City Council considering salary panel

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

City of Midland employees may have everything to gain if a special committee gets a chance to put their salaries through the wringer, Councilman Bill Williams said Wednesday.

Williams, who presented his idea to councilmen and other city officials earlier this week, said the committee would study private sector salaries and compare them with similar city jobs.

The committee would include two council members, the city's personnel director and a representative from a major corporation in the the area, Williams said.

It would meet perhaps two or three times before city officials start grinding out details of the 1990-91 budget in May, he said.

"It's been about six years since we really did a complete study," Williams said. "We need to find out if we're competitive or not competitive.

"We need to be more educated about the facts."

The committee, for example, would study how city street construction worker salaries compare with those of private construction company employees, he said. Hogan Park golf course employee salaries would be compared with country club worker pay, he said of another example.

"There may be some whole sections that are underpaid and others that are paid pretty well," Williams said. "We (councilmen) all agreed we have some morale problems right now."

He emphasized that salaries would not be cut if the studies find that city employees make more money than their private sector counterparts.

The councilman said he the got the idea after a bitter referendum last November, when police officers and firefighters lost in their bid for a 10 percent pay hike.

The high voter support for the salary hike showed that officials needed to take a closer look at salaries and morale citywide, Williams said.

Councilman Jose Cuevas said he and other councilmen were amenable to the proposal.

"I like it," Cuevas said. "There's a lot of times we get confused with the numbers going back and forth. The employees tell us they are underpaid."

City officials already are considering a 4 percent across-the-board pay raise, Cuevas said.

City management recently fielded complaints and suggestions from all city employees on how to better morale and improve efficiency.

Cuevas said that in addition to suggesting higher salaries, the employees also wanted extra pay for being bilingual, having additional college degrees and enrolling in other job education programs.

That pay also will be part of this year's budgetary considerations, Cuevas said.

City Manager Fred Poe said conducting salary studies comparing city employee pay with that of the private sector is nothing new to Midland.

"We conduct surveys every year," Poe said. "I don't see any big difference this year than what we've been doing."

The committee's effort, though, would give councilmen a better idea of where the city stands salarywise before they plunge into the budget-making process, he said.

"It will give the council and the general public a better feel for what we're doing to study salaries," Poe said. "When more people are involved, it gives everybody more confidence."

Councilman Robert Rendall said having someone outside city management look at the salaries would give more credibility to the decisions made regarding pay.

"There's some question as to how reliable that is," Rendall said of past surveys conducted by the city. "I think it's reasonable to have some other people working on that."

Crossing the tracks

A Midland Independent School District bus crosses the railroad tracks at Garfield Street earlier this week. Close encounters between trains and MISD buses are rare, railroad officials say, but they do happen.

Bus crosses 'too close' to train

Despite incident, MISD drivers have 'good' safety record

By DAVID MORRIS

Darilyn Selby won't let her sixth-grade son ride the school bus anymore.

The bus carrying her son and other pupils between Jane Long and Travis elementary schools last Friday came within 180 feet of being struck by an oncoming train, school and railroad officials confirmed this week.

"I just kind of feel like (we shouldn't) start messing around with train tracks and buses," Ms. Selby said.

Dave Lancaster, Midland train operations manager for Union Pacific Railroad, said a train crew reported the incident to his office and he reported it to the school district.

Lancaster said a school bus, northbound on Garfield Street and "loaded with children," drove in front of the train on Jan. 19 about 3:25 p.m.

Lancaster said that about 180 feet separated the bus and the train, which was traveling about 25 mph.

"We consider 180 feet a little bit close," Lancaster said. "If a bus were to stall or something, there would be no way the train would be able to stop."

He said the bus stopped for the flashing train signal, then pulled across the tracks anyway.

Midland Independent School District spokesman Ted Miller said the bus driver, whose name was being withheld, had been "counseled" about the incident by his superiors on Monday.

"He made a mistake, and he is aware that he made a mistake," Miller said.

MISD Transportation Director Wes Washam said the driver's route was changed Monday and the bus between Jane Long and Travis no longer crosses the railroad tracks. Other buses continue to cross the tracks, Washam said.

Miller said the driver stopped too close to the train tracks and decided it would be safer to pull across than stay where he was. He couldn't back up because there apparently was a car behind him, Miller said.

The law requires buses to stop at least 15 feet away from train tracks when a train is coming.

"Prior to the complaint, the driver had a spotless record with MISD and the Department of Public Safety," Miller said.

Miller said a record of the incident had been placed in the driver's personnef file.

Senate nears override vote on Chinese students bill

By JIM DRINKARD

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole predicted today that the Senate would vote to uphold President Bush's veto of a bill protecting Chinese students from deportation.

"The veto should be sustained, and I believe it will," Dole, R-Kan., said as senators began debate on the matter and headed toward a decisive vote.

The White House continued its lobbying blitz, which included telephone calls from Bush and other top administration officials to wavering senators and personal visits from Vice President Dan Quayle.

Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, declined to say how he thought the vote count would go, but said many Republicans had supported the bill originally, including 26 who urged Bush in a letter not to veto it. "Now they're being asked to reverse themselves out of personal loyalty," he told reporters.

The House, in a gush of bipartisan sentiment, voted 390-25 on Wednesday to crush Bush's veto of legislation designed to shield Chinese students in the United States from deportation and political harassment.

That sent the issue to the Senate, where the White House was fighting stubbornly to muster the 34 votes needed to head off the override, which requires a two-thirds vote of both houses of Congress.

While the legislation potentially affected an estimated 40,000 students, it was invested with greater political significance as a test of strength and loyalty for Republicans and a referendum on Bush's policies, which Democrats complain are too warm toward the regime that massacred students in Beijing's Tiananmen Square last June 4.

Both sides agreed today's vote would be close, with the outcome boiling down to the decisions of just a handful of Republican senators.

In body shapes, research shows, pears prove healthier than apples

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
AP Science Writer

BOSTON — Having a big potbelly is bad for cholesterol, and this could explain why, when it comes to body shapes, pears are better than apples, according to a study published today.

"When patients come in, we advise them to lose weight," said Dr. Richard E. Ostlund Jr. "This paper suggests that more important than that is how the fat is distributed."

Researchers have long noticed that folks with big spare tires tend to have an especially high risk of heart trouble, but the reason was unclear. Ostlund's study, in New England Journal of Medicine, suggests that people with beefy hips and trim waists have higher levels of a protective form of cholesterol called HDL than do those with potbellies and small behinds.

The study of healthy elderly people, conducted at Washington University School of Medicine, found that body shape alone could account for a large portion of the differences in people's HDL cholesterol levels.

"This may have tremendous importance to the average American, because we all tend to bulge out in this way," said Dr. William Castelli, director of the long-running Framingham Heart Study in suburban Boston.

HDL — high density lipoprotein — is the so-called good cholesterol. The more people have in their blood, the lower their chances of heart attacks. Women typically have higher HDL levels than men. As they grow older, women also tend to put on weight around the hips, while men are more prone to growing big tummies.

Doctors have long suspected that differences in sex hormones might explain the HDL disparity between men and women. However, the new study suggests that body shape, not sex, could be the key factor. It found that pear-shaped men tend to have high HDL, while apple-shaped women have lower HDL.

"It's not how fat you are, it's where the fat's located," said Ostlund. "The fat around your hips, the good fat that women have, is predominantly subcutaneous fat. But the fat you have in your belly is intra-abdominal fat. The difference is where the blood supply of those two areas drains."

Tummy fat surrounds the intestines, and its blood supply drains directly to the liver, he said. "The liver is sensitive to things that fat cells put out. The metabolism of the liver may be changed because of the intra-abdominal fat," including the liver's production of HDL.

The blood from hip fat, which is just underneath the skin, does not drain directly to the liver and so has less impact on the way it works, he said.

The study was conducted on 77 men and 69 women, all in their 70s. To measure whether they were apples or pears, the researchers calculated the ratio of their waist-to-hip circumference.

They found that 32 percent of the variation in their HDL levels could be explained by differences in this ratio.

Below-freezing temperatures likely

From Staff and Wire Reports

Clear skies and below freezing temperatures are in the forecast for tonight, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport, with the low expected in the upper 20s and southwesterly winds less than 10 mph.

Friday will be sunny and warmer with the high near 70 and winds continuing from the southwest at 10-20 mph.

Wednesday's high of 69 was 13 degrees cooler than the record high of 82 set for that date in 1950. The overnight low of 21 was eight degrees warmer than the record low of 13 set for this date in 1940.

