.

Oil markets are assessing how the stalemate might affect the recent agreement allowing Iraq a partial exception to the world oil embargo against it.

Crude prices rallied about 15 cents per barrel on the news Thursday, but failed to hold those gains.

Among other energy futures, natural gas contracts for delivery in July settled at $2.494 per 1,000 cubic feet, up 6.0 cents.

Teleconference set

Van M. Pearcy and Raul Benavides, Midland representatives with Edward Jones, will host a satellite teleconference Wednesday for accounting and legal professionals.

The program, "Compensation Issues for Closely Held Businesses" will be eligible for four CPE hours for CPAs and other accountants; CLE credit for attorneys is pending in most states.

Cost is $60 including course materials and refreshments. Reservations can be made by calling 683-1516 or 570-7930.

Dollar falls

NEW YORK — The dollar dropped against most key currencies Thursday, weakening after the German central bank failed to cut interest rates and a U.S.-Japan trade fight escalated over photographic film.

The dollar traded at 108.75 yen, down from 109.05 yen on Wednesday. The dollar traded at 1.5267 German marks, down from 1.5325.

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with late Wednesday: 1.2540 Swiss francs, down from 1.2631; 5.1795 French francs, down from 5.1990; 1,544 Italian lire, down from 1,552; 1.3684 Canadian dollars, up from 1.3669.

The British pound was quoted at $1.5347, down from $1.5355.

Stocks retreat

NEW YORK — Stocks slipped Thursday, even as interest rates backed away from 13-month highs, as inflation worries continued to prevail and a negative outlook in the computer industry dragged down that sector.

The Dow Jones industrial average fell 10.34 to 5,657.95, rebounding from a midday loss of 28 points as interest rates began to ease.

Declining issues outnumbered advancers by a 13-to-9 margin on the New York Stock Exchange, where volume totaled 379.62 million shares.

The NYSE's composite index fell 0.60 to 358.08, the Standard & Poor's 500-stock index fell 1.12 to 667.92, and the American Stock Exchange's market value index fell 0.82 to 596.73.

The technology-laden Nasdaq composite index fell 8.78 to 1,226.70.

Retailers record higher sales in May

■ Some analysts fear upward trend won't be sustained.

By John D. McClain
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Retailers rang up an 0.8 percent increase in sales in May, the third advance in four months due in part to the return of customers to automobile showrooms. Some analysts doubt the pace can be sustained.

"Consumer debt is now at a record 20.8 percent of income, and borrowing is slowing," economists at Merrill Lynch & Co. told their clients in a faxed analysis. "Credit-card delinquencies and personal bankruptcies are rising."

They also said temporary forces that boosted spending in recent months — a boom in mortgage refinancing, capital gains, early tax refunds — are receding.

As a result, the Merrill Lynch economists said, "we expect spending to slow in the second half."

There are indications that job growth already may be moderating. The Labor Department said Thursday, for instance, that new claims for jobless benefits rose last week for a second week in a row.

But the Commerce Department reported Thursday that consumers remained active in May, when 348,000 new jobs were created, boosting retail sales to a seasonally adjusted $205.5 billion from $203.9 billion a month earlier.

Retail sales represent about one-third of the nation's economic activity.

Although the increase was slightly below the 1 percent gain that many analysts expected, it still was strong enough to spook financial markets fearful that a robust economy will lead the Federal Reserve to boost interest rates.

The Commerce report also showed April sales were down just 0.1 percent, despite a 3.8 percent drop in motor vehicles. The department originally estimated that April sales fell 0.3 percent.

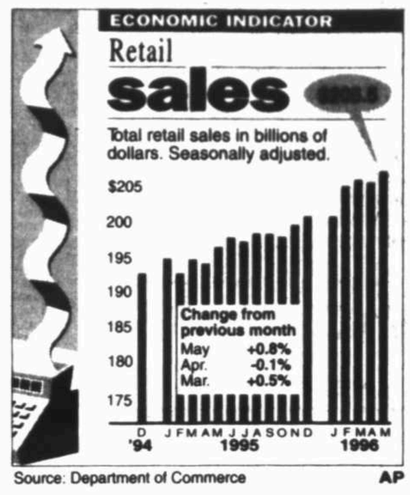

As a result, sales in May were 5.5 percent above those a year earlier.

Auto dealerships rebounded in May with a 2.1 percent increase. Leaving out motor vehicles, about one-fourth of the total, sales were up 0.3 percent.

Reflecting a strong housing market, sales of furniture and other home furnishing were up 1.6 percent. Purchases of building materials, hardware and garden supplies jumped 2.5 percent.

Overall, sales rose 1.9 percent on big-ticket durable items, goods expected to last more than three years, erasing a 1.8 percent loss a month earlier.

Nondurable goods sales were unchanged in May after rising 1 percent a month earlier.

Best-paid Texans live in Dallas

■ San Antonio residents could soon be nipping at Dallas residents' heels.

By N.Y. Times News Service

SAN ANTONIO — Dallas still is home to the best-paid Texans, but San Antonians are making progress, too.

New Commerce Department figures show Big D residents enjoyed income of about $24,480 each in 1994, up 19.5 percent from 1990.

By contrast, San Antonians earned about $18,466 each, up 18.5 percent over the same period.

"Dallas' rapid income growth in recent years can be attributed to the wide range of fast-growing industries that dot the local economic landscape," said Bernard L. Weinstein, director of the Center for Economic Development and Research at the University of North Texas, which analyzed the data.

While Dallas' affluence, an image perpetuated by oilman J.R. Ewing's exploits in television's "Dallas," tops other Texas cities, the situation is improving for workaday people throughout the Lone Star State, he said.

That reflects trends nationwide, where per-capita income rose 16.2 percent to $21,696, he said.

San Antonians' income appears to be improving for several reasons.

"San Antonio's own economy is so much more diversified than it was 10 years ago because large firms like Southwestern Bell have moved here and literally imported their executives and higher salaries here," said Maria Falchero Davis, a former Federal Reserve economist who will teach at San Antonio College this fall.

Davis doesn't expect the Alamo City to catch up to Dallas' salary levels and reputation any time soon.

"Dallas is the financial hub of Texas," she said.

"It also has worked out its transportation problems," she said, referring to San Antonio International Airport's lack of direct flights and Dallas' work on rail for commuters.

