Civic leaders urge Midlanders to clean town

By Ian Heald
Staff Writer

'We've had 12 (media) inquiries in the last three weeks. The Italians are coming this week. (You) feel like someone dropped in and you didn't have your house cleaned up.'
— Bruce Partain, communications/membership manager for the chamber

With the possible election to the presidency of former Midlander George W. Bush less than two weeks away, civic leaders held a rally luncheon Thursday urging the community to unify efforts in making the city more aesthetically appealing.

Cindy Lanning, executive director of Keep Midland Beautiful, encouraged the group of 30-plus attendees and extended her plea to all Midlanders to participate in Saturday's Fabulous Fall Cleanup. The trash cleanup will cover a variety of the city's major thoroughfares. Having a cleaner city can only improve the image of Midland, Mrs. Lanning said.

Mayor Bobby Burns at the luncheon supported the idea of a citywide cleanup. He said it is vital that the city be conveyed in a positive light. Burns is a member of The Sky is the Limit Committee, a group whose aim is to market Midland if Bush is elected to the presidency.

"We want Midland to be viewed and reported in the right way," Burns said. "We're all very proud of Midland. We need to do what we can to make the group the best it can be. We want Midland to be viewed and reported in the right way."

And the national and foreign media is already here, said Bruce Partain, communications/membership manager for the chamber.

"We've had 12 (media) inquiries in the last three weeks," Partain said. "The Italians are coming this week. (You) feel like someone dropped in and you didn't have your house cleaned up."

The luncheon then took on a life of its own. Attendees shared ideas and came to a consensus that a grassroots effort must take hold throughout the community if Midland is to become a more visually appealing place.

Willadene Henderson urged everyone to share the effort in beautifying their own neighborhoods. "Everybody can get out and mow and clean and edge their lawns," Ms. Henderson said.

Linda Bond, executive director of the Arts Assembly of Midland, expressed concern about the current look and feel of the Interstate 20 corridor.

"It just looks bad," Ms. Bond said. "Midland is pretty nice but you wouldn't know it driving along Interstate 20."

Mrs. Lanning tried to assure the group that the Texas Department of Transportation could construct more appealing Interstate 20 off ramps within the next six years. And, she said, a grassroots effort may be the best solution to improve the overall look of Interstate 20.

Ms. Bond agreed, saying the participation level at this weekend's cleanup could be indicative of any future success in cleaning the rest of the city.

"I think when we get people together and brainstorm, we're bound to come up with good things," Ms. Bond said. "It's not just somebody else's problem, It's all of ours. And it's not somebody else's solution, it's all of ours. The more people that turn out, the better it will be."

And, Partain concluded, "If you want to ruin this town's image, don't do anything. If you want to help, get out and clean up on Saturday."

Those interested in participating in Saturday's cleanup can contact Keep Midland Beautiful at 688-4190.

Wisconsin a key state for Bush, Gore

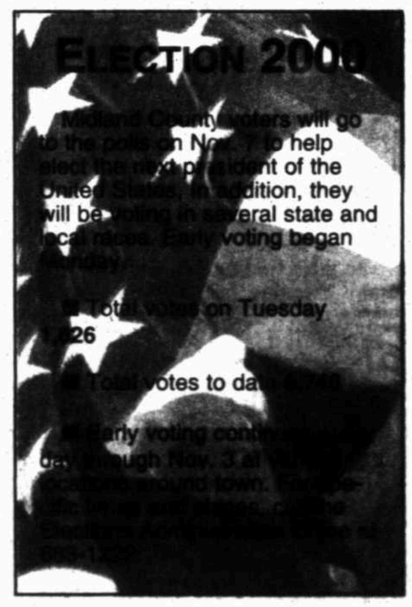

By Mary Leonard
N.Y. Times News Service

MADISON, Wis. — Al Gore drew a big crowd when he campaigned here Thursday, and he'll be back in Wisconsin for a bus tour Monday. George W. Bush rocked the Milwaukee Auditorium with a huge rally on Monday. Now he's hustling in Saturday for his third visit this month to the Green Bay area.

Blink, and you might miss a campaign appearance by a presidential candidate in a state that has been off the radar of national politics for 20 years but has become a fierce battleground in this election.

"I'm wondering if they're ever going to leave," said Gore's weary Wisconsin spokesman, John Kraus, who is trying to manage the unexpected crush of candidate coverage here. "I mean," he added

Local Nader supporters hope to send message of protest to Washington, D.C.

Nader

Green Party candidate Ralph Nader Thursday said several prominent Democrats have approached him about dropping out of the presidential election because he could split the liberal vote and help Republican George W. Bush become president.

But despite that possibility, Nader said he is in the race to stay, and his Permian Basin supporters are glad he is.

"Nader is setting the stage for long-term reform," said Jillian Whitaker, area coordinator and Ector County chairman of the Permian Basin Green Party. "We are sending a message of protest to Washington by voting for Nader."

Critics of the Green Party say that it is better to be pragmatic and shift support toward Vice President Al Gore, since the Democratic Party tends to support more of the Green Party's platform than the Republicans.

Permian Basin Petroleum Association speakers acknowledge changing times

By Melia McEwen
Staff Writer

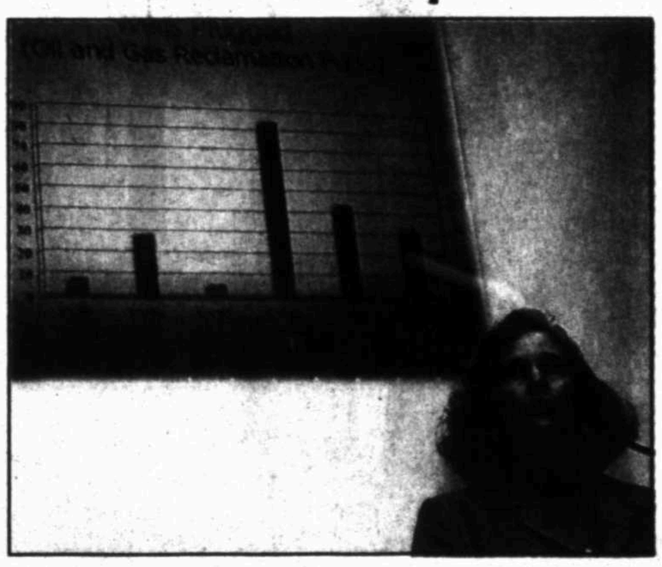

"The Times They Are A-Changing" was the theme of this year's Permian Basin Petroleum Association Annual Meeting, and regulators and legislators alike cautioned area oilmen they should, indeed, expect changes.

At Thursday's kick-off breakfast, Texas Railroad Commissioner Charles Matthews told attendees that with 17,000 delinquent unplugged and inactive wells in the state, it is an issue that will have to be faced.

"There will be a lot of pressure in the Legislature due to publicity about the abandoned wells," he said. "It will be an issue that we will have to deal with."

Missing Odessan case reopened

By Brian Rogers
Staff Writer

ODESSA — A 25-year-old case of missing person Phyllis Eleanor Berry is being reopened, according to the Odessa Crime Stoppers.

Ms. Berry was a 21-year-old resident of Odessa when she disappeared from Terlingua on Nov. 1, 1975.

Ms. Berry's sister, Lucy Wiley, of Houston, and several other family members will be present at a press conference today at 1:30 p.m. at the Crime Stoppers office, 418, N. Texas in Odessa. The public, especially anyone with information on this case, is invited to attend.

At the time of her disappearance, Ms. Berry was attending a chili cook-off which attracted an estimated 10,000 people. According to Odessa Crime stoppers, police have long suspected foul play in her disappearance. The effort to reopen the case is being spearheaded by Ms. Wiley. She is hoping for closure in this case.

Ms. Wiley has never had Ms. Berry pronounced legally dead. She is hoping someone with information in the case will have matured in the past 25 years and is now willing to talk.

Shown is a sketch of Odessan Phyllis Eleanor Berry from the DPS Web site. Ms. Berry was 21 when she disappeared from Terlingua on Nov. 1, 1975.

Although the original case was reported to authorities in Alpine, the Texas Rangers have kept files on the case, and will be on hand to answer questions.

Electrical fire darkens runways at airport

From Staff Reports

A small electrical fire in an auxilary building at Midland International Airport caused the runway lights and taxiway lights to fail, forcing flights to be cancelled Thursday night.

At dusk, the light failure prompted airport authorities to cancel flights, according to Marv Esterly, Director of Airports, at Midland International Airport.

"A small fire in the basement of the light vault, a building separate from the terminal, burned the electrical wires, causing shorts, which caused the runway lights and taxiway lights to fail," Esterly said.

Justine Ruff, Deputy Director of Midland International Airport, said,

Rodeo and Bull Ride join forces for 2001

By Emily Baker
MRT Correspondent

ODESSA — The joining of the Top Guns Bull Ride and the SandHills Stock Show and Rodeo was announced at a press conference Thursday morning at the Odessa Chamber of Commerce. The two have combined for the first time to create a two-week western event.

The event will be held in late December, starting with the Top Guns Bull Ride on December 28. The event will kick off the season of the Professional Bull Riders (PBR) as well as the Professional Rodeo Cowboys Association (PRCA) season.

For the past several years, the Top Guns Bull Ride has been part of the PBR's Bud Light Cup tour which features the top 45 bull riders in the world and is broadcast on TNN. This year the Top Guns Bull Ride will not be a part of the Bud Light Cup tour, but rather the Copenhagen Tough Company Tour, formerly the Touring Pro Division of the PBR.

The event will still feature the top 45 bull riders and the top bulls the sport has to offer. It will be a one-day event with $20,000 up for grabs, $9,000 of which will go to the winner.

"The advantage of having (the combined effort) is the PBR only has a select number of dates," Top Guns Promoter Kenny Karr said. "The dirt and chutes are already set up (because of the SandHills Rodeo)."

Gerald Nobles, vice president of the SandHills Rodeo, said that the rodeo is always looking for ways to expand and said that the combining of the events will bring a financial boost to the area because "the two sports of rodeo will be kicked off in Odessa."

Jim Watkins, coach of Odessa College's nationally recognized rodeo team, said that the joint effort will also help his program because more than $40,000 has been donated from the Top Guns Bull Ride and the SandHills Rodeo to the rodeo scholarship program at OC.

"What a homecoming week," Watkins said of the joint events, referring to the fact that many successful rodeo athletes were a part of his program. "Top Guns was always a homecoming for the bull riders. Now it is for all (rodeo) athletes."

Such competitors as Ty Murray, Jim Sharp, Jerome Davis and the Carrillo brothers were a part of Watkins' program.

The Odessa Chamber of Commerce is challenging area businesses to have one Western wear day where employees sport Western wear at work to support the events.

Fort Worth man pleads guilty to charges in cheerleaders' deaths

WEATHERFORD (AP) — A Fort Worth man Thursday pleaded guilty to four counts of intoxication manslaughter for the 1998 death of four Brock teen-agers. His punishment will be determined in a jury trial next week.

Rickey Carter, 42, was indicted on four counts of intoxication manslaughter for a Dec. 19, 1998, accident with a Nissan Maxima, carrying Whitney Welch, 16; Mandi McWhorter, 15; Staci Lee, 16; and Lacey Osina, 17.

The cheerleaders were returning from a basketball game in Weatherford, located about 30 miles west of Fort Worth, when Carter's vehicle veered into the opposite lane and collided with their car.

Brock is about 10 miles southwest of Weatherford.

A blood alcohol test taken by the Texas Department of Public Safety showed Carter's blood alcohol content at 0.16, above the state's legal limit of 0.10 at the time.

Carter entered four guilty pleas to the charges, and he faces a maximum of 20 years in prison — four 20-year sentences that would run concurrently. The deadly weapon portions of the charges were dropped. They would have required Carter to serve half of any sentence before being eligible for parole.

Intoxication manslaughter is a second-degree felony, punishable by two to 20 years in prison and a fine up to $10,000.

Jury selection is scheduled to begin Monday, and testimony in the punishment phase is scheduled for Thursday.

Some family members criticized the plea agreement and Parker County District Attorney Donald Schnebly for accepting the deal.

"Me, I just don't like making a deal with the devil. I've been telling him (Schnebly) that for two years and he's been assuring me. He has outright lied to me," said David Lee, Staci's father. "And what do they do, they make a deal with the devil and sell us out."

Liz Osina, mother of Lacey Osina, echoed Lee.

"All we wanted was to let the justice system work," Osina told the Weatherford Democrat. "We had faith in it. We believed that justice would prevail and we did not need to plea."

"I have to be able to look at my daughter Emily in the eye and to see in her eyes that Mark and I fought to the bitter end for what we believed was right," Osina said.

Schnebly defended his decision, saying a jury trial had no guarantees.

"If a not guilty verdict was returned in one of these cases tried separately it would prohibit the prosecution of the other three cases."

Jerry Loftin, Carter's attorney, said the plea agreement was appropriate.

While pleased with the bargain, Loftin said he would continue pleas for a change of venue claiming Carter can't get a fair trial in Parker County because of extensive publicity about the case.

In April, Judge Clifford Davis denied a change of venue, calling the publicity objective. He also said the lapse of time between the incident and the pending trial would lessen the effect of media publicity.

Woman sentenced to 25 years for shooting mother

AMARILLO — A jury has sentenced a woman to 25 years in prison after finding her guilty of fatally shooting her 74-year-old mother.

Dianna Lorrayne Howell, 57, told jurors on Wednesday that she went into a panic the night of Sept. 14, 1996, and never intended to shoot her mother, Opal Lorrayne Holcomb.

Howell told jurors she doesn't remember what happened the night of the shooting, but had promised to care for her mother and moved from California to do so a few years ago.

In a statement taped the night of the shooting, Howell said her mother complained about her dinner. Holcomb also complained it being too cold inside the house.

Howell said she went to the sunroom and retrieved her .22-caliber semiautomatic pistol, intending to kill herself. Ultimately, she shot her mother in the back of the head, she said in the statement.

Holcomb fell from her chair and landed in her food in front of the TV.

Howell pleaded innocent to the murder charge. Her defense attorney, Jim Durham, asked jurors to find her guilty of a lesser charge, either manslaughter, aggravated assault or deadly conduct.

Jurors decided on a murder conviction Wednesday and had the option of sentencing Howell to probation, life in prison or any length of time from five to 99 years.

Howell broke into tears during the punishment phase later in the day under rigorous questioning by Murphy, the Amarillo Globe-News reported Thursday. She told jurors she regretted what happened the night of her mother's death.

Ever Close In Mind and Heart

No further away than a picture,
A smile, or remembered phrase.
Our loved ones live in memory
So close in so many ways.

For how often does a sunset
Bring nostalgic thoughts to mind,
Of moments that our loved one shared. In days now left behind!

How often has a flower
Or a crystal autumn sky
Brought golden recollections of happy days gone by!

Yes, memory has a magic way of keeping loved ones near---
Ever close in mind and heart are the ones we hold most dear!

We Love You

quickly, "I hope they don't."

By any standard, 17 separate stops in a single state by the major president candidates, plus three visits by Green Party candidate Ralph Nader, puts Wisconsin (only 11 electoral votes) on a par with the big, vote-rich kahunas like Michigan, Florida, and Pennsylvania. Voters in the rest of the country may think this election is ho-hum, but here, where the political heat is as intense as New Hampshire at primary time, these Midwesterners are excited and elated by the unprecedented courting and attention.

Tom Nieland, 39, of New Berlin, is a lifelong Republican but never had attended a political event until a friend gave him a ticket the Bush rally in Milwaukee. He was lucky — he was one of the estimated 8,000 people who got inside the auditorium; 2,000 were left lined up outside.

"Usually we're a flyover state or good for one campaign stop at the most," Nieland said. "It's neat when we get attention for something other than the Packers playing well, or our football team going to the Rose Bowl."

Marvelle Strand, a retired shop owner in Sun Prarie, said this close-up look at the presidential contest convinced her to be a first-time volunteer at Gore's Madison headquarters. "I can't remember a time when I've been this concerned about who wins," she said.

A combination of factors, including the every-electoral-vote-counts strategy of both campaigns, have put the candidates' laser focus on Wisconsin. Democratic candidates have won here in the last three presidential elections — Republican Bob Dole ignored Wisconsin in 1996 — but seesawing polls show this race too close to call.

One reason is that Tommy Thompson, Wisconsin's four-term GOP governor, convinced Bush he could be competitive in the state if he spent time and money wooing voters who have a reputation for taking their politics seriously, studying issues, and thinking independently. Indeed, voters here have elected a Republican governor, two Democratic senators, and a statehouse that is closely split along party lines. Republican Ronald Reagan won here, and so did Richard Nixon.

Another factor is Nader. With Wisconsin's progressive labor and farm traditions and its large student population, he has made a fairly deep groove here, cutting into Gore's liberal base of support. The Gore campaign says it is not worried about Nader's 5 percent in the polls, but the vice president's stop Friday in Madison, the state capital and the home of the main campus of the University of Wisconsin, was to personally deliver the Democratic message that a vote for Nader is a vote for Bush.

When the candidates have to be somewhere other than Wisconsin, their surrogates are here, picking up the slack. On the Democratic side, Representative Barney Frank of Massachusetts and the Rev. Jesse Jackson have come to Madison to try to suppress the Nader vote. Gore's daughter Kristin toured campuses across the state this week. Ed Rendell, the Democratic Party chairman and former mayor of Philadelphia, turned up unannounced Monday at field office on the predominantly black west side of Milwaukee.

Bush has his own army in the state, led by the popular Thompson. The "W Stands for Women" bus tour was scheduled to roll through Wisconsin earlier this week, but mechanical problems with Laura Bush's plane forced its cancellation. Barbara Bush is scheduled to visit a senior center here next week, and Bo Derek recently did a poolside event on Bush's behalf at a motel in Wausau. Green Bay Packers legend Paul Hornung has touted Bush in the Republican stronghold of the Fox River Valley.

Dick and Lynne Cheney, who both received advanced degrees at the University of Wisconsin, have been in and out of the state. GOP assemblyman Scott Walker of Wauwatosa said his neighbor couldn't coax her daughter to attend a Dick Cheney event because the child had already had dessert with Mrs. Cheney at her elementary school.

"It's like being part of the Iowa caucuses — nobody in Wisconsin is satisfied now until they have met all the candidates," said Walker, who is coordinating the Bush campaign in Milwaukee County.

Angelique Pirozzi, who worked for the Clinton-Gore campaign in New Hampshire in 1996 and for Gore in Iowa earlier this year, says the exposure to the candidates is informing the electorate but also contributing to a larger-than-expected undecided vote. "In Iowa and New Hampshire, it took generations for the voters to become this spoiled — they want to see the candidates!" said Pirozzi, who is directing Gore's Wisconsin field operations. "People are paying attention."

Voters can't miss the television commercials. The presidential campaigns reportedly have spent almost $4 million advertising in Milwaukee and Green Bay, putting them in the presidential candidates' top 15 media markets.

"I easily see a dozen commercials in one day, and I work full-time," said Cate Zeuske, who heads the Wisconsin Department of Revenue. "For political junkies, having all this information and weekly or twice-a-week visits from the candidates is a dream come true."

Zeuske said her 13-year-old daughter came home from a mock presidential debate at her school and complained that the Gore stand-in "had his health-care plan all wrong."

The state party organizations, accustomed to voter apathy, are having trouble adjusting to the new climate. Volunteers at GOP headquarters automatically answer the phone with "We are out of yard signs." One woman was so irritated that she grabbed a Bush-Cheney sign out of the campaign-office window, took it to a printer, and paid for 1,000 copies, Scott Walker said.

NADER: GOP official says there are stark differences between parties

(From 1A)

Ms. Whitaker disagreed with this philosophy, saying there is little difference between Democrats and Republicans, and that the only way to affect change within the political system is to outwardly reject it in its current form. "Both the Republican and Democratic parties are owned by corporate interest," she said. "The Green Party is an international entity, with a presence in over 80 countries. We have the potential to make a difference in the future if we remain strong in our resolve today."

'People all over the world are recognizing the need to overgrow their governments in order to come together for environmental health and social well-being. Regardless of this election's outcome, the Green Party is here to stay.'

— Jillian Whitaker, Ector County Chairwoman of the Permian Basin Green Party

Still, few outside the Green Party view the Democrats and Republicans as being that similar.

Sue Brannon, chairperson of the Midland County Republican Party, said the stark differences between the two major political parties cannot be denied. "When comparing the party platforms, we as Republicans find some of the things the Democrats stand for to be legitimately frightening," she said.

Ms. Brannon pointed to issues within the Democratic agenda such as their desire to expand gun control legislation, raise taxes for wealthy families, and pump more American dollars into foreign welfare programs, all of which Ms. Brannon viewed as being potentially dangerous for the Future of the United States.

Midland County Democratic Chairman Michael Higgins said that regardless of whatever the Green Party's motivations may be, they can expect the Democrats and even some organizations such as the Sierra Club to actively attempt to pull Green Party votes. "This is an extremely tight race," Higgins said. "It won't make much of a difference here in Texas, of course. But on the west coast, where the environmental vote is being fragmented by the Green Party, it is a major issue."

Although Nader has been criticized by some for allegedly building his environmental policies on raw speculation and junk science, supporters say he and the Green Party have managed to create a heightened sense of awareness within the Democratic and Republican parties for the need to address certain issues, such as global warming and geopolar ozone depletion. It is this common ground that Ms. Whitaker hopes will someday blossom into mainstream acceptance of her party.

"People all over the world are recognizing the need to overgrow their governments in order to come together for environmental health and social well-being," she said. "Regardless of this election's outcome, the Green Party is here to stay."

Midlanders interested in the Green Party are encouraged to attend weekly meetings held Saturdays at 2 p.m. at The Ground Floor.

PBPA: Lack of skilled workers a concern

ment, agreed that abandoned wells will be an issue to be faced.

Her department is addressing ways to ensure adequate funds to plug abandoned wells and compliance with the department's rules, she said.

What will impact local operators, she said, is the department's current efforts to evaluate gas proration in prorated gas pools in southeastern New Mexico.

Matthews predicted that there will be an aggressive push to extend the statute of limitations on liability from four years to 10 years and if that effort is successful, "the impact on your industry will be more negative than anything that has happened, even low oil prices."

Three state representatives — Tom Craddick of Midland, Buddy West of Odessa and Judy Hawley of Portland — agreed that the industry must closely watch any efforts to extend the statute of limitations during the upcoming session of the Texas Legislature.

West said that as an oil industry employee for 30 years, "I know we're not lily white, but I don't want to tear up the tort reform act the governor worked so hard to enact."

During a morning session following the breakfast, Ms. Hawley said a survey she conducted found that the lack of sufficient skilled workers was a top concern for producers.

She challenged her audience to "define what you need in a workforce. I'm referring to entry-level workers, associate degrees, engineers and above. Then you can parlay that definition into working with community colleges and technical preparation programs to write a curriculum to train your workforce. We're in a position now where we have to grow our own workers."

Craddick said that he expects the issue of severance tax relief will be raised during the upcoming session but he doesn't believe there will be any action taken.

He said what he would like to see is a bill enacted that would begin the process of eliminating the severance tax on oil and natural gas.

The three agreed that the session will be dominated by the upcoming restructuring issue and that redistricting will have a major impact on the industry and the area.

West and Craddick said they are working together to see that Midland and Ector counties are placed in a single senatorial and congressional district.

Technology in the form of the Internet will also impact the industry, said Stuart Page, chief executive officer of NetworkOil, an e-commerce site for the energy industry.

At a morning session following the breakfast, Page said that the Internet will be a tool to help vendors sell their product and operators or service companies to more easily find equipment they need. He said the Internet is not a replacement for the quality of a company or its reputation.

"The oil and gas industry is a great innovator," said the London native, "but it needs to see proven that the technology makes sense. It's got to be smart technology. There's a behavioral difference. If you buy something in the oil industry, there are a million ways to configure it. It's highly engineered, and what you buy and sell goes into very dangerous environments. It's critical the product description is right and it shows up at the right time."

MISSING: Woman may have left cook-off with man on motorcycle residents joined in the original search in 1975.

Odessa Deputy Sheriff Carl Rogers was a reporter for KOSA-TV during the original case. Rogers was sent to cover the full-scale operation looking for Ms. Berry and said the search ignited the Permian Basin.

"There were 50 to 100 people involved, including rescue teams and people searching the caves in the area. But there were never any promising leads. She just literally disappeared and there was never any trace of her."

He also said the reopening of a case like this is not uncommon, especially when a family member comes forward.

Rogers said, "There are people who know what happened, whether she left the area or foul play occurred, and we're hoping they will come forward with what they know."

Information on the case is available on the Internet Web site for the Texas Department of Safety, in the missing persons clearinghouse section.