STATE

It's going to be cold tonight, but a warming trend is in store for all of Texas starting Friday.

Actually, the cold temperatures expected tonight are more seasonal for late January than the state has had for the past few weeks.

It will be mostly clear statewide Friday with warmer temperatures.

Lows tonight will be in the 20s and 30s except in extreme South Texas and along the coast where readings will be in the 40s.

Highs Friday will be in the 60s and 70s statewide.

A cold front that moved across the state Wednesday was located early today over southeast Louisiana extending southwestward over the Gulf of Mexico to just south of Brownsville. Some scattered showers and thunderstorms were reported along and near the front.

There were clouds over the coastal plains early today, but the rest of the state had mostly clear skies.

Early morning temperatures were mostly in the teens in the Panhandle and Big Bend area of Southwest Texas, the 20s and 30s across West Texas, the 30s and 40s in North Texas and the 50s and 60s in South Texas. Extremes ranged from 13 at Dalhart, to 62 at both Brownsville and McAllen.

Other early morning temperatures around the state included 25 at Amarillo, 30 at Wichita Falls, 36 at Fort Worth, 39 at Waco, 44 at Austin, 46 at San Antonio, 49 at Houston, 32 at San Angelo, 24 at Lubbock, 27 at Midland and 30 at El Paso.

NATION

Northern Lower Michigan braced for as much as a foot of snow today as low pressure developed along a cold front, triggering winter storm watches for northwestern Illinois and the Lake Michigan shore areas of Wisconsin as well.

Warm, wet weather was predicted from the Appalachians up the East Coast. Gusty winds and heavy rain were expected to lash the East Coast by Friday before warm weather returned late Saturday.

Southern California looked for more of the gusty Santa Anas that buffeted some mountain areas Wednesday with winds of up to 40 mph. A wind advisory remained in effect for Southern California's mountain areas and below canyons and passes along the coast.

A storm system developing rapidly off the northern Pacific Coast was expected to bring high winds and heavy snow to parts of Washington and Oregon by today.

U.S. may boost drug forces on border

By DAN FREEDMAN
Reporter-Telegram Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — President Bush plans to declare the entire U.S.-Mexican border a "high-intensity" drug zone and send more federal agents there to combat record levels of illegal drugs being smuggled into the United States, U.S. officials say.

Bush's border declaration, a highlight of his second National Drug Control Strategy to be unveiled Thursday, is part of a broad plan that includes a bigger role for the military in the war on drugs and an effort to apply the death penalty in more drug trafficking cases.

The president's strategy also commits the Bush administration to spend about $10.5 billion in the drug fight next year — a jump of $1.7 billion over what was set for this year, according to a congressional source who has reviewed the plan.

The plan comes shortly after the administration's opening salvo in the drug war — a $7.9 billion plan announced in September. Congressional Democrats criticized the first strategy as being top-heavy on law enforcement and lean on drug treatment and prevention.

In fact, Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del., chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, intends to introduce an alternative drug strategy Thursday, just as Bush unveils the administration's plan.

Biden's version, a Democratic congressional aide said, steers away from a concern over casual drug use, focusing on the 1 million to 2 million "hard-core" users, mostly in the blighted inner cities.

Despite the administration's emphasis on the expanded use of drug agents and the military, added law enforcement is seen by some officials as no real guarantee of success.

"As long as there is a demand in this country, drug traffickers are going to come up with a supply," said Marion Hambrick, agent in charge of the Drug Enforcement Administration's Houston field office. "It goes back to the law of economics."

According to those who have seen it, Bush's new plan essentially appears to add more ingredients to the old plan's basic recipe.

The $10.5 billion proposed for next year runs parallel to last year's prescription of more law enforcement, drug treatment and education programs and a beefed-up effort to curb cultivation and processing of coca leaves in South America.

The coca leaf, cultivated primarily in Peru and Bolivia, is used to make cocaine and its highly addictive derivative, crack.

The U.S. military's role in interdicting drugs being smuggled into the country from Mexico and South America also will be expanded, with spending to rise by $320 million next year, according to a rough draft of the strategy statement obtained by the Hearst Newspapers.

A significant portion of the Defense Department's anti-drug spending will be for detecting air and land shipments of drugs across the 1,933-mile U.S.-Mexican border. The new strategy calls for an enhanced role for the military's Joint Task Force Six, a Pentagon-run coordinating unit based at Fort Bliss in El Paso, Texas.

National drug policy director William J. Bennett, the plan's principle architect, also is seeking an expansion of the death penalty to apply to all major drug kingpins, traffickers who attempt murder to block drug prosecutions, and drug offenders whose actions cause death.

In 1988, Congress approved imposing the death penalty on convicted drug kingpins, but so far the Justice Department has not asked for capital punishment in any drug case.

Bennett's death penalty proposal is guaranteed a controversial reception when Congress considers the new administration plan.

"This is going to make it a bit more partisan, a bit more divisive," said a Democratic congressional aide, who asked not to be named. "Anybody who looks at this seriously knows (the death penalty) is not going to have much of an impact on this problem at all."

The strategy statement refers to the Southwest border as "the principal corridor for moving drugs" into the United States.

Justice Department figures show cocaine seizures by Drug Enforcement Administration and U.S. Border Patrol agents practically doubled between 1988 and 1989, hitting a record high of 58,000 pounds.

The Bush anti-drug strategy declares all counties along the border to be "high-intensity" drug trafficking areas, making them eligible for special federal assistance.

The strategy gives a similar designation to four Texas counties not directly on the border — Willacy, Jim Hogg, La Salle and Dimmit.

An administration source said "border counties from Texas to California should look for more federal law enforcement agents," but not direct dollars from Washington.

In his drug strategy announcement, President Bush will call for extra U.S. Customs Service inspectors to detect drugs in cargo shipments, and more Border Patrol and DEA agents.

Colombia and other South American nations have criticized the United States as the source of automatic weapons smuggled to the major trafficking gangs. As a result, the strategy boosts Customs' outbound inspection program, in which agents check cargo containers for illegal weapons, chemicals used to fabricate narcotics and drug cash.

The strategy also calls for the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service to build more border fences and ground sensors to prevent drug smuggling and illegal immigration.

"The president's plan is exactly the way to win the war on drugs," said Rep. Lamar Smith, R-Texas, who represents 200 miles of border land, the largest of any U.S. congressional district. "By emphasizing law enforcement along the border, we are giving priority to preventing drugs from ever entering the country."

In addition to the Southwest border, the strategy designates four cities — New York, Los Angeles, Miami and Houston — as "high- intensity" drug trafficking areas.

Houston is on the list because "large-scale trafficking organizations use the Houston area as a hub for importing and trans-shipping" drugs, according to the strategy rough draft. Los Angeles is "a major port of entry" for drugs, with "gang activity (that) poses an added law enforcement problem."

VETO

Democrats said they were confident they could hold their 55 senators in line and hoped to pull away the dozen GOP votes they needed to override the veto.

One Republican who had been undecided, Virginia's John Warner, said he had come down on the White House side and said Bush was "closing the gap."

"The president is going to win this battle not necessarily by arm-twisting but by relying on good, sound reasoning and the Constitution of the United States which clearly gives the president of the United States the power in foreign affairs," Warner said.

But Republican Sen. Rudy Boschwitz of Minnesota said he was inclined to vote to override the veto because of the students' concerns.

The legislation would affect as many as 32,000 Chinese students now in the United States on "exchange visitor" visas. The bill would waive a legal requirement that those students return home for two years after their visas expire before returning to the United States or going elsewhere.

In addition, the bill would permit any Chinese student whose visas have expired — as many as 8,000 others — to remain in the United States.

Bush vetoed the measure on Nov. 30 after it passed unanimously in the House and by a voice vote in the Senate. Chinese student groups have lobbied hard for an override of the veto, saying many of them would face political persecution at home because they supported the pro-democracy demonstrations that brought a violent government crackdown.

Astronomer suspects link between sunspots, flu

By MALCOLM RITTER
AP Science Writer

NEW YORK — Two researchers haven't come up with a cure for the common cold. But they think they've discovered a link to the cause of another common ailment, flu.

They blame an overactive sun, marked by a peak in its sunspot activity.

The solar connection was proposed in a letter to the editor in today's issue of the British journal Nature by astronomer Sir Fred Hoyle and his colleague, N.C. Wickramasinghe.

But an influenza researcher says he doubts that flu outbreaks are linked to solar activity.