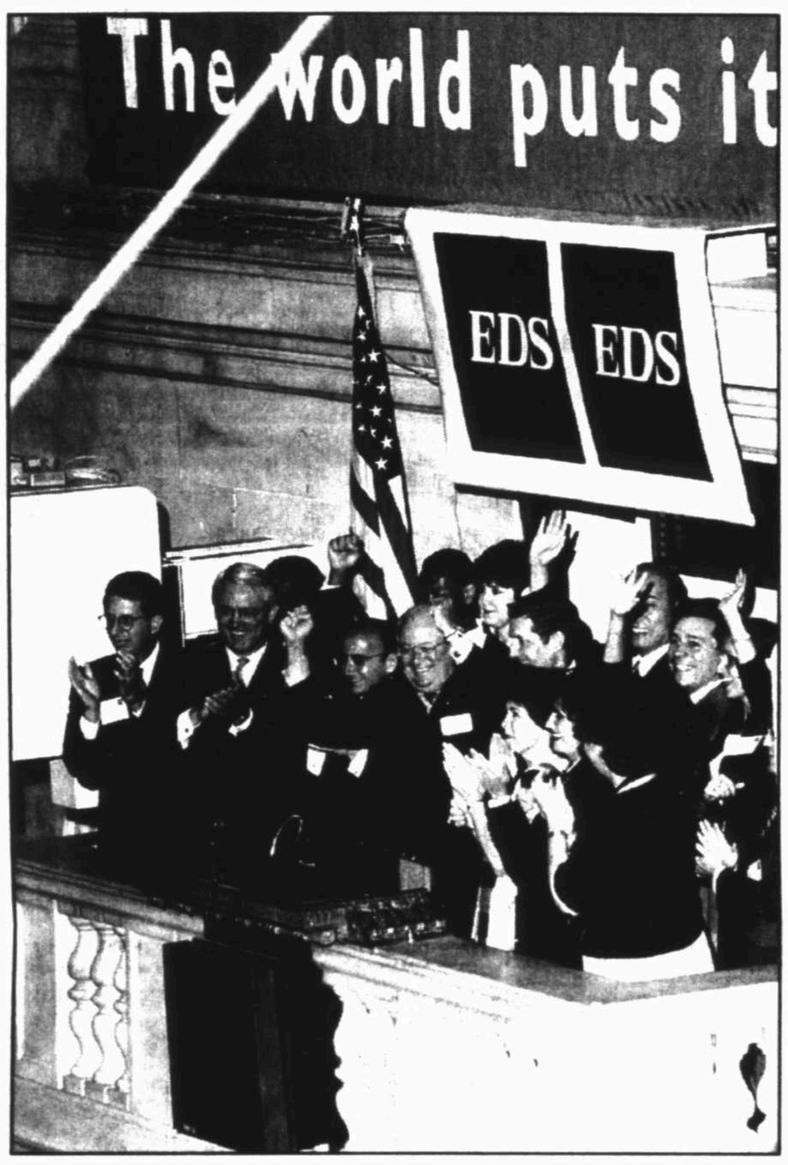

On the flip side, she says Dallas has wider gaps between its wealthy and poor than San Antonio.

Besides San Antonio, several other Texas cities showed gains.

Houston's per-capita income grew by 16.7 percent to $23,046 in 1994 vs. 1990.

Fort Worth's rose by 14.7 percent to $21,412 in the 4-year period.

At the same time, Austin's surged by 20.8 percent, reaching $20,611.

Fidelity examines closing Magellan Fund

■ Some analysts have been critical of keeping fund open to new investors.

By N.Y. Times News Service

Chicago — Fidelity Investments is "examining" the possibility of closing its flagship Magellan Fund to new investors, said J. Gary Burkhead, who oversees Fidelity's money management group.

"We have no current plans to close the fund, and it's something we always look at," said Burkhead, speaking at Morningstar Inc.'s annual mutual fund conference in Chicago.

Bob Stansky, Magellan's new manager, would be "intimately involved" in any decision to shut the fund, Burkhead said.

Some analysts are critical of Fidelity for keeping Magellan open to new investors. They argue the $55 billion fund has gotten too unwieldy for any fund manager to direct effectively.

Magellan is by far the largest U.S. mutual fund. It has twice the assets of its closest rival, the $27 billion Investment Company of America Fund, which is managed by Los Angeles-based Capital Research & Management Co.

Fidelity closed Magellan once in the past. The fund was shut from mid-1965 to July 1981. Fidelity said it closed the fund to concentrate its marketing efforts on two other stock funds.

Fidelity is concerned about Magellan's results and is committed to doing whatever is in the best interest of shareholders, Burkhead said.

Magellan's returns are lagging in 1996 because of former manager Jeffrey Vinik's decision to devote almost 20 percent of the fund's portfolio to bonds at a time when the U.S. Treasury market was falling. As of yesterday, the fund was up 2.42 percent on a total-return basis, compared with a 8.62 percent gain for the Standard & Poor's 500 Index, according to Morningstar.

Stansky, 40, took control of Magellan on June 3, replacing Vinik, 37, who's leaving Fidelity at the end of the month to start his own firm. Stansky previously managed the Fidelity Growth Company Fund to top-ranked returns.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Initial public offerings require long, close consideration

By BillDoyle

Q: A retailer that I'm fond of is going public for around $18 per share. That seems like a good price, and since I'm familiar with the company, I feel comfortable with their business. What do you think of such an investment?

A: When a company goes public — issues stocks for the first time through what's called an "initial public offering" — the price per share is an arbitrary amount that is derived from the number of shares being sold. Just because one company sells IPO stock for $20 per share does not make it a better buy than one issuing stock at $50 per share.

Doyle

In order to calibrate how cheaply, expensively or fairly a stock price is valued, the price per share should be compared to the company's earnings — profits — per share.

That comparison is known as the price-earnings ratio. For example, if a company issues stock at $20 per share and earned $1 per share in profits during the past year, its P-E is 20-to-1.

Just as you would value real estate by looking at comparable pieces of property, you should value a company's stock by comparing its P-E to the P-Es of similar companies. If the P-E seems high, the stock might be overpriced.

Studies of the returns on IPO investments have demonstrated that IPOs, on average, lag behind the average market rates of return.

Also, the large number of IPOs in recent months raises some concern that stocks are expensive. Companies rush to sell stock when they think they can get a premium price.

So be careful.

Q: I'd like to invest some money in my 2-year-old granddaughter's name to help her build a college fund. What should I invest it in?

A: Please allow me to preface my response with a word of warning. Before you invest any money for a child's education costs, you should understand the likely financial-aid ramifications.

Grandparents and parents alike, with the best of intentions, like to put money away toward a child's college costs. Doing so, especially if the money is invested in the child's name, can be a major financial mistake, because the federal financial aid system heavily penalizes college-bound students who have significant amounts of money in their names.

The financial aid system assumes that approximately 35 percent of the money in the child's name is available to pay for college.

You'd best help your grandchild by keeping the money in your name until the child is ready to enroll in college.

The next best option would be to put the money in the child's parents' names.

As for appropriate investments, a diversified portfolio of, say, three-quarters stocks worldwide and one-quarter bonds should do the trick. If the parents are in a high tax bracket and the money is invested in their names, choose municipal bonds instead of taxable ones.

Q: I was widowed in 1994 at the age of 55. I have been told by the local Social Security office that if I start withdrawing at the age of 62, I would get $957 per month and if I start withdrawing at age 65, I would get $1,155 per month.

I am planning to use investment income for everyday expenses and do not "need" the Social Security money any time soon. At what age should I elect to begin receiving the monthly Social Security checks?

A: As you can see from the figures that the Social Security Administration provided you, the sooner you start drawing your benefits, the less you receive each month.

However, you can receive benefits over a longer period of time if you start drawing them at a younger age.

When the Social Security system was established in the 1930s, life expectancies were lower than they are today. Thus, when the bureaucrats calculated reduced benefits for payments starting at age 62, it was based on the assumption that people would spend fewer years in retirement than what most people do these days.

While it depends on what you expect to do with the money and what rate of return you would earn if you invest it, most people should wait to draw on Social Security benefits until they reach age 65.

If your family history suggests you could live to age 80, and if you're in good health, consider waiting until age 65.

Bill Doyle had a number of columns prepared prior to his death. The Reporter-Telegram will continue publishing them for the next several weeks.