The case file from that site reads, in part:

Phyllis Eleanor Berry is also known as: Phyllis Benny and Phyllis Ecklison.

Ms. Berry was born September 16, 1954. She is a white female. At the time of her disappearance, she was 5' 5'' tall and weighed 110 pounds.

Ms. Berry has pierced ears, a flat brown mole on her lower right abdomen, a slight space between her two front center teeth and a freckle between her thumb and right wrist.

Ms. Berry was last seen at the "World Championship Chili Cookoff.'' She may have left the area on the back of a motorcycle with an unknown male subject. An extensive search of the area was performed, but Ms. Berry was not located. Ms. Berry is listed as endangered due to lifestyle and/or failure to make timely contact with family.

BALLING: Satellite records indicate no warming

els of atmospheric warming clearly indicate that CO2, a greenhouse gas, causes the atmosphere to heat up, but there is no conclusive proof that greenhouse gases cause global warming.

Balling, the director of the Laboratory for Climatology at the University of Arizona, said the models do not take into consideration the action of clouds, solar activity, volcanoes, urbanization, ocean currents and ocean temperature such as El Ninos and La Ninas, atmospheric sulfates and natural aerosols.

"Most of the thermometers that track global warming around the world are located in cities, and cities are always hotter than rural areas. Clouds reflect heat and cool the atmosphere, and there is no way to predict cloud activity. There is warming, but when the clouds linger the atmosphere cools off. And when the sun is hotter or closer to the earth the temperatures heat up," said Balling.

"When you consider all the factors, we just don't see that great of a buildup. In fact in the last year and a half we have had a cooling spell, and we don't know why." He said that satellite records which record oxygen temperatures indicate no warming and the record of balloons which record atmospheric temperatures indicate no warming in the past 21 years. He also noted that 50 percent of all global warming had occurred from 1910 to 1940.

When you consider all the natural causes for global warming, human activity has probably resulted in some global cooling. "The fact is we don't know what all is involved in causing global warming.

FIRE: Several flights cancelled

"The fire was not in the main terminal, and there were no injuries. No one was in any danger," Ms. Ruff said.

Although several flights were cancelled, and several morning flights delayed Esterly said he expected the wiring to be repaired today, and anticipates the lights to work tonight.

State board adopts plan to increase students by 500,000

By Natalie Gott
Associated Press

AUSTIN — A state board Thursday adopted plans to increase the number of Texans enrolled in colleges and universities by 500,000 over the next 15 years to close the higher education gap between Texas and other states.

Officials with the Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board say they hope the move will help enrollment keep pace with the state's growing population.

"This plan says 'let's come up with some results.' This is a plan that focuses on goals," said Don Brown, commissioner of higher education. "We can say this is a plan to encourage creativity and adaptability."

The plan to add students includes a measure to make college preparatory courses standard curriculum in all high schools and require them for admission to Texas public universities by 2008. The courses already are offered at most Texas high schools, the board said.

Also included in the plan is a proposal to recruit and retain additional teachers for elementary and secondary schools, and establish a college affordability policy that allows students to attend higher education institutes regardless of their ability to pay.

Other items outlined in the plan call for increasing the number of degrees and certificates by 50 percent by 2015; increase the number of nationally recognized programs and services at Texas institutions; and increase the level of federal science and engineering research funding to Texas institutions by 50 percent to $1.3 billion by 2015.

The board gave no indication of how much implementing the full plan would cost, even as it considered proposals for setting tuition and fees.

One proposal called for permitting institutions to set flat tuition and fees beyond 12 semester credit hours. Another proposal suggests that the rate of increases in tuition and fees not exceed the rate of increases in funds for grants and scholarships.

Those proposals will be sent out for public comment before any action is taken.

Sen. Rocye West, D-Dallas, chair of the Senate subcommittee on higher education, said funding higher education programs is a priority in the Senate.

"We obviously won't be able to do everything at one time and we will have to take a look at the funding demands that are being placed before us, prioritize and then decide which ones we are going to fund," West said.

The higher education plan was drafted last year by members of the coordinating board, business and community leaders and former higher education governing board members.

The board found that if the current education trend continues, without increasing the number of students, Texas will end up with a growing unskilled and under educated labor force.

"The proportion of Texans enrolled in higher education is declining," said Pam Willeford, chair of the Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board. "Also, too few higher education programs are noted for excellence and too few higher education research efforts have reached their full potential."

According to the board, about 5 percent of Texans are enrolled in higher education programs. If another 500,000 students are added by 2015, the percentage will rise to 5.7 percent.

The percentage is higher in other large states. For example, in California, 6.1 percent of the residents are enrolled in higher education programs. In New Yorks, 5.6 percent are.

To increase the number of students in Texas, enrollment rates among Hispanics and blacks will have to rise. The enrollment rate for whites is 5 percent, compared to 4.3 percent for blacks and 3.6 percent for Hispanics.

The plan calls for increasing the percentage of blacks enrolled to 5.7 percent in 2015 and Hispanics to 5.6 percent.

The board also approved a proposal to strengthen Texas Southern University and Prairie View A&M, the state's two historically black public universities.

The proposal was forwarded to the governor's office.

Justice Department investigates drug bust

LUBBOCK (AP) — The Justice Department has opened a criminal investigation into whether civil rights were violated in a drug bust that rounded up 40 black people in a small, predominantly white Texas Panhandle farming town last year.

Justice Department spokeswoman Kara Peterman said Thursday the department's civil rights division has opened a criminal investigation of the case that has attracted national attention. Federal law prohibits police officers from depriving citizens of their constitutional rights.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the American Civil Liberties Union filed a complaint earlier this month with the Justice Department charging racial bias was behind the arrests.

The two groups contend the arrests were launched as a matter of "ethnic cleansing of young male blacks."

Forty-three people, 40 of them black, were rounded up in the undercover operation July 23, 1999, in the northwest Texas town of Tulia. Two whites and one Hispanic were also arrested.

Nearly 250 of the town's 5,000 residents are black.

Swisher County District Attorney Terry McEachern said he welcomes the Justice Department investigation, but questions its timing, less than two weeks from the presidential election.

"I do find it ironic that this was placed at this point in the election process," McEachern said.

"I certainly don't mind them coming down," he said. "I'll let them review all of our records. I think if people look into what happened, there will be no question that there wasn't anything done wrong."

The undercover agent in the cases, Tom Coleman, did not wear a wire, no video surveillance was conducted and no other officer backed up his reports, according to the complaint filed with the Justice Department.

"It would be easy to look at what happened in Swisher County and throw up one's hands and believe there is no justice," said Amarillo attorney Jeff Blackburn, who helped write the complaint. "I think this is a good way to show there still is justice in this country."

Of the 43 arrested, 17 have pleaded guilty and 11 have been convicted.

Caroline Wafer's husband, Billy, was among those arrested. His case is on appeal after being dismissed in another county.

"I can't wait 'til he calls me so I can tell him," she said of her husband, who has since found work in another town. "I'm speechless, really. That is good news."

Sheriff Larry Stewart said he has been aware of the federal investigation for more than a week.

"We've never had anything to hide," he said. "If they want to look, great."

Coleman, who continues to work as an undercover agent, has refused to be interviewed by The Associated Press.

Service conducted for one of three Texans killed in attack

ROCKPORT (AP) — A 26-year-old sailor, one of three Texans killed in the USS Cole blast, was memorialized Thursday after his last trip home.

Gary G. Swenchonis Jr. will be buried Friday at Fort Sam Houston National Cemetery in San Antonio.

"He had a kind heart. He dreamed of seeing the world and sharing those sights with his family and friends," his mother, Deborah Swenchonis, told mourners through a Navy chaplain. "The gaping hole in the USS Cole will be fixed and she will sail to fight another day. But the dreams of Gary and the 16 other sailors have been shattered beyond repair."

The service came a day after his shipmate, Timothy Gauna, was memorialized in Ennis. A rosary for Ronchester Santiago was scheduled for Thursday night in Kingsville. The funeral is set for 10 a.m. Friday at St. Gertrude's Catholic Church.

The three were among 17 killed Oct. 12 in a suicide bomb attack on the Cole while it ported in Aden, Yemen to refuel.

At Swenchonis' remembrance, family, friends, community leaders and Navy officers in their dress blues reached out to the Swenchonis family.

"We hurt with you," said Cmdr. Jim Looby, chaplain at Naval Station Ingleside, according to a story on the Corpus Christi Caller-Times Web site. "We try to make sense of that which is senseless. We try to make sense of that which we don't understand."

Rear Adm. Jose L. Betancourt presented the family a Purple Heart.

"As I sit here today and participate with his family and friends and as I look at his photograph, I'm reminded that he embodies this nation," said Betancourt, commander of the Navy's Mine Warfare Command. "His spirit today lives on in the sailors in fleet. Fireman Gary Swenchonis was one of those young heroes who was taken too early . . . a true national treasure."

Houston pursuing light rail despite opposition

HOUSTON (AP) — Transit officials have set aside enough money to move forward on a 7 1/2-mile light rail project that will connect downtown with the Texas Medical Center and the Astrodome complex.

The Metropolitan Transit Authority board Thursday earmarked $65 million in sales tax revenue and other money. The board had been hoping for federal help until Monday, when President Clinton signed a transportation appropriations bill that specifically excluded Houston rail construction.

U.S. Rep. Tom DeLay, R-Texas, whose district includes suburbs southwest of Houston, intentionally barred the project from receiving federal money because he wants voters to decide whether to build the $300 million starter line.

Metro, the transit agency, refuses to allow citizens to vote on the issue.

"This is a multiyear project," Metro board member Kenneth Bolton said Thursday. "The unavailability of federal funds as of now is just for the first of those several years. We remain hopeful we will receive federal funding for the out years of the project."

Pending right-of-way approval by the Houston City Council, Metro will seek bids next month and hopes construction will begin by late winter.

Because it cannot count on federal money, Metro instead will tap its sales tax reserves, employ a complicated lease-back arrangement of its bus facilities and use $15.6 million from land-sale proceeds to come up with the remaining $65 million it needs for the project.

Critics charge the route, which typically is not congested during rush hours, will do little to reduce traffic or air pollution caused by cars. Proponents predict 9 million to 11 million riders will ride the trains annually when service begins by 2004.

Metro president Shirley DeLibero has promised the line can be built without raising fares or taxes, taking on debt or cutting service.

Houston has not employed rail for public transit since streetcars roamed downtown early in 20th century.

Fire Marshal: Valves may be to blame for blast

KILGORE (AP) — A fatal explosion that ignited while a tanker truck transferred gas to propane plant likely was caused by a faulty valve, an investigator said.

"We don't think it's going to be human error," Deputy Fire Marshal Jimmy Purcell told the Kilgore News Herald in Thursday's editions.

"We think it's going to be some problem with valves or something of that nature. It's very possible a valve leaked some fuel and the gas cloud made it to the exhaust on the truck," Purcell said.

According to the Kilgore newspaper and the Longview News-Journal, investigators with the U.S. Department of Transportation were considering dismantling the valves to search for malfunctions at the 40-year-old gas sales location.

While transferring gas Sunday at a Martin Resource Management Corp. yard, just north of Kilgore and south of Interstate 20, a tanker truck carrying 8,000 gallons of liquid propane exploded and burst into flames.

Witnesses told police they saw a gas line explode before the tanker truck caught fire and there was a second, larger blast at the facility.

The blast killed Tim Martin, 52, an 11-year employee, and injured truck driver Billy Davis, 52. Authorities evacuated about 200 homes because of fears the fire would ignite a tank holding up to 30,000 gallons of the gas.

Memorial services for Martin, who is not related to company president Ruben Martin, were held Wednesday in Kilgore.

Davis was in serious condition Thursday at the burn unit of Parkland Memorial Hospital in Dallas.

CAMPAIGN 2000 IN BRIEF

■ Lieberman to stay in Senate race

Campaigning in Albuquerque, N.M., Democratic vice presidential candidate Joseph Lieberman said emphatically that he would not pull out of the Connecticut Senate race. "I promised no October surprises, and there will be none," said Sen. Lieberman, noting that absentee ballots had already gone out in Connecticut. "I really think it would, in many ways, be an act of bad faith if I pulled out at this point." Under Connecticut law, the deadline to drop his re-election bid and allow another Democratic candidate to take his place is today. Waterbury Mayor Philip Giordano, the Republican challenger, called the decision "selfish." Lieberman has campaigned one day in his home state since Al Gore chose him as his running mate in August.

■ Clinton to hit the road to help Gore

President Clinton, after weeks of low-key campaigning, will set out on a four- or five-day trip to boost Al Gore's chances in critical states. The president's journey next week probably will begin Thursday and keep him out until Election Day, officials said. Clinton's stops include California, Arkansas, Louisiana, Missouri and Kentucky. He probably will wind up in New York for Election Day to be with his wife, Hillary, who is running for a U.S. Senate seat. The decision to have Clinton visit California on Nov. 2-3 came after pleas from Democrats who are growing anxious amid signs the presidential race is tightening in the nation's most populous state. At Gore's insistence, Clinton has kept a low profile on the campaign trail.

■ NAACP getting inmates to vote

Alarming some sheriffs, the NAACP has signed up more than 11,000 new voters in county jails across the Southeast this year. The nation's largest civil rights group described its campaign Thursday as an historic attempt to preserve the electoral rights of prisoners. But a law enforcement group in Alabama worries the drive could lead to inmates banding together to oust sheriffs and other county officials they don't like. "They could elect their own commissioner. All they'd have to do is bloc vote in a small county," said Brice Paul, director of jail services for the Alabama Sheriff's Association. Synamon Baldwin, regional director of prisoner re-enfranchisement for the NAACP, denied the registration drive is aimed at empowering prisoners to take over county politics. The group's effort focuses mainly on people awaiting trial and those convicted of misdemeanors. State laws vary, but such prisoners generally retain the right to vote and can cast ballots even though they are behind bars. Generally, people convicted of felonies lose the right to vote.

■ Nixon tapes worry Bush campaign

The George W. Bush campaign expressed concern about the government's release of 420 hours of former President Nixon's secret White House tapes that include the voice of the presidential candidate's father. But the National Archives made the tapes public Thursday, as scheduled. The Bush camp was worried that any untoward remarks by Nixon or other key Republican figures that might be on the recordings could affect the Texas Governor's bid for the presidency just two weeks before the election. But John H. Taylor, executive director of the Richard Nixon Library & Birthplace Foundation in Yorba Linda, Calif., said, "I have substantial familiarity with the content of the release. I can assure you there is absolutely nothing that's prejudicial in the least to the Bush family." The elder Bush is heard talking on only three of the 4,140 conversations that were released. The tapes carry conversations that occurred in late 1971.

■ Gore launches PBS campaign speeches

Al Gore kicked off a series of short campaign speeches on PBS stations Thursday night by offering viewers a biographical sketch of his life as a Vietnam veteran, husband of 30 years, father of four and public servant. The stations are turning over 2 1/2 minutes of airtime for eight nights to the presidential candidates, Gore and George W. Bush, to be aired each weeknight following "The NewsHour with Jim Lehrer." Bush and Gore will alternate nights through Nov. 3. Gore will follow up Thursday night's introductory sketch with three issue pieces, including a final one about his pledge to enact campaign finance reform if elected. Bush will use his air time to talk about his plans for Social Security, education, and Medicare.

■ Experts fault Bush, Gore retirement plans

A nonpartisan organization of financial experts said Thursday that proposals offered by presidential candidates George W. Bush and Al Gore to reform Social Security and Medicare were flawed. The American Academy of Actuaries issued a report describing the plans of Democrat Gore and Republican Bush as "incomplete, at times internally inconsistent, potentially misleading." It said both men's proposals concerning the Social Security retirement program and the Medicare health care program for the elderly and disabled left many questions unanswered. Ron Gebhardtsbauer, the academy's senior pension fellow, said in his analysis that the Bush proposal to create individual retirement accounts using money from Social Security taxes would bring back federal budget deficits in 2015. And "Vice President Gore's Medicare plan to use an imaginary 'lockbox' has more to do with politics than policy. It still leaves future seniors vulnerable," King said. He said the next president would have to choose among a combination of "new taxes, deficits, benefit cuts or reduced spending on other programs" in order to preserve health care for Americans in the future.

■ Summers defends Bush comments

Treasury Secretary Lawrence Summers Thursday defended his criticism of George W. Bush's plans for Social Security, saying he was simply raising questions that should be asked. "It is appropriate to ask questions of those making major overhauls of the system," Summers said. On Wednesday, Republican vice presidential candidate Dick Cheney said he it was inappropriate for President Clinton's top Cabinet members including Summers to be involved in the presidential campaign. "Traditionally, what happens is the treasury secretary and the defense secretary and the secretary of state stay out of partisan politics," Cheney, a former defense secretary, said. In an interview, Summers said that Bush's proposal to overhaul Social Security shows his "fundamental misunderstanding" of the retirement program.

■ Gore says he can lure Nader votes

Vice President Al Gore Thursday said votes for Green Party presidential candidate Ralph Nader may help Republican George W. Bush in his bid for the White House, but that he could win potential Nader voters in November's election based on his own environmental record. Speaking on ABC's 'Good Morning America,' Gore said while he was not dismissing Nader and his ability to draw liberal-minded voters from him in states like Oregon and California, he wanted people to support a candidate for positive reasons. "I don't like the argument that a vote for Nader is a vote for Bush," Gore said. "It may be true, but my argument that I much prefer is I want to convince all of the voters to support me with enthusiasm, and where issues like the environment are concerned, I'll put my record up against anybody's." In a tight contest between Gore and Bush, polls show Nader has no chance of winning the election. But his single-digit support apparently draws more potential votes from Gore rather than from Bush and could make the difference in favor of the Texas governor in some states, according to political analysts.

■ Bushisms continue on campaign trail

George W. Bush's struggle with the English language continued this week with the Texas governor promising voters in Daytona, Fla., that he would give them tax cuts, "instead of increasing the skies and scope of the federal government." Also, warning against big government, Bush said, "The surest way to slow down this economy is to have a huge federal government crowding out crapital." Realizing his defecatory mistake, he corrected himself and said "capital." Finally, the governor tripped through the centuries when talking about President Clinton's impeachment. "That's the last chapter of the 20th century, or 21st century that most of us would rather forget." The impeachment proceedings took place in 1999, the last year of the 20th century. Apparently Bush's speech malady is contagious. Arizona Sen. John McCain, who was campaigning with the GOP nominee, engaged in a little unprecedented ticket splitting. "Governor Bush's message to young Americans is there is nobility in serving a cause greater than your self interest and that's what a Gore/Cheney presidency means," he said.

Clinton, Congress roll toward veto showdown over taxes, immigration

By Alan Fram
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Less than two weeks from Election Day, Republicans pushed a tax-cut package and a spending bill through the House on Thursday, setting up a double-barreled veto showdown with President Clinton.

Abruptly enlivening the last days of a Congress that had been languidly inching toward adjournment, Clinton was poised to veto both measures in a sharply partisan confrontation over tax reductions, school construction, health care and immigration.

The pre-election tussle seemed likely to draw public attention to the final days of a simmering budget battle that for weeks had been drowned out by the neck-and-neck presidential race, a terrorist attack on a U.S. destroyer and a Middle East crisis.

The House voted 237-174, mostly along party lines, for a bill that would pare taxes by $240 billion over the next decade for some small businesses, people saving for retirement and others. The tally fell short of the 289 votes the House would need to overturn a veto if all 433 House members voted.

The measure also would boost the hourly minimum wage by $1 and roll back Medicare cuts imposed on health-care providers three years ago.

Later, the House by a 206-198 vote passed the spending bill, which would provide $39.9 billion for the new fiscal year for the departments of Commerce, Justice and State. It also would revamp immigration laws and dispense hundreds of millions of dollars for lawmakers' hometown projects and industries nationwide.

Senate votes on both measures were expected today.

Clinton wrote letters to GOP leaders saying he had "no choice but to veto" the bills. He said the measures fell short of his proposals for liberalizing immigration laws for up to 2 million people, helping school districts build and repair schools, paring taxes for people facing health-care and long-term care expenses, and financing the federal lawsuit against the tobacco industry.

"You chose to put forward a partisan legislative package that ignores our key concerns," Clinton wrote lawmakers about the tax measure. On the spending bill, Clinton complained that Republicans were adding provisions "that would reward special interests at the expense of the public interest."

Republicans charged forward anyway, convinced that the controversial provisions were either widely popular or would appeal to the GOP's conservative base. This included their refusal to grant Clinton's plan for blanket amnesty for illegal aliens who arrived in the United States before 1986.

"Even though this is a great political time, and the politics are at a crescendo level, it's time for this body to quit the quibbling, to come together and pass good legislation," said House Speaker Dennis Hastert, R-Ill., delivering rare floor remarks as the House debated the tax bill.

Republican Rep. Dana Rohrabacher of California called Clinton's call for amnesty for illegal aliens "an insult" to legal immigrants and "a betrayal of our country and our people," while Democratic Rep. Robert Menendez of New Jersey spoke of "the darkest shadows that might exist in our society."

"The Latino community is watching what this Congress does on these votes," Menendez warned.

Besides seeking amnesty, Clinton wants permanent residency for political refugees from El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Haiti. He also would let some applicants for permanent residency avoid having to return home to await a final decision.

Republicans would allow legal appeals in some longtime disputes over immigration status and let close relatives of permanent residents remain as their cases are considered, affecting 1 million immigrants.

Federal judge puts prescription drug law on hold

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) — A federal judge blocked Maine's pioneering law aimed at cutting the cost of prescriptions with the threat of price controls Thursday, saying it would likely be tossed out as unconstitutional.

The preliminary injunction granted by Judge D. Brock Hornby prevents the state from enforcing the law pending the outcome of a lawsuit filed by the Pharmaceutical Research and Manufacturers of America, which represents about 100 drug companies.

PhRMA contends the Maine Rx Program is unconstitutional because it would regulate transactions outside the state and because it conflicts with federal law.

Hornby said PhRMA's chances of winning the federal lawsuit it filed in August to scrap the first law of its kind are "overwhelming."

Gov. Angus King said he interpreted the ruling to say Maine had focused on the "right target" but had chosen the "wrong method."

The law, which was to take effect Jan. 1, would cover anyone without insurance coverage for prescription drugs, an estimated 325,000 residents. The state would seek rebates from drug manufacturers and labelers that participate in publicly supported prescription programs, including Medicaid.

Price controls could be imposed in three years unless there are significant price reductions. The state also could make it more difficult for certain products to be offered through Medicaid by requiring doctors to seek state approval and justify prescription choices.

Some drug companies decided to stop shipping products directly to Maine. Industry lawyers said the state was interfering with federal law by requiring drug companies to participate in both Medicaid and the state program.

Hornby found merit in the claim, saying states cannot legislate outside their boundaries, whatever their intent to help the uninsured facing "astronomical prescription drug prices."

Maine Human Services Commissioner Kevin Concannon said the ruling would be reviewed but the program was not being dropped.

"The good news is the program isn't enjoined per se," he said. "(But) there's no question that it is a setback."

He said the state now cannot force drug companies to participate in the program, but Maine can move forward with 50 companies that already agreed to participate. Another 10 companies are negotiation with the state.

Alan F. Holmer, president of PhRMA, said he was pleased that the court "recognized the need to prevent the state from moving ahead with its planned implementation of an unconstitutional price-control statute."

Spokesman Jeff Trewhitt said PhRMA wants to expand access to prescription drugs, but through market-based approaches like a purchasing pool being organized by New Hampshire, Vermont and Maine.

State judicial posts need your attention during this election

This year, the presidential campaign has focused more attention than usual on the Texas legal system.

While the Eastern Seaboard and Silicon Valley might not see eye-to-eye with Texas, many of us feel we have a statewide judiciary that works.

On Nov. 7, voters will find the names of many statewide judicial candidates on the ballot. While these races don't attract many headlines, they remain important to the people of Texas.

Nathan Hecht, the senior justice on the Texas Supreme Court, has proven himself to be learned, thorough jurist. A Republican, Hecht was originally elected to the state's supreme court in 1988. Prior to that he served as a judge at the appellate and district levels.

In his re-election bid for Place 1 on the Texas Supreme Court he faces Libertarian Jacobellis and Green Party candidate Ben Levy.

Hecht is far superior to his two rivals and ought to be returned to the state's supreme court for another term.

In Place 2 Republican Priscilla Owen is running unchallenged for re-election and in Place 2, Al Gonzales is running for another term. Both are Republicans, have done a good job on the bench and deserve the support of Midland voters.