There are many other attractive theories about what causes influenza outbreaks, so "I don't think we have to hypothesize that they come raining down from the atmosphere," said Paul Glezen of the Baylor College of Medicine.

Sunspots are dark markings that show up periodically on the sun. On average, the number of sunspots peaks every 11 years or so.

The analysis of the British researchers suggests that peak sunspot activity and flu pandemics have occurred at about the same time unusually often from 1761 to 1893 and from 1919 to 1979.

Solar activity peaks when the number of sunspots is at a maximum, the British researchers said.

"Electrical fields associated with intense solar winds can rapidly drive charged particles of the size of viruses down through the exposed upper atmosphere into the shelter of the lower atmosphere," possibly causing the link to influenza, they wrote.

But Glezen, an epidemiologist at Baylor's Influenza Research Center, said the idea "doesn't sound too likely."

Influenza viruses have a fatty covering that is not very stable outside the body, so it is "hard to imagine that a virus particle could be floating around for a very long time in the atmosphere and remain viable," he said.

BUS

Washam said MISD buses have posted a "very good" safety record, Friday's incident notwithstanding.

Lancaster said he has only recorded a handful of bus safety violations in his seven years with the railroad in Midland, but did not have an exact number.

"This is not a big problem," Lancaster said.

MISD buses have been involved in six traffic accidents this school year, MISD records show. Minor injuries were reported in two of those accidents; but no one required hospitalization.

Bus drivers were cited in only two of the accidents, and one of the citations is being contested, records show. Students were on board in three of the accidents.

Washam said bus drivers are required to take a 20-hour defensive driving course for certification and eight-hour refresher courses every three years.

Drivers undergo yearly physicals and their DPS driving records are checked annually, Washam said.

Statewide, school buses were involved in 1,842 accidents in 1988, DPS statistics show. One bus occupant was killed in 1988, and 466 were injured.

In the first six months of 1989, one school bus occupant in Texas was killed and 419 injured.

In September 1989, 21 people were killed when a soft drink truck rammed a school bus near Alton in Hidalgo County and the bus fell into a reservoir, DPS officials said.

National Highway Safety Administration spokesman Mark Edwards said today that school bus safety nationwide is good.

In 1987, 22 million pupils were transported on 362,000 school buses nationwide, he said. Althouth 142 school bus occupants were killed in accidents, school buses were still the safest vehicles on the road compared with cars and trucks, Edwards said.

Actress Ava Gardner dead at 67

LONDON (AP) — Ava Gardner, the auburn-haired farmer's daughter who fled Hollywood for Europe after her stormy life began to match the femme fatale roles she played on the screen, died today, a friend said. She was 67.

The friend, Paul Mills, told Press Association, Britain's domestic news agency, that the actress died of pneumonia.

Miss Gardner had been ill at her home in Kensington, West London, for some time, Press Association said. She had suffered a stroke in October 1986.

Mills said the body would be taken to Smithfield, S.C., for burial alongside her parents, according to Press Association.

Her film credits, beginning with "We Were Dancing" in 1942 and on through "The Kidnapping of the President" in 1980, included roles in "Show Boat," "The Sun Also Rises" and "Night of the Iguana."

Miss Gardner had lived in London for the past 20 years.

In an interview in 1985, she said she would happily have traded her career for one happy, long-lasting marriage. "One good man I could love and marry and cook for and make a home for, who would stick around for the rest of my life."

"I never found him," she said in the interview with London's Daily Express. She was married to Mickey Rooney, jazz musician Artie Shaw and then Frank Sinatra.

"The trouble was that I was a victim of image," she said. "Because I was promoted as a sort of siren and played all those sexy broads, people made the mistake of thinking I was like that off the screen.

"They couldn't have been more wrong."

American Heart Association to proceed with labeling foods

NEW YORK (AP) — The U.S. Food and Drug Administration took a last-minute stand against a plan to label foods deemed safe by the American Heart Association, but the organization says it will go ahead anyway.

The program, known as Heartguide, is scheduled to begin Monday. It's an ambitious effort by the association to make consumers smarter shoppers by identifying products low in saturated fat, total fat, cholesterol and sodium.

The program has been in the works for three years, but Acting FDA Commissioner James S. Benson told the association Wednesday it risked regulatory action if it proceeded with the plan.

"FDA believes that your program will increase consumer confusion and hamper any comprehensive solution to the food labeling program," Benson wrote to the group.

NATION

The association decided to proceed.

"We've already talked to the companies" participating in the program, and "they are in," said a Heartguide spokeswoman, Jamy Poth.

Products tested and approved by the association would, for a fee, carry a symbol made up of a red heart and a check mark.

Discussions have been held with the FDA throughout the past year, said Vicki Anderson, another spokeswoman for Heartguide, and the heart association was distressed with the last-minute letter.

But an FDA spokesman said the agency has expressed concerns to the association during the past year.

"I would think they would have been aware of them," said the spokesman, Jeff Nesbit.

In the wake of the letter, the second phase of the program — in which cereals, cheese, cookies, pasta, salad dressings and other foods will be included — has been put on hold to allow time for further negotiations with the FDA, Anderson said.

The FDA has no authority to act before products are sold, Nesbit said. Once they are on supermarket shelves, however, the agency determines whether labels are misleading.

If it determined that the association's seal of approval was misleading, it could order that the symbol be removed. Or it could seek a court order to block the sale of products with the symbol, or seize them, Nesbit said.

The program has been criticized on the grounds that competitive pressures would force companies to participate, and that it promotes certain foods instead of promoting the idea of a healthy overall diet.

The association said its educational program will make clear that Heartguide-approved foods should be incorporated into a diet that is beneficial overall.

The fees paid to the association — up to $640,000, depending upon a product's sales — also have been criticized.

"What we see here is a realization by the government agencies that you have a non-profit, private organization, a non-regulated organization, trying to establish a set of rules and regulations on labeling — for a fee. I think that's wrong," said John Cady, president of the National Food Processors Association, which has vigorously opposed the program.

More than 100 brands of margarine, oil, crackers and vegetables already have been tested and approved. They include Mazola corn oil, Promise margarine, Pam cooking sprays, Melba Toast, and Hanover frozen vegetables.

None of the labeled products is currently available on the shelves, Anderson said manufacturers had begun printing containers with the labels, but that products were not yet ready for shipment to supermarkets.

The makers of Mazola products had not yet decided how to react to the FDA's action, said Gail Griffin, spokeswoman for CPC International of Englewood Cliffs, N.J. That is the parent company of Best Foods, which makes Mazola.

The FDA's letter was addressed to heart association President Dr. Myron L. Weisfeldt of Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore.

Benson urged the heart association "instead to join with the FDA and other groups in our current initiative to develop a comprehensive revision of the food label to promote good nutrition."

Bentsen praises Social Security tax proposal

By JAMES R. OWEN

Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — Sen. Lloyd Bentsen on Wednesday praised a controversial proposal to roll back the Social Security payroll tax increase but again declined to say he would vote for it.

Bentsen said the rollback proposed by Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., "exposed the charade" of the Bush administration's "masking an enormous budget deficit." But the Texas Democrat also said he was concerned that it might enlarge the federal budget deficit.

Bentsen also said, in response to a question from a reporter, that it was conceivable he would vote against the Moynihan proposal and for "some version" of a capital gains tax cut, a concept endorsed by President Bush.

He said he would not make a firm decision on Moynihan's proposal until after the Senate Finance Committee, which Bentsen chairs, holds hearings on the issue, beginning Feb. 5.

"I do it the old-fashioned way — I hold hearings," Bentsen said.

The Social Security tax went up from 6.06 percent in 1989 to 6.2 percent on Jan. 1. Moynihan has proposed cutting the rates over two years, eliminating the $62 billion Social Security surplus.

On other matters, Bentsen said:

■ An almost inevitable congressional override of Bush's veto of a bill designed to protect Chinese students in the United States from repression at home "absolutely" signifies a repudiation of the administration's relatively mild response to the crackdown in Beijing last June.

■ The United States should begin to look seriously at ways to trim defense spending by cutting military commitments in places such as South Korea and Europe.

■ He was impressed by the rapid political and economic changes he observed in the Soviet Union during a recent trip there. Referring to Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev's campaign for more free-market practices as a means of satisfying heightened consumer demands there, Bentsen predicted that frustrations are likely.

■ A new book by author Robert Caro on the late President Lyndon B. Johnson "has a tendency to concentrate on the darker side of Lyndon." For example, he suggested that Johnson was much more compassionate on civil rights than he was depicted in Caro's book, "Means of Ascent," due out in March.