Those MTV guys sure know about movies, don't they?

N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — If you think of the MTV Movie Awards as a fun-house mirror held up to the Oscars, you understand how Alicia Silverstone won Best Female Performance for "Clueless" over Oscar winner Susan Sarandon in "Dead Man Walking."

And how the slickly gruesome thriller "Seven," starring superhunk Brad Pitt, won Best Movie over "Apollo 13" and "Braveheart."

The awards, taped at the Disney Studios in Burbank on Saturday for broadcast at 9 p.m. Thursday, reflect the unique sensibilities of MTV viewers, who voted for the winners via a special phone number.

Thought "Colors of the Wind" from "Pocahontas" was the best movie song in 1995? It wasn't even nominated. (Winner in the MTV movie song category: Brandy's "Sittin' Up in My Room" from "Waiting to Exhale.")

Thought "Tommy Boy" was a cheap commercial vehicle for "Saturday Night Live" stars Chris Farley and David Spade? Well, it was just commercial enough to win the comedy team a Best On-Screen Duo award over prestigious "Toy Story" stars Tom Hanks and Tim Allen.

You get the idea. The MTV Movie Awards are all fun and no pomp, all romp and no formality.

Take the opening minutes. First, we see co-hosts Ben Stiller and Janeane Garofalo in a filmed send-up of "Twister," in which they are outrunning both a tornado and a joke-telling Jay Leno, who is trying to beat them to the awards show.

Next we see the various presenters cast in a mock "Mission: Impossible" trailer that ends just as Stiller and Garofalo are lowered onto the stage via cables. How's that for an entrance, Whoopi Goldberg?

So, in this spirit, here are our picks for the best from the MTV Movie Awards, which, if you miss them Thursday, will be replayed ad nauseam all summer:

Best filmed movie parody: MTV continued its five-year tradition of recasting current movies with characters from old TV sitcoms. The best this year: Bob Newhart and crew (from the original show, not the Vermont innkeeper thing) as the cast in "Braveheart."

With blue and white paint on his face and a flowing wig, Newhart addressed his troops — Jerry the Dentist and psych patient Mr. Carlin — on horseback. His stammering delivery was interrupted occasionally by Howard the Neighbor. "Hi Bob. I just came over to borrow a cup of mutton."

Best improv: Garofolo left the usually talkative Mel Gibson utterly speechless when she peppered him with silly inquiries during a hilarious off-the-cuff backstage interview.

Among Garofolo's probing questions: "Do I look fat in this dress?" and "When you think of all the movies ever made, going back to 'Birth of a Nation,' which one do you think I would have been best in?"

The ad lib reduced Gibson to a silent grinner. The impression left was that he either couldn't think of a comeback or didn't have time.

Biggest spoilsport: Gibson, who was reportedly offended by Garofalo's riff and left the show before accepting the Best Action Sequence award for "Braveheart."

Dumbest category: Best Sandwich, won by a ham-and-cheese from the film "Smoke" over a Turkey Club from "Four Rooms" and a submarine hero from "GoldenEye."

The golden popcorn box was accepted on the sandwich's behalf by Faye Dunaway, who gave a faux-emotional speech about the sandwich's sacrifice to art.

Best acceptance speech: George Clooney, who won Best Breakthrough Performance for "From Dusk Till Dawn." Clooney, in taped comments, said he was glad to finally get some recognition after being snubbed by the Emmys for the episode of "The Facts of Life" in which he finds Tootie's dog.

Funniest bit of the night: Stiller's filmed spoof of Bruce Springsteen explaining his inspiration for the song "Dead Man Walking." The singer said he originally wrote the tune for "Weekend at Bernie's" and titled it "Dead Man Partying."

CABLE: Film is very mean-spirited film's intermittently satirical tone. The Cable Guy, whose various aliases recall the sitcoms of a baby boom childhood or Nick at Nite, is a pure creature of the television age, and the film suggests he is to be both pitied and tuned out. Beyond that, "The Cable Guy" quickly exhausts its deep thinking and is left with the spectacle of Carrey going out of control.

For instance: when the Cable Guy (despite an almost sexual fixation on his new friend) decides to help Steven win back a girlfriend (Leslie Mann), he tracks this woman to a restaurant where she is having dinner with a date. Lurking in the men's room, the Cable Guy then forces the date's head into a toilet. He plucks the date's eyebrows, dusts him with powder and forces him to suck on a hand dryer. When the date is forced down on the floor, the Cable Guy dances around him with glee.

"The Cable Guy" includes a number of similarly malicious outbursts, which are not made wittier by their goofiness or their knowing, pop-referential tone. When the Cable Guy, going berserk in California's Medieval Times theme restaurant, imagines himself in a "Star Trek" episode and attacks Steven with a mace, the salient fact is that he is stalking his friend while wielding a ball and chain. And when he plays with his food and begins imitating Hannibal Lecter, there's no fun in watching Carrey covering his face with chicken skin.

The empty mean-spiritedness of those episodes matches the film's gray look and glum overall tone. In a particularly desperate sequence, the Cable Guy mysteriously fills Steven's apartment with audiovisual equipment, then throws a karaoke party for a group of ghastly-looking extras. He also tries shaking up the status quo with a pornographic parlor game.

Carrey's wildly unpredictable comic range also lends itself to the occasional parody, but even those bits are on the depressing side.

GILL: Singer curious about album's appeal

(From 1D)

dreth's "Congo Square" on the Louisianan's second album "South of I-10."

"'Congo Square' is a record of his that I love," he said. "That's a record where they're talking about dancing with snakes and voodoo and all that stuff. And mine's kind of borrowing from that groove a little bit, but a little more — I don't know — the lyrics are a little more watered down."

Landreth works in Nashville often, but he never knew of Gill's admiration or met the singer until recently. He called Gill "a musician's musician."

"What I do is way different than mainstream country for sure, but ... it's good to be open," said Landreth, who lives in Breaux Bridge, La.

"What I really look forward to as much as anything is, I hope we can actually collaborate sometime. I'd love to work with him."

"I've listened to Vince, going way back to Pure Prairie League. So ... I have a point of reference in a group I really dug years ago."

Gill was in PPL for three albums, singing lead on that group's hit "Let Me Love You Tonight." He began playing bluegrass in his native Oklahoma, and signed with RCA Records 1983. He struggled commercially that decade, a second-fiddle to wife Janis Gill, a member of the then-very hot duo Sweethearts of the Rodeo. He even wrote a song about the situation, "Everybody's Sweetheart."

The situation reversed with Gill's first album for MCA in 1991. He's sold 6 million since then, capped last year with the greatest hit collection "Souvenirs."

"You're always expecting it to stop once you've kind of gotten up there for a little while," Gill said. "You're having a nice run, you're thinking, 'OK, wheeeennn is this going to be over?' "

Not soon, given the quality and appeal of "High Lonesome Sound."

"I'm not scared (about the reception to the new record)," he said. "I'm just curious."

Parsons) is on-board, his first sessions since recovering from a serious illness last year. Also contributing are Raul Malo and Paul Deakin of The Mavericks, Gary Tallent of the E Street Band and Pig Robbins, pianist on thousands of classic Nashville Sound records. No release date yet, but it will be on the new Imprint Records. For now, go to the used CD store and dig up 1994's "Dreams and Saturday Nights" on Asylum and check out lost classics such as "Hard Liquor, Cold Women, Warm Beer."