On the Court of Criminal Appeals, court incumbent Sharon Keller, a Republican, is facing a determined challenge from Democrat Bill Vance. He has spent considerable time and effort traveling around Texas, trying to raise the level of discussion concerning the presiding judge's seat. We applaud him for his efforts. However, Judge Keller, who has served on the Court of Criminal Appeals since 1995, has stronger credentials and holds values in synch with the majority of Texans.

For Place 1 on the Court of Criminal Appeals, Republican Charles Holcomb is facing Libertarian Rife Scott Kimler. In Place 2, Republican Barbara Parker Hervey is facing a challenge from Democrat William R. Barr. Judges Holcomb and Hervey both have strong credentials — he as an experienced judge and she as a prosecuting attorney who has presented many cases before the Court of Criminal Appeals.

There is a temptation to take for granted the judicial votes which are at the tailend of the ballot. While we have encouraged Midland County voters to show their support of White House contender George W. Bush and to speak out in local races, judicial races remain important, too.

Early voting continues next week. Election day is Nov. 7.

If you haven't already cast your ballot, make it a point to get to the polls.

Your voice, your thoughts and your ideas are important. You need to be heard.

Today in History

Today is Friday, Oct. 27, the 301st day of 2000. There are 65 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Oct. 27, 1787, the first of the Federalist Papers, a series of essays calling for ratification of the United States Constitution, was published in a New York newspaper.

On this date:

In 1858, the 26th president of the United States, Theodore Roosevelt, was born in New York City.

In 1880, Theodore Roosevelt married Alice Lee.

In 1904, the first rapid transit subway, the IRT, opened in New York City.

In 1914, author-poet Dylan Thomas was born in Swansea, Wales.

In 1922, the first annual celebration of Navy Day took place.

In 1938, Du Pont announced a name for its new synthetic yarn: "nylon."

In 1947, "You Bet Your Life," starring Groucho Marx, premiered on ABC Radio. (It later became a television show on NBC.)

In 1954, Walt Disney's first television program, titled "Disneyland" after his yet-to-be completed theme park, premiered on ABC.

In 1967, Expo '67 closed in Montreal, Canada.

In 1978, Egyptian President Anwar Sadat and Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin were named winners of the Nobel Peace Prize for their progress toward achieving a Middle East accord.

Ten years ago: The Senate gave final legislative approval to a record package of taxes and spending cuts, hours after the House approved the plan. Death claimed bandleader Xavier Cugat at age 90 and author Elliott Roosevelt at age 80.

Five years ago: A sniper killed one soldier and wounded 18 others at Fort Bragg, N.C. (Paratrooper William J. Kreutzer was later convicted in the shootings, and condemned to death.) Thousands rallied in Montreal for national unity three days before a referendum on whether Quebec should secede.

HELEN THOMAS

Clinton itching to get on campaign trail

WASHINGTON — President Clinton will no longer be a stranger in Vice President Al Gore's campaign, but the nation's top two Democrats won't be seen side by side like the winning team they were in the last eight years.

Thomas

That's too bad for the Democrats because the outcome of the Nov. 7 presidential election will be determined by who actually votes. The president could serve his party — and the Democratic nominee — by forcefully campaigning throughout the nation and rousing Democrats to go the polls. The political pros call it "energizing your base."

Early on, Gore made a strategic decision to keep Clinton at arm's length lest he be tainted with the president's sex scandal problems. In doing so, Gore has lost a lot of time in getting Clinton on the bandwagon to rally the troops. Clinton is still a big drawing card and he can be more help than hindrance.

Now, in the waning days of this down-to-the-wire campaign, the president is being invited to take a carefully defined foray into California — a state where the president's popularity remains very high. Clinton's mission is to take on Ralph Nader, who has made inroads among young Democratic voters.

Clinton will campaign for Gore there but won't appear with the vice president. It looks like Gore doesn't want to be in the same picture with the president.

Gore might be making a mistake.

By contrast, Hillary Rodham Clinton, who is running for a Senate seat in New York, is welcoming her husband's political assistance. He gets out on the platform with her and has dubbed himself her cheerleader-in-chief.

Clearly, the president has been itching to plunge into the presidential campaign to defend the economic record of his administration.

For Clinton — a man who lives and breathes politics — being consigned to the sidelines in the campaign has been frustrating. The president has brooded that Gore is letting golden opportunities pass him by.

When the obvious separation between the two Democrats first began, Clinton turned the other cheek and was very understanding. But as the tight election moves down to the wire, he has been champing at the bit.

The president retains a strong popular following, despite the relentless pursuit of his scalp by Republican leaders who never accepted the fact that a governor from the "little state" of Arkansas had defeated President George Bush, commander in chief during the Persian Gulf war.

The president has not been exactly sitting on his hands. He has appeared at more than 180 fund-raisers over the last year or so, and has added millions to the Democratic Party's coffers.

Still, he wants to be out there beating the Bushes again.

White House chief of staff John Podesta says the president has promised that he would do "whatever is best" to help Gore win.

At the same time, according to Podesta, Clinton "does not want to meddle" and he knows there can only be one party candidate at a time. The vice president needs "to make the sale," he said. "We're the second fiddle in the orchestra," he adds.

When he began his campaign, Gore laid down a marker to distance himself from the president. He moved his headquarters to Nashville. He chose as his running mate, Sen. Joseph Lieberman, D-Conn., best known for denouncing Clinton in a Senate floor oration on morality in the wake of the revelations about Clinton and Monica Lewinsky. And he has asserted repeatedly, "I am my own man."

That may be true. But in politics, a candidate needs all the help he can get.

LEAGUE OF WOMEN VOTERS

Campaign finance reform is No. 1 issue

Editor's Note: The following opinion piece was provided by the League of Women Voters.

What is the most important health care issue facing our country? Prescription drug coverage for seniors? Ensuring that every child has adequate health coverage? Making sure that HMOs are responsive to the needs of patients, rather than just to the financial bottom line?

You may think these are important health care issues. And they are.

But, in reality, the most important health care issue facing our country is campaign finance reform.

Why? Because campaign finance determines who our elected representatives listen to first. Campaign finance determines whether our elected representatives will be responsive to the needs of voters or to the needs of big-money contributors. And that directly affects the government policies that determine the level of health care coverage we get.

What is the most important environmental issue facing our country? Is it global warming? Is it drinking water safety? Is it sprawl that is engulfing our neighborhoods?

No. The most important environmental issue is campaign finance reform. We live in a system that allows special interests to give our elected officials virtually unlimited sums of money to pay for their election campaigns. Is it any wonder the positions advocated by polluters are heard so clearly?

What is the most important issue facing our country on taxes? Is it the need to continue and expand the tremendous economic growth that has occurred with the reduction in the federal deficit? Is it the need of families to save and invest to ensure their children can go to college? Is it the distribution of wealth in our society?

We in the League of Women Voters understand that the most important tax issue facing our country is campaign finance reform. Because we in the League of Women Voters understand that campaign finance affects virtually every important public policy issue.

From tax policy to environmental policy, from health care to gun control, the way we fund our campaigns has a profound impact.

That is why we are asking you to join us in looking to see whether candidates will, if they are elected, vote for campaign finance reform.

We know that you care about the vital issues that are being debated in this campaign season. More importantly, we know you care that these issues are resolved by our elected representatives, from the President to our state legislators, with a concern for the voters instead of a concern for the money special interests are able to contribute.

We believe you want to help us reform our political system so it puts the voters first.

Find out where your candidates stand on campaign finance reform. Hold their feet to the fire, and ask them to vote for campaign finance reform if they are elected to represent you.

To see how members of Congress from the Texas delegation have voted on campaign finance reform, and other key public policy issues, log on to http://www.iwv.org/takeaction/keyvotes.html. Bipartisanship in Texas: Is it transferable?

WACO — Gov. George W. Bush talks a lot about bringing bipartisanship to Washington if elected president, citing his experience in his home state. But because the Texas situation is so rare that it is almost unique, it could be an uphill battle.

Three of Bush's four major priorities for his first legislative session in 1995 had already been the subjects of interim legislative committees, so it was not a huge stretch to work with the legislative leadership in enacting them. And since both legislative bodies had Democratic majorities, Bush wouldn't have achieved any success without cooperation.

McNeely

Texas is one of a diminishing handful of states that does not organize its Legislature like Congress, along partisan lines, says Dr. Gary Keith, a political science professor at Tarleton State University in Stephenville.

Two legislators participating with Keith in a recent symposium at Baylor University — Democratic state Rep. Jim Dunnam and Republican state Sen. David Sibley, both of Waco — said they like bipartisanship. They'd like to see it not only survive, but spread.

Dunnam lauded Texas House Speaker Pete Laney, a Democrat, for running the House in a bipartisan fashion, where he said at least the Democrats represent their districts rather than their party.

While he said some of his Republican colleagues have told him they've been pressured on some votes by their party, "I've never been told to vote a particular way," Dunnam said.

"I represent the people of McLennan County," Dunnam said. "If the party has that kind of power, you will not be represented. The party will."

"I agree," said Sibley, who said he doesn't like the congressional style of having all committee chairmen in a legislative body coming from the majority party.

"I just don't think people are best-served by that," Sibley said. "Having Republican chairman and Democratic chairmen is a good thing."

Sibley, who held the non-partisan office of mayor of Waco before his election to the Senate in 1991, is courting senators of both parties in hopes of becoming the state's next lieutenant governor if Bush becomes president and Republican Lt. Gov. Rick Perry moves up.

Sibley said he had only seen two straight-line party votes in the 31-member Senate — the most recent a vote on a Hate Crimes bill in 1999. If someone told Texas senators they should vote a particular way for partisan reasons, as congressmen have told him happens in Washington, "we'd laugh at 'em," Sibley said.

He said he's put off when he sees the likes of Republican U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm of Texas or U.S. House Democratic Minority Leader Dick Gephardt of Missouri campaigning against their colleagues of the other party.

He said the Texas Senate "rules of engagement" hold that "You don't go and campaign against an incumbent — period," Sibley said.

If one of his fellow senators, with whom he'd worked to pass laws in Austin, were to come and campaign against him, Sibley said, "I want to tell you, I would resent it."

He wouldn't campaign for an opponent of a sitting Democratic senator, Sibley said, even if the Republican challenger were his own brother.

Gene therapy controls Parkinson's disease in monkey experiment

WASHINGTON (AP) — A gene therapy experiment relieved severe symptoms of Parkinson's disease in monkeys, and experts say the technique offers promise for treating the 1.2 million Americans who suffer from the disease.

A virus that had been joined with a gene that prompts production of dopamine, a chemical neurotransmitter, was injected into the brains of monkeys who had chemically induced Parkinson's disease.

Three monkeys that had severe symptoms of Parkinson's were restored to near normal by the gene therapy, said Jeffrey H. Kordower, first author of a study appearing Friday in the journal Science.

"We are able to stop the disease in its tracks and to keep it from progressing," said Kordower, the director of the Research Center for Brain Repair at the Rush Presbyterian-St. Luke's Medical Center in Chicago.

"The experiment showed dramatic protective effects," said Dr. Ted M. Dawson, head of the Parkinson's Disease Research Center at Johns Hopkins University Medical Center. "It is promising, but I would be only cautiously optimistic."

Parkinson's disease, which affects about 1.2 million Americans, is a progressive disorder that affects brain cells that make dopamine. The loss of dopamine causes the classic Parkinson's symptoms: trembling, slow and stiff movement of limbs, a halting walk, speech difficulties and loss of balance. Cause of the disease is unknown and there is currently no cure.

Before the gene therapy could be tried in humans, questions about safety would have to be answered, Dawson said.

Dr. Mark H. Tuszynski, head of a brain disorder research center at the University of California, San Diego, said the experiment in monkeys was "fascinating" and offers the promise of "a very attractive therapy."

He said, however, that it is not known whether the brain cells affected by the chemically induced Parkinson's in monkeys are precisely the same as those affected by the actual disease in humans.

Kordower said a separate safety study is under way in monkeys, and when that is completed in about six months, an application for human clinical trials would be prepared for presentation to the Food and Drug Administration.

If all of the studies go smoothly, said Kordower, the gene therapy could be ready for human testing in three to five years.

In the experiment, researchers Patrick Aebischer and Nicole Deglon at the Lausanne University Medical School in Switzerland altered a virus so it carried a human gene for a brain chemical called glial-derived neurotrophic factor, or GDNF. This chemical prompts the production of dopamine. The virus also was modified so it would not cause an infection.

The altered virus was injected into the brains of aged monkeys. Autopsies later showed the gene caused brain cells to make dopamine and halted the normal degeneration of brain cells.

In effect, said Kordower, the GDNF gene restored parts of the aged brains to a "youthful" condition, including an increase in the production of dopamine.

Kordower said the researchers then injected a group of Rhesus monkeys with a drug, MPTP, that artificially induces Parkinson's disease symptoms in both monkeys and humans. Ten of the monkeys developed slow movement and other symptoms of the disease.

Five of the monkeys were then given GDNF gene therapy injections into the brain. Five others were given a placebo. One monkey in each group died, for unknown reasons, following the injections.

Of the four remaining monkeys in the gene therapy group, three were totally relieved of the Parkinson's symptoms. The four control monkeys continued to show signs of the disease and became "severely impaired," said Kordower.

He said the beneficial effect lasted for at least eight months. The monkeys were then killed for a detailed analysis of their brains.

In the treated monkeys, the analysis showed the brain's dopamine production cells were protected and there was an increase in levels of dopamine. Brain cells in the control monkeys showed signs of degeneration, he said.

Among the Americans with Parkinson's, only about 15 percent of the patients are diagnosed before the age of 50. About one out of every 100 persons past the age of 60 has the disease, experts say.

Former Salvadoran generals accused of murders live quiet Florida life

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — They are now grandfathers living comfortably in Florida like so many other retirees. One has a satellite dish in his back yard, the other a pool.

But in a federal courtroom over the past two weeks, Jose Guillermo Garcia and Carlos Eugenio Vides Casanova have been depicted as powerful military figures who knew their troops were killing thousands of innocent people in El Salvador a generation ago.

The two former Salvadoran generals are on trial here in a civil case brought by the families of four American church women who were raped and murdered by Salvadoran National Guard soldiers in 1980.

The jury will decide whether the men ordered the killings or could have done something to stop them.

Garcia, a former Salvadoran defense minister, and Vides Casanova, who led the National Guard, both deny responsibility for the slayings.

The victims' families are seeking unspecified damages. They would also like to see the generals driven from this country.

"I'd be satisfied if during the trial, the generals went home, packed their bags and slipped out of the country in the middle of the night," Mike Donovan, the brother of one of the victims, told the Palm Beach Post.

Ken Hurwitz, an attorney with the Lawyers' Committee for Human Rights in New York, said money is not the driving force behind the lawsuit.

"It's about getting some sort of objective validation for what these families felt," he told the Post. "It's also for the educational value, so people know these criminals are able to come and live in the United States."

The victims were nuns Ita Ford, Maura Clarke and Dorothy Kazel and lay missionary Jean Donovan.

Garcia, 67, and Vides Casanova, 62, left El Salvador in 1989 after their military careers ended. The men were granted U.S. residency because they had never been convicted of a crime. Garcia said he was fleeing death threats.

re-enacting the HORROR

By Georgia Temple

A flat tire. A rainy night. An isolated castle. A mad scientist. A creation made by the mad scientist. What more does a horror fan need? Maybe a good laugh?

On Sept. 25, 1975, horror fans received just such a treat when Brad and Janet met Dr. Frank N. Furter and his latest creation, a party monster named Rocky Horror.

"I've seen the movie 300 times," said Christopher Borgman who plays the good doctor in The Falcon Players' production of Richard O'Brien's "The Rocky Horror Picture Show," on stage beginning Halloween in the Founder's Theatre at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin. "I'm kind of psychotic. It's one of my all-time favorites. I saw it for the first time when I was 15 and for eight long years I've been absolutely starving to do this show."

Despite its title, it's a comedy and not a horror flick.

"It's a spoof on horror," said Sean-Pierre Wilson, a.k.a. Rocky. "It pokes fun at sci-fi and it talks about Michael Rennie (Klaatu in) 'The Day the Earth Stood Still' and Flash Gordon."

The play and film spoof numerous other science-fiction and horror films and stories.

"It's essentially a brilliant dark comedy," Borgman said. "This script does not realize how clever it is as a parody of sci-fi and horror as well as the social mores at the time it was written. Aside from the science-fiction references, there's a lot of references in a very veiled way toward what the country was going through at the time."

Borgman isn't the only cast member under the rocky-horror spell.

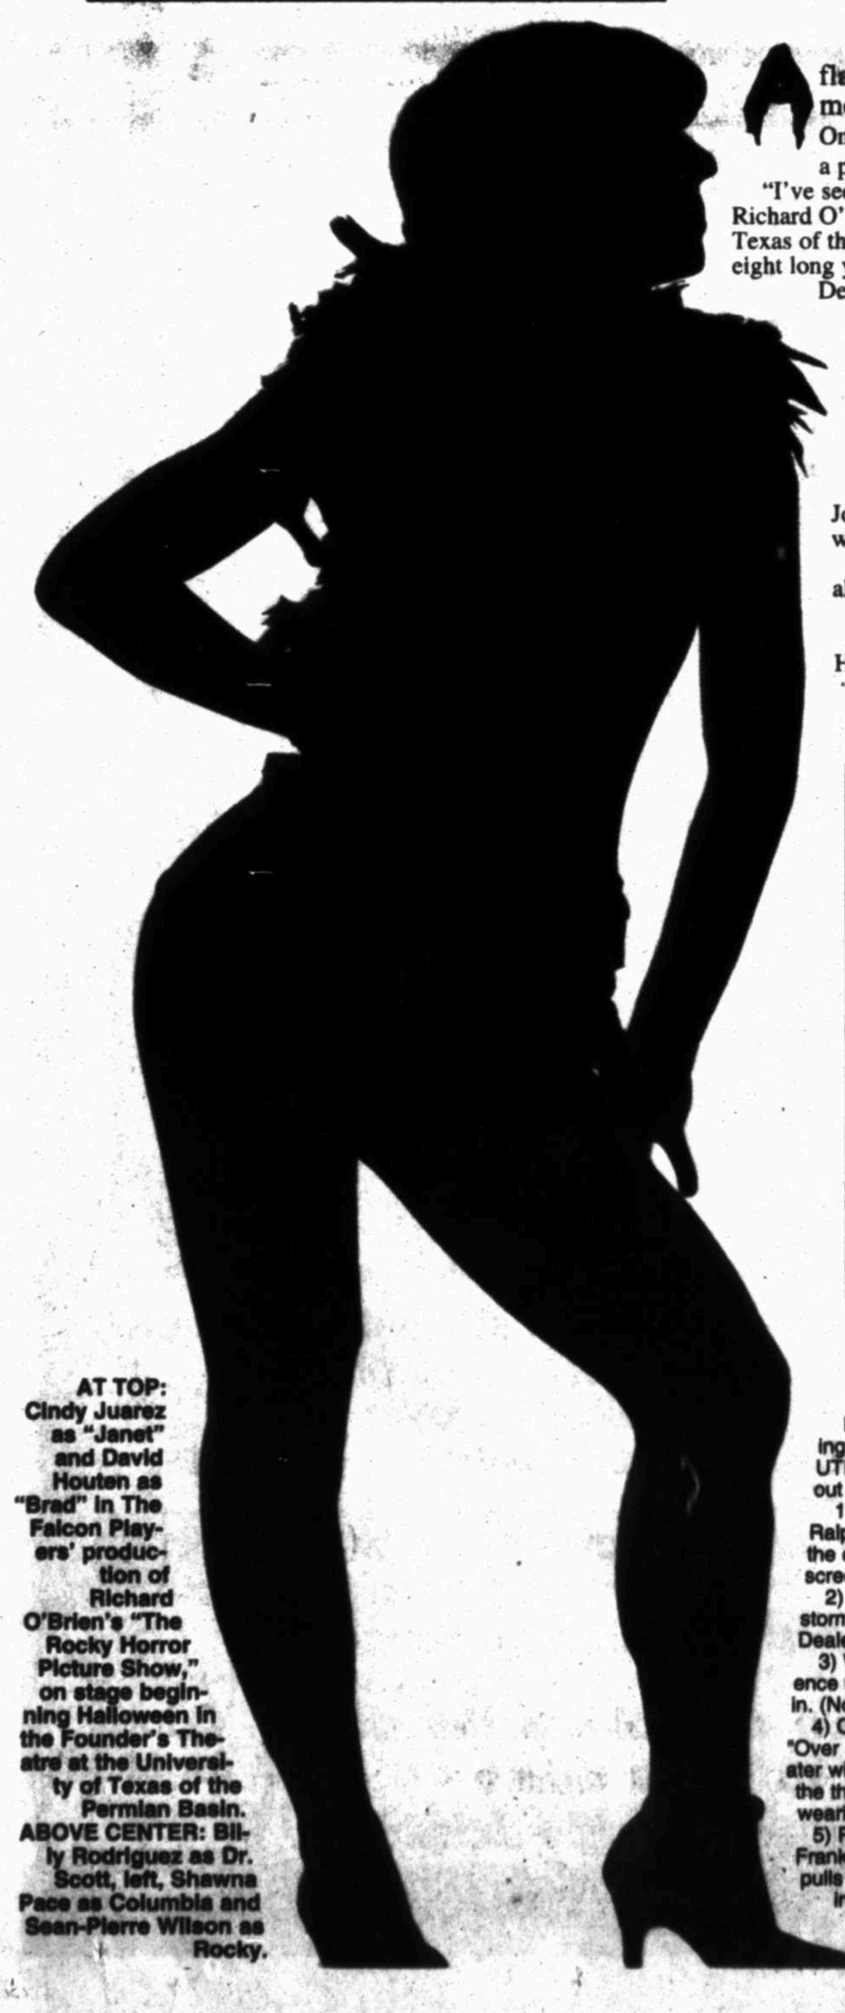

"I've always been a huge 'Rocky' fan," said Seba Wagner, who plays Magenta. "I got to see it for the first time in San Jose, Calif., when I was a teen-ager, and it was the cinema version with the live cast in front of it. I absolutely fell in love with it."

"I started watching 'Rocky' probably about 10 years ago," said David Van Houten, who plays the unsuspecting Brad. "I always was drawn to the movie and the audience part at the theater."

When Houten recently moved from South Carolina to West Texas, he was in a theater production of "Rocky Horror."

"That's where they actually show the movie on the screen and have the people performing in front of the screen," said Houten, who is originally from this area. "When I got ready to move out here, I called Dr. Watson to see what they were

OFFICIAL PROP LIST

Following is a list of props used by fans attending a showing of "The Rocky Horror Picture Show." Those attending the UTPB production need to call 552-2280 or 552-2281 to find out which props will be admitted into the performance.

1) Rice — At the beginning of the film is the wedding of Ralph Hapschatt and Betty Munroe. As the newlyweds exit the church, you should throw the rice along with the on-screen wedding guests.

2) Newspapers — When Brad and Janet are caught in the storm, Janet covers her head with a newspaper The "Plain Dealer". At this point, you should likewise cover your head.

3) Water pistols — These are used by members of the audience to simulate the rainstorm that Brad and Janet are caught in. (Now do you see why you should use the newspapers?)

4) Candles, flashlights — During the "There's a light" verse of "Over at the Frankenstein Place, "you should light up the theater with candles, flashlights, lighters, etc. (Be careful to respect the theater's policy about open flames — remember you are wearing newspapers on your head!)

5) Rubber gloves — During and after the creation speech, Frank snaps his rubber gloves three times. Later, Magenta pulls these gloves on his hands. You should snap your gloves in sync each time to create a fantastic sound effect.

6) Noisemakers — At the end of the creation

PARENT TO PARENT

A Family Guide to Current Movies

This column rates current movies for parents and others who want help in choosing films that reflect traditional values and are suitable for family viewing. Films are rated in two categories: Entertainment (rated 0 to +4) and Acceptability (rated -4 to +4). I'll add brief comments to clarify the reasons for the ratings. Movies listed are currently playing in Midland and/or Odessa as of this writing.

DR. T AND THE WOMEN (R; 0, -3) This is honestly the worst movie I have ever seen. Not "worst" as in "most unsuitable for children;" I hope that "Scary Movie" holds that title for a long time. No, here I'm talking about the single most stupid waste of talent and film that I have ever sat through. With stars like Richard Gere and Helen Hunt, I had expected some entertainment, but this is a movie without a plan. It tries to be a comedy; it tries to be a drama; finally, at the end, I guess it tries to be "The Wizard of Oz," transporting Gere in his convertible by tornado from Dallas to a Mexican desert (somebody should have checked a map or a meteorologist). As far as acceptability, we have wife Farrah Fawcett dancing stark naked in a mall fountain, daughter Kate Hudson running off with maid of honor/lesbian lover Liv Tyler at the wedding, lots of sexual/gynecological humor, and a simulated birth, photographed in graphic, close-up detail. Leave the kids at home, and don't hire a sitter — stay home with them.