Miami police officer sentenced to seven years

MIAMI (AP) — A Hispanic police officer was free on bond and predicting his vindication after receiving a seven-year prison term for the deaths of two blacks. One critic called the sentence "justice delayed and justice denied."

Officer William Lozano thanked his supporters after being sentenced Wednesday by Dade Circuit Judge Joseph Farina.

"My attorney, my family and I will continue to fight within the system for the truth, for what is right, and at the end, we will win," Lozano said.

Lozano, 30, was convicted last month on two counts of manslaughter for fatally shooting an unarmed black motorcyclist, sending the vehicle crashing into a car and killing the motorcycle's passenger. The deaths ignited riots by blacks.

Lozano

The defense contended that Lozano shot in self-defense because the motorcyclist tried to run him down.

"This court cannot do perfect justice in this case," said Farina, who called the deaths and resultant trial a "tragic incident."

Supporters of the Colombian-born officer cheered as they left the courtroom after Farina said Lozano could remain free on $10,000 bond pending the outcome of his appeal.

Patricia Lloyd, sister of slain motorcyclist Clement Lloyd, 23, said she wished the sentence had been longer.

"I see this as both a case now of justice delayed and justice denied," said Marvin Dunn, a black psychology professor at Florida International University. "Seven years does not in fact mean seven years in prison."

But Dunn, who wrote a book on Miami's 1980 race riots, said he hoped blacks would accept the sentence with equanimity.

"What we have to be concerned about is whether or not the perception of a miscarriage of justice now resurfaces in the black community," Dunn said, urging a "responsible reaction by all of us in the black community to accept and live with the judge's decision."

The predominantly black Overtown and Liberty City neighborhoods, the scene of riots over past police shootings, were quiet late Wednesday, police said.

Defense attorneys criticized the case as an effort to ease racial tensions in Miami rather than give their client a fair trial.

"If Officer Lozano was black, he never would have been charged with a crime," defense attorney Mark Seiden told the judge. "If the two people on the motorcycle were white, he never would have been charged with a crime."

Prosecutor John Hogan, who recommended a 12-year prison term, described the sentence as a just one. Lozano could have faced a punishment of 12 to 17 years in prison under state sentencing guidelines.

Miguel Degrandy, a vice president of the Spanish American League Against Discrimination, said the judge fashioned a sentence that he felt that both parties could live with.

Striking United Mine Workers members attempt to stop a coal truck as it attempts to enter the non-union Rum Creek Coal Sales preparation plant.

Miners vow more disobedience, strikes

DEHUE, W.Va. (AP) — The United Mine Workers union marked its 100th anniversary today with threats of more civil disobedience and wildcat strikes at a non-union coal plant protected by federal marshals.

Two UMW members were arrested Wednesday on charges of assaulting the marshals, who were clearing a path to Rum Creek Coal Sales Inc. A third was accused of violating a court order limiting pickets.

"The arrests aren't going to stop us," said Roger Nelson, a coordinator of the strike. "We're staying out here. We're not giving up."

U.S. District Judge Dennis Knapp last week issued an injunction limiting the number of Rum Creek pickets to 15. About 75 UMW members and supporters on Wednesday stood on a makeshift bridge leading to Rum Creek's preparation plant.

Bethel Purkey, president of a UMW local, predicted that other miners would join the action.

"I figure you're going to see a whole lot of other miners down here. They'll know when to come," Purkey said.

About two dozen union miners struck Rum Creek in mid-August after the A.T. Massey Coal Co. subsidiary hired a non-union contractor to run the southern West Virginia plant. Unionized employees previously had worked the plant, where coal is sorted and prepared for sale.

The UMW was formed Jan. 25, 1890, in Columbus, Ohio, by the merger of two rival coal miners organizations. Last year, its resources were strained by a 9-month-long strike — tentatively settled Jan. 1 — against the Pittston Coal Group Inc. The proposed pact has not yet been submitted for ratification by the rank and file.

Union members staged wildcat strikes last summer to show support for striking Pittston miners. At the height of the pickets, 42,000 miners in 10 states were off their jobs.

On Jan. 16, in the first fatality linked to labor violence in the coal fields since 1984, one union member was killed and two others wounded in a West Virginia shootout between picketing miners and gunmen.

The slaying was not related to the Pittston strike or the actions at Rum Creek.

Miners picketing the Rum Creek plant have blocked the bridge each day with cars and trucks. On Monday and Tuesday, company coal trucks with steel plates protecting their radiators plowed the vehicles out of the way. On Wednesday, federal marshals had them towed away.

As a non-union contractor was escorted from the site Wednesday after freeing a vehicle that had been attached to a bridge by cable, a federal marshal pushed over a woman with a billy club. Cora Ballard, in her 40s, was treated at a hospital for bruises on her arms and a head injury, said her brother, John Workman.

About 12 state troopers, who are barred by law from taking sides in labor disputes, watched from the side.

After the pickets' vehicles were removed, non-union coal trucks pushed their way past miners to the preparation plant.

Two pickets — Larry Ellison, 35, of Lyburn and William Lowe, 47, of Vivian — were charged with assaulting a federal officer. U.S. Marshal Walt Elliott said. Ellison, Lowe and Richard Hendricks, 36, of Gilbert also were charged with illegal picketing.

Postal Service to revise delivery standards, measure performance

WASHINGTON (AP) — After hearing a deluge of complaints that its service is inconsistent, the Postal Service will change its mail delivery standards in the hope of keeping its promises.

The service also will hire an outside company to measure its performance and report the results publicly.

The effort to make service more consistent comes just two months before the agency is expected to apply for a 1991 rate increase.

"We've already done 29,000 interviews with the public," Postmaster General Anthony Frank said about the research that led to planned changes in delivery.

The biggest complaint was irregular service.

Sometimes a letter mailed across town would arrive overnight, sometimes the second day, sometimes it took a week.

People said they wanted consistent delivery, Frank said. They know when their check or magazine or other regular mail is sent, and they want to be confident of when it will arrive.

"Just tell me how many days ahead I have to mail my mother's birthday card. ... Just tell me, I want to be sure it's there," Frank quoted as a typical complaint.

Second, he said, was that people want their mail delivered at the same time every day.

"I wouldn't have guessed that that would be No. 2. They don't want to go out there and see (the mailbox) empty," Frank said. "And the third thing they say is they want local mail delivered overnight."

In general, the changes mean that areas where the Postal Service promises overnight delivery will shrink somewhat.

Two-thirds of all mail is local and won't be affected by the changes, Frank said. In general, he said, between 5 percent and 8 percent of mail might be changed from overnight to second day, or from second day to third day delivery.

The service already delivers about 95 percent of its overnight mail on time, but "doesn't even come close" to 95 percent for mail it tries to deliver on the second or third day, Frank said.

The delivery area changes have been tried on an experimental basis in the New York City region for nearly a year, with only one complaint. Now, they will be extended to the rest of the nation.

Local and regional postal officials are developing plans for the new delivery areas and will seek comment and suggestions from postal customers. The changes are expected to take place starting in the summer.

"People say ... they won't even tell us what the changes are. And the answer is that's true, because we don't even know what the changes are," Frank said, stressing that the new standards are still under development locally and aren't being imposed from Washington.

Nevertheless, some critics have complained that mail delivery will be slowed by the changes, with consumer advocate Ralph Nader charging that mail standards are deteriorating.

However, Frank thinks the standards were simply out of date.

The areas designated to receive overnight and second day delivery were established in 1971, Frank said, adding that roads since then have become more crowded, airline space is tighter and population patterns have shifted.

Postal officials began asking customers how large an area they thought should have overnight delivery, and it always turned out to be less than what the agency was trying to provide.

In general, postal officials try to deliver overnight in a metropolitan areas, by the second day to nearby cities and by the third day to the rest of the country.

But in some areas, the agency has been stretching itself to serve a relatively few customers.

For example, the service averages 200 letters between Gainesville, Fla., and Albany, Ga., each day.

Supersonic plane tests man's will

Aviation engineers are assessing the possibility of building a supersonic commercial passenger plane that would fly about 7,000 miles — from Los Angeles to Tokyo — at two or three times the speed of sound. That would cut the current nine-hour trip to as little as three hours.

The plane is believed to be two decades from completion — if all goes well. There are many ifs, but engineers in the United States, Europe and Japan are optimistic.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration has begun a five-year, $284-million program to examine the most difficult problems associated with building such an aircraft. There are three major questions: Is such a plane feasible? Can it be environmentally acceptable? Will it be commercially successful?