■ BIG GIFT: Terri Clark has a big gift to place. The folks at Mercury Records recently presented the "Better Things to Do" singer with a 6-by-7- foot window that used to hang at Tootsies Orchid Lounge in Nashville. Clark got her start singing for tips at the honky-tonk just an alley away from the former home of the Grand Ole Opry, The Ryman Auditorium. Clark plans to use the window as a wall in her house, but hasn't yet worked out the logistics.

■ HEY, THAT AIN'T COUNTRY: Don't expect much twang in the new CD from Nashville's latest hot group. The Nashville Symphony has inked a record deal with Magnatone Records, an affiliate of Speer Communications in Nashville. The first release includes Beethoven's Seventh Symphony, and selections by Strauss, Dvorak, Bernstein and conductor Kenneth Schermerhorn.

■ CELEBRITY ENDORSEMENTS: Bob Woodruff, a raw country star from New York, has some heavy backing for his second album. Renowned guitarist James Burton (Elvis Presley, Rick Nelson, Gram

DISNEY: Movie's broad appeal will be final yardstick of success complicated and less approachable.

From early sketches where he looked no worse than "some kid having a bad hair day," Quasimodo (voiced by Tom Hulce) evolved into a tormented, potentially frightening bell-ringer.

In early screenings at least, his appearance — and public humiliation — has sent some tearful 4-year-olds bolting for the lobby. The film's villain, Judge Claude Frollo, is an animated musical's equivalent of a child abuser. And while Quasimodo doesn't die, he also doesn't turn into a beautiful prince and get the girl.

"I think it has plenty in it for kids to enjoy," says Kirk Wise, who co-directed the film with Gary Trousdale. "But when we are looking at these stories, we are looking for things that we would enjoy. Hugo's novel is very dark. We wanted to stay true to the drama and emotion but add elements of fun and humor."

The film's most conspicuous pitch for children is delivered by talking, wisecracking gargoyles named Victor, Hugo and Laverne. In the tradition of animated leading women, the take-no-gruff Esmeralda (voiced by Demi Moore) is so curvaceous it looks like the only time she leaves aerobics class is for breast enlargement surgery.

Hulce, who toyed around with several Quasimodo voices, finally settled on a form of speech that makes the character sound like a bashful young man.

When he was first asked to audition for the leading vocal role, Hulce said Quasimodo's animation was "much less monstrous — I was surprised how tame he was," just a "bad-hair" teen. Along the way, says Wise, Quasimodo's drawn demeanor ranged from "very frightening" to so enchanting "he looked like one of the seven dwarves."

Just as the filmmakers walked a narrow path between tragedy and comedy, fright and compassion, Hulce struggled to bring Quasimodo to life. Wise and Trousdale decided their leading man essentially was a 19th century translation of the most unpopular kid in a 20th century elementary school.

"I think everybody at some time in their life has felt like Quasimodo," Wise says. "Children are keenly aware of what it's like to be left out. So kids immediately warm up to him."

Thanks to increasingly sophisticated computer animation programs, "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" features several dazzling scenes of lifelike crowds, realistic confetti and luminous sunlight streaming through stained-glass windows.

For all its artistic beauty, however, "Hunchback" will be judged by a very simple yardstick: Does the story work for a broad audience?

"It's a little more sophisticated subject matter," says Don Hahn, the film's producer, who has not yet decided if he will take his 5-year-old daughter. "It's a very personal decision" about how young is too young, he says.

"Ever since 'Snow White,' Disney has been accused of scaring children," says Wise. "But as adults, those scared children look back (at those scary movies) as great memories of childhood."

Made into a major U.S. live-action film four times previously, "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" is far more than a story of a hideously deformed man living in the shadows of a French cathedral.

"It's a very serious book — it deals with political and historical issues in a very serious way," says Victor Brombert, a professor of comparative literature at Princeton University and a renowned Hugo authority.

Despite its relatively challenging narrative, Disney's "Hunchback" abandons Hugo's tragic ending, in which the Gypsy Esmeralda is hung and Quasimodo joins her in the tomb.

Since "The Lion King" was an original work, there was no criticizing its "authenticity." "Pocahontas" took broad liberties with the historical forebear, but without significant backlash. "Hunchback," whose story is known by many, may not escape so lightly.

As for the Disney update, "I must confess I'm resisting this one a little bit," Brombert says. "It seems so far removed and sentimentalized."

A few literary authorities concur.

"Not too long ago, Hollywood was capable of telling stories with sad endings, such as 'Cyrano' and 'Dark Victory,' " says Mark Crispin Miller, chair of the writing program at Johns Hopkins University. "The corporate need for immediate success on a grand scale has made it impossible to tell stories that don't leave people laughing and applauding.

"It's really sad and troubling because it rules out a lot of stories — a lot of stories can't be told."

Co-director Trousdale notes that Disney is in the entertainment business — not literary preservation. People have complained about Disney's adaptations of other classics, he says.

"Working with a French national treasure has its pitfalls," Trousdale says. "You have to be careful you don't alter it too much, don't run too roughshod over it."

As for the new batch of naysayers, Trousdale says, "They can go have a drink with the Lewis Carroll purists, the Rudyard Kipling purists and the Hans Christian Andersen purists."

Conservative pastor persuades SBC to boycott Disney

By Reed Johnson
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — The Rev. Wiley Drake didn't always have a problem with the Happiest Place on Earth.

After all, Drake's First Southern Baptist Church in Buena Park is within seven miles of Disneyland. Drake and his family pay frequent visits to see Mickey, Goofy and friends.

And until recently, the conservative pastor considered Disney to be the reigning champ of pro-Christian family values.

But Wednesday, Drake had persuaded 13,000 of his fellow Southern Baptists to pass an amended resolution calling for a boycott of the Disney entertainment empire, including its fabled theme park.

In the view of Drake and many co-believers, the magnificent House that Walt built has degenerated into a den of inequity that openly promotes homosexuality and demeans Christian beliefs.

"When the amendment passed, I took off the Mickey Mouse tie I had on," said the 52-year-old pastor, speaking by phone from the New Orleans Superdome, where the Southern Baptist Convention, which represents 16 million members, is holding its annual meeting.

"The overwhelming passage of this shows that Southern Baptists are fed up with Disney," Drake said.

Drake isn't severing all his ties to Disney, at least not yet. He and several family members are holding onto their annual Disney passes, purchased prior to learning of Disney's policy initiated in January extending corporate benefits to domestic partners of gay and lesbian employees.

"I'm not gonna throw them away because they're already paid for," Drake said.

Drake said his disillusionment with Disney began some time ago when the company began drifting away from its traditional, politically safe corporate image.

"Disney has taken a big departure from family values in many areas," he said. "It's not just this gay thing."

Drake's outspoken advocacy of a boycott is characteristic of the energetic Arkansas native, says Steve Bryan, youth director of the 200-member Orange County congregation.

In the past, Drake has used his bully pulpit as director of the Southern California Chapter of the American Family Association to lead anti-abortion rallies and target other businesses that sold products that Drake deemed anti-Christian.

In March, Drake led a campaign by Buena Park residents against a proposed adult movie theater.

"He does have backbone," Bryan said. "He wants to keep us on a moral track."