PAY IT FORWARD (PG-13; 4, -2) This is an amazing, powerful, inspiring, and unsettling film, and it's one of the best things to come out of Hollywood this year, and the big-time critics hate it. That's usually a really good sign, so ignore them and see this movie, but take the Kleenex, not the kids. Moderate language and adult themes and a shocking surprise ending (don't you DARE tell anybody how it ends, and I won't either) make it a film for grown-ups, and a great cast, a great premise, and a great script make it a must-see. P.S. — If any of you wish to take the movie's example and give me a brand-new Jaguar to drive, I can be reached at the e-mail address listed below.

BEDAZZLED (PG-13; 2 1/2, -2) I didn't dislike this film as much as I thought I would. A remake of an old Dudley Moore movie, it stars Elizabeth Hurley as the devil and Brendan Fraser as the hapless loser that signs away his soul for seven wishes. The ending, while making no attempt to be theologically correct, at least allows love to triumph over the schemes of the devil. All in all, it's fun for adults, but a great deal of sexual humor renders it unsuitable for kids.

THE EXORCIST (R; 3, -4) To answer the most frequently-asked question first, yes, this is the original 1973 film, with about eleven minutes of new footage and remastered surround sound to scare you from all different directions. Yes, it's the scariest horror film ever made, but it's also the filthiest, with extreme sexual content and obscenity so extreme that the "f-words" may not even be the strongest profanities present. Blasphemy is abundant, with the shocking scene involving abuse of a crucifix and obscene, sexual curses directed at Christ Himself. The depiction of the exorcism itself is relentlessly horrifying, and is based on a collection of actual cases, but the ending is unsatisfying and inaccurate, giving the credit for the demon's defeat not to an all-powerful God but to a self-sacrificial priest. Obviously not for kids, this is a movie I would urge most adults to avoid, too. It's over two hours of profoundly shocking and disturbing material.

LOST SOULS (R; 2, -3) Oh, goodie! Another satanic movie just in time for Halloween — as if we didn't have too many of them already. Actually, it's another Antichrist movie like "End of Days." This film's release was delayed for nearly 10 months, which is always a bad sign, and yet they didn't take the time to open a Bible and do their homework. The movie begins with a fabricated quote attributed to "Deuteronomy." Don't bother looking it up — it's not there. And the ending — killing the Antichrist with a handgun? We can only hope it'll be that easy. Meanwhile, violence, blasphemy, and language render this film "Adults Only."

THE CONTENDER (R; 1, -3) If you're a regular reader of this column, you probably don't have me confused with a political liberal. And if you're still reading these reviews, you're probably pretty conservative yourself. If so, this film is going to make you angry. If you're not a pro-abortion feminist atheist, the producers want to make you one. Relentlessly hammering at these three themes, this film is so agenda-laden that I can most accurately describe it as propaganda masquerading as entertainment. And how shocking it is that any actress can utter this absurd line with a straight face: "The separation of church and state isn't to protect the church from government; it's to protect the government from religious extremists." The character who says this claims Thomas Jefferson as a role model, but misinterprets his ideas completely. And what an amazing coincidence that leftist Hollywood released it just a month before the election! Lastly, how ironic that a film dedicated "for our daughters" is not concerned that more than 2,000 of our daughters are aborted each day in America. Pornographic pictures from the candidate's past are prominently featured, and sexual subject matter and bad language add to the film's unacceptability for children or teens. Skip it yourself unless you just really enjoy being shamelessly manipulated or dismissed as a narrowminded extremist.

WOMAN ON TOP (R; 1, -3) This film left the Century 12 after just a week, but will probably be at the bargain theaters soon, so I'm including it for your information. A Brazilian beauty, cursed by Yemanja, the mermaid goddess, with extreme motion sickness, marries a hunk with a great singing voice, but leaves him when she catches him in bed with the upstairs neighbor. She travels to San Francisco to live with her best "girlfriend" Monica, a male transvestite, and hosts a successful cooking show, but hubby's still on her mind, so she cooks up a voodoo offering to the mermaid goddess to have her love for her husband removed. There's more, but I think you've got the idea. The only redeeming element is the great Brazilian music. But sex, nudity, and general stupidity of plot render this dish pretty tasteless.

THE LADIES' MAN (R; 0, -3) While this film failed to unseat "Dr.T" as my all-time worst, it still remains a total waste of celluloid. Reminiscent of the awful "Deuce Bigalow, Male Gigolo," this is a crude, sex-filled romp through the immature, obscene bottom of the humor barrel. Don't waste a penny on it.

THE LEGEND OF DRUNKEN MASTER (R; 2, -1) I guess Jackie Chan's just about run out of plots — a martial artist who can't fight when he's sober? Actually, the film is about a master of a particular martial art referred to as "drunken boxing," which seemingly does not actually require the use of alcohol. The fighting is fast and fabulous and the film is fun despite a weak plot and dubbed-in dialogue. Violence and language keep it from being a family film.

FILMS TO AVOID: Scary Movie (unfortunately, it's still here); The Ladies' Man; Nutty Professor II: The Klumps. These are raunchy, sex-filled, dirty movies which nobody under 17 should see under any circumstances.

FILMS FOR THE WHOLE FAMILY: Disney's The Kid, X-Men; Dinosaur; Chicken Run (fortunately, it's back!); and Remember the Titans.

FILMS FOR THE SLIGHTLY MORE MATURE: Space Cowboys; The Patriot; Coyote Ugly; Big Momma's House; Bring it On; Almost Famous; Gone in Sixty Seconds; Bedazzled; The Legend of Drunken Master.

FILMS FOR ADULTS ONLY: Hollow Man; What Lies Beneath, The Cell, Bless the Child, Autumn in New York; The Watcher; Get Carter; Meet the Parents; Highlander: Endgame; Urban Legends: The Final Cut; The Exorcist; Pay It Forward; Lost Souls; The Contender; Dr. T and the Women.

FILMS FOR NOBODY BUT HARD-CORE DIGIMON FANS: Digimon: The Movie.

FAMILY FILM STATISTICS REVISITED: Of the 33 films currently playing in Odessa, 16 are rated "R," 12 are rated "PG-13," 3 are rated "PG," and 2 are rated "G." The 14 Midland films include: 7 "R," 4 "PG-13," 2 "PG," and one "G" film.

Next time, we'll look at some more new releases, including "Lucky Numbers," "The Little Vampire," and "Blair Witch 2: The Book of Shadows." As always, I recommend three good Web sites for information on new movies: www.screenit.com, www.gospelcom.net/preview, and www.upcomingmovies.com. SHOW: Production opens Halloween doing. She said, 'Rocky Horror,' and I said, 'OK. I'll be there. Just tell me when.'"

The production opens Halloween with two performances, 8 p.m. and midnight, and continues at 8 p.m. Friday and Saturday, Nov. 3-18.

"This is a really big Halloween seller," said Ms. Wagner, who is president of the Falcon Players. "This is the time of year for it."

Although it's popular at Halloween, it's not scary.

"Unless seeing men dressed up in women's underwear is scary," said Ms. Wagner. She laughed.

No? How about men wearing five-inch spike heels?

"I have a new respect for women," Borgman said. "I don't know how ya'll do it. My greatest fear is that I'm going to fall to my death off these heels."

"The hardest thing is doing these fun and energetic dances in four-inch and five-inch heels,' said Houten. "Given enough practice, we can do it, but like Chris said, I don't know how you're able to walk in those things."

Tickets are $5 and may be purchased through the Humanities and Fine Arts Department, Room 403, or at the door (if the performance is not sold out and midnight is going fast). Props will be admitted. For more information on which ones call the humanities office, 552-2280 or 552-2281.

For the uninitiated, the "Rocky Horror Picture Show" was a successful stage musical that was translated to the screen. Directed by Jim Sharman, Peter Suschitzky and Richard Hartley, the film starring Barry Bostwick, Susan Sarandon, Tim Curry, Charles Gray, Richard O'Brien, Patricia Quinn, Meat Loaf and Jeremy Newson was distributed by 20th Century Fox.

"I love them all," Ms. Wagner said of the different versions of the comedy/satire. "Any 'Rocky' I get. It's fun, no matter which version you see, it's just really fun."

"I don't think there's a whole lot of difference," Wilson said of the theatrical production and the film. "There are some slight differences in the movie. You have a lot more technical ability than you're capable of having onstage."

"There's a lot in the play that wasn't in the movie for whatever reason," said Houten. "Who knows why movie producers do the things they do."

"Some of the music is a little bit different than the play version," Wilson said. "For the performance we're doing here, we're using a karaoke format where the music is going to fit better for the theater here."

In the theatrical production staged in front of the film, Houten said, "The audience comes to you. In this, we're going to the audience."

"We have a stage going through the middle of the chairs," said Ms. Wagner. "We'll have a lot of audience interaction that everybody, especially 'Rocky' fans, will enjoy."

The cast creating all this fun also includes Angel Harper as Trixie, Brandi Matheson as Phantom, Chris Mitchell as Riff-Raff, Shawna Pace as Columbia, Billy Rodriguez as Eddie and Dr. Scott. The story they tell begins when Brad and Janet have a flat tire on a rainy night and wind up at Dr. Frank N. Furter's castle.

For Cindy Juarez, who plays Janet, this production marks her stage debut as well as her initiation in the rocky-horror world.

"I had never seen 'Rocky' before auditioning for the show," Ms. Juarez said. "I just heard about it and really hadn't heard that much about it at that. I just thought it would be a fun thing to do so I auditioned."

Then she rented the movie.

"I thought, 'Oh, my gosh, what did I get myself into?' And, I guess, it kind of grew on me. I saw it a couple more times and said, 'OK. I'm doing this now, and that's what I wanted.'"

After a quarter of a century, "The Rocky Horror Picture Show" still has a growing fan base. Some credit part of the appeal to the music.

"It's the best musical," Borgman said. "I'm actually not much of a musical fan, but this is one of the few I like, and I think the music is what really endures the whole show. The music and the hilarious characters."

"I think it's about letting yourself go and allowing yourself to have fun," said Ms. Juarez. "You lead your life in a certain way, and doing this type of show allows you to be someone else. It's kind of like dressing up as a kid. We had that opportunity to do that as a kid. Well, this show allows us to do that as adults."

speech, the Transylvanians respond with applause and noisemakers. You should do the same.

7) Confetti - At the end of the "Charles Atlas Song" reprise, the Transylvanians throw confetti as Rocky and Frank head toward the bedroom. You should do the same.

8) Toilet paper — When Dr. Scott enters the lab, Brad cries out "Great Scott!" At this point, you should hurl rolls of toilet paper into the air. (Preferably Scotts.)

9) Toast — When Frank proposes a toast at dinner, members of the audience throw toast into the air. (Preferably unbuttered - things could get sticky.)

10) Party hat — At the dinner table, when Frank puts on a party hat, you should do the same.

11) Bell — During the song "Planet Schmanet," ring the bell when Frank sings "Did you hear a bell ring?"

12) Cards — During the song "I'm Going Home" Frank sings "Cards for sorrow, cards for pain". At this point you should shower the theater with cards.

13) Hot dogs and prunes — it has happened on occasion, that fans will throw hot dogs and prunes at their appropriate mention in the film. This should not be encouraged because it attracts rodents and leaves stains on the screen.

David R. Allen of Midland College is preparing to open the comedy "Arsenic and Old Lace" at Midland Community Theatre, and was unavailable for this review.

"Best in Show", a new comedy by Christopher Guest, has opened in movie theaters across the country. Unfortunately, this movie has not appeared in Midland (yet), and was reviewed in Lubbock.

TIM: Ever since the release of his hilarious send-up of community theater — 1996's "Waiting for Guffman" — I have looked forward to the next movie by Christopher Guest. In "Waiting for Guffman", Guest played Corky St. Clair, who returns to his hometown of Blair, Mo. to help celebrate the town's 150th anniversary. The characters who filled this parody were engaging and funny, and took dead aim at the people who utilize community theater as a means of stepping into the spotlight. Guest — as both writer and director — creates his movies through outlines and improvisation, allowing each of the actors to contribute to the finished product. As a result of the freedom of his writing and directing style, Guest has built a following of actors who like to work with him.

For his newest movie, Guest chose the world of dog shows — and the people who work with and show dogs — as his subject matter. Along for the ride are many of his favorite actors, including Parker Posey ("House of Yes"), Michael Hitchcock ("Happy, Texas"), Eugene Levy ("American Pie"), Catherine O'Hara ("Home Alone") and Michael McKeon ("Spinal Tap"). However, just listing these actors does a disservice to the overall quality of the ensemble, for his movie has so many good characters and sub-stories that transport you backstage into the world of dog shows and their people.

"Best in Show" is a very funny movie, as it provides you with the opportunity to laugh at others whose actions are at once real and yet hilarious. Michael Hitchcock and Parker Posey deserve special credit for creating a wildly dysfunctional couple whose dog cannot cope with watching them make love. The interaction between these talented actors makes you believe that each individual is fully convinced that they are rational, yet everyone in the audience knows that these are not sane people. Catherine O'Hara and Eugene Levy play a couple whose life revolves around their terrier with dignity and pride. Fred Willard ("Roxanne") may be the one actor who takes their role over the top, playing the television announcer at the Mayflower Dog Show who has no clue as to the purpose or meaning of this event. His out-of-place comments are funny at first, but eventually begin to wear thin.

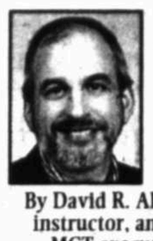

In the end, Midland needs more solid character comedies like "Best in Show". With fewer theater screens now available in Midland, I'm afraid we shall see less opportunities for good movies like this one and more opportunities for movies by Sylvester Stallone ("Get Carter"). That's too bad, because the excellent acting and great laughs make "Best in Show" a full-fledged gusher.

Other London: 18th-century dwellings where lawyers live, learn

By Audrey Woods
Associated Press

LONDON — In the heart of the city, little more than a mile from the throngs of tourists at Buckingham Palace and the surging traffic of Piccadilly Circus, lie three tranquil squares where learning and the law have been pursued for more than 600 years.

Lawyers in pinstripes walk briskly to and from their chambers in 18th-century brick buildings or stroll under the trees, deep in conversation with colleagues or clients.

These are the Inns of Court, where lawyers traditionally qualify for the bar and where many live and have offices.

They also are fine places to spend a peaceful afternoon enjoying the carefully tended lawns and rose gardens, and searching out the history hidden away in ancient corners.

You can stroll through all four within a half-mile (1 km), from Gray's Inn, off High Holborn, south through Lincoln's Inn and down to The Temple's two inns — Inner and Middle Temple— on the riverside Victoria Embankment.

They couldn't be handier for lawyers. All four are within a few minutes' brisk walk of the Royal Courts of Justice on The Strand and a short taxi ride from the "Old Bailey" Central Criminal Court so familiar to fans of detective stories and vintage British films.

Each inn has its own history, but their common background is as dwelling places for lawyers, some of whom took in resident students beginning in the late Middle Ages after the practice of law transferred from priests to secular professionals.

From this grew the role of the inns as centers of learning for the law. People "called to the bar" at the inns are barristers, who are qualified to practice in court. Solicitors handle non-court legal work.

Today, barristers have offices in a "set of chambers," and those who live in the inns have "a flat." Quaintly hand-painted boards at each doorway list the tenants.

Each inn has a library, a chapel and a hall for dining and social occasions.

If you visit, be sure to choose a weekday. The inns are closed Saturdays and Sundays. Anyway, on a weekend you'd miss the clerks laboring behind office windows over desks piled with documents tied with red strings, or "tape" — hence the expression about bureaucratic red tape.

A good place to start a walk through the inns is at the Chancery Lane tube (subway) stop. The first thing you see on reaching the street is the black-and-white Elizabethan facade of Staple Inn, with gables leaning picturesquely over the pavement. It and its somewhat younger red-brick annex look as if they will easily outlast the postwar concrete upstarts on either side.

The last remaining piece of Elizabethan domestic architecture in London, Staple Inn may have been a wool warehouse. It now holds offices.

On the north side of Holborn, next to the Cittie of Yorke pub, a

? had been removed for safety were reinstated.

If you follow the road into South Square and past the Hall, an alley on the left will take you into Field Court, where you will see a handsome early Georgian building that survived the Blitz. Across a slate-paved court, a pair of ornate 18th-century iron gates open onto the gardens, known since the days of diarist Samuel Pepys as "The Walks."

Here, people of fashion walked to see and be seen. Pepys came here in the 1660s "to catch up with court gossip," and with his wife "to observe fashions of the ladies."

The gardens with camellias and climbing roses are now more simply arranged. They are open to the public from noon to 2:30 p.m., Mondays through Fridays.

The chapel is open from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m., and you may attend services there on Sundays at 11:15 a.m.

Across Holborn, Chancery Lane leads down to Fleet Street past a stretch of the red brick that encloses much of Lincoln's Inn. About two minutes' walk down the lane, a low door opens onto a small grassy square and the tree-shaded serenity of the inn.

As with all the inns, narrow paths lead off here and there, around interesting corners, from row to row of mellow brick buildings. Here, they are mostly Georgian, with a huge Victorian mock-Tudor library and a 15th-century Old Hall, repaired after war damage.

The 17th-century chapel will be closed for refurbishment until October, then open to visitors from noon to 2:30 p.m. weekdays and as usual for services. Its foundation stone was laid by the poet John Donne, a preacher at the inn.

Another most famous Lincoln's Inn man was statesman Sir Thomas More, the Lord Chancellor who opposed King Henry VIII's supremacy as leader of the church — and lost his head for it. Charles Dickens worked at this inn briefly as a clerk and used it as a setting for "Bleak House."

The private garden with its velvet lawns is open to the public at lunchtime.

New Square, which hasn't been new since 1685, has a garden at its center, with flowering trees.

A magnificent wisteria vine twists across much of the front of one building, which is covered with clusters of purple blossoms in May.

There are several ways out of the inn but, if you are a lawyer or simply like old books and prints, head down to the end of New Square and through Gateway Arch onto Carey Street. Wildy and Sons set up a law bookstore in the arch in 1830 and it is still there, quaintly arranged on several levels.

Once you make your way back onto Chancery Lane, it's only a few minutes' walk to Fleet Street, where the thundering presses of the nation's newspapers have gone silent and sober businesses have replaced the journalists who abandoned their old offices a decade ago for high-tech premises downriver.

Just west of the intersection you will see the Temple Bar, one of the boundary stones of the square-mile City of London, now the financial district. A dragon prances atop the monument where, until the mid-18th century, the severed heads of traitors were displayed on a stone archway.

Just across Fleet Street and a few steps to the east, narrow Mitre Court runs under an archway to the Inner Temple. The Clachan pub, with its outdoor tables, offers a place for a breather as soon as you're through the arch.

The first available right turn will take you to the round Temple Church built during the Crusades by the militant religious order of the Knights Templar, dedicated to recapturing Jerusalem from its Muslim rulers.

The church, apparently modeled on the Holy Sepulchre in Jerusalem, has stood on this spot since 1185 and, despite the attentions of Victorian restorers and World War II bombers, retains an ancient atmosphere.

The stone effigies of eight knights, dressed for battle against the infidel, are very individual reminders of the legions of men who walked, rode and sailed thousands of miles on their ultimately fruitless quest in the Holy Land.

The knights built a splendid monastery, used by the crown as well as the knights. King John was living there when summoned to sign the Magna Carta in 1215.

The Templars were enormously wealthy and powerful — and answerable only to the pope. But it wasn't wise in the days of absolute monarchy to arouse the jealousy of kings, and Philip IV of France persuaded the pope to persecute the Templars.

The order was suppressed and its London properties were confiscated. After a time in the hands of another militant order, the Hospitallers, the property was given by the English King Edward II to a cousin, who granted it to law professors to use for lodgings. So began its role in the legal profession.

Temple Church serves both inns. The two are divided by Middle Temple Lane but are very similar in atmosphere and age. And both have lovely gardens, closed to the public but easily visible.

In "Henry VI," William Shakespeare sets the opening of the Wars of the Roses in one of these gardens, where tradition holds that the white and red roses of the houses of York and Lancaster first were picked.

Middle Temple Hall, opened by Queen Elizabeth I in 1576, has a fine hammerbeam roof and a table said to have been made from planks from The Golden Hind, Sir Francis Drake's ship.

Shakespeare's own theater company — perhaps with the bard himself performing — played "Twelfth Night" in this hall in 1602.

Middle Temple had quite a few famous residents. Henry Fielding, author of "Tom Jones" lived at 4 Pump Court, and Oliver Goldsmith wrote "She Stoops to Conquer" while living in Brick Court.

In this part of London, so badly bombed during the war, many brash, new buildings rub shoulders with old, mellow structures that have hung on since the Great Fire of 1666.

But the new pay respect to the old, bearing the names of long-vanished inns that became obsolete — inns of chancery, which law students attended before reaching the inns of court, and serjeants inns, independent societies of high-level barristers.

A good book to take with you on a walking tour is "Fleet Street, Holborn and the Inns of Court" in the London Guides series, by Roger Hudson and J.W. Blundell. Published by Haggerston Press, it is readily available in local bookshops.

Vintage bikes: Indian museum celebrates America's first motorcycles

By Trudy Tyana
Associated Press

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. — Nearly a century after Oscar Hedstrom and George Hendee launched America's love affair with powerful two-wheeled machines, the motorcycle's mystique lives on at the Indian Motocycle Museum.

Within the space of an hour on a recent weekday, visitors from Oregon, Ontario, Colorado and Florida had signed the guest book at the modest one-room museum hidden in an industrial complex.

It traces the history of the company that built America's first motorcycle — and spawned the motorcycle cop, the motorcycle outlaw and the motorcycle courier.

"It's sort of a pilgrimage," says Michael Shapiro of Denver, visiting the museum for a second time after the the annual motorcycle rally in Laconia, N.H.

Asked to explain the enduring fascination, Esta Manthos, who founded the museum with her late husband, Charles, talked about the reliability of Indian motorcycles and the opportunities they gave people who could not afford automobiles to enjoy the freedom of the open road.

Then she got the same dreamy look that tends to fall over the faces of museum visitors as they gaze down the rows of big bikes with skirted fenders and teardrop tanks that when motionless seem poised for flight.

"They are a legend," she says.

Hedstrom, a professional bicycle racer and engineer from Brooklyn, and Hendee, of Springfield, a five-time national high-wheel bicycle racing champ with a knack for raising money, started out looking for a powered machine to pace bicycle races.

The first Indian Motocycle — they spelled motorcycle without the R — puttered down Springfield streets on May 25, 1901.

Just a decade later Indian racers were hitting speeds of 100 mph and the company owned every American record for speed and distance.

In 1905, New York City police turned in their bicycles for Indians and the motorcycle cop was born.

Bullet-proof windscreens were built for police work in the 1920s and Indian remained the motorcycle for many law enforcement officers until the 1950s, when the Springfield company was sold to an English firm and ceased production.

Special sidecars, equipped to carry mail or loaded with hoses, axes and fire extinguishers, were developed for the postal service and fire departments.

DEAR ABBY

Wealthy sister keeps score for game sibling won't play

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My older sister "Jane" and I used to be close. She married 10 years ago, and her husband has done very well. Jane is a stay-at-home mom with three children. She and her husband recently purchased a million-dollar home in the wealthy area of our city. I took a different path, and now work full time in an industry I love. I enjoy life with my husband and two children. We have a lovely house in the suburbs.

Lately, whenever Jane and I are together — whether it's alone or in public — she has become aggressive about comparing our lifestyles. Although I wish Jane well, she has paid a high price for her affluence. I am not, nor have I ever been, jealous of her status. I have tried to convince her of this, but she tunes me out and continues her monologue about her nanny, housekeeper, new cottage, etc. I'm sure you get the picture. I have almost come to the point where I don't want to see her anymore.

Please guide me through this, Abby. I am annoyed and frustrated. How shall I handle this in the future? — YOUNGER SIS

DEAR YOUNGER SIS: You can't change other people, but you can change the way you react to them.

Although your sister "married well," she appears to be insecure and insensitive to the feelings of others. That is pitiable, not enviable. When she starts spouting off, bear that in mind and don't take the bait. It may help you to be more tolerant of her.

DEAR ABBY: I must reply to the letter you reprinted recently from the irate mother whose 16-year-old son received a birthday card from his grandparent with a note enclosed, telling him he was getting only the card — but no money that year — because he had failed to send a thank-you note for the money he had been given the year before. You told the mother that you thought the grandmother had given the young man a birthday gift far more valuable than money.