These are some of the plane's major performance requirements:

■ To fly 7,000 miles without refueling. The Concorde, the first supersonic commercial passenger plane, has been flying at twice the speed of sound for nearly 14 years. The new aircraft should fly at up to three times the speed of sound.

■ To carry as many as 300 passengers, compared to the 103 the Concorde can carry, in order to achieve commercial success. Fares could be no more than 10 to 15 percent higher than subsonic passenger planes.

Environmental concerns are a major hitch. The plane would cruise at between 55,000 and 60,000 feet, and its emission of nitrogen oxides could seriously harm the ozone layer that shields the earth from the sun's potentially deadly ultra-violet rays. The new engines must burn much more cleanly than those now used.

The new aircraft must be quieter than the Concorde. Otherwise, it faces strong opposition from communities near airfields to be used by the plane.

U.S. experts believe that refining the technologies and building the first such aircraft could cost up to $17 billion. The expense would mean that several companies and governments would have to cooperate in the venture.

The critics will have a field day on this one. However, why not try? The Wright brothers and Charles Lindbergh were called crazy. Why not a few more nuts with some positive thoughts?

Another View:

Daddy beats dollar

Much attention is rightly paid to the economic hardships of single-parent families, with particular emphasis on the shocking percentage of America's children who are poor. But little attention is paid to the intellectual and emotional deprivation of children who do not have fathers living at home.

Some 15 million American children — one-quarter of the population under age 18 — are growing up today without fathers. The negative effects are particularly evident in their educational progress, regardless of income level.

A recent study commissioned by the National Association of Elementary School Principals discovered that youngsters from one-parent families generally do poorer in school than do their counterparts from traditional families. These data correspond with anecdotal evidence from school psychologists suggesting that students without fathers tend to have less self-control and pose more of a challenge to authority.

In particular, boys lacking a positive male role model were found to exhibit aggressive behavior, frequently becoming discipline problems. All too often this leads to their committing violent crimes as well. A 1987 study of rapists, all repeat offenders, found that 60 percent came from single-parent homes. Furthermore, a Michigan State University survey of 72 adolescent murderers discovered that 75 percent had parents who were divorced or unmarried.

Not surprisingly, the problem of drug use also appears to be greater in fatherless homes. Two recent UCLA studies concluded that children from single-parent families are more likely to fall prey to substance abuse because they lack the self-discipline to cope with depression and anxiety. For instance, the studies determined that, among homes with fathers, only 18 percent of children used alcohol or drugs. In contrast, 35 percent of the children from mother-dominated homes routinely drank and used drugs.

The steady dissolution of the two-parent family has created significant problems for millions of youngsters and for American society as a whole. In short, children without fathers at home start with one strike against them.

A father's influence on his youngsters is no less important than the biological and nurturing bonds between a mother and her children. Consequently, policy makers should not make the mistake of believing that increased aid to single mothers is anything more than a Band-Aid for the American family. More to the point, dollars cannot replace daddies.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Thursday, Jan. 25, the 25th day of 1990. There are 340 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

One hundred years ago, on Jan. 25, 1890, reporter Nellie Bly (Elizabeth Cochrane) of the New York World received a tumultuous welcome home after she completed a round-the-world journey in 72 days, six hours and 11 minutes.

On this date:

In 1533, England's King Henry VIII married Anne Boleyn.

In 1579, the Treaty of Utrecht was signed, marking the beginning of the Dutch Republic.

In 1787, Shays' Rebellion suffered a setback when debt-ridden farmers led by Capt. Daniel Shays failed to capture an arsenal at Springfield, Mass.

In 1890, 100 years ago, the United Mine Workers of America was founded.

In 1915, the inventor of the telephone, Alexander Graham Bell, inaugurated U.S. transcontinental telephone service.

In 1946, the United Mine Workers rejoined the American Federation of Labor.

In 1959, American Airlines opened the jet age in the United States with the first scheduled transcontinental flight of a Boeing 707.

In 1961, President Kennedy held the first presidential news conference to be televised live.

In 1971, Charles Manson and three young women followers were convicted in Los Angeles of the 1969 Tate-LaBianca murders.

In 1978, Muriel Humphrey was appointed to fill the U.S. Senate seat left vacant by the death of her husband, Hubert H. Humphrey of Minnesota.

In 1979, Pope John Paul II began his first overseas trip as pontiff, traveling to the Dominican Republic.

In 1981, the 52 Americans held hostage by Iran for 444 days arrived back in the United States.

In 1987, the New York Giants defeated the Denver Broncos, 39-20, to win Super Bowl XXI at the Rose Bowl in Pasadena, Calif.

Judge rules DEA was unfair to Hispanic

WASHINGTON — With drugs streaming in from Latin America, you might think the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration would take good care of its Hispanic agents. But you would be wrong.

Jack Anderson

In a devastating decision for the DEA, a U.S. District Court judge recently ruled that the agency retaliated against agent Jesse Gallegos because he advocated the cause of Hispanic agents.

Now the DEA owes Gallegos, a 20-year veteran, $42,000 in back pay and a bonus.

In 1987 he was stripped of his bonus and demoted after he refused to answer questions during an extraordinary inspection that Gallegos called a "witch hunt."

The punishment did not fit the alleged crime. The only other high level DEA official to suffer a similar punishment was found guilty of something much worse. Assistant Administrator Marion Ramey was penalized for transferring a female FBI agent to the DEA, promoting her and approving a huge amount of overtime pay that ended up in their joint bank account, according to the judge's decision in the Gallegos case.

In Ramey's case, the DEA had a short memory. Just 18 months after Ramey was punished with a loss of pay, DEA Administrator John Lawn gave him a $4,200 executive performance bonus and cited him for his "integrity," according to the court records in the Gallegos case.

A DEA source told our associate Stewart Harris that the Gallegos case is only the tip of a mountain of prejudice at the agency.

Indeed, a class-action lawsuit brought on behalf of Hispanic agents remains unresolved. That suit, before the same judge who decided the Gallegos case, alleges that the DEA uses Hispanic agents in undercover operations and wiretapping, but rarely promotes them to management jobs. In other words, Hispanics are suitable for the dirty work — such as posing as Latino drug dealers — but they don't belong in the front office.

Gallegos helped the Hispanic agents with their lawsuit, and that's when the retaliation began. Just when the lawsuit was heating up in 1987, the DEA decided to launch a massive investigation of a quasi-judicial disciplinary board, and Gallegos was a member of that board.

The board is supposed to work independently of the DEA management to review internal investigations. It had never before been inspected by the DEA.

Gallegos suspected that the inspection was really a "fishing expedition" to look into his activities on behalf of Hispanic agents. He told the inspectors he wouldn't answer questions, and that's why he was demoted.

Judge Harold H. Greene believed Gallegos' story for a number of reasons. Most important was that the inspectors seized 16 boxes of paperwork from Gallegos, including letters and statements from Hispanic agents who sought his advice on personnel matters. Some of that material still has not been returned.

DEA Deputy Administrator Thomas Kelly testified that the inspection could not have been a case of reprisal because he was not even aware of Gallegos' work with Hispanics. But Greene dismissed Kelly's testimony as "not credible."

The little-noticed decision in the Gallegos case comes as the DEA is basking in the success of a TV miniseries about murdered Hispanic agent Enrique "Kiki" Camarena. As we reported earlier, Hispanic agents are incensed that the DEA management came off as a friend and protector of Camarena. In truth, Camarena helped lay the groundwork for the lawsuit and had filed discrimination complaints against the agency.

CAPTURING THE MARKET: The U.S. share of the international arms market is steadily increasing while Soviet sales are dropping off. In 1987, the United States accounted for 15 percent of arms sales to Third World countries, but in 1988 the U.S. market share went up to 21 percent.

By contrast, the Soviet share of the market dropped from 50 percent to 33 percent. The Middle East is by far the biggest recipient of U.S. weaponry. Together the United States and the Soviet Union account for two-thirds of all arms sold to developing countries.

MINI-EDITORIAL — A recent Gallup poll says 70 percent of Americans want limits on the number of terms for senators and representatives. Americans fear that their elected representatives will become so firmly entrenched that they can't be removed by unknown newcomers.

Unfortunately, a fixed term could force retirement of valued public servants before their time. If voters trusted their own judgment and monitored their elected representatives, they wouldn't need arbitrary limits to tell them when someone should retire. But as long as America elects senators and representatives on name recognition and inflated campaign warchests, arbitrary limits are necessary to save us from ourselves.