Last year, Bryan said, the Republican Drake made an unsuccessful bid for a seat on the Buena Park City Council. He intends to try again this year, Bryan said.

Bryan further described the pastor as a "hands-on" minister who "doesn't mind getting his hands dirty." He's often found at the church making repairs and administering programs to feed the homeless and distribute clothing to needy families.

However, Drake has rubbed some parishioners the wrong way.

"We've had some members that have left because his leadership style does turn some people off," Bryan said.

Drake says he's hoping for an apology from Disney CEO Michael Eisner. Failing that, Drake vows that he and his four children and numerous grandchildren will find other ways to amuse themselves.

"There's a lot of other good things going on in L.A.," he says. "There's Snoopy at Knott's Berry Farm."

Somebody stop him

With latest movie, plug begs to be pulled on Carrey's lame antics

By Janet Maslin
N.Y. Times News Service

■ 'The Cable Guy' opens today at the North Park Cinema.

Hollywood has already rocked Alcatraz and blown away parts of Oklahoma; space aliens are poised to zap the White House in next month's "Independence Day."

But the true disaster movie of the summer may just be "The Cable Guy," a grim, sour Jim Carrey comedy that erases the boundary between anarchic humor and sociopathic malice.

Though this should have been an opportunity for Carrey to expand upon his runaway success and solidify long-term stardom, "The Cable Guy" instead offers the shocking sight of a volatile comic talent in free fall. Set free to indulge his inner infant, he abandons the gleeful mischief of his "Ace Ventura" days for a much nastier and less entertaining alter ego.

Carrey, who won legions of fans just by speaking from his buttocks, now tries the creepy gambit of talking with a lisp, sneering at strangers, behaving like a deranged stalker and wallowing in sad, stale references to ancient television shows. The film's only unifying attitudes are misanthropy and contempt.

Such antics are sure to scare off part of Carrey's devoted following. (Don't even dream about "The Cable Guy" as a film for children. They'd be better off reading supermarket tabloids and watching the evening news.)

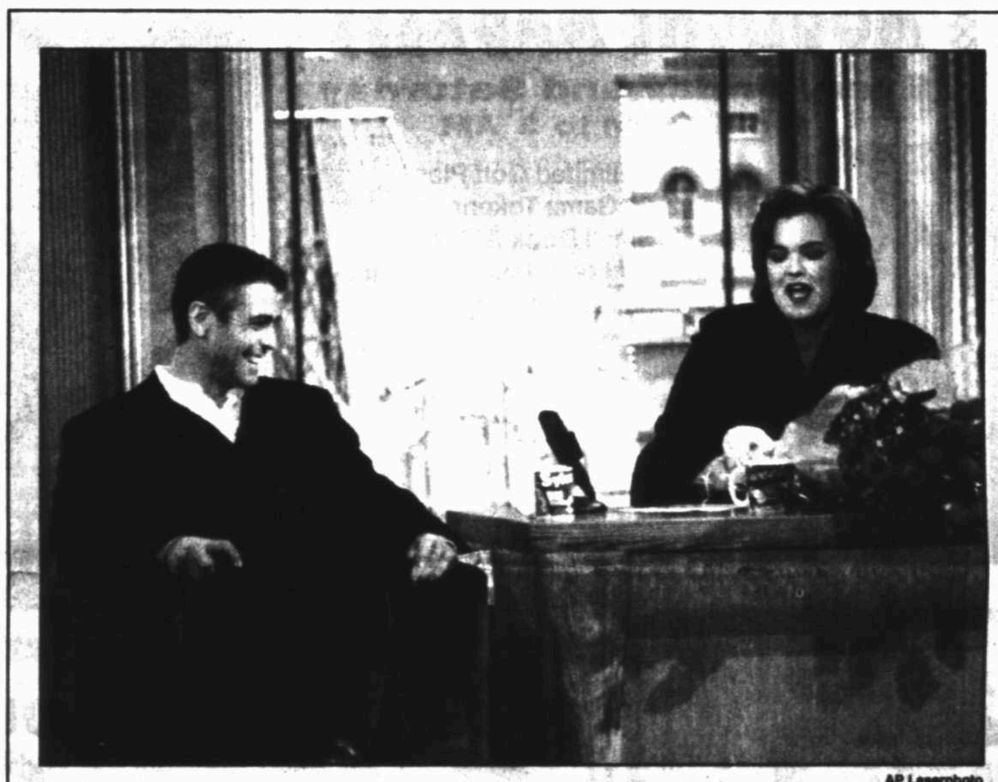

Yet the star's record-breaking fee for this film may not be unwarranted, provided that Hollywood sticks to its current credo: take the money and run. "The Cable Guy" may generate short-range big business on the strength of Carrey's past reputation, but there will be fallout from the fact that he has been paid $20 million for giving a scary, uneven performance that's often painful to watch. This is the way to kill a golden goose.

"I can be your best friend or your worst enemy," declares Carrey's insidious loner, a cable television repairman who develops a barnaclelike attachment to a customer named Steven Kovacs (Matthew Broderick, a solidly good straight man).

Actually, this weirdo can be both, which is the basis for the

Rosie O'Donnell's new talk show is a throwback to the old Merv Griffin, Mike Douglas programs.

Outlook for this talkfest: Rosie

■ Finally, an entertaining daytime talk show that features normal people largely void of dysfunction as well as a talented host.

By Kevin D. Thompson
N.Y. Times News Service

■ "The Rosie O'Donnell Show" airs Mon.-Fri. at 10 a.m. on KWES (Ch. 9)

Television's talk show grave yard is littered with Phil Donahue wannabes who got the ax shortly after uttering "and my next guest is . . . " George Hamilton. Danny Bonaduce. Suzanne Somers. Marilu Henner. And those are just some of the recent casualties.

Enter Rosie O'Donnell, whose new talk-variety show debuted Tuesday (June 11). Like those who went before her, the gregarious actress/comedian also vows she won't rest in peace on that ever-growing list.

"A lot of talk shows have fallen by the wayside lately because people are sick of the genre," she says in her thick-as-mustard, tough-talking "New Yawk" accent during a conference call with reporters. "As each show got added to the list, the pole was lowered and lowered until it became a humiliation festival. People are sick of that . . . but I'm not doing the same genre. There will be no dysfunctional people on my show except for me. The only show you could compare mine to is The Merv Griffin Show, and that hasn't been on for 20 years."

Of course, the 34-year-old Long Island native has the right attitude, but does she have the right stuff to separate her 60-minute daytime talker — called (what else?) "The Rosie O'Donnell Show" — from the likes of Jerry Springer, Jenny Jones and Maury Povich? Unlike what's normally on in the morning, O'Donnell's show, slated to air in 97 percent of the country, will have a late-night feel and offer a mixed bag of celebrity interviews, studio skits, man-on-the-street segments and musical performances. Cathedral-size hurdles await Disney's new hit, 'Hunchback'

By John Horn
AP Entertainment Writer

LOS ANGELES — Kids inevitably drag their parents to Disney's animated films. Will parents now haul their kids to "The Hunchback of Notre Dame?"

The newest installment in Hollywood's most popular movie franchise, "Hunchback" is by far the most "adult" animated musical since 1991's best picture-nominated "Beauty and the Beast." A sporadically menacing film touching on some of the troublesome themes raised in Victor Hugo's 1831 novel, "Hunchback" will test the formidable Disney marketing machine.