I disagree. One of my greatest pleasures is giving gifts.

However, whenever I do so, I must be absolutely certain that it is, in fact, a gift. That means I expect nothing in return — not even a thank-you. A gift should be given for no other reason than the joy of giving. It should be a celebration of the fact that you have someone to give to. — GORDON READE, PALO ALTO, CALIF.

DEAR GORDON: I have received a blitz of mail about that letter, and the "reviews" are running 50-50 regarding whether my answer was correct. Perhaps I should have elaborated further.

Teaching children the social graces may not be fun for a parent, but it is a duty, because those skills — or the lack of them — will affect the way those children are regarded for the rest of their lives. Failure to teach them is a disservice to the children.

Writing thank-you letters is a skill that must be learned and honed. It doesn't come "naturally." When a gift — or a kind gesture, for that matter — goes unacknowledged, it indicates that the recipient thought so little of it that it wasn't even a blip on the radar screen. It sends a terrible message about the manners, sensitivity and upbringing of the person who received the gift.

Abby shares her favorite recipes in two booklets: "Abby's Favorite Recipes" and "Abby's More Favorite Recipes." To order, send a business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 per booklet ($4.50 each in Canada) to: Dear Abby Cookbooklets I and II, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, IL 61054-0447. (Postage is included in price.)

Elderly volunteer knocks down the walls of nursing homes

By Pat Leisner
Associated Press

TAMPA, Fla. — Just before Christmas in 1996 Bill Weisweaver saw a boy clicking away on a department store computer set up for demonstration. He waited until the boy finished a card game and decided to try it.

"I figured if he could do it, I could. But I couldn't even turn it on," said Weisweaver, who gave the boy $1 to power it up for him. "He showed me solitaire, took his buck and left."

It was the start of an ambitious avocation for Weisweave '0, a retired Army lieutenant c nel who served 29 years during World War II, Korea and Vietnam conflicts. He began reading about the Internet and sought technical help from a computer guru to learn to navigate the Web and bring a whole new world into nursing homes.

Weisweaver put Tampa's nursing homes online, offering residents access to e-mail to stay in touch with family and friends, message boards and discussion groups to correspond with each other and the public and links to hometown newspapers.

"When computers became popular, I never wanted one. I thought, 'I'll never learn that, it's too technical,'" said Weisweaver. "It was ego. I was afraid I'd fail."

After his wife of nearly 60 years died in 1997, Weisweaver found himself alone and lonely. He became a volunteer for the state Long-Term Care Ombudsman Council, making frequent visits to nursing homes.

He found people like himself, lonely and alone with little connection to the outside world, often forgotten by relatives who are too busy or live far away.

His Internet idea took shape. It was a new marriage. He knew the dark side of loneliness, was fascinated with online capabilities and dedicated to helping seniors.

He began installing computers in nursing homes, setting them up, giving online training to administrators and activities directors and coaxing a generation that doesn't understand computers into using them.

So far, four Tampa nursing homes are online. With technical help from webmaster Terri Bakas, Weisweaver even has a Web site: www.elderswithoutwalls.com.

It has been slow going, says the widower whose project has been evolving for about 18 months. When nursing homes didn't have the budget, he bought the equipment. When administrators didn't have staff time available, he persuaded them to squeeze it in.

"When I first heard about it, I thought it was crazy," said 83-year-old Ruth Hunt, who was among the first four residents at Woodbridge Nursing and Rehabilitation to take an interest. "Now I think it's fun."

She gets e-mails from her daughter in Tampa and plans to surprise her son in Salt Lake City with an online greeting.

A staff member sits with residents and messages their replies.

"It's a way for our residents to keep contact with family and friends outside," said Betty Breden, administrator at the 120-bed Woodbridge home where residents range in age from 21 to 103.

"The ones capable of understanding what we're doing are excited about it," added Pat Johnson, activities assistant.

The Tampa family of 78-year-old George Feather sends pictures, including some of his younger days when he spent time fishing. Relatives e-mail him to let him know they'll be stopping by to visit.

Breden's nephew, 9-year-old Sean Kaminski, and his third-grade class at Lombard Elementary School in Lombard, Ill., sent short messages to residents from their computer class.

For residents who are a little shy or intimidated by the technology, there's an item called "topic of the week" that encourages them to share what they remember.

The site invites outsiders to "meet our nursing home residents, find a pen pal, adopt a grandparent, or just say a quick hello to someone."

Steve Rachin, head of the state ombudsman council, says Weisweaver is doing a good job and "really wants to help people."

Bakas, who designs Web sites, had heard about Weisweaver's project, contacted him and volunteered to make his vision a reality.

"As far as I know it's one of a kind," she says of the site. "I consider it to be a work in progress. We keep expanding and improving it."

It is entertainment-based, scripted in large type and easy to navigate.

The public is invited to scan the e-mail directory. Residents who want to participate are listed by name and share information about their hobbies, interests and background.

"The idea is to correspond with each other and the general public. Lonely people can contact other lonely people so they won't be lonely anymore," Bakas says. "And today, so many people are online anyway. It might be something they could bookmark and come back to every couple of weeks."

The Webmaster and the nursing home check incoming messages so that nothing untoward gets through.

Both Weisweaver and Bakas have a dream that one day the project will expand to nursing homes across the country. "We plug and pray," says Weisweaver.

They hope to recruit civic groups, garden clubs and church groups to become involved and recommend members participate.

"There is no excuse to be lonely today," Bakas says. "There are no walls on this Web site. It can cross states and countries and bring the world to them."

AARP'S New Image appeals to the baby boomers.

From September 25 through mid-October there is an eight story high wrap around the Washington headquarters of AARP telling the story of what AARP does. Research shows that people like what AARP stands for but they do not know what all is offered through this organization. These images tell the story of real people and how life after 50 should be like. People today want to work and stay active, but most of all they want to be themselves. AARP is the place you can do just that.

Rose

AARP, with its multitude of resources and strength in numbers, can help every member make healthy choices, reach goals and dreams, and make the most of their lives. The new slogan of AARP is "Your choice, Your voice, Your attitude. Let us celebrate life after age 50."

AARP is projecting an exciting new image with their Modern Maturity magazine. Just look at the covers and read the stories to see how they differ from a year ago. To further fast forward their new image you can now find a new AARP publication on the news stands called, My Generation.

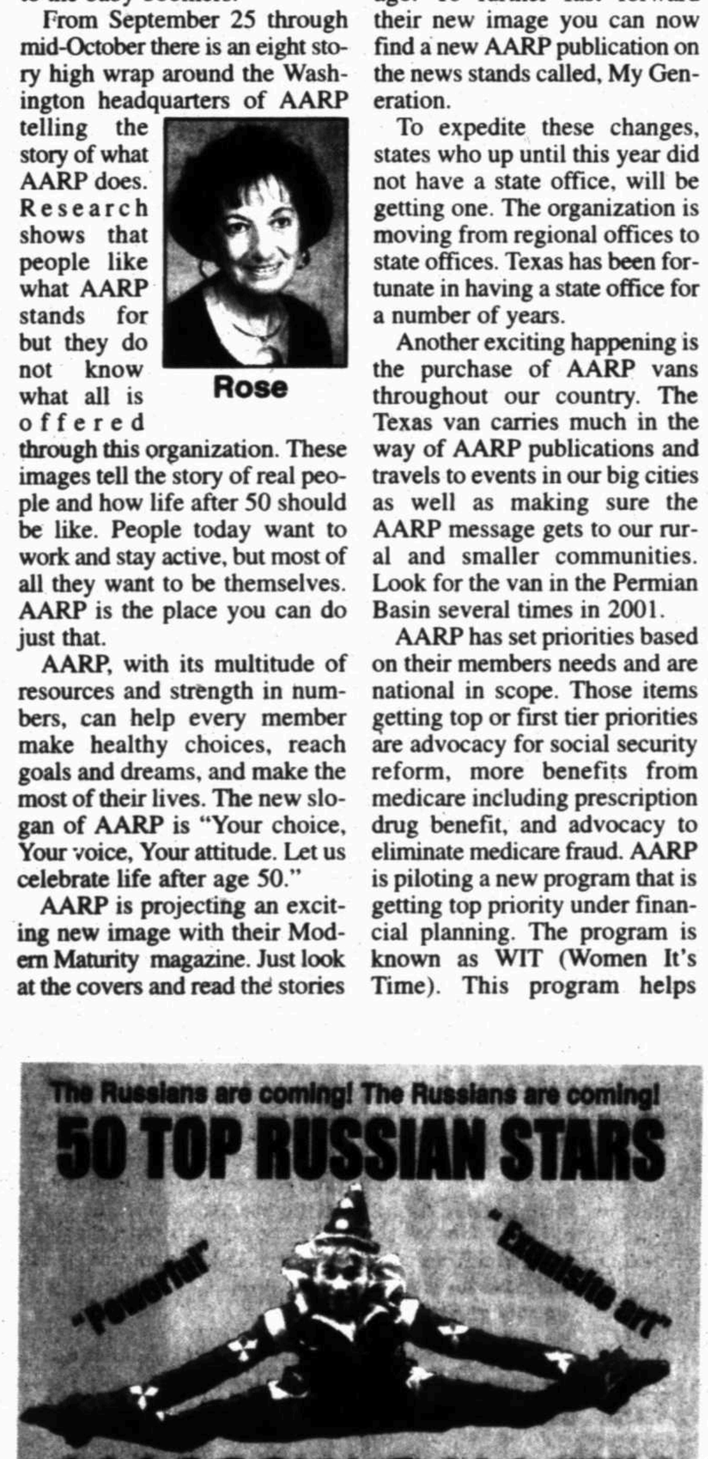

To expedite these changes, states who up until this year did not have a state office, will be getting one. The organization is moving from regional offices to state offices. Texas has been fortunate in having a state office for a number of years.

Another exciting happening is the purchase of AARP vans throughout our country. The Texas van carries much in the way of AARP publications and travels to events in our big cities as well as making sure the AARP message gets to our rural and smaller communities. Look for the van in the Permian Basin several times in 2001.

AARP has set priorities based on their members needs and are national in scope. Those items getting top or first tier priorities are advocacy for social security reform, more benefits from medicare including prescription drug benefit, and advocacy to eliminate medicare fraud. AARP is piloting a new program that is getting top priority under financial planning. The program is known as WIT (Women It's Time). This program helps women become more knowledgeable about their finances and investments. AARP is also setting first tier priorities in helping to enforce the standards of quality care in our long term care facilities as well as setting standards for our assisted living facilities. AARP will continue to strive to help our mature homeowners stay in their home safely through a program called Independent Living Week. Still another priority is the Spring Forward program which is all about wellness. This will be a pilot program in 2001.

The ongoing work of AARP will not be neglected: Safe Driving courses, AARP grief and loss groups, tax-aide, public benefits outreach, money management, local chapters, information centers, personal enrichment events, and SCSEP (Senior Community Service Employment Program). Here in Midland, we are forming a new AARP chapter with an image that appeals to the baby boomers. We need your membership. Please contact us at 687-2588 so that you can be a part of a dynamic local chapter and have your voice heard right here at home.

Note found in sailor's pocket tells of underwater terror

By Ivan Sekretarev
Associated Press

MURMANSK, Russia — Huddled in a destroyed submarine on the sea floor, a Russian sailor wrote a terse account of how he and 22 comrades tried in vain to escape, then scrawled a last message to his family, Russian naval officials said Thursday.

The note was found in the pocket of Lt. Dmitry Kolesnikov, whose body was one of the first to be recovered from the nuclear submarine Kursk that sank Aug. 12 with 118 men aboard. The message was the first firm evidence that any of the crew initially survived explosions that shattered the submarine. It did not indicate the cause of the catastrophe.

Written a few hours after the sub plunged to the bottom of the Barents Sea, the note tells a horrifying story in eerily straightforward sentences.

"All the crew from the sixth, seventh and eighth compartments went over to the ninth. There are 23 people here. We made this decision as a result of the accident," Russian navy chief Adm. Vladimir Kuroyedov quoted the note as saying.

"None of us can get to the surface," the message continued.

Kolesnikov's handwriting in the first part of the note was neat, Kuroyedov said during a meeting with the victims' relatives. But after the submarine's emergency lights went out, the 27-year-old seaman from St. Petersburg began to scrawl and desperation set in.

"I am writing blindly," Kuroyedov quoted the latter part of the note as saying.

The rest of the note was private and would be shown to Kolesnikov's family, said Vice Adm. Mikhail Motsak, the Northern Fleet chief of staff.

Most of the Kursk's crew apparently died instantly in the explosions that tore open the Kursk's first six compartments or within minutes as water roared into the submarine.

But the knowledge that some remained alive for hours revived the horror that gripped the nation after the sinking.

"I feel pain, enormous pain," Kolesnikov's widow, Olga, said on the NTV television channel. "I had a premonition my husband didn't die instantly. The pain I felt then has come true."

In excerpts of a documentary shown on NTV Thursday, Olga also said her husband had penned her a mournful poem in the days before he went on the Kursk's final voyage and left it.

"Shortly before he went to sea, he wrote a poem to me that says 'When the hour to die will come, although I try not to think about it, I would like to have time to say, 'My darling I love you'," she said in a documentary made by Norway's TV2. Parts of it were shown on NTV Thursday.

'When the hour to die will come, although I try not to think about it, I would like to have time to say, 'My darling I love you.'

— Lt. Dmitry Kolesnikov, sailor aboard Kursk

The recovered bodies are to be flown on Saturday to Severomorsk, the Northern Fleet's main port, for a memorial service. However, fierce winds forced the divers to suspend operations Thursday and it was unclear when bodies could be brought to the surface, the ITAR-Tass news agency reported.

The Russian government has been widely criticized at home for a slow and seemingly confused response to the disaster. Russian mini-submarines tried unsuccessfully for days to open the Kursk's escape hatch. There were reports that noises from the wreckage could have come from trapped sailors banging on the hull.

Two days after the Kursk went down, Russia made the sinking public. Although Western countries quickly offered to help, it was another two days before a Norwegian diving team was asked to assist. The Norwegians quickly opened the hatch but determined that the sub was flooded and the crew dead.

Kolesnikov's note gives no indication of whether any of the crew survived beyond a few hours. At least some of the 23 were injured and the compartment showed signs of fire, Kuroyedov said.

Motsak said the note was completed by 3:15 p.m. local time, less than four hours after ships in the area registered two powerful explosions, apparently the blasts that wrecked the Kursk.

Igor Spassky, the head of the Rubin design bureau that developed the Kursk, said at a news conference Thursday that the crewmen had had some chance of getting out on their own through the escape hatch but apparently didn't do that because of injuries.

However, even if they had gotten out the hatch, it is unclear whether they could have survived the crushing pressure 355 feet underwater or if they could have reached the surface alive.

Kolesnikov's body was one of four recovered by a Russian-Norwegian diving team after five days of painstaking work this week to cut holes in the top of the submarine. Motsak said that after the note was discovered, the divers were concentrating on searching for bodies in the ninth compartment, but added that rough seas hampered their work Thursday.

The complex underwater operation is being performed with advanced diving equipment, including robots and mechanical arms. Divers have used an instrument that sprays pressurized water mixed with diamond dust to cut the Kursk's 2-inch thick inner steel hull.

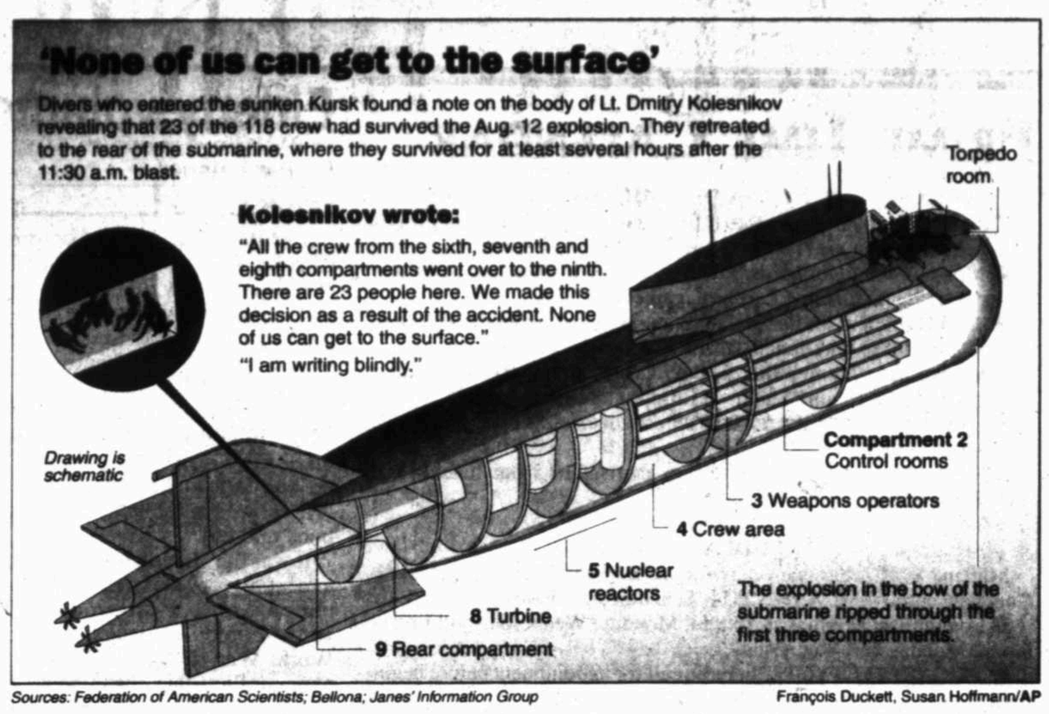

There have been no reports of radiation leaking from the submarine. The reactors shut down automatically.

Kuroyedov had warned that he might cancel the recovery effort if experts ruled that divers' lives were in danger. Two widows of Kursk crew members pleaded with the divers Wednesday not to take excessive risks.

But President Vladimir Putin had promised to recover the bodies at an emotional meeting with the crew's relatives shortly after the disaster. The government seemed bent on conducting the costly effort despite the shortage of funds for the military.

Some Russian media have pointed out that, by stubbornly conducting the risky effort, the government seeks to vindicate its confused response to the sinking.

The cause of the disaster remains unknown. Russian authorities have theorized about a collision with a Western submarine or a World War II-era mine or an internal malfunction as possible reasons.

Investigators: Deaths at disco could have been avoided

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Electrical short circuits at a glitzy Mexico City disco caused a fire that claimed the lives of 20 people — deaths that could have been avoided if the club had met minimum safety standards, investigators said Thursday.

A 17-year-old girl injured in last week's fire died on Thursday, raising the death toll from 19.

City prosecutors said they were still investigating and had not yet sought arrest warrants in the case. An attorney for one of the club's owners said he was in the United States.

Sparked by short circuits in the Lobohombo's light booth, the blaze began before dawn Oct. 20 and quickly spread through the cavernous nightclub — fed partly by flammable decorations that created what investigators described as a "rain of fire."

Many of the dead were located near the club's emergency exit, which was locked with a chain, investigator Pedro Estrada said Thursday at a news conference.

In addition to having only one available exit, the club lacked smoke detectors, a sufficient number of fire extinguishers and a sprinkler system, Estrada said.

Suicide bomber kills himself; raises fears of more violent attacks in Israel

JERUSALEM (AP) — A Palestinian with a backpack of explosives blew himself up Thursday as his bicycle reached the concrete barrier of an Israeli army outpost, heightening fears that Israel could face a renewed wave of bombings.

The militant group Islamic Jihad claimed responsibility for the attack by the 24-year-old in the Gaza Strip, the first suicide bombing during a month of upheaval. Israel responded by blocking the main road in Gaza with a tank and bulldozing trees that Palestinians could use for cover to fire on the isolated base.

The diplomatic front appeared bleak, with Israel and the Palestinians giving a cool response to President Clinton's proposal of Washington meetings aimed at ending the violence. Street clashes broke out again in the West Bank and Gaza, and both sides maintained their hostile rhetoric.

"First of all the Palestinians must stop the violence," said Danny Yatom, Prime Minister Ehud Barak's top adviser. "We can't accept the violence as it is today."

Palestinian leaders said the United States could no longer be the sole mediator, calling for the European Union, Russia and others to join future talks.

A 14-year-old Palestinian boy died of a gunshot wound to the head suffered two weeks earlier, but no deaths were reported in Thursday's clashes. In four weeks of fighting, 129 people have been killed, all but a few of them Palestinians.

The suicide bombing pointed to an escalation in the conflict and added to Israeli concerns that a bombing campaign may be unleashed following the Palestinians' release of 85 militants from jail two weeks ago. The Palestinians say they have re-arrested 22 people.

"We've been warning that these kind of attacks were in the works," said army spokesman Col. Raanan Gissin.

The bomber, identified as Nabil Araeer, pedaled his bicycle to the Israeli post until he reached the massive concrete blocks of the retaining wall. He then detonated several pounds of explosives in his backpack, the army said.

In nearby Gaza City, hundreds of people descended on the Araeer family home to offer condolences. Araeer's brother, Yassin, described his brother as a devout Muslim who went to the local mosque every day for pre-dawn prayers.

Araeer, who worked as a janitor at a kindergarten, was jailed briefly by the Israelis several years back, but was not in detention when the militants were freed two weeks ago, his family said.

Ethnic, political battles erupt in Ivory Coast

ABIDJAN, Ivory Coast (AP) — Longtime opposition leader Laurent Gbagbo was sworn in as president Thursday at the heavily guarded presidential palace, as political officials appealed for an end to the violence that has wracked Abidjan and other cities in this West African nation.

"I feel in this moment the ...naissance of the Ivory Coast, the ...rth of a modern, prosperous, democratic and united nation," said Gbagbo, who was swept to power Wednesday in a popular uprising that forced junta leader Gen. Robert Guei to flee.

But street celebrations over the junta's downfall Wednesday were short-lived, and by Thursday morning Gbagbo's supporters, sometimes backed by security forces, were battling followers of a rival political boss with machetes, rocks and clubs. Dozens of people were said to have been killed.

At least three people were burned alive in the working class neighborhood of Yopougon, a witness said, and three mosques were torched. At least one church was burned in another part of town as residents fled the worst areas.

Supporters of Ivory Coast's most popular opposition figure, Alassane Dramane Ouattara — most of them Muslims from northern-based tribes — fought Gbagbo's backers, who are mostly Christians from southern ethnic groups.

"People are dying," said Aida Diallo, who was fleeing one burning neighborhood to get to her family's home. "I'm scared, so scared."

Much of the violence had died down in Abidjan by early afternoon, following large-scale deployment of security forces firing tear gas into crowds and gunshots into the air.

Thursday night, senior officials with Gbagbo's Ivorian Popular Front and Ouattara's Rally of the Republicans appeared together on state-controlled television to appeal for peace.

"We call on all our militants, our supporters, to desist," Gbagbo official Lida Kouassi said. "Ivory Coast is in the process of coming out of anguish."

The U.S. Embassy on Thursday ordered its nonessential staff and all embassy dependents to leave this Ivory Coast for at least 30 days, a U.S. diplomat said. Americans not part of the embassy community have not been advised to leave, the diplomat said.

Earlier Wednesday, witnesses said Gbagbo supporters and security forces had tried to advance on Ouattara's compound in a wealthy Abidjan suburb, but had been pushed back by crowds who have surrounded the house for weeks.

Less serious clashes continued intermittently outside the house. At one intersection in the nearby neighborhood of Blokosso, ethnic Ebrie youths chased frightened motorists while screaming and waving machetes.

Residents said the youths were seeking revenge for the destruction of a Blokosso church, allegedly by Ouattara supporters.

An official with Ouattara's party said at least 40 — and perhaps as many as 80 — of his supporters were killed Thursday. Gbagbo's party officials said there was no way to know how many of their supporters had died. About 50 people were reported to have died in clashes Tuesday and Wednesday. Those figures could not be independently confirmed.

Ouattara's supporters are demanding that new presidential elections be held in Ivory Coast. Ouattara was excluded from Sunday's presidential elections. The vote was intended to restore civilian rule 10 months after a military coup, but former junta leader Guei disbanded the country's electoral commission while votes were still being counted Tuesday and declared himself the winner.

Gbagbo's supporters — who also claimed victory — swarmed Ivory Coast's streets, later to be joined by members of the junta's own security forces. Guei is reported to have fled Wednesday to nearby Benin.

His departure was greeted in the streets with jubilation. But within a few hours, Ouattara's followers were rallying, and black smoke billowed above Abidjan neighborhoods where Ouattara's backers had blocked off the streets with burning tires, gutted vehicles, pieces of furniture and roadside garbage.

In the western city of Gagnoa, police clashed with pro-Ouattara demonstrators, while in Ouattara's northern stronghold of Korhogo, his supporters were burning opponents' houses.