GEORGE F. WILL

Arizona GOP caught in own not-so-civil war

PHOENIX — The name "conservatism" suggests a philosophy for people eager to conserve existing arrangements, hence a philosophy for people happy with the way things are. Wrong.

George F. Will

Burt Kruglick, the remarkably cheerful (considering everything) chairman of this conservative state's turbulent Republicans, explains: "Everyone came here from somewhere else and they are angry about something they left." If they are from Massachusetts, the cause of their anger is taxes. If they are from California, it is "values." If they are from the Midwest, it is economic decline. Whatever the irritant, the irritated tend to be conservative, which is decidedly not the doctrine of the contented.

Around about 1890, historian Frederick Jackson Turner noted, America's frontier closed. But word of that event has not percolated through to Arizona politics, where the West is still wild.

Arizona was in 1912 the last of the contiguous 48 states admitted to the union. Having joined too late for the fun of the Civil War, Arizona has in recent years been waging war intramurally, especially within the GOP, where on some issues the "centrists" are Pat Robertson supporters and the left wing consists of establishment Goldwaterites.

The current governor, Rose Mofford, 67, was never elected governor and never will be. She is not going to run this year and only got to be governor because she was secretary of state, hence next in line, when Gov. Evan Mecham got himself impeached and removed in April 1988, after a stormy 13-month tenure.

His troubles included some fascinating aides (one education adviser, who had an attitude problem, sarcastically told the Legislature that if a student wanted to say the world is flat, a teacher had no right to prove the student wrong), a penchant for verbal infelicities (he said Japanese listeners' eyes "get round" when they hear about Arizona's many golf courses) and some shady — to say no more — financial dealings.

Mecham, unlike most politicians, is not discouraged by polls showing an 80 percent disapproval rating. He is running again. He has friends in low places, lurking in the grass roots: The Republican speaker of the House and the Republican leader of the Senate were beaten in primaries because they voted to impeach Mecham. But through all this, Republican registrations have increased.

Monomaniacal Arizona is the only state to have voted Republican in all nine presidential elections from 1952 through 1988. The last time Arizonans voted Democratic — for Truman, 42 years ago — Arizona had been a state just 36 years, T-bone steak sold for $1.40 a pound and people ate beef without suspecting that they should be eating bran muffins instead.

Back then, Arizona's population was less than 700,000. Today it is more than 3.5 million, with more people unpacking every day. The decision to count illegal aliens in the 1990 census means Arizona probably will get two, rather than just one, new congressional seats.

Most of the 3.5 million Arizonans are perfectly normal, walking-around Americans, but they have had to get used to turmoil. In 1977, President Carter plucked one governor away to be an ambassador (because, say Republicans, the governor was an embarrassment) and his successor died after a few weeks, so Bruce Babbitt became the second successive unelected governor. Babbitt gave the state a period of calm from which it quickly recovered when Mecham won the governorship on an anti-establishment platform that included opposition to a state holiday honoring Martin Luther King, Jr.

Now a coalition of Mechamites (also called "Evanistas"), conservatives and "populists" have gathered enough signatures to force a November referendum on the holiday. That (and the fact that both of Arizona's senators are among the "Keating Five" caught up in the savings-and-loan debacle) should guarantee the state the requisite level of rancor this year, and it takes folks' minds off the "Christian nation" controversy.

At the state convention a year ago, a majority of delegates, being sensible, grew weary of politics and hard chairs, and wandered off. Thus a crazed minority, being ideologically inflamed and hence indifferent to comfort, was able to pass a resolution making it Republican doctrine that America is "a Christian nation" and "a republic based upon the absolute laws of the Bible, not a democracy."

Although the party has some activists who boast of "praying in tongues" at party functions, the party has repudiated the "Christian nation" notion.

However, its author vows to fight on. She hails from the town with the colorful name Apache Junction. It is at the foot of the Superstition Mountains. That figures.

Drug money launderers taking U.S. to cleaners

The dope war continues. Just the other day I saw a whole bunch of bankers on television who were accused of laundering millions and millions of dollars in narcotics payments.

Art Buchwald

Their hearing was in Tampa, Fla., although the bank was located in Luxembourg, with branches in Miami. Alas, all the bankers plea-bargained. The Justice Department's deal was that there would be no fine and little jail, particularly if the bankers agreed to testify against Noriega.

Dope bankers' friends everywhere rejoiced at the news. Manuel de Columbia, spokesman for the Drug Launderers of America, declared, "These people are good people. They wear nice clothes and own beautiful boats. You cannot hold them responsible for the drug trade."

"Why not?" I asked him.

"Because those who launder dope money never see the dope. They have nothing to do with it. They only move dollars from one place to another. It's just business."

"And yet," I added, "there wouldn't be a drug trade without launderers. They make it possible. Surely they should serve a little time when they get caught."

Manuel shook his head, "I can't believe my ears. You want a banker to do time just because he takes cash deposits from agricultural interests in Colombia?"

I replied, "Suppose the money comes from cocaine. Do you believe that the bankers should still be let off?"

"It's impossible to run a bank in Florida if you keep asking about the source of the money. Besides, a bank which deals in narcotics' earnings can lend a lot more to its legitimate customers than one that doesn't."

"Do you think that the government has a right to make deals with bankers who launder drug profits?"

Manuel said, "It not only has a right, it has a duty to see that they don't go to jail. If we sent every banker who was involved in dope sales to the slammer, there would be no one to manage the drive-in teller stations. These people are among the classiest in the country. You won't find a finer group anywhere. They not only play good golf, they give to the blood bank. Are you going to ask them to do time simply because they had interests in international commerce?"

"Yes, I am. I hope and pray that anyone involved in the sale of dope would wind up cleaning prison toilets for the rest of his life."

"Did it ever occur to you that these bankers could nail Noriega?"

"Frankly, no. But I would think that the bankers could do more damage to the country than the pipsqueak from Panama. If you let the bankers off free, they'll go straight back to the Laundromat. I'd rather that they take a poison pill than Noriega."

Manuel was starting to worry that his message wasn't getting across. He tried again, "Is it so hard for you to understand that maybe society needs money launderers to turn bad money into good money? Perhaps the proceeds did come from selling dope, but before the bankers got through with it, they were financing condominiums in the Everglades. I know most of those launderers personally, and I would trust them with my sister."

"Providing your sister was a courier for a drug cartel in Peru."

"We have a saying in the drug-banking business, 'You wash my money and I'll wash yours.' "

President backs Department of Environment

WASHINGTON (AP) — Legislation creating a Cabinet-level Department of the Environment is expected to move swiftly through Congress, with sponsors saying they hope to send it to President Bush in time for signing on Earth Day in April.

Bush endorsed the bipartisan legislation Wednesday, saying, "The environmental challenges that face America and the world are so important that they must be addressed from the highest level of our government."

His move drew praise from environmentalists and both Democrats and Republicans on Capitol Hill, but several senators suggested the president must do more than elevate the status of the Environmental Protection Agency to deal with the world's environmental problems.

"It's not enough just to put an extra chair to the Cabinet table," said Sen. Al Gore, D-Tenn., who has been a past critic of the Bush administration's actions on such environmental matters as global warming and atmospheric ozone depletion.

Sen. Timothy Wirth, D-Colo., said giving the EPA higher visibility is "nice frosting" but added, "where's the cake?" He accused the administratin of dragging its feet in exerting leadership in international efforts on global warming and other environmental issues.

But the president's decision to call for elevating the status of the EPA — a regulatory agency created in 1970 — to the Cabinet brought salutes from sponsors of the bipartisan legislation and from many environmentalists, who said the White House support makes passage all but certain.

"It's a welcomed breath of fresh air," said Rep. John Conyers, D-Mich., one of the cosponsors and chairman of the House Government Operations Committee.

Conyers said he hoped a bill could clear Congress within 90 days. The president is said to want a bill ready for his signature as part of the Earth Day 20th anniversary celebrations April 22.

Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, chairman of the Senate Government Affairs Committee, also said he would move quickly on the bill with hearings scheduled for next month.

EPA Administrator William K. Reilly said today that the creation of a Cabinet department "is a message internationally ... that the environment is moving now into the mainstream for a whole range of policies — economic policies, energy policies, foreign policies of all sorts."

"It also has another effect domestically," Reilly said on ABC-TV's "Good Morning America" program.

Bush planning $1 billion aid program for Panama

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush will propose providing more than $1 billion to help Panama recover from the U.S. military invasion and years of corrupt government, U.S. officials say.