"The Hunchback of Notre Dame," which opens next Friday, is the most adult of Disney's run of animated classics.

■ Pastor convinces Southern Baptist Convention to boycott Disney/12C

The studio has at least one glittering twist on the dark classic working in its favor: In Disney's version, opening June 21, Quasimodo and Esmeralda don't die after all.

Entertainment analyst projections and early toy store sales indicate the movie and its related merchandise — including hand puppets, a lavish Disneyland stage show and "The Hunchback of Notre Dame Topsy Turvy" computer game — could surpass the highly profitable "Pocahontas" and its loot.

Others are skeptical. Reel Source, an online research service for movie exhibitors, says the film's "prospects seem limited," and the film may not appeal to very young children.

Held against the huggable Simba from "The Lion King" and the slinky title character of "Pocahontas," the stars of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" are both more

Gill aims to please critics and fans alike with "High Lonesome Sound."

'High Lonesome Sound'

Vince Gill tries to please both critics and fans with his latest album

By Jim Patterson
Associated Press Writer

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Picture a cartoon version of Vince Gill with steam coming out of his ears. All it takes is the wrong question.

It's only the first question, and already there's a few seconds of awkward silence on the other end of the telephone line. It seems that even the reputed nicest-guy-in-the-world can get miffed. All it takes is a question like this: Is there a chance the multi-platinum country star might flop with his new "High Lonesome Sound" CD?

Finally he speaks, sounding barely interested: "Ahhhhhh, I don't know."

Several more seconds of silence. Then, suddenly, he tumbles into a fit of tittering. Gill, 39, is far too mannered to play the jaded celebrity for very long, even for a joke.

And he's too smart to put out a whole album without the big ballads and sunny ditties such as "I Still Believe in You" and "Liza Jane" that made him a star. Barring a natural disaster that wipes out radio communications altogether, country music fans soon will be hearing new soaring Gill ballads such as "Pretty Little Adriana" and "World's Apart." And they'll frolic on the beach to tailor-made soundtracks like "A Little More Love" and "Given More Time."

"High Lonesome Sound" is Gill's stab at satisfying both his fans and critics who say he restrains his multiple talents too much in order to fit narrow radio formats. It breaks down roughly half-and-half between what's worked before and new territory.

"People were having a tendency to think there was a lot of sameness in my records," Gill said.

The smooth title cut "High Lonesome Sound," featuring the harmony singing of Alison Krauss, already has been a No. 12 hit.

"It's not like the whole album is wacked," Gill said. "It's just in spots."

Pressed just a little, the lanky Oklahoman admits that the new "wacked" songs are the ones that excite him as a musician. "Down to New Orleans" and "Tell Me Lover" are wicked grooves that show off his guitar playing.

"Those were the most fun because I love really deep-rooted funky music," Gill said. "I like Little Feat. I like Steely Dan. I like Sonny Landreth. I like New Orleans, I like all that stuff. I just wanted to record some of it and play some of it."

Gill admits that the slow-percolating "Tell Me Lover" is based on Lan-

ROSIE: Giving up naps, avoiding talk-show death two obstacles

(From 1D)

look for any freak-of-the-week guests or such outlandish topics as "People Who Fell In Love With Their Alien Abductors."

There will be a five-minute opening monologue (penned by O'Donnell and her staff of five writers) and a hip, Tonight Show-type band. But O'Donnell won't trade stilted one-liners with a goofy sidekick. The show, geared toward women between the ages of 23 and 63, will broadcast live from Donahue's old studio 8G in New York's Rockefeller Center.

"It'll be a 'Late Show with David Letterman' or 'The Tonight Show' in the afternoon," says the former VH1 veejay, who is also the program's executive producer.

And the stakes are high. Warner Bros. Domestic Television reportedly shelled out a cool $4 million to $7.5 million to snag the show in a bidding war with other studios. It believes that such a well-known star as O'Donnell won't take long to build a core audience.

Close pal Dennis Franz, who plays Detective Andy Sipowicz on ABC's "NYPD Blue," doesn't think the pressure will get to O'Donnell. "She certainly has other careers she can go to," says Franz, who met O'Donnell six years ago at a charity function and was a guest on Wednesday's show. "This is just something she wants to try. She'll be able to take it in stride so the pressures won't be so overwhelming and she can be herself, comfortable and very funny."

Taping in the Big Apple, O'Donnell believes, will give her program a distinct hard edge. "The Los Angeles audiences are very jaded," she explains. "There are about 9,000 sitcoms to pick from, and when you stop most people at Universal Studios and ask them if they want free tickets to see 'The Tonight Show,' they're like, 'No.' They've seen nine of them and don't really care. But New York audiences are always enthused about a new show coming in."

Merv Griffin and Mike Douglas, the Letterman and Leno of the '70s, were two of O'Donnell's childhood idols and part inspiration for what she's doing now. (She also fantasized about growing up to be Barbra Streisand, Lucille Ball and Carol Burnett.) "I used to run home from school, grab a bowl of Chee-tos and watch Merv and Mike," she recalls. "They would be interviewing Captain & Tennille and Zsa Zsa Gabor, and I would be just thrilled out of my mind."

Now O'Donnell hopes to evoke that same passion. The question is: Why would a successful scene-stealing actress, who appeared in "A League of Their Own" (her feature film debut), "Sleepless in Seattle," "The Flintstones," "Now and Then" and "Grease" (the Broadway play), want to put a thriving movie and theatrical career on hold? (O'Donnell says she won't do another film for five years — unless it's a small, two-day part.) Simple. Her adopted, 1-year-old son, Parker.

"I didn't want to have a job that made me not available to him on a full-time basis," says O'Donnell, who will be seen next month as a nanny and mentor in the movie version of Louise Fitzhugh's children's novel, "Harriet the Spy." "I wanted him to wake up in his own bed every morning with his toys around and his friends from play group."

Hosting a daytime talk show allowed O'Donnell to do just that. She didn't want to do a late-night show since Letterman, Leno and Ted Koppel have a stranglehold on the 11:30 p.m. time slot. And the sitcom scripts she read weren't appealing. "Every time I'm offered a sitcom, it's 'Roseanne' light," says the single mom. "The script says I'm married to a taxi driver in New York and I have two fresh-mouthed kids that I love. I'm like, 'Wait, I think that show's already on the air.' "

O'Donnell says the idea for a daytime show hit her after filling in for Kathie Lee Gifford on "Live With Regis & Kathie Lee." "I realized what a great gig that is — especially when you incorporate motherhood into it," she says. "You leave your house around 8:30 in the morning to do the show and you're home by 10:15."

Now O'Donnell's program will either follow or, as in this market, go head-to-head with "Live With Regis & Kathie Lee."

Nevertheless, Regis Philbin believes O'Donnell has a potential winner on her hands. "She's a terrific talent and a lot of fun," says the energetic host. "We've had a number of people who have pinch hit for Kathie Lee and gone on to do their own shows. Leeza Gibbons, Suzanne Somers — there have been a ton of them. Rosie's show will be a hit. She's doing a variety show and I think that's what television needs."

Gifford agrees: "Being a talk show host is one of the best jobs for a working mother. After 11 years I'm aware of how difficult it is to do a show and keep it fresh every day. I've been blessed to have a wonderful co-host named Regis. I'm sure there are going to be days in Rosie's future when she'll wish Regis was sitting next to her."