Bomb threat made against investigators into Cole blast

ADEN, Yemen (AP) — Machine-gun mounted military vehicles surrounded a port-side hotel and civilian traffic was kept away Thursday after a bomb threat targeted Americans investigating the attack on the USS Cole.

The U.S. ambassador to Yemen, Barbara Bodine, also was staying at the hotel and the threat was considered serious enough to wake her to inform her early Thursday. Bodine has temporarily moved from the embassy in San'a to monitor the investigation.

The U.S. Defense Department said Tuesday that American forces in Bahrain, Qatar and Turkey are on heightened alert because of new evidence of terrorist threats in the region.

In Aden, Yemeni security officials said the telephoned bomb threat from an unknown caller arrived around midnight. Yemeni and U.S. security officials held an emergency meeting before dawn and adopted the new security precautions, including preventing civilian traffic from getting within 500 yards of the hotel.

The Oct. 12 attack on the Cole killed 17 U.S. sailors and wounded 39 others. Officials believe two suicide bombers maneuvered a small boat next to the destroyer and detonated it.

The bomb threat came as FBI investigators finished gathering evidence from the ship to send back to the United States for analysis.

About 80 FBI evidence technicians returned home Thursday after completing their work, said a federal law enforcement official in Washington. Another more than 20 FBI agents remain in Yemen, including investigators, security and communications experts, the official said.

U.S. Attorney General Janet Reno told a news conference the experts were leaving Yemen as soon as they completed their work. "We're bringing them out and trying to do it in an orderly way that will ensure security," Reno said.

The Cole is to be carried back to the United States on a special "heavy-lift" ship that is expected to reach Aden on Sunday.

Yemeni President Ali Abdullah Saleh said Wednesday that one of the two suspected bombers has been identified by witnesses as an Egyptian and that a number of Arab veterans of Afghanistan's war against Soviet troops had been detained in connection with the blast.

'Dogs, Rebels fight for position

High-powered Cougars test attack vs. MHS

By Stewart Doreen
Assistant Sports Editor

With four teams tied for second place in the District 4-5A football standings and three games left to decide who goes to the postseason and who stays home, the Midland High-Abilene Cooper matchup will be as big as any in the three-city league.

M
Abilene Cooper at Midland High

The winner of the game, which will kick off at 7:30 p.m. tonight at Memorial Stadium, is in a great position to make the playoffs, probably one win away. The loser slides into a must-win situation.

"It makes for a lot of sleepless nights," said Cooper head coach Randy Quisenberry, whose team comes into the game with a 4-3 overall record and 1-1 mark in 4-5A, just like David Browning's Bulldogs. Both teams are coming off losses last week — Midland High came up short against Odessa High, 19-10, and Midland Lee outscored Cooper, 49-36.

An interesting sidebar to the impact this game will have on the District 4-5A standings is the battle between one the league's most explosive

Teams seek that important 3rd win

It's Halloween weekend, so what better place to start than with District 4-5A football.

Williamson

Quote of the Week: Lee coach John Parchman: "The way the district is this year, it looks like everyone is trying to figure out how to win three games and get into the playoffs. If you win more than three, count that as a bonus, but three is the number everyone is looking at, hoping that will be enough to get in."

Home Sweet Home: Home teams are a perfect 6-0 in district games played this season. That means that the team that finds a way to win one on the road will probably find a way to the state playoffs. The district has been woeful on the road this year, owning an 8-14 record when getting off the bus and the league is 17-3 when playing at home. The Lee-Victoria Memorial game was considered a neutral site, so the league is 1-0 in neutral site contests.

Lee vs. Permian: Permian leads this storied series by a 27-14-1 count, but Lee has won five in a row. No other team has ever beaten Permian five times in a row. Lee is 15-6-1 in games played at Ratliff Stadium. Lee lost to Odessa High this year in Ratliff and the Bronchos own four of Lee's six losses there. Lee is 6-2-1

Rivalry between Permian, Lee remains compelling despite Mojo's 3-4 record

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

ODESSA — With the current state of District 4-5A football, the Midland Lee-Odessa Permian football power play isn't the only game in town anymore.

In fact, every district game, no matter who is playing, carries baggage of importance to the train. Lee-Permian, 2000 style, is no less important than any others being played, but the overall impact may be lost to other sites.

But as far as the combatants for this 7:30 p.m. clash at Ratliff Stadium, it's still Lee vs. Permian.

"It's still Lee-Permian to me," said Lee coach John Parchman, who is a perfect 5-0 in games against rival Mojo. "I've been in 11 of these games, either as an assistant or as a head coach, and they are all the same to me. I still get calls from people who have read 'Friday Night Lights', so I know the interest outside of the immediate area is still there. This is a special series. There is a little different walk in the step when you get ready to play this game."

New Permian coach T.J. Mills will be partaking of the Lee-Permian series for the first time, but the Lee-Permian concept is not lost.

LEE
Midland Lee at Odessa Permian

"Everyone in the state and many in the nation knows about this rivalry," Mills said. "I've always liked to have teams that didn't go through highs and lows during a season, but I can see that this game is something special to our kids. We're not going to squash that enthusiasm, but it's something, I guess, that I'm going to have to get used to."

Things are very simple for Permian. Win or else.

"We've got a chance (to get into the playoffs) if we win this one," Mills said. "I don't see any way a team is going to get in with three district losses, so the playoffs start for us this week. So, that's the way we are approaching this thing."

WORLD SERIES

It's Yankees Again

Sojo's single helps Yankees earn third straight Series title

By Ben Walker
AP Baseball Writer

NEW YORK — Best in their own back yard, best in all of baseball.

The New York Yankees, thought to be too old and too banged up to make it this far, became the first team in more than a quarter-century to win three straight World Series championships, beating the New York Mets 4-2 Thursday night.

Luis Sojo, one of many midseason pickups, hit a two-out, tiebreaking single off Al Leiter in the ninth inning to decide Game 5, stunning a Shea Stadium crowd that was sure there was more baseball left in this Subway Series.

Derek Jeter homered and was the MVP after batting .409, earning his fourth ring at only 26. Meanwhile, it turned out to be a short ride for New Yorkers who had waited 44 years to see another one of these.

"The Mets are — in my opinion — the best team we've played in my years here," Jeter said.

The Yankees quickly matched the Oakland Athletics' three in a row from 1972-74, and won their fourth title in five years.

Only two other runs in baseball history can compare — Joe DiMaggio led the Yankees to five crowns from 1936-41, and Mickey Mantle helped take the Bronx Bombers to six titles from 1947-53.

And while the lasting image of this Series is certain to be Roger Clemens throwing the bat toward Mike Piazza, this is the picture the Yankees will prefer to savor: owner George Steinbrenner hoisting another big piece of hardware for the team's trophy case.

"The Mets gave us everything we could want. It was great for the city of New York," Steinbrenner said.

AP Photo
New York Yankees Scott Brosius (18) and Jorge Posada (20) are congratulated by teammates after scoring on Luis Sojo's single during the ninth inning of Game 5 of the World Series Thursday at Shea Stadium in New York.

Slumping Bernie Williams also homered for the Yankees. But it was Sojo, who blossomed into a good-luck charm after rejoining the Yanks from Pittsburgh on Aug. 7, who delivered the winning hit.

"It's the happiest day of my life. I don't know how to explain it," said Sojo, who entered the game in the eighth inning. "Today they gave me a chance to come through. I did and was it was unbelievable."

MHS tennis squad draws Flower Mound Marcus at regionals

By Oscar LeRoy

ABILENE — The Midland High Bulldogs admitted that they didn't really expect to still be playing today when the season started in team tennis.

But this young group proved to be among the best in District 4-5A and now aim for the state tournament when the Bulldogs make their first regional tournament appearance since 1978. The Bulldogs start the tournament by facing Flower Mound Marcus at 8 a.m. today at Madison Middle School.

With a win, the Bulldogs will play the winner of El Paso Americas and Weatherford at 1 p.m. at Hardin Simmons University.

Saturday's semifinals will start at 8 a.m. at Hardin Simmons University while the finals are scheduled to begin at 1 p.m. at Abilene Christian.

"We were kind of surprised from the way we started out at the beginning of the season," said senior Drew Branum, referring to the 0-2 start. "But we've worked really hard and I think

Jacks rout Outlaws, 6-1, in home opener

By Oscar LeRoy
Sports Writer

ODESSA — The Odessa Jackalopes made a big statement against one of their biggest rivals Thursday night at the Jack Shack.

Jacks head coach Don McKee said his team did everything it wanted to do against its San Angelo rivals as Odessa won in a 6-1 blowout.

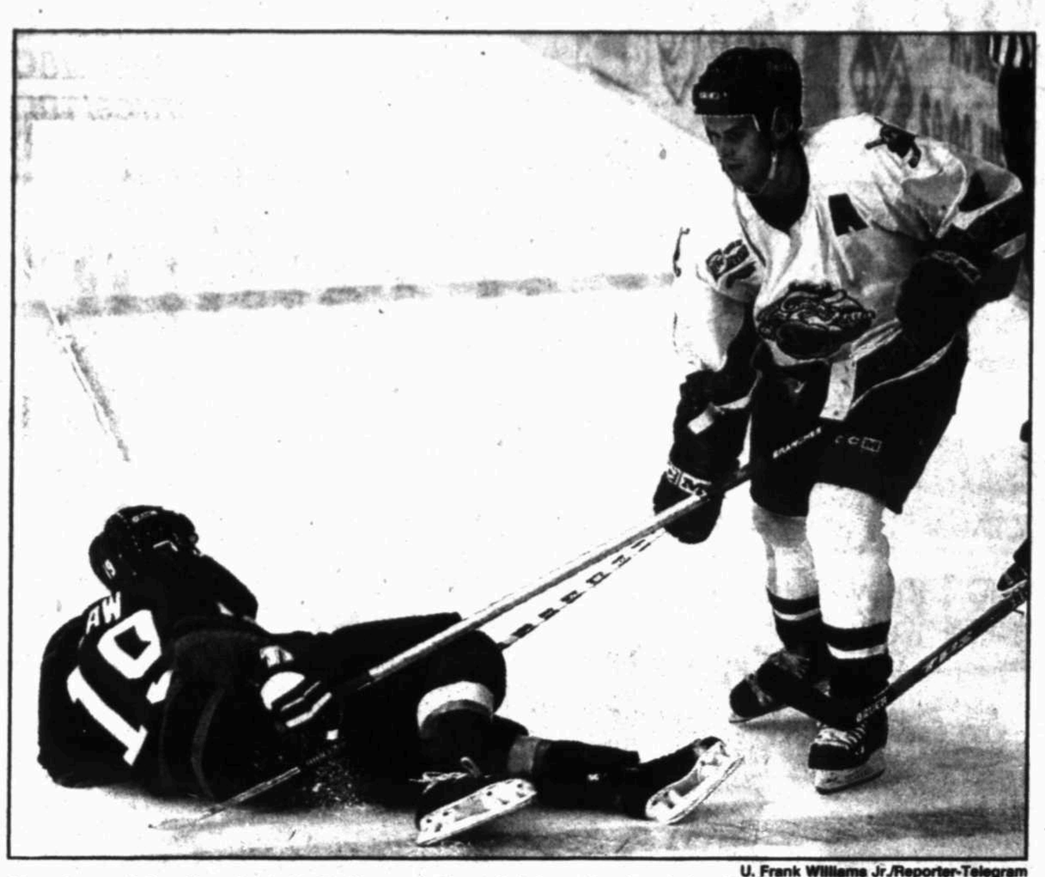

"We're a totally different teams than last year," said Jacks forward John Bossio. "We're going to be in the thick of things this year."

The Jacks got on the scoreboard just one minute and two seconds into the game when Derek Laxdal punched in a goal off an assist from Jason Heywood. It was all Jacks from there.

"We fought, we scored goals and we got great goaltending," McKee said after the home opening win. "The only thing that was disappointing tonight was our special teams. We didn't score in our power play, and we gave up a shorthanded goal."

Other than the fact that the Jacks had trouble converting on power play opportunities, very little went wrong for the Jacks. They got their second goal on their second shot of the game from Bossio 3:56 into the first period for a 2-0 lead, and that was all they needed. The Outlaws did start their second goaltender, Mike Buckley, because regular starter Sergei Tkachenko had been ill this week.

"That was kind of unusual," said Bossio about the fast start. "Last year, we struggled coming out of the gate, and it usually took us until the second period to score. This year, we've been coming out of the gates pretty well and have been taking advantage."

"We came out and scored three goals in five shots," McKee said. "They were all good plays. Bossio made a great play to score that second goal."

Forward Tim Hill has breakout game against the Outlaws with an unassisted first period goal and two assists. Since coming in as a free agent in August from the Shreveport Mudbugs, Hill had been struggling.

"Tonight, I started to get my game back," Hill said. "I've got to give (McKee) credit for having confidence in me and sticking with me for the time that I've been down."

"I thought he came out tonight and did a lot of things for us," said McKee about Hill. "He scored that goal and set up another great goal in which (Scott) Campbell scored."

Goalie Grant Sjerven was also solid, especially after allowing only one goal in what is normally a high-scoring Western Professional Hockey League.

"One thing you bring in with Sjerven is that you bring in steady goaltending," McKee said. "One of the things he does so well is move the puck. He sets it up so well with his defensemen that it makes them look good."

This is the first of three games in three nights for the Jacks. Tonight, they'll be in Fort Worth to take on the Brahmas before coming back to host the defending WPHL champion Mudbugs on Saturday night. With the momentum the Jacks have had over the last three games, the Jacks prefer to keep on playing rather than get a day's rest.

"It's great for us," said Hill, who will be facing his former team on Saturday. "We just can't wait to play. We have so much confidence right now. The more games, the better.

"And with Shreveport coming in on Saturday, a win against them would be extra special against my old team. I also get my (WPHL championship) ring on Saturday."

Developmental tour of LPGA eyes Midland as possible stop

By Stewart Doreen
Assistant Sports Editor

The golf scene in Midland just might get bigger.

That is because the SBC Futures Tour, the official developmental tournament of the Ladies Professional Golf Association (LPGA), is looking to add Midland to its 2001 tour schedule.

The addition of a Futures Tour event would add to Midland's reputation as the premier golfing community in West Texas. Already, Midland-Odessa already is the only West Texas community to host a professional golf tournament — The Buy.com Permian Basin Open.

Futures Tour officials say the relationship with the Buy.com event is a big reason Midland is being considered as an April stop.

"We share a number of cities with the Buy.com Tour," said Al Snow, Tournament Development Coordinator for the Futures Tour. "We think of those as second or third tier markets. We put a stake in those cities."

For the tour to put a stake in this city, a charity is needed to step in as a tournament organizer, and do so quickly. Snow said the tour has talked to courses and charities in the area, but it needs someone to step up to take control of the event, much like Odessa businessman Bob Glast has done with the PBO.

If this can happen by the end of November, the tour will be able to add Midland to its 2001 schedule.

Some may remember the Permian Basin Open was faced with the problem of finding a new organizer in January of 1997. Medical Center Development Corporation withdrew its backing for the tournament. Days later, Glast stepped forward with the backing of the Buffalo Trail Council of the Boy Scouts of America as the PBO's new charity.

Currently, the tournament has three charities — the Buffalo Trail Council of the Boy Scouts of America, the Permian Basin Girls Scouts and the University of Texas of the Permian Basin. There is also a donation made to the Boys and Girls Clubs of Midland and Odessa.

It is that type of backing which is needed to bring a Futures Tour event to Midland.

Midland has been West Texas' only stop for the Texas Golf Association's State Amateur. Next year, the amateur gender bridge will be crossed as Midland Country Club will host the women's state amateur.

The popularity of golf in Midland is a big reason that the Visitors and Convention Bureau of the Midland Chamber of Commerce contacted the Futures Tour to see if there was any interest in putting an event in West Texas.

It so happens that there is an opening the weekend before an event in the Metroplex.

"It would probably be the week prior (to Dallas)," Snow said. It would make it a nice swing through Texas from west to east.

During the same time, the tour is making its transition from the west coast to the east coast.

The Futures Tour resembles the Buy.com in that players have a chance to earn their major tour cards. Some LPGA stars who have played in Futures Tour events include Karrie Webb, Kelli Kuenhe and Grace Park. In fact, Park won five events in 1999 to earn her LPGA card. All totaled the top three players on the Futures Tour money list earn their LPGA Tour cards, while Nos. 4-10 earn spots in the final round of tour qualifying school.

"The battle for (spots) four through 10 can be just as heated as one through three," Snow said.

The Futures Tour, like the Buy.com Tour, also is the home of veteran golfers trying to make it back to the LPGA Tour.

However, there are some notable differences between the two developmental tours. First, instead of sending three to its parent tour, the Buy.com sends 15. Also, the Buy.com purses are significantly higher. This year, the tournament purse for the Permian Basin Open was $400,000. The winner collected $72,000. By comparison, the minimum tournament purse for a Futures Tour event is $50,000 this year, $60,000 next year and will rise to $70,000 to $75,000 by 2003.

Note: Anyone interested in bringing an Futures Tour event to Midland should call Tournament Development Coordinator Al Snow at 863-709-9100.

SERIES: Yanks finish off Mets

(From 1C)

Leiter battled all night, and struck out the first two batters in the ninth. Then he walked Jorge Posada and gave up a single to Scott Brosius, and Sojo followed by slapping a single up the middle on Leiter's 142nd and final pitch.

Another run scored on the play when center fielder Jay Payton's throw home hit Posada and bounded into the Mets' dugout. Sojo's single snapped the Yankees' 0-for-16 streak with runners in scoring position, dating to Game 2.

Leiter remained winless in 11 postseason starts, while Mike Stanton won in relief of Andy Pettitte. Mariano Rivera pitched the ninth for a save.

At the stroke of midnight, Piazza flied out to the edge of the warning track in center field with a runner on base to finish it.

"It's been an exciting Series. There were a lot of clutch plays and clutch hits," Mets manager Bobby Valentine said.

The Yankees fans in the sell-out crowd of 55,292 went wild after having been outshouted all evening.

Unlike the overmatched San Diego Padres in 1998 and the overwhelmed Atlanta Braves in 1999, the wild-card Mets were in it all the way. Their best chance, however, really may have ended when closer Armando Benitez could not hold a one-run lead in the opener.

These Yankees went into the playoffs with seven straight losses, and also dropped the opener in their AL series against Oakland and Seattle. In the end, though, manager Joe Torre's team showed what October experience is all about.

Even with so much at stake, there was room to have a little fun — with a broken bat, no less.

Kurt Abbott shattered his bat on a foul ball in the Mets fourth, and the jagged barrel skittered out toward Jeter at shortstop.

With the crowd starting to hoot, mindful of the Clemens-Piazza encounter in Game 2, Jeter made a nice show in defusing any hint of trouble. He fielded the broken piece with his glove, laughed and handed it to a Mets batboy.

On the Mets' bench, Piazza chuckled. But in the Yankees' dugout, Clemens just stared straight ahead as the crowd chanted "Rah-ger, Rah-ger."

Had it gone to Game 6, Clemens would have started Saturday night at Yankee Stadium.

While Jeter and Williams hit the solo homers for the Yankees, the Mets scraped out two runs that left it tied at 2 through the seventh.

Williams put the Yankees ahead 1-0 when he homered leading off the second. The cleanup man had been 0-for-15 through four games and hitless in his last 22 Series at-bats overall.

Trying to ensure that the skid was behind him, he singled and walked his next two times up.

"I didn't care how I was hitting as long as we were winning," Williams said.

Jeter, who homered on the first pitch of the game the previous night, made it 2-all by hitting a shot into the Yankees' left-field bullpen in the sixth off Leiter.

The Mets had to work much harder for their runs.

Bubba Trammell, starting because of his career success against Pettitte, walked with one out in the second and Payton singled. The runners moved up on a groundout and Leiter, an .053 hitter this season, dragged a perfect bunt past the mound.

First baseman Tino Martinez bobbled the ball for a moment and made an underhanded flip to Pettitte, but the pitcher dropped the throw. Pettitte was charged with an error — denying an RBI to Leiter, who had none this year — but a run scored and the Mets were satisfied.

Benny Agbayani followed with a slow roller that third baseman Brosius tried to play with his bare hand, but the ball escaped his grasp and went for an RBI single that gave the Mets a 2-1 lead.

Notes: Yankees general manager Brian Cashman was not at the game. Earlier in the day, his mother-in-law, Barbara Bresnan, died of a heart attack at 63.

we definitely deserve to go."

"I was pretty surprised because we're a really young team," said sophomore Jonathan Webb. "We have four freshman, and I was surprised they played as well as they did."

Bulldogs head coach Tom Heiting did have that feeling that this particular team was special, even though he only has three seniors on the squad.

"I've had much more talented teams in the past but this team is special because the kids relate well to one another," Heiting said. "They truly encompass the virtue of being a team. They work as one unit and every single person has made a contribution in one way or another. I think that's the big difference. It's hard to get a group of kids together who will work this way."

The tournament is a dual-match format with the first team getting to 10 wins moving on to the next round. Only the regional champion gets to go to state.

Going into the 16-team tournament, the Bulldogs bring a record of 12-4. Their only losses came against teams which were ranked in the top 15 in the pre-season poll: El Paso Coronado, Lubbock Coronado, Amarillo High and District 4-5A champion and defending state champion Abilene High. Heiting feels that two teams are among the favorites: El Paso Coronado, and of course, Abilene High.

The tournament seeds back up the coach.

MHS is the fourth seed behind top-seed El Paso Coronado, Abilene High and Lubbock Coronado.

"Abilene High has been there and has quite a few people back from last year's team," said Heiting whose team lost to the Eagles 17-2 to close out the district season. "They definitely will have the experience edge. We won't be in the same side of the bracket as them. If we play them, we'll play them in the finals."

But Heiting also likes his team as a possible contender.

"I like our chances just fine," he said. "I compare this to college's March Madness. The No. 1 and No. 2 seeds don't win it all the time. Anything that's happened in the past is irrelevant. It really doesn't matter once the tournament starts."

"If we put our minds to it, we can certainly win it," Branum said.

The Bulldogs will certainly be one of the underdogs in this tournament. That may suit them just fine.

"We're just going out there to play the best we can," Branum said.

Heiting feels that there is not a weak area on his team. After looking at the season statistics, the records were pretty even among the girls and the boys. In District 4-5A play, the boys had a record of 35-19, while the girls had a record of 35-19.

"That just proves that we're super well-balanced," Heiting said. "We analyzed the statistics to see if there was an area of weakness. Right now we feel good the way we look as a team. We just think everybody will be fired up and ready to go."

Making regionals is a huge accomplishment for any Midland team, which has taken a backseat to Abilene schools over the years. By finally breaking through in team tennis, the Bulldogs may be turning the tide a little bit toward the Tall City.

"It's a big step for our program," Heiting said. "It's long overdue in my opinion and hopefully we're going to try to make this a habit. Getting to regionals is almost like a step to getting to state, which is the ultimate goal. We certainly have people to do that."

Heiting said that they will follow the same lineup they've had since the win over Abilene Cooper.

"The kids have earned these spots," Heiting said. "If there are any changes, it'll be because of injury. I don't anticipate any changes. We've been very successful."

In boys singles the Nos. 1 through 6 spots will be Marcos Valdez, Miguel Bustilloz, Webb, Jess Gilmour, Carlos Morales and Anthony Kent.

In boys doubles, it will be the teams of Valdez and Webb, Bustilloz and Gilmour, and the duo of Kent and Kirk Logan.

The girls Nos. 1-6 singles players will be Branum, Natalie Madden, Laura Innerarity, Catherine Cobb, Sara Giles and Ashley Shannon.

Girls doubles teams are Branum and Madden, Innerarity and Cobb, and the team of Giles and Marianne Reeves.

The mixed doubles will be Stephen Hilliard and Lindsey Madden.

BYU 19, Wyoming 7

PROVO, Utah — The numbers in the victory column indicate LaVell Edwards has pulled even with Tom Osborne. Yet the retiring BYU coach insists it's a gap he'll never close.

Owen Pochman kicked two long field goals, getting a great bounce on the first, to give Edwards career victory No. 255 as the Cougars beat Wyoming 19-7 on Thursday night.

Edwards improved to 255-100-3, tying Osborne for sixth place on the NCAA's career list. Edwards is retiring after 29 seasons this year; Osborne retired three years ago after 25 seasons at Nebraska.

"It took him 25 years and it's taken me about 100," Edwards said. "Tom's a great guy and a very good friend. I don't know if anyone has done a better job coaching in a 25-year period than he has."

The Cougars (4-5, 2-2 Mountain West) went ahead 9-7 late in the third quarter when Pochman's wobbling line-drive attempt from 48 yards struck the crossbar and bounced through the posts.