The aid program, expected to be announced today, will include development aid, loan guarantees and programs to encourage investment, said one official, who insisted on anonymity.

About half of the program will be in cash and the remainder in credits, the official said.

Earlier Wednesday, Bush told a news conference he was determined to "try to help — repair the wounds, repair the damage."

"I mourn the loss of innocent civilians in Panama or anywhere else," Bush said. "But you have to look at the broad picture ... and then you've got to do what's right."

The official said the administration hopes other countries, including Japan and western European nations, will follow tne U.S. lead and make contributions of their own.

The administration is still talking behind the scenes with leaders of Congress about the Panama aid package. "Not all of it's new money," a senior administration official who asked not to be identified said Wednesday night, confirming the $1 billion figure.

Bush also voiced hopes Wednesday that Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev would "Not only survive but stay strong" in the face of unprecedented domestic upheaval that threatens his stability.

Regarding Gorbachev's use of Soviet troops to quell ethnic violence in the southern republic of Azerbaijan, Bush said, "Anytime you have a use of force and the loss of life, we are concerned. But I don't believe I can judge that question right now."

The Panama aid package will include aid to rebuild houses that were demolished in the Dec. 20 invasion by U.S. troops, officials said. However, they said the package is unlikely to include any compensation for the survivors of more than 200 Panamanian civilians who died in the invasion.

Asked what he would say to the Panamanian survivors, Bush said he would tell them, "Look, you lost some Panamanian lives. Innocent life was lost. And yet, 92 percent of the people in Panama strongly supported the action of the United States. Isn't that significant?"

Damage estimates from the invasion vary widely, ranging from a few hundred million dollars to $2 billion or more. The United States already has released $400 million in Panamanian assets frozen in the United States in earlier efforts to topple the regime led by Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, ousted in the invasion.

If the program is approved, Panama would become one of the largest per capita aid recipients in the world after having spent more than two years as a target of U.S. economic sanctions.

The United States suspended aid to Panama in late 1987 and began a policy designed to starve the country economically in early 1988 after Noriega's indictment on drug-trafficking charges by two Florida federal grand juries.

The result of the U.S. actions was a steep decline in the Panamanian economy, producing a crisis that was aggravated by the U.S. invasion.

The U.S. official said the aid proposal will require a supplemental appropriation by the Congress for part of the money but much of it will be paid through cuts from aid programs to other countries.

"A big chunk will be out of the taxpayers' pockets," the official said, predicting a tough fight in finding the money.

He said Panama, although a small country of about 2¼ million people, requires substantial aid because successive military governments, including Noriega's, stole a good portion of the national treasury.

Panama is behind on its obligations to international lending institutions, and its total foreign debt amounts to $534 million.

Vice President Dan Quayle could take the specifics of the plan when he travels to Panama this weekend for talks with the new government, a White House official said.

Also on Wednesday, Bush presided at a full-dress military welcome for the president of North Yemen, Ali Abdullah Saleh, and hailed him as "a man of extraordinary accomplishment" at a state dinner.

A man wielding a paintbrush whitewashed this billboard and several others in Chicago over the weekend as a protest against tobacco and alcohol advertisements.

Advertiser threatens to prosecute man who painted billboards

CHICAGO (AP) — An advertiser threatened to prosecute a paint brush-wielding "magician" who made three inner-city ads for booze and cigarettes disappear under a coat of white paint.

The whitewasher, who uses the pseudonym Mandrake after a comic strip magician and described himself as a 54-year-old black professional, said he was conducting a one-man civil disobedience campaign to erase a "blight on the community."

"I have seen over the past two years a disproportionate amount of advertising in the black and Hispanic community," said Mandrake, in a telephone interview in which he refused to give his real name. "I believe it was time for us to stand up and fight back."

Tobacco and liquor producers were alarmed by the actions of Mandrake, whose painting of three South Side billboards in broad daylight last week followed a much-publicized outcry over a tobacco company's plan to target blacks in marketing a new brand of cigarettes.

"He's obviously vandalizing private property," said Geoff Obrzut, a spokesman for Patrick Media, whose billboard was covered.

A police report was filed, Obrzut said, and "we would be willing to prosecute if he's caught."

"I'm a firm believer in the Constitution and believe the law was broken," Mandrake conceded. "But at the same time, there is a moral obligation, a right, that must be addressed."

Gary Miller, a spokesman for the American Tobacco Institute in Washington, D.C., said billboards had no effect on young people, who as a group become smokers primarily because of peer pressures and parental influence.

Janet Flynn of the Distilled Spirits Council of the United States, echoed Miller's remarks. "We restrict our advertising to responsible adult customers."

A lively debate over the ethics of aiming tobacco and alcohol ads at minorities came to a head last week when U.S. Health and Human Services Secretary Louis Sullivan attacked an R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. plan to test-market a new cigarette, Uptown, in Philadelphia starting Feb. 5.

While cigarette advertising already is targeted at minorities, Uptown apparently was the first brand to be created, named and marketed specifically for blacks.

Reynolds shelved its plans, but Sullivan said he would continue to campaign against such marketing, including products aimed at women.

Consumer groups, alarmed at the high rates of smoking and drinking-related illnesses among inner-city minorities, say the producers have an obligation not to aim dangerous products at these groups.

Industry representatives say their advertising strategies are protected by the First Amendment and contend that people make their own decision about whether to light up or take a drink.

The lung cancer rate has increased four times faster among blacks than among whites during the past 30 years, according to reports from the American Lung Association and the National Cancer Institute.

A 1987 study by the Center for Science in the Public Interest, a Washington-based health advocacy group, found that black men have a 70 percent higher death rate from cirrhosis of liver than whites.

The group contends that children are being encouraged by the billboard ads.

"Children on the way to school and back home or even at recess get the message that the way to be happy, glamorous, or athletic is to smoke and-or drink," one publication by the center said.

Obrzut said that while 50 percent of billboard advertising does occur in the inner city, only 16 percent of the city's 2,500 ads are alcohol- or tobacco-related.

State Sen. Miguel Del Valle of Chicago has proposed legislation to ban the alcohol and cigarette ads within about two blocks of schools. That and even stronger measures are to be reviewed by a governor's task force.

NATION IN BRIEF

Bush pledges support for WIC

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bush administration is assuring Congress of strong support for a popular nutrition program for poor pregnant women and children after a new report showed Reagan appointees erroneously downplayed its benefits.

Birge Watkins, deputy assistant agriculture secretary for food and consumer services, said Wednesday the Reagan administration was wrong to change a study on the effectiveness of the Women, Infants and Children nutrition program.

"We are all aware of President Bush's strong support of the WIC program and of its significant investment in the next generation," Watkins told a joint hearing of the House Select Committee on Hunger and the Senate Agriculture Committee.

He said the Bush administration agreed with a General Accounting Office investigation which showed the Agriculture Department under President Reagan inserted errors and deleted important conclusions in a study of WIC that was released in 1986.

"It's simply no way to do business. We regret this whole incident happened," said Watkins.

Members of Congress were outraged.

"The original report did not track with the administration ideological bent, so the findings were cooked to make them more palatable," charged Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa. "What a despicable and insensitive action."

Jackson to get talk show

NEW YORK (AP) — Jesse Jackson's syndicated talk show is on line for next fall, and it could continue to run in most of the country even if he became a candidate for mayor of Washington, D.C., the show's distributor says.

Jackson has given assurances he'll do the weekly, one-hour TV series, "Voices of America With Jesse Jackson," said Barry Stagg, a spokesman for Warner Bros. Domestic Television Distribution.

The series, to be produced by composer Quincy Jones and Jackson's production company, would debut in September.

The program has been picked by 82 stations covering 60 per cent of the national audience, Stagg said by phone Wednesday from Warner offices in Burbank, Calif.

There has been speculation that Jackson might run for mayor of Washington in the wake of the cocaine arrest of Mayor Marion Barry. Jackson has refused to confirm his political plans.

Were Jackson to seek office in Washington while his show is on the air, the Federal Communications Commission's equal time rules for opposing candidates would go into force, but only in the greater Washington viewing area.

Women smokers studied

BOSTON (AP) — Women who give up smoking lower their risk of heart attacks quickly, just as men do, a study today concludes.

Women who smoke face nearly four times the usual risk of heart attacks before age 65. Earlier research has shown that the high risk of heart attacks in male smokers goes away within a few years of stopping. But the new study is the first to show that this also happens in women.