Will O'Donnell, like Gifford, spend a good part of the show telling viewers whether or not her son is potty trained? Or if he lost his first tooth? Or what new word he just learned? "Nah," she laughs. "We're going to hire a kid actor and we'll call him Little Ricky and bring him out once a month to see how he's doing. We'll tell stories about Little Ricky that are purely fictional. But you will never see (Parker) on TV or hear about his day."

So far, O'Donnell has lined up an impressive list of first-week guests. They include ER hunk and the new Caped Crusader, George Clooney, "All My Children's" Susan Lucci, "Good Morning America's" Joan Lunden, Tony award winner Nathan Lane and "The Nanny's" Fran Drescher.

"This will be a celebrity-friendly show," O'Donnell promises. "There's not going to be any softball interviews, but I definitely won't do something that will make them uncomfortable. They'll talk and I'll listen. Sometimes when I watch a show, somebody will say a great lead-in to something, and instead of following up, because it's not on the cue card, the host will jump into, 'So, your movie is coming out next week, right?' "

One star's name is glaringly absent from O'Donnell celebrity guest list: Madonna. "She'll probably come on when she's promoting 'Evita'," says the Material Girl's best buddy. "A lot of people have been asking if I'm going to call this friend or that friend. I remember when Joan Rivers did her first show. She had Cher and Elton John on and I thought, 'Where do you go from there?' The second show she had the third lead from 'Bosom Buddies'."

So, what will be the toughest part about all of this? "Getting up early five days a week," O'Donnell says quickly. "I've had to get up with the baby at six for the last year, but I did get that nine-to-eleven nap. The hardest part will be being awake to perform every morning."

And, of course, avoiding the dreaded talk-show grave yard.

Republicans divided as election nears

WASHINGTON (AP) — Majority Republicans are finding it increasingly difficult to muscle their agenda through Congress as conservatives and restive moderates take turns defying party leaders and weaken GOP efforts to override President Clinton's vetoes.

With elections on the horizon, moderates sobered by last year's GOP budget reversals are growing bolder about abandoning their more ideological colleagues. In recent weeks, moderates forced House leaders to consider the minimum wage increase; helped thwart former Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, their party's presidential candidate, from adding controversial medical savings accounts to a popular health-care bill; and have pressed to protect environmental and education programs and limit the size of tax cuts.

Though many conservatives are being less confrontational this year, they are still waging occasional battles to protect their priorities. They favor a long list of tax cuts, not limiting them to a $500 per child credit as moderates prefer. And just Wednesday, 19 of them — including 16 freshmen — voted against a $1.6 trillion GOP budget-balancing plan because it allowed $4 billion in extra spending that Senate Republicans wanted and didn't cut deficits quickly enough. The measure passed, but by a slim 216-211.

"It's a tougher year," House Majority Leader Richard Armey, R-Texas, said Thursday, adding, "Election years are always tougher" because lawmakers are focusing on re-election bids.

Many of the bills the House considered last year were from the budget-dominated "Contract With America," the GOP's campaign manifesto, and never progressed beyond the House. This year, Armey said, Republicans are trying to push legislation through the Senate and win Clinton's signature, a more delicate balancing act.

Not only that, but this year's agenda has pushed Republicans into areas where their cohesiveness is not nearly as strong as it was on the broadly popular contract items.

"Last year we were focused almost entirely on the balanced budget, it was the Holy Grail," said freshman Rep. Joe Scarborough, R-Fla. "But we've gotten beyond the balanced budget, beyond the contract, and now we're moving out in a million directions."

None of this is to say that Congress has frozen into inaction. This year alone, major laws have been enacted overhauling telecommunications controls and farm programs, granting the president the line-item veto, and holding funds for annual domestic programs about $20 billion below last year's levels.

But unruly Republicans have made it hard for leaders to move other bills through Congress. And since they start with a 53-47 margin in the Senate and a 236-198 edge with one independent in the House, their fractiousness makes it all the harder for them to pursue veto overrides, for which two-thirds majorities are required. The one notable exception was its override in December of legislation making it harder for shareholders to sue corporations.

Some Republicans attribute their difficulties to the problems any legislative majority has in remaining united.

"It's the natural course of events," says Sen. Connie Mack, R-Fla.

ATF probe fires at non-black churches

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal authorities are investigating nearly two dozen fires at predominantly white churches as they deal with the burnings of more than 30 mostly black churches in the South, records show.

In a fact sheet distributed this week to its agents nationwide, the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco Firearms said it was investigating 23 suspicious fires at mostly white churches since January 1995 — during the same period the fires at black churches occurred. A copy of the fact sheet was obtained by The Associated Press.

The Justice Department told Congress last month that it also had investigated fires or vandalism at 11 non-black churches and synagogues over the same time period.

While the ATF fact sheet provides extensive details on the cases involving fires at black churches, it includes no details on the fires at white churches and other congregations.

But it includes a section listing all "open ATF church fire investigations nationwide since January 1995," and lists a total of 48. It says that a dozen occurred in 1995 — 35 this year.

In a separate category, the document said 25 of the fires have been at black churches, which means 23 occurred in others; the number of fires in black churches under federal investigation has since grown to 34, with another blaze at a black congregation in Oklahoma on Thursday currently under investigation.

"That was an internal document, prepared for us and the Treasury Department, and I realize that things like this only beg more questions," said John Limbach, an ATF spokesman. "We're trying to pull our data together, and we should be able to answer some of the questions about those other fires by early next week."

While it is unclear where the predominantly white churches are located, civil rights groups tracking Southern church burnings say they have found few examples of anything but black churches going up in flames.

"If white church fires were on the increase, with racism as a reason, we'd be on it in a heartbeat," said Angie Lowry of the Montgomery, Ala.-based Southern Poverty Law Center, which studies issues of racism. "I'm not seeing it here in Alabama, and we're not seeing it anywhere else."

'We're trying to pull our data together, and we should be able to answer some of the questions about those other fires by early next week.'
— John Limbach, ATF spokesman

But one ATF official, speaking only on condition of anonymity, said that one problem with keeping track of church burnings is that until recently the federal government did not keep such records on its arson investigations.

"If you go back five years, you won't find any more evidence that we've investigated a church burning than you would that we've investigated a warehouse fire," the ATF official said.

Congressman seeks measure to prevent abuse of FBI information

WASHINGTON (AP) — Objecting to the White House's collecting of FBI files on hundreds of people, a Republican lawmaker said Thursday he would seek legislation requiring the president to sign any requests for such information.

Rep. Steve Horn, R-Calif., chairman of a House Government reform and oversight subcommittee, told a hearing that he was angered "when I see the misuse of FBI files by White House staff — whether it's Nixon's staff or Clinton's staff."

"I'm going to put in a bill that says if (the White House) wants a file out of the FBI, the president of the United States has to have his signature on that request," he said.

Rep. William Clinger, R-Pa., chairman of the panel's parent committee, said, "We have gone overboard perhaps in invading people's right to privacy." He plans hearings next week on how the files on 341 people — including some prominent Republicans — came to be sent by the FBI to the White House.

GOP presidential contender Bob Dole, weighing in from the campaign trail, scoffed at Clinton's explanation that the White House request for the files was a mistake.

During a stop in Louisville, Ky., Dole recalled that Candidate Clinton had come to the same city in 1992 to denounce the Bush campaign for a review of his passport files. A federal independent counsel eventually exonerated Bush administration officials in the passport incident.