Pochman missed three second-half field goals during BYU's 16-15 loss to San Diego State last weekend, but he celebrated on the field this time. The normally stoic Edwards cracked a smile on the sideline.

"We play better when everybody contributes and I'm just glad I was able to come through," Pochman said. "That first ball was ugly, no question, but I'll take it because it put three points on the board."

The Cougars extended the lead to 16-7 on Marcus Whalen's 4-yard touchdown run early in the fourth quarter and Pochman added a 42-yard field goal, this time with plenty of height, with 4:15 to play.

Tyson Smith made his third interception, picking off reserve quarterback Brandon Neill's pass, to end a late scoring threat by the Cowboys (1-8, 0-5), who lost their sixth straight.

For a while, it seemed neither team wanted to win. It was a woeful second quarter, with each punchless offense trading fumbles and interceptions. Over a span of 1:38 late in the half, possession changed three times.

"We must have set a record tonight for turnovers, both teams," Edwards said. "I don't have a clue how many we had."

Wyoming starter Jay Stoner threw three first-half interceptions, but the Cougars seemed determined to give the Cowboys another chance.

QB Heupel helps Sooners back into national spotlight

By Owen Canfield
AP Sports Writer

NORMAN, Okla. — The player who makes Oklahoma's flashy offense click is about as exciting as your local CPA.

Josh Heupel is more about grit than glitz. In this age of me, Heupel talks about we. He's soft-spoken and humble, almost boring. He swears he doesn't read or listen to what is written or said about him.

He doesn't exactly knock your socks off on the field, either. Plenty of quarterbacks have stronger arms, and no defensive coordinator spends much time worrying about his scrambling ability.

But Heupel's play is the biggest reason Oklahoma is 6-0 and ranked No. 3 heading into Saturday's game against top-ranked Nebraska.

"He's just exceptional," coach Bob Stoops said. "I don't think there's any other way to say it."

Heupel has completed 68.6 percent of his passes for 1,894 yards and 11 touchdowns, with just four interceptions. In the Sooners' three Big 12 games, he is even better — 75 for 107 (70 percent) for 995 yards, four touchdowns and no interceptions.

And Heupel has been at his best in the two biggest games so far. He threw for 275 yards and a touchdown against Texas, then burned Kansas State with 29-of-37 passing for 374 yards and two TDs despite being knocked down repeatedly.

"Up to this point, I haven't seen anybody better," Kansas State coach Bill Snyder said afterward. "Although I know there's a lot of great players out there, that was as fine a performance as I've seen in an awful long time."

Snyder said Heupel's demeanor and toughness remind him of Chuck Long, whom he coached while an assistant at Iowa in the 1980s. Long is now the quarterbacks coach at Oklahoma.

"They're great decision-makers, they have great poise and a tremendous ability to place the ball in a position or spot where receivers have a chance to get to it and defenders have no chance," Snyder said.

And to think, Heupel wound up at Oklahoma almost by accident.

Heupel spent one year at Weber State before transferring to Snow Junior College in Utah, where he threw for a ton of yards but didn't exactly find himself swamped with offers from Division I coaches.

Stoops, after getting the Oklahoma job in 1998, hired Mike Leach from Kentucky as offensive coordinator. As defensive coordinator at Florida for three years, Stoops had seen what kind of trouble Kentucky's wide-open offense could cause and he thought it would work at Oklahoma.

Leach began searching for a quarterback and found Heupel.

"I think what really impressed us is when Josh was here on his recruiting visit, all he wanted to do was watch videotape," Stoops said. "He didn't want to go out and run around town, he didn't care about going to see the learning center. I think he knew he was smart enough, he'll get a good degree.

"He wanted to watch football. He wanted to know, 'Can I run this offense and have success?'"

Yes, he can. Heupel threw for 3,460 yards and 30 touchdowns last year and helped lead Oklahoma to a 7-4 finish and its first bowl trip since 1994. Then he spent the spring and summer studying more film, bulking up in the weightroom and working with Long to improve his mechanics.

The payoff has been obvious. Oklahoma ranks first in the nation in scoring, fourth in passing offense and fifth in total offense.

He is the first to credit his teammates, and it's true that Oklahoma's receivers and offensive linemen have been outstanding. But Heupel has been uncanny.

The quarterback in Oklahoma's offense has plenty of leeway to call audibles, and Heupel seldom makes a wrong call. He has thrown 118 straight passes without an interception. Plus, he is willing to stay in the pocket and throw under duress.

"If you're a throwing quarterback, getting hit in the mouth is going to be part of the game," he said. "Teams want to bring heat on you, and they're playing a game of can you get rid of the football before we get to you and can you complete it."

Heupel has won most of those. As a result, he's the front-runner for Big 12 player of the year and a Heisman contender. Just don't expect him to get excited about it all.

"I'm the same quarterback that was at Weber State, at Snow Junior College. I'm the same person," Heupel said. "God has blessed me with a great opportunity to come out here and play football and have a great platform to reach a lot of people. Hopefully, I've taken advantage of that to the fullest extent."

On Thursday, Heupel was announced as one of five nominees for the Johnny Unitas Golden Arm Award, presented each year to the nation's top senior quarterback.

Thomas' scoring streak is at two

Associated Press

IRVING, Texas — While the Dallas Cowboys don't have a streak going, their stocky linebacker-turned-fullback does.

Robert Thomas has scored his only career touchdowns in the past two games for the Cowboys (3-4), who haven't won consecutive games since winning their first three games of the 1999 season.

"We need to get winning like that, with a streak going like that," Thomas said. "That's a two-week (scoring) streak, it felt good. Two weeks straight, I've got two balls. It's a blessing."

And somewhat unexpected.

Consider that Thomas played linebacker at Division II Henderson State and, after not being drafted, went to training camp in Canada. He signed as a free agent with the Cowboys before the 1998 season, when he saw most of his action on special teams.

During training camp a year later, with a glut of linebackers and a lack of depth at fullback, the Cowboys decided to move the 6-foot-1, 252-pound Thomas into the offensive backfield as the backup to Daryl "Moose" Johnston.

When Johnston suffered what proved to be a career-ending neck injury in the 1999 opener, Thomas wasn't quite ready to take over the starting job. Dallas signed free agent Tim Lester for five games before Thomas became the starter the second half of last season.

Now more comfortable in the position, Thomas' role in the offense has expanded a bit.

In a 48-7 victory over Arizona on Sunday, Thomas touched the ball a career-high five times. He had three carries for 14 yards and caught two passes for 9 yards, including a 2-yard TD on which he lunged and stretched out his arm to get the ball into the end zone while being tackled.

"Not only did he block well, he caught the ball well out of the backfield and he even ran the football effectively," said Cowboys coach Dave Campo. "He actually got his number called twice in a row, which is unusual."

A week earlier, Thomas had a 3-yard TD reception in a 19-14 loss at the New York Giants.

"He didn't really start off well this year," said Cowboys running backs coach Clarence Shelmon. "He wasn't playing that great at first. But he's picked it up considerably, and he's doing real well the last few games."

Dallas coaches realize what a tremendous transition Thomas has gone through. Instead of tackling people, he's most often blocking defenders trying to tackle Emmitt Smith and Chris Warren, two of the top five active rushers in the NFL.

"I think he's a guy that continues to get better at fullback," Campo said. "He's learning as he goes. Anytime you have a fullback that can block and catch the ball out of the backfield, I think you have a chance to have a good football player."

The way his NFL career has evolved surprises even Thomas.

"I would be a successor to DJ (Daryl Johnston) at fullback, who would have thought?," Thomas said. "When he hit the league, I was 15. Fast-forward 10 years, and I've been handed the job to be the fullback behind him."

All he needs now is a good nickname.

Crouch healthy, ready for Sooners

Associated Press

LINCOLN, Neb. — Just once, Nebraska linebacker Carlos Polk would like to get his hands on Cornhuskers' quarterback Eric Crouch.

"I always tease him that I want to hit him in practice — just to test him," Polk said. "But I know that's not going to happen. I might not catch him in the first place."

Not many people do. The junior from Omaha, who carries No. 1 Nebraska's national title hopes, hasn't slowed down since he took over the starting job a year ago.

Crouch leads the nation's No. 2 scoring offense, which averages 46.3 points per game, with 11 rushing touchdowns and nine passing TDs. On Saturday, he will play opposite the quarterback who leads the top-scoring offense — Josh Heupel of third-ranked Oklahoma.

The two are considered contenders for the Heisman Trophy and one could take a giant step ahead with a good performance in this high-profile game.

"That's one thing that I know I've blocked out of my mind already. It's not a battle between the quarterbacks. It's a battle between the teams," Crouch said.

The quarterbacks and the teams have decidedly different offensive philosophies. While the Sooners have shifted from their traditional running attack and now rely on Heupel's pinpoint passing, the Huskers have stayed with the option. And Crouch is running it as well as any Nebraska QB ever has.

"He's always had confidence but certainly things fit together for him much more easily, much smoother. That only comes from playing and having success playing," coach Frank Solich said. "He's having, I think, just an outstanding year. I don't think that he could be playing better."

The Huskers lead the nation in rushing at nearly 380 yards per game and are second in total offense with an average of 499.3.

Just seven games into the season, Crouch is close to the 16 touchdowns he ran for last year, when he became the starter after two games. He has 576 rushing yards on 96 carries and has completed 47 of 96 passes for 775 yards and nine touchdowns.

The numbers would be much higher, but Solich has rested Crouch for much of the last two games. Crouch played just a quarter last week in a 59-0 shutout of Baylor — Nebraska led 38-0 at the time — and sat out the fourth quarter the week before against Texas Tech.

"Eric's the kind of guy that will play through injuries. He actually practices through them, too. He tries not to let anything affect him," Solich said. "That's a big plus to have a guy like that on your football team because it sets an example for others."

For Crouch, coming out after just a quarter last week was difficult, getting only five carries for 46 yards and a touchdown. It was only the second time this season he hadn't either run or thrown for at least two TDs.

"I feel like it was the best thing to do for me to be healthy going into this next game," Crouch said. "I think it's helped me out more than I ever thought it would. I feel like I'm moving around this week the best I have all week. If you look back on it, it's probably because of the rest I've had."

Facing a healthy and rested Crouch has been on the mind of Oklahoma coach Bob Stoops.

"Everything revolves around him, so you've got to be able to change the way you come after him, change the way you're supporting against the plays that they're running," Stoops said. "And when you get there, you've got to be able to tackle. You see a lot of times he's played against people when people are in position, but he makes 'em miss or runs through tackles and makes plays."

Crouch plays down his statistics and the Heisman talk. He also doesn't seem to get wrapped up in the hype surrounding Saturday's game, even if Nebraska is No. 1 and Oklahoma No. 2 in the Bowl Championship Series ratings, which will decide who plays for the national title.

Crouch is more concerned about becoming part of the Nebraska-Oklahoma history he remembers watching as a kid.

"I'm a big part of it now and I know that I've got to go out and have my best game," he said. "Right now it's kind of hard for me to think of it as a rivalry because I haven't played them yet."

Polk, one of 11 finalists for the Butkus Award as the nation's top linebacker, is glad he only goes against Crouch in practice, even if he's not allowed to hit him.

"He's tough. Some of the moves that he puts on in the game just leaves you saying 'Wow!'" Polk said. "I don't envy the OU players at all."

Reliant names Texans' new stadium complex

Associated Press

HOUSTON — The National Football League Houston Texans dubbed their new field Reliant Stadium Thursday after power giant Reliant Energy Inc. paid an estimated $300 million to emblazon its name on the retractable-roof facility being built next to the famed Astrodome.

The deal also includes naming rights for the Astrodome and three other facilities in the stadium-convention center complex, which collectively will be called Reliant Park.

"Reliant Energy has stepped up to be be our first and foremost franchise player in history," Texans owner Bob McNair said. "Reliant Energy has stepped up for our fans and for the community."

That perception may not be widely held.

The naming announcement comes at a time of customer unrest for Reliant and its retail power division in Houston, Houston Lighting and Power Co. The utility already raised rates by 11 percent this year and is again pleading with the Texas Public Utility Commission for another 10.5 percent boost.

The request comes in the wake of record third-quarter earnings, which were propelled largely by Houston's power demands.

The company insists all of the $300 million commitment will come from parent company Reliant, to which Houston Lighting and Power provides between one-fourth and one-fifth of the company's roughly $20 billion in annual revenue.

"What I'm trying to make sure we get straight is that ratepayers are paying none of it," Reliant chairman, president and chief executive officer R. Steve Letbetter told reporters.

Letbetter's argument was met with skepticism by some Reliant customers.

"They're saying that it's not coming from their rate base, but where else would it come from?" ratepayer Tom Auld, who lives in suburban Houston, said. "It all comes from someone's power bill to begin with."

Letbetter refused to say if ratepayers in other markets would be saddled with the cost. He also would not confirm terms of the deal, but said earlier reports of $300 million over 30 years were "essentially correct." The actual agreement lasts 32 years, two of them coming before the Texans' debut NFL season in 2002.

The Texans-Reliant deal would be a record if the $300 million figure is correct, topping the 27-year, $205 million pact signed by the Washington Redskins and Federal Express last year.

'Cocktail Party' may return to campus stadiums by 2003

Associated Press

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. — A snarling bulldog wearing a red-and-black sweater. A stuffed Gator mascot with a big "F" embroidered on its chest. And, of course, an ice-cold pitcher of cocktails sitting on a folding table outside a motorhome.

These are some of the images that make the Georgia-Florida game one of college football's best events every year. But the future of the annual game, "The World's Largest Outdoor Cocktail Party," is in question.

No. 8 Florida (6-1, 4-1 Southeastern Conference) and No. 13 Georgia (6-1, 4-1) renew the rivalry Saturday, with the lead in the SEC East at stake on the neutral turf of Alltel Stadium.

But there's a chance the cocktails could be pouring on campus by 2003.

Essentially, it's up to Georgia. Athletic director Vince Dooley will complete a serious fact-finding mission before he enters negotiations to extend the contract after this season.

"We'll take the time to assess every constituency that has an interest in the game — the ticketholders, the faculty, the athletic board, coach Donnan — and see where we are," Dooley said.

This is a game that has earned something of a mythical status over a span of nearly a century, the stadium evenly split between Florida fans dressed in orange and blue and Georgia fans in red and black. The first game was played in Jacksonville in 1915.

There have been great plays, such as Buck Belue's 93-yard touchdown pass to Lindsay Scott in 1980 — "Run, Lindsay, run!" are the immortal words attributed to radio announcer Larry Munson.

Even more great players come to mind — Herschel Walker, Danny Wuerffel, Gene Washington, to name a few.

But history and tradition might take a back seat to wins and losses if some Georgia alumni, especially the younger set, have their way.

The Bulldogs are 1-9 against the Gators over the last decade.

Woods loses nothing during 6-week break

Associated Press

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. — Six weeks later, not much has changed. Those watching Tiger Woods wondered whether he would shoot 59, and those trying to beat him wondered whether this tournament would end like so many others.

Woods returned to the PGA Tour for the first time since Sept. 10 and promptly birdied the first five holes before setting for a 9-under 63, giving him a share of the lead Thursday with Steve Flesch in the National Car Rental Classic at Disney World.

Tiger Woods shot a round of 63 Thursday and shared the first-round lead in the National Car Rental Classic at Disney World in Florida.

AP Photo

"You just expect the fact that he's going to play well every week, because he doesn't give you any reason to think otherwise," Flesch said.

Already a nine-time winner this year, including the last three majors, Woods got off to a torrid start in his bid for a fourth straight victory.

He missed only one green, took only 25 putts and felt like he left a few shots out on the Palm Course. Still, the bogey-free 63 was his lowest first round this year, and his 40th consecutive round at par or better on the PGA Tour.

"Any time you start off with five straight birdies and you have 13 holes left, you feel like you can really do some damage," Woods said. "It's hard to be disappointed with a 63. But again, if you're a little greedy, I could have made a couple here and there."

Mike Springer, trying desperately to avoid another trip to Q-school, also birdied his first five holes and wound up with a 64, along with Bill Glasson.

The group at 65 included Carlos Franco and Bob May, who played with Woods for the first time since their dramatic duel at the PGA Championship, where both had a 31 on the back nine Sunday and Woods outlasted him in a three-hole playoff.

"Tiger brings out the best in me," May said. "If he gets it going like he did today, hopefully you get towed along."

That's about what happened

Perhaps the most amazing part about their round was that Woods didn't have honors to hit first on the tee over the final 11 holes. May matched him birdie-for-birdie down the stretch, and even drained a 75-foot eagle putt on their 16th hole.

"I still finished two strokes behind him," May said. "Incredible."

Penalty of top picks is Stern message

Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — NBA commissioner David Stern said Thursday that "shocking" fraud by the Minnesota Timberwolves forced him to inflict record punishment over a secret contract for star forward Joe Smith.

Stern stripped the Wolves of five first-round draft choices and fined the team $3.5 million for the agreement, which an arbitrator found was intended to circumvent the NBA salary cap.

"The fact is, we gave this a lot more thought than the parties in the Minnesota franchise who risked their future by engaging in one of the most far-reaching frauds we've seen," Stern said.

"This was a fraud of major proportions. There were no fewer than five undisclosed contracts tucked away, hoping they'd never see the light of day. This is fraud that ripped to the heart of the (collective bargaining) compact. The magnitude of this stuff is shocking."

Stern's punishment of the Wolves could include one-year suspensions for owner Glen Taylor and anyone in the organization who took part in the deal.

Stern said he hoped to schedule hearings within the next two weeks with Taylor and other Timberwolves officials, possibly including vice president Kevin McHale and coach Flip Saunders, to determine whether they will be suspended.

At halftime of Minnesota's exhibition game with Detroit on Thursday night, Taylor apologized to Minnesotans and accepted full responsibility. He said he did not realize when he made the agreement that he was breaking rules of the collective bargaining agreement and said unusual circumstances were involved that he would not reveal.

"There are always reasons why things happen," Taylor said. "They're not as simple as they seem."

The NBA said the fine was the stiffest ever imposed by the league on any franchise, player or other individual and the maximum allowed. Spokesman Brian McIntyre also said he could not recall any team being stripped of multiple draft choices.

It's the loss of draft choices that is particularly damaging to a franchise that will be at or near the top of the salary cap as long as it is carrying forward Kevin Garnett's $126 million contract through 2004. Without draft picks or the ability to pursue high-priced free agents, management will have little room to bulk up the roster around Garnett.

"We'll still want to field good teams," Taylor said. "It'll be harder, more difficult. We always recognized we were in a small market and it would always be more difficult to attract good players. We'll have to be lucky. I understand that."

The job might be tougher than Taylor suggested.

"I was reading across the page and the draft picks just kept going," New York Knicks general manager Scott Layden said. "The money is probably the least of the penalty, but collectively it shows that the commissioner is not soft on circumvention."

At a team shootaround Thursday morning, Saunders said the Wolves were used to dealing with adversity.

"We've been through a lot in the last five years," he said. "We were written off when we lost Googs (Tom Gugliotta) and Stephon (Marbury). We won 50 games when a lot of people didn't think we could."

Saunders said he didn't know whether the Wolves would appeal the penalties.

Garnett said the ruling would not affect whether he stays with the Wolves when his contract expires.

WILLIAMSON: MHS faces obstacle against Permian in Ratliff. Since 1983, Lee is 11-8-1 against Permian overall.

Wall Climbing: Midland High knocked down a big barrier last year by ending a long losing streak to Odessa Permian. Maybe the Bulldogs should put an end to another jinx tonight if they are serious about this playoff business. Abilene Cooper owns a 25-13-1 overall record against MHS, but the most disturbing fact is that the Cougars have won nine in a row against the Bulldogs, the longest streak by either team in that series.

Shot at Shotwell: Odessa High has not beaten Abilene High in a game at Shotwell Stadium since 1992. They are 0-2 against AHS over that span of time and that's where the Bronchos will play tonight. Some will say, "Well, OHS beat the Eagles in 1994 in Abilene." But remember that game was moved over to Hardin-Simmons University when Shotwell had light failure.

Again we failed to pick all three games correctly in the District 4-5A Picking Game last week, missing the OHS-MHS contest. So, with a 26-7 (.788) mark for the year, here's how we think this week will go down.

Abilene Cooper 28, Midland High 14: This is the key battle of the week in 4-5A since both teams are 1-1 in the district race. The winner has a real edge of going to the state playoffs. And even though the loop is enjoying a terrific stay at home, MHS hasn't beaten the Cougars at home since 1988, the year the Bulldogs were 9-1 for the season.

Midland Lee 28, Odessa Permian 14: Benson right, Benson left, Benson up the middle. It works for me. Lee coach John Parchman has never lost to Permian as head coach at Lee (5-0). This spells e-l-i-m-i-n-a-t-i-o-n for Mojo. Lee is 6-2-1 in games played at Ratliff Stadium against Permian.

Abilene High 28, Odessa High 14: Odessa High owns a 21-18 advantage over the Eagles since 1961, but the Cinderella horseshoe is left at Shotwell Stadium tonight. Naturally, if we get this one wrong, write in the name of the Bronchos into the playoff bracket.

(From 1C)

offenses and its stingiest defense.

Cooper is the irresistible force, averaging 349.3 yards, second most in 4-5A. Calling the signals for the Cougars is Jordan Neal, who broke the 4-5A record for passing yards in a game with 429 against Lee. Neal has thrown for 1,583 yards and 19 touchdowns this season.

"He is an outstanding quarterback, probably the class of the district," Browning said. "(Kevin) Goodman is a good quarterback for Abilene High, but Neal is able to run the ball better and throws equally as well, if not better."

He also has the best receiving corps in the district to work with. Coby Mavroulis, Tony Cunningham and Justin Harper are all ranked in the top seven (Cooper running back Tremaine Diles is eighth) on the district receiving list, having racked up more than 1,202 yards. Last week, the three became the first trio in the history of District 4-5A to each catch passes for 100 yards in a game.

"Against Abilene High, you can concentrate on Spells," Browning said. "You can't do that against these guys. You have to concentrate on all these guys."

Quisenberry, on the other hand, thinks his team has the tougher task. Midland High has been the immovable object, allowing 216.3 yards per game this season and shutting down big-play offenses. AHS, another prolific attack, went into its 4-5A opener with the Bulldogs revving on all cylinders. The Eagles left sputtering.

"I haven't seen anybody do anything against them. Now, it is our shot to step up and see what we can do," Quisenberry said. "I would be shocked if we get anywhere near (429 yards passing). Midland High does such a good job controlling the ball, and defensively, they do not give up the big play. They don't make mistakes and don't miss tackles. That is something that has jumped out at us. They play hard and get after you."

Unfortunately for Bulldog fans, the offense isn't playing with the same consistency. Last week, MHS turned the ball over five times, its second forgettable performance of the season. Against Monterey, the Bulldogs had eight turnovers. Overall this season, the Bulldogs are 4-0 in games where they commit fewer turnovers. They are 0-3 when they lose the turnover battle.

"There is no question. We have to reward (the defense)," Browning said. "Our defense has done a great job of limiting our opponents, and we expect another great effort out of them."

While not turning over the ball is the priority, sustaining drives is next in line.

"We have to control the football and keep it away from them," Browning said. "We don't want to get into a shootout with them and don't want to try to outscore them. We are not trying to get in one of those 35-34 games."

If the MHS offense needs inspiration, this might be it. Cooper is dead last in rushing defense and overall defense. Last week, Lee rushed for 477 yards against the Cougars.

"We got to play better defensively," Quisenberry said. "If we don't, they will play keep away from us. It is hard to score points when your offense is on the sidelines."

Cooper Notes: Cooper is averaging 349.7 yards (2,448 yards in seven games) and trails Midland Lee by just three yards for 4-5A's top spot. The Cougars are giving up 289.0 yards (second worse in 4-5A)... Diles is second in district with 709 rushing yards... Mavroulis is fourth in receiving. He leads the team with 38 catches for 474 yards. Cunningham (26-411) and Harper (23-317) follow... Matt Uselton is punting for a 39.1 average...

MHS Notes: The Bulldogs are averaging 268.9 yards a game (tied for last in the district)... QB Chris Howard has thrown for 922 yards. With 78 more, he will be the eighth MHS passer (and first since 1988) to throw for 1,000 yards in a season... RB Tony Joseph had rushed for 621 yards... WR Lamar Hickey is fifth in the district with 334 receiving yards...James Gripp has a 39.5 average per punt...

Injury List: For Cooper - DE Mark Johnson is out (broken foot); OL Steven Kennedy is out (sprained ankle); LB Reid Overall is questionable (broken thumb); OL Jacob Hudson is out (broken leg); LB Edmond Harris is out (knee); OL J. Pond is out (knee). For MHS - Colter Lange is out (broken leg bone).