Dole said that Clinton aides "make more innocent mistakes in this outfit than any body I've ever known. If we made this many mistakes in World War II, we wouldn't be here today."

At a White House news conference, meanwhile, Clinton denied anew that there were any improper motives behind the gathering of the FBI files in 1993 and early 1994 in connection with security passes. The files were returned to the FBI last Thursday, a day before the White House publicly acknowledged that it had obtained them.

Asked whether aides had ordered the files to "look for dirt" on Republicans, the president said: "I never saw any indication in 3 1/2 years that anybody was trying to do anything like that, and if I had I would not have tolerated that for a split second."

Clinton on Wednesday called the incident "an honest bureaucratic mess-up," adding, "I am sorry that it occurred."

The White House has said the files were collected as part of an effort to update security records. A junior military aide worked from an outdated Secret Service list, resulting in the gathering of files on Republicans, officials have said.

Justice Department officials said the materials the White House received were not raw FBI files but did contain some confidential information.

Former FBI Agent Gary Aldrich, who retired in 1995 after spending the previous five years assigned to the White House, wrote in The Wall Street Journal on Thursday that Clinton's explanation was "really too much for this FBI veteran to believe."

NATION IN BRIEF

■ Company reports $1.8 billion loss

NEW YORK — Sumitomo Corp., one of the world's largest companies, said late Thursday that unauthorized trades over a 10-year period by a former copper trader may have resulted in $1.8 billion in losses.

Sumitomo, based in Tokyo and Osaka, Japan, said its former head of copper trading, Yasuo Hamanaka, confessed to hiding the losses after the company discovered evidence of the illicit trades last Thursday.

The disclosure marked the second time in less than a year that a huge Japanese company had been rocked by a trading scandal blamed on a single employee. Even more remarkable is that a Sumitomo affiliate bought the U.S. operations of the company hurt by the other scandal, Daiwa Bank Ltd.

■ Dole narrows gap in Harris Poll

NEW YORK — Bob Dole shaved 7 percentage points off President Clinton's lead in a Harris Poll released Thursday, but Clinton's approval rating was as high as it's ever been.

The survey of 1,008 adults June 6-11 found Clinton beating Dole 49 percent to 31 percent if the presidential election were today. Clinton was up 53-28 in a May 2-6 Harris survey.

In a hypothetical three-way contest, the new poll gave Clinton 45 percent, Dole 27 percent and Ross Perot 12 percent. Clinton's lead over Dole in that matchup was down 4 points from the month before.

Dole's gains — greater than in other recent national polls — suggest that his resignation from the Senate to campaign full-time is starting to help him, said Humphrey Taylor, president of Louis Harris and Associates Inc.

■ Two men charged with death plot

BELLPORT, N.Y. — Radioactive canisters, a weapons cache and a gas mask were removed Thursday from a house where two men were charged with plotting to kill local Republican officials.

The pre-dawn raid reaped dozens of guns and thousands of rounds of ammunition in addition to five canisters of Radium.

Radium was used in the past to treat cancer and also to make watch dials glow in the dark, said Mona Rowe, a spokeswoman for the Brookhaven Laboratories.

"You couldn't assassinate anybody with the material they had. I don't know if they knew that," Rowe said. "You cannot make a bomb out of it; it's not explosive. Even if you ingested it, would take a long time before you would notice a health effect."

John J. Ford, 47, of Bellport, who lived in the house, and Joseph Mazzachelli, 42, of Manorville, were heard during an undercover operation discussing how to kill the officials with the Radium, said Suffolk County District Attorney James Catterson Jr.

Drew Biondo, a spokesman for Catterson, also said Ford subscribed to a monthly journal from the anti-government Freemen.

■ Health group plans ads against Olestra

EAU CLAIRE, Wis. — A national consumer group opposed to putting the fake fat olestra into snack food launched a television campaign on Thursday to warn consumers of potential health problems.

The Center for Science in the Public Interest in Washington, D.C., said it will spend $50,000 on commercials in the three cities Frito-Lay is using to test market its Max brand chips. The campaign warns that the chips could cause diarrhea, cramping and gastrointestinal problems.

Procter & Gamble, which spent a quarter-century trying to bring olestra to market, says the short-term side effects are no worse than with some other types of foods.

The U.S. Food and Drug Administration approved olestra, but required all products using the no-calorie artificial fat to carry labels warning of the potential side effects.

The chips have been sold in Eau Claire since April 22. The other test markets are Cedar Rapids, Iowa, and Grand Junction, Colo.

CHANGES ARE MADE IN DETERMINATIONS OF BASE FLOOD ELEVATIONS FOR THE CITY OF MIDLAND, MIDLAND COUNTY, TEXAS, UNDER THE NATIONAL FLOOD INSURANCE PROGRAM

On September 17, 1992, the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) identified Special Flood Hazard Areas (SFHAs) in the City of Midland, Midland County, Texas, through issuance of a Flood Insurance Rate Map (FIRM).

The Mitigation Directorate has determined that modification of the elevations of the flood having a 1-percent chance of being equaled or exceeded in any given year (base flood) for certain locations in the City of Midland is appropriate. The modified base flood elevations (BFEs) revise the FEMA FIRM for the community.

The changes are being made pursuant to Section 206 of the Flood Disaster Protection Act of 1973 (Public Law 93-234) and are in accordance with the National Flood Insurance Act of 1968, as amended (Title XIII of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968, Public Law 90-448), 42 U.S.C. 4001-4128, and 44 CFR Part 65.

A hydraulic analysis was performed to incorporate the effects of channel improvements from approximately 50 feet upstream of Haynes Avenue to approximately 1,350 feet upstream of Henry Koontz Boulevard, and road crossing improvements at Norwood Drive and Henry Koontz Boulevard, and has resulted in a revised delineation of the regulatory floodway and SFHA and modifications to the BFEs along Jal Draw from approximately 50 feet upstream of Haynes Avenue to Holiday Hill Road. The table below indicate the modified BFEs for several locations along the affected length of Jal Draw.

Location	Existing BFE (feet)*	Modified BFE (feet)*
Approximately 1,600 feet upstream of Haynes Avenue	2,813	2,812
Approximately 1,700 feet upstream of Henry Koontz Boulevard	2,826	2,827
Approximately 600 feet upstream of Holiday Hill Road	2,834	2,833

*National Geodetic Vertical Datum, rounded to nearest whole foot

Under the above-mentioned Acts of 1968 and 1973, the Mitigation Directorate must develop criteria for floodplain management. For the community to participate in the National Flood Insurance Program (NFIP), the community must use the modified BFEs to administer the floodplain management measures of the NFIP. These modified BFEs will also be used to calculate the appropriate flood insurance premium rates for new buildings and their contents and for the second layer of insurance on existing buildings and contents.

Upon the second publication of notice of these changes in this newspaper, any person has 90 days in which he or she can request, through the Chief Executive Officer of the community, that the Mitigation Directorate reconsider the determination. Any request for reconsideration must be based on knowledge of changed conditions or new scientific or technical data. All interested parties are on notice that until the 90-day period elapses, the Mitigation Directorate's determination to modify the BFEs may itself be changed.

Any person having knowledge or wishing to comment on these changes should immediately notify:

Mayor, City of Midland