Game Notes: Midland High has not defeated Abilene Cooper since 1990. That is a nine-game losing skid... Last year, Cooper defeated MHS, 27-10... Browning-coached MHS teams are 2-2 against Quisenberry's teams at OHS and Cooper since 1996... Tickets for the game are $7 at the gate... KCRS (AM 550) will broadcast the game...

Air Record? Deja vous: Quisenberry was surprised after last week's game that Neal had thrown for 429 yards. However, he knew what it was like to see a 4-5A passing record. Quisenberry said he was on hand at W.T. Barrett Stadium in 1968 for the only other 400-yard passing game in 4-5A history when Jody Turner passed for 400 yards against Odessa Permian...

LEE: Two trips to Abilene help Mojo to 0-2 district start

(From 1C)

Parchman said, "With the parity you are seeing in this district this season, every game is important. This is our third District 4-5A game and we are approaching this one just like we have all the others."

Permian, by far, had the worst schedule to deal with in opening district play and it was greeted with an 0-2 start. Mojo had to travel to Abilene back-to-back.

"I don't think anyone in the district would trade schedules with us," Mills said. "First, we have to go to Abilene twice and play good football teams back-to-back. Then we get to come home and get to face Mr. (Cedric) Benson on turf. We're excited about being at home for the rest of the year. We haven't been at home for five weeks.

"Our kids have been playing their guts out, but we just aren't very big and strong. And as long as I've been coaching, I've never seen the amount of injuries that we've had this year. I mean, it's like we're carting someone off the field every day. It's not just our varsity, but it's also our sophomores and junior varsities."

The latest Permian casualty this week is defensive end Jason Claire, who cut off two fingers in a lawn mower.

Lee, too, got hit big with the injury bug this week as starting right guard Lorenzo Orosco broke a leg in workouts this week. Orosco was named as Lee's Player of the Week after the win over Abilene Cooper. George Duarte and Jeremy Newton have both been working in that spot. Orosco was scheduled to have surgery today and is out for the season.

The good news is that cornerback Tim Norman is back after missing the Cooper game with a bruised shoulder.

Permian has shown a balanced offensive attack. Tailback Mark Gonzales has 523 yards rushing while quarterback Justin Whitaker has thrown for 845 yards. The main target is Matt Stewart, who has caught 30 passes for 524 yards for five touchdowns.

Lee's Cedric Benson crashed the 1,000-yard barrier for the third consecutive year last week with 335 yards against Cooper, giving him 1,256 yards for the year and a state record five 300-yard rushing games.

In Permian, Lee faces the task of trying to crack another top defensive team.

"We have to make first downs," Parchman said. "We weren't able to do that in our loss to Odessa High and that caused us problems, so we want to make first downs in this game. Permian still has some warriors as far as I can see and they are people you can win games with."

Benson Watch: Benson, Class 5A's all-time leading runner, now has 6,808 career rushing yards at Lee. He needs only 163 yards to move into the state's elite Top 10 rushing list, passing Byron Morris of Cooper (1986-89). From there it is just a short 291-yard journey into eighth place...

Streaks: Odessa teams still have a chance at a sweep over Midland. Midland teams swept the Odessa teams last year. Permian will have to carry the load, however, since Mojo has games left with both Lee and MHS... Lee has won five in a row over Permian... The Rebels are 15-6-1 in Ratliff...

Rebel Yells: Lee quarterback Nick Hand threw for 98 yards in the first half against Odessa High and didn't complete a pass in the second half. He threw only once against Cooper last week and was intercepted. But Hand found another way to help. He rushed for 98 yards against Cooper and would have had 100 if he hadn't taken a knee to end the game. "He was mad about having to take the knee when he found out he had 98 yards rushing," Parchman said...

Texas Tech takes on Kansas at wrong time

LAWRENCE, Kan. (AP) — Two weeks ago Texas Tech suffered the most lopsided loss in school history. Then last week it came within a couple of plays of pulling off one of the Red Raiders' all-time upsets.

So what should Kansas expect this week?

A lot of passing, is all anyone knows for sure.

"Tech is a scary football team," said Kansas coach Terry Allen, whose Jayhawks (4-3, 2-2 Big 12) will be looking for their third straight win.

"They're very, very good on defense and with the style of offense they play, they can be awfully explosive."

Texas Tech (5-3, 1-3) used its wide-open passing attack to scare the daylights out of No. 10 Kansas State in Manhattan last Saturday before finally losing 28-23. Several times, receivers came open only to have the ball delivered just out of reach. They were 32-point underdogs, but the Red Raiders outgained the Wildcats 338 yards to 285. The week before, No. 1 Nebraska destroyed Texas Tech 56-3.

"I thought we made a lot of improvement against Kansas State," said head coach Mike Leach. "We made too many mistakes to win — dropped balls, penalties, things of that nature. But I thought we improved a lot as a team, on offense and defense."

Since getting routed by Kansas State, the Jayhawks have been on a roll. They beat Missouri for their first conference road win in Terry Allen's four-year tenure and then last week whipped Colorado behind David Winbush's 181 yards in total offense.

Crude rises

NEW YORK — Prices for crude oil and products futures ended higher on Thursday after a series of ups and downs at the New York Mercantile Exchange.

December crude was up 75 cents at $33.71 per barrel. Heating oil for November delivery gained 1.02 cent to 98.74 cents a gallon.

Amid very thin volumes, traders bought on dips and sold on rallies, exaggerating price moves. Heightening the volatility, refined products options expired Thursday.

Futures jumped at the session's open on fears that an already tight global market would lose Iraqi exports averaging 2.2 million barrels a day beginning Nov. 1. The Middle East Economic Survey reported Thursday that there is a "serious possibility" that Iraqi oil exports could be suspended next week.

Iraq first threatened to disrupt oil exports earlier this month when it informed its oil customers to start making payments in the European common currency beginning Nov. 1 and asked the U.N. Sanctions Committee to set up a euro account. The committee meets Monday to make a decision. A U.N. delegate reported it could do so quickly.

Prices dipped after a Clinton Administration spokesman said late Thursday that it wasn't concerned about the specific currency Iraq chooses, only that the U.N. control revenue from the oil for food program so Iraq buys "food and not tanks."

Saudi Arabia has said it would move in to fill any shortage of oil caused by an Iraqi interruption. The kingdom currently produces about 9 million barrels of oil per day and has unused production capacity of about 1.5 million barrels per day.

Dollar higher

LONDON (AP) — The euro hit another record low in European trading Thursday, and the U.S. dollar gained against most other major currencies.

The euro fell to 82.28 cents in morning trading before recovering to 82.77 cents, up from 82.68 cents late Wednesday. Later, in midday trading in New York, the euro traded at 82.73 cents.

Other dollar rates in Europe, compared with late Wednesday, 108.32 Japanese yen, up from 107.87; 1.8235 Swiss francs, up from 1.8156; 1.5177 Canadian dollars, up from 1.5166.

The British pound was quoted at $1.4331, up from $1.4328.

In midday trading in New York, the dollar bought 108.32 yen, and the pound was worth $1.4322.

Based on euro rates, the dollar is worth 2.3607 German marks, down from 2.3641; 7.9174 French francs, down from 7.9289; 2.6599 Dutch guilders, down from 2.6637; 2,337.08 Italian lire, down from 2,340.47.

Gold falls

Gold dealers in London fixed a recommended price of $266.25 bid per troy ounce, down from $267.00 on Wednesday. In Zurich the bid price was $265.95, down from $266.90. Gold fell $3.40 in Hong Kong to $266.75.

Workers' compensation growth slows

By Jeanine Aversa
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — American workers' compensation in the third quarter posted its smallest increase in a year as both wages and benefits grew at a solid but more subdued pace.

Economists said Thursday's report suggests that the nation's still-sizzling labor market is allowing workers to make gains but isn't producing worrisome wage inflation.

The compensation figures also bolstered economists' belief that the Federal Reserve — which has been worried that the tight labor market will trigger wage inflation — will leave interest rates unchanged at its next meeting on Nov. 15.

Labor Secretary Alexis Herman, who also has been advising Vice President Al Gore in his bid to capture the White House, seized upon the report saying it shows that "this economy continues to be a winner for both business and labor." Gore and his Republican rival, Texas Gov. George W. Bush, have repeatedly clashed over who will best keep the nation's prosperity going.

The Labor Department's Employment Cost Index, a closely watched gauge of inflation pressures, showed that Americans' wages and benefits rose by 0.9 percent in the July-September quarter, down slightly from a 1.0 percent increase in the previous three months.

"Growth in labor compensation has leveled off but at a relatively high level. Compensation is still strong and indicates that workers are doing well, and, given robust productivity gains so far, businesses are doing well, too," said Mark Zandi, chief economist for Economy.com, a consulting firm.

On Wall Street, investors remained skittish following a high-tech rout the previous session. The Dow Jones industrial average, which flirted with moderate losses throughout the afternoon, finished the day up by 53.64 points at 10,380.12.

The third-quarter compensation increase was right on target with many analysts' expectations and marked the slowest quarterly rate of growth in compensation since a 0.8 percent rise in the third quarter of 1999.

Even with the moderation, compensation growth remains healthy, economists said. Analysts said sizable gains in productivity — the amount of output per hour of work — is allowing employers to pay workers more while still holding the line on prices.

"Sustained increases in productivity remain the secret of strong, non-inflationary growth..." said Jerry Jasinowski, president of the National Association of Manufacturers.

The wages and salaries component of the index, viewed by economists as the best measure of changes in workers' compensation costs, advanced by 0.8 percent in the third quarter, the slowest pace since a 0.5 percent gain posted in the first quarter of 1999. In the second quarter of this year, wages and salaries rose by 1.0 percent.

The cost of benefits, which includes referral bonuses, vacations and health insurance, also moderated, rising 1.0 percent in the third quarter, the slowest rate in a year, after a 1.1 percent increase in the previous quarter.

Total compensation for private workers rose 1.0 percent in the third quarter, down from a 1.1 percent increase in the second quarter. State and local government workers' compensation grew by 0.6 percent in the third quarter, following a 0.8 percent gain the previous quarter.

For the 12 months ending September, Americans' wages and benefits rose by 4.3 percent. That was down from a 4.4 percent gain for the 12 months ended June, but marked faster compensation growth than the 3.1 percent increase for the 12 months ended September 1999.

While gains in wages and benefits are good for workers, economists and members of the Federal Reserve watch them closely to make sure they don't become inflationary.

As employers struggle to recruit and retain workers in the tight labor market, economists worry that they might lure them with huge boosts in compensation, increased costs that could result in sharply higher product prices.

The Fed has boosted interest rates six times since June 1999 to slow the economy and stave off inflation.

Thursday's report "won't ring any alarm bells at the Federal Reserve as long as productivity stays strong. Workers are more than earning compensation increases," said economist Clifford Waldman of Waldman Associates.

In another report, the number of Americans filing new claims for state unemployment benefits fell by a seasonally adjusted 5,000 last week to 305,000, suggesting that the labor market, while loosening around the edges, remains tight.

Kellogg Chairman and CEO Carlos M. Gutierrez, right, and Keebler CEO Sam K. Reed, left, are flanked by Tony the Tiger and Ernie the Elf after Kellogg Company announced the acquisition of Keebler Foods Company, Thursday in New York. The $3.9 billion deal would put the Keebler elves on the same roster as Tony the Tiger.

Kellogg to buy Keebler for $3.9 billion

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP) — Cereal giant Kellogg Co. said Thursday that it will buy Keebler Foods Co. for almost $3.9 billion, putting Tony the Tiger on the same corporate shelf as the Keebler elves.

The merger will create a company with almost $10 billion in annual sales and extend Kellogg's operations beyond the breakfast table and into faster-growing areas of the food business.

Job losses or cutbacks have not been determined, though no cuts were expected in Battle Creek which will remain the company's base, Kellogg spokesman Richard Lovell said.

Kellogg, the world's leading cereal maker and a leader in convenience foods, has annual sales of nearly $7 billion. Its brands include Frosted Flakes, Special K and Rice Krispies cereals, Eggo waffles, Pop-Tarts and Nutri-Grain bars.

Keebler and its subsidiaries are the second-largest cookie and cracker maker in the United States, with annual sales of $2.7 billion. Among its brands are Famous Amos cookies and Cheez-It crackers.

Besides the $3.9 billion cash deal, Kellogg will assume Elmhurst, Ill.-based Keebler's debt of about $500 million. The deal is subject to stockholder and regulatory approval.

Shoppers scramble for PlayStation2

NEW YORK (AP) — For customers trying to get their hands on a Sony PlayStation2, it didn't pay to be polite.

Around the country, shoppers resorted to whatever tactics were necessary to get one of the video-game consoles when they went on sale before daybreak Thursday. In some cases, that meant picking fights with security guards or pushing their way to the front of the line at 3 a.m.

The reason for the pushing and shoving: Sony has acknowledged it can't meet customer demand for the PlayStation2 because of parts shortages.

Thousands of people, from hard-core gamers in their 20s and 30s to grandmothers looking to buy PlayStation2 for their grandchildren, went home empty-handed — and angry.

Scuffles even broke out at some places.

In Minot, N.D., police were called to a Wal-Mart after receiving reports of people threatening others in line. In Woodstock, Ga., two eager customers were ticketed for disorderly conduct as they waited to buy the PlayStation2 at a Wal-Mart.

Some stores held midnight openings, inviting those who had ordered their consoles in advance. Other stores, like Best Buy and Circuit City, issued tickets for those in line before the doors opened to prevent a stampede.

PlayStation2 is part of a new generation of consoles that will eventually allow people to watch DVD movies, download music, play games with their friends in another city, and do some surfing — all through their TV sets.

Because of a parts shortage, Sony cut in half to 500,000 the number of consoles it planned to provide to stores on the launch date.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Shop around before applying for a bank loan

By Eric Tyson

Q: What sorts of collateral will banks accept for a business loan in the $300,000 range? I assumed personal assets like stock portfolios and cash would be taken into account, plus business inventory. However, the bank I've been dealing with, which is supposed to be friendly to small-business and woman business owners, has told me that real estate is all that counts. What's more, they won't accept a lien on property — they insist on holding the deed of trust. I don't get it. Are bankers really this blasé, about landing loans these days?

Tyson

A: You can't tell how interested a bank really is in making a particular type of loan or not until you understand its requirements and perhaps go through its application process. As you have found, just because a particular bank markets itself as friendly to small businesses doesn't mean that it actually is.

I asked small-business expert Jim Schell, author of "Small Business for Dummies" (IDG Books), for his thoughts on your situation. He said, "This is one hard-nosed bank. I've never heard of such shortsightedness. While she can expect a 100 percent collateral requirement on this loan (banks don't take risks on start-ups) most banks will use just about any kind of negotiable collateral, from CDs to stocks to real estate. If her investment package is worth $300,000, that should be more than enough."

Schell also told me that he hasn't observed a bank owning the deed either.

As with seeking out any type of loan, you should shop around. Start with smaller community (as opposed to national) banks. "Community banks are friendlier to the small-business owner," says Schell.

Also, get in touch with the U.S. Small Business Administration (SBA). You can call a local SBA office or visit its Web site (www.sba.gov) to learn about banks and SBA loans, including women's loan programs.

Q: I have a friend who wants to roll over his 401(k) into an IRA. What would he have to gain by doing this instead of leaving it where it is?

A: One advantage your friend might hope to enjoy is access to a greater and better range of investment choices. In a typical 401(k) plan, you're limited to a short list of investment options. The quality of those choices leaves something to be desired in some plans I've seen.

Another possible advantage of such a rollover is that under current tax laws, you may withdraw up to $10,000 of IRA funds without penalty for a first home purchase. (Note: You would still owe regular income tax on the withdrawal.)

Also, consider that every time you leave a job to take another, if you keep each 401(k) account at each prior employer, the number of accounts and resulting paperwork can get to be a headache. By consolidating your holdings, you'll have fewer accounts to keep on top of, and you'll be less apt to lose track of an account.

It's also possible your friend might wish to convert this money once placed in a regular IRA into a Roth IRA. I've written about this option in the past.

Where in the Wu Tang is ODB? Rapper a no show for hearing

LOS ANGELES — Rapper ODB is AWOL.

An arrest warrant was issued for Russell Tyrone Jones, the Wu Tang Clan member who goes by ODB, after he fled a court-ordered drug rehabilitation center and didn't show up for an Oct. 17 hearing. His probation was revoked by Superior Court Judge Marsha! Revel.

The district attorney is recommending prison time.

Jones, 31, was sentenced last November to the Pasadena treatment program as part of a plea bargain on a charge of making a terroristic threat. He was also placed on three years of probation.

Jones pleaded no contest to being a convicted felon in possession of body armor in February 1999 and to making threats at a West Hollywood nightclub in September 1998.

LOS ANGELES — Shelley Fabares is recuperating from liver transplant surgery and a full recovery is expected, a spokesman said Thursday.

The 56-year-old actress had the surgery this week.

Her liver had deteriorated due to an autoimmune disorder, said Danny Chung, national spokesman for the Chicago-based Alzheimer's Association. Fabares, whose late mother had Alzheimer's disease, has long served on the association's board.

Chung did not disclose other details.

Fabares, wife of "Providence" actor Mike Farrell, is best known for her television roles as teen-age daughter Mary Stone on "The Donna Reed Show" and the wife of the Craig T. Nelson character on "Coach."

GENEVA — Singer Michael Feinstein and actress Bridget Moynahan should have control of Internet addresses featuring their names, a United Nations panel ruled Thursday.

Feinstein, a Grammy-nominated artist who has produced 17 albums, was granted michaelfeinstein.com, michaelfeinstein.net and purefeinstein.com. All three were registered by PAWS Video Productions of Thousand Oaks, Calif.

Moynahan, who plays Natasha on HBO's "Sex and the City," was awarded control of bridgetmoynahan.net, registered by Fantastic Sites of Lincoln, Neb.

Neither Fantastic Sites nor PAWS responded to letters from the U.N.'s World Intellectual Property Organization.

Anyone can register a domain name for a few dollars, which has led so-called "cybersquatters" to file for famous names to make money from those who want the names.

Since its launch last December, WIPO's arbitration center has resolved hundreds of cases, giving rights to disputed Internet addresses to the person, organization or company after a short, inexpensive procedure that can be conducted over the Internet.

Some domain name owners who have been ordered by WIPO to hand over the names have taken their cases to court.

HOUSTON — The judge in Anna Nicole Smith's fight over her late husband's estate denied her request for a mistrial, ruling that she exaggerated a wrist injury to justify a two-week courtroom absences

Judge Mike Wood noted Wednesday that Smith went to Los Angeles for a one-day modeling shoot the day after she was first admitted to the hospital.

The former Playboy Playmate of the Year was hospitalized Oct. 11, a day after dropping a dumbbell on her hand during a workout, according to her doctor.

Smith, 32, is suing 61-year-old stepson Pierce Marshall for part of J. Howard Marshall II's oil fortune, estimated at anywhere from $48 million to $1.6 billion.

A federal bankruptcy judge in Los Angeles ruled in September that Pierce Marshall had deprived Smith of her inheritance and awarded her $449.8 million. Wood has said that ruling should not affect his court's proceedings, designed to settle the tycoon's estate.

Smith met the wheelchair-bound oil tycoon at a Houston strip club, and they married in 1994, when she was 26 and he was 89. He died the next year.

BANGOR, Maine — A 14-year-old from Dallas skipped school to fly to Bangor to meet author Stephen King at a rare appearance in his home town. His mom wasn't worried about him, though. She came along.

"I think I am the biggest King fan," aspiring writer Michael Altemeier said Wednesday. "I'd never seen him live, so this is a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity."

His mother ran the video camera as Altemeier, shaking with excitement, talked to King. King's comment: "You can't be from around here, since you act like I'm incredibly important."

The author obliged those who asked for photos during the two-hour event but declined to sign a pregnant women's belly. He was persuaded to initial her T-shirt, however, which read "Stephen King fan under construction."

He also signed the arm of a man who said he was going to have the signature turned into a tattoo.

JACQUELINE BIGAR'S STARS

The Stars Show the Kind of Day You'll Have: 5-Dynamic; 4-Positive; 3-

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Friday, Oct. 27, 2000:

You have an unusual year, in which laughter and excess mark your life. You gain financially and emotionally through others. A partnership might become even more key to your life. This person will want to dote on you. If you are single, many people want to be around you. You are likely to enter an important relationship. If attached, your relationship warms up because of your sweetie. A fellow SCORPIO could be a soul mate.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)

★★★★ A sense of abundance and good will surrounds you. You believe that nothing is impossible. You might even believe in the tooth fairy right now. Communicate about money and basic issues. Another responds. The two of you finally talk turkey. Clear your desk. Tonight: Start your weekend ASAP.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)

★★★★★ Others cheer the weekend in. You, though happy with others' enthusiasm, focus on new ways to enhance your bank account. You too want to enjoy life more. At lunch, stop and buy a card for a special friend. Communication flourishes with those around you. Tonight: Among your friends.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)

★★★★★ When you are "on," you are close to unstoppable. Use this high energy at work. Others respond to your efforts. Do you have a pet project? Now is the time to push it. Share some of your unbeatable ideas. Tonight: Go out with co-workers and relax.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)

★★★ Listen to your inner voice. You are very aware of what could be within a relationship. Are you ready to make it happen? Listen to your instincts with children and those you care about. Your imagination could carry you to many distant lands. Funnel your creativity. Tonight: Playtime.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)

★★★★ Friends pitch in when you least expect it. Stay on top of what you want. Discussions with family prove to be animated. You feel it's about time that another shares his feelings. Together you make possible much more of what you both want. Don't forget an important meeting. Tonight: Whatever makes you happy.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)

★★★★ Speak your mind, but in a way that others can hear. Your effectiveness is tested. Discuss a lively issue; your point of view offers good sense. Another acknowledges your efforts. You gain professionally, whether you are a boss or an employee. You're breaking new ground. Tonight: Out and about.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)

★★★★ You feel renewed as you seek financial strength and direction. You get much more of what you want because you seek out new sources of advice and information. Start creating the type of security you want. Treat yourself well. Do something special for a loved one. Tonight: Out and about.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)

★★★★★ You know much more than you are revealing. Work with your financial strengths. Brainstorm with business associates. Extremes punctuate an emotional relationship, but you do like what you are experiencing. Keep to yourself less, and start sharing some of your noteworthy ideas. Tonight: Your smile draws what you want.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)

★★★ A lot happens, and you might not be up for discussing it just yet. A relationship could take a twist. Popularity soars to new levels. If single, many caring people surround you. It's your call whether you play the field or go out with someone you adore. Tonight: Be vulnerable with a loved one.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)

★★★★★ Stay goal-oriented and recognize what you want. You're the star at a meeting or friendly get-together. Clearly, another wants to understand your thought processes. Swap ideas. Make plans to get together with a special friend after work. Let another express his feelings. Tonight: Whatever makes you smile.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)

★★★★ Stay goal-oriented. Swap ideas with bosses. Others value your unusual perspective and seek it out. You see opportunities and solutions where many don't. Add cheer to the life of someone who might be a bit down. You know how to lift people's spirits. Express your playfulness. Tonight: Make a must appearance.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)

★★★★ Once more, you juggle work and your personal life. Don't worry. You are doing an excellent job. Pull back and gain a perspective. Review a decision carefully. Make long-distance calls. Accept an opportunity to go out of town or to take a break and do something new. Tonight: Be adventuresome.

Cardinal Morton, Chancellor of the Exchequer for Henry VII, had a simple rule for taxing merchants. If they lived well, they obviously had money and could afford a heavy impost. On the other hand, if they scrimped, it was obvious they were hoarding their wealth and were equally able to pay substantial taxes. The bridge coup featured here is named after the worthy cardinal — the Morton's Fork Coup.

Four hearts became the final contract at both tables of a team match, and at both the West defender cashed the ace and king of hearts before shifting to a diamond. At one table declarer won in dummy, discarding a club from hand and, in the fullness of time, declarer lost a trick in each black suit to go with the two trumps already surrendered — down one.

At the other table declarer ruffed the diamond in hand, crossed to the table with the jack of hearts, drawing the last trump in the process, and led a club, impaling East on Morton's Fork. If East rose with the ace of clubs, declarer eventually would be able to discard a spade from dummy on the king of clubs, then ruff a spade. If the suit did not set up, declarer would be able to discard two spades on the top diamonds.

Failing to rise with the ace proved no better. Declarer won with the king, entered dummy with the king of spades, then discarded two clubs on the top diamonds. When spades proved to be 3-2, declarer simply surrendered a spade trick and claimed the balance.