"The present data underscore the value of smoking cessation for women, as for men, and may give women a convincing motive to quit, even if they have smoked heavily for many years," the researchers wrote in the New England Journal of Medicine.

The study found that the risk of suffering a first heart attack was 3.6 times higher among current smokers than among those who never had smoked. However, within three years of giving up smoking, their risk had dropped to the point where it was no higher than that of the non-smokers.

Disposables criticized

NEW YORK (AP) — A consumer group began a campaign against disposable products today, urging environmentally concerned shoppers to telephone their displeasure to manufacturers' toll-free consumer lines.

The New York Public Interest Research Group published a guide to what it said were the worst examples of disposable, overpackaged and non-recyclable consumer products that deplete resources and jam landfills.

Although it did not call for a boycott, the group urged consumers to complain about items such as disposable diapers and razors, plastic utensils, polystyrene foam packages and so-called "degradable" plastic bags.

The guide singled out a few items as examples of the worst in throw-away packaging, including Eastman Kodak Co.'s "Fling" disposable camera; Quaker Oats Co.'s "Aunt Jemima Pancake Express," which has mix for six pancakes in a disposable plastic mixing bowl; and Heinz U.S.A.'s plastic ketchup bottles.

The ketchup bottles are difficult to recycle because they are made of laminated layers of plastics, the guide said.

Chemist says effluent reuse not beneficial

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

ODESSA — While the city of Odessa is "very interested" in the reuse of effluent — treated wastewater — from its two sewage treatment plants, wholesale reuse would not be "mutually beneficial," an environmental chemist testified here Wednesday.

Instead, most of the water from the older but revamped South Dixie Water Reclamation Plant of 1950s vintage and the 1980s' East Water Reclamation Plant is discharged down Monahans Draw, which winds eastwardly into Midland County and south of the city of Midland.

Odessa is seeking five-year Texas Water Commission (TWC) permits to continue discharging into the draw.

The chemist, Dr. Peggy W. Glass of Austin, testified that Odessa has explored the feasibilities of pumping effluent to the north for landscape irrigation on the campus of the University of Texas of the Permian Basin (UTPB), to country club golf courses, and cemeteries.

"At the present time," however, she said, "it is not cost effective." Costs would include capital expenses of laying waterlines and putting in pump stations, since the water would be pumped "uphill."

"Their (the users') current (water) costs are less," said the chemist, who is acting as Odessa's spokesman in the TWC hearing being conducted by TWC Hearings Examiner Leslie Limes of Austin.

Currently, Odessa is operating the two plants under interim permits while its applications are being considered.

Among those contesting Odessa's permit renewals for the wholesale discharge into the draw are Midland lawyer Paul Bohannon and landowners along the draw.

Midland County farmers Lee Bell and Michael Payne, who were to testify today, are claiming that effluent, when commingled with natural rainwater runoff, has caused flooding along the draw and subsequently damaged their cropland.

Last year in Stanton, a Martin County jury found Odessa was liable in the Monahans Draw flooding of some of Bell's cotton acreage southeast of Midland. The jury awarded him $103,00 in actual damages and $327,000 in exemplary damages.

Odessa is appealing the verdict.

Bell had testified then that the flood waters were "rancid," took on a "pea-soup" color, and were clear evidence that Odessa's effluent travels well into Midland County.

Odessa claims otherwise — that the wastewaters do not flow that far — 15 or 20 miles toward Midland. Ms. Glass, who has reviewed the Bell vs. Odessa case, said she did not agree with the jury that Odessa was liable and that Odessa's effluent caused the flooding.

"I don't believe that (the jury's verdict) was right," Ms. Glass said.

Further, she said that Odessa's effluent is relatively clear and that the effluent from the newer East Plant is "similar in clarity" to distilled water.

However, the effluent from the older South Dixie Plant, which is to be "rehabilitated," emits a "musky" odor and a "faint smell" of chlorine.

Ms. Glass, who noted that Monahans Draw is an "intermittent stream" that is sometimes flowing and sometimes dry, surmised that the odor and discolored waters Bell referred to could be caused by agricultural and urban runoff. Thirty percent of the time, she said, the draw does not flow.

"I don't have a definition of a draw," she said. "I've seen rivers smaller than this draw."

In a break in the testimony on Wednesday, Bell argued his case for Odessa to expand irrigation use of the effluent.

Currently, Rexene Products Company, a petro-chemical plant, daily uses between 2 million and 3 million gallons of effluent for industrial cooling and other uses.

W.T. Averitt III draws effluent from the draw and fills lagoons for use in agricultural irrigation.

Bell argued that had Odessa "redirected some of this energy and funds, they could have the problem solved" rather than continue to discharge into the draw.

"They are too hard-headed to look any other way," he alleged.

"I've irrigated with sewer water," Bell said outside the Odessa City Hall Council Chambers where the hearing is being conducted. "I've farmed with it. There're things you can do" to utilize the effluent.

He cited Averitt's use of the effluent for irrigation.

"They can put lines in where other people can irrigate out of the draw," he said. "There are inexpensive ways of alleviating the downstream flooding. But Odessa is not willing to talk about it. Seems like they are spending a lot of money fighting just to get their permits, so they can do whatever they want," Bell charged.

Bell noted that the city of Midland, which had been discharging its effluent into Midland Draw until the early 1980s, built a pipeline to skirt the draw and to pipe the treated wastewater about 15 miles southeast of town to lagoons in the Spraberry area.

From there, the water, instead of flowing down Midland Draw and causing flooding and allegedly underground-water contamination in the Greenwood area, is used for irrigating farmland.

But, noted Bell, Midland built the $15 million pipeline only after the TWC in 1981 declined to renew the city's permit for discharging effluent into Midland Draw east of the city.

And in 1984, when Odessa sought renewal of its TWC permits to discharge into Monahans Draw, officials of the city and county of Midland protested Odessa's TWC permit renewals to discharge into the draw.

Karate instructor denies he sexually assaulted ex-student

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

A 35-year-old karate instructor on trial for sexual assault of a former student today tearfully denied the charges against him.

Juan Antonio Lopez told jurors he never assaulted the girl, who he said acted "like she owned me."

Lopez recalled one incident in a Dallas airport when the girl hopped in his lap.

"He's my dad. He's married," Lopez recalled the girl said.

Lopez, a San Antonio resident who used to operate karate schools in Midland and Odessa, is accused of one count of aggravated sexual assault and two counts of sexual assault. He is being tried in Judge Pat Baskin's 142nd State District Court.

On Wednesday, the victim went on trial as the attorney for Juan Antonio Lopez produced witnesses who said the girl, now 16, referred to him as "Daddy," called him on the telephone hundreds of times and wanted to marry him.

Oscar Aguero, a U.S. Army enlisted man who took lessons from Lopez in Odessa, told jurors the girl was 14 when she made sexual advances toward him in the back seat of a car.

On cross-examination, prosecutor Randy Fluke asked Aguero why he had refused to talk to an investigator for the District Attorney's office. Aguero said he did not know who the officer was.

Sharp exchanges like that characterized Wednesday's session, as attorney Tom Morgan called ex-employees and associates of Lopez who testified they never saw the two leave or arrive together at the karate school. The victim had testified Lopez frequently gave her rides to the lessons.

Former student Junior Rodriguez, who now operates his own karate school in Odessa, told Morgan the victim's mother tried to blackmail Lopez.

When the mother found out about the sexual contact between the instructor and her daughter, she threatened to file criminal charges unless Lopez paid her, Rodriguez testified.

Responding to inquiries by Morgan, former employee Cynthia Masters told jurors the girl wanted more mature relationships with boys.

"She wanted to do more than kiss and hold hands," Ms. Masters said, who added the victim also referred to Lopez as her "Daddy."

On the first day of testimony Tuesday, the girl said she obeyed Lopez when he demanded sex because of his role as her instructor.

The incidents alleged in the indictment against Lopez occurred in January 1988, and February and March 1989.

Police find burglary suspects

By JULIE HILLRICHS

Five suspected burglars hiding in a closet at a vacant southwest Midland residence were surprised by police late Tuesday after a caller reported hearing noises coming from the house.

Police stormed the vacant residence shortly before 10 p.m. Tuesday, capturing a 21-year-old Midland man and four teen-age boys, who still were being held on burglary charges this morning.

Lt. Jerry Morris, a police department spokesman, said the suspects are believed to be responsible for the burglaries Tuesday of two houses in the 400 block of Sweetbriar Drive.

One burglary occurred at about 4:10 p.m., while the other was reported less than four hours later in the same block, according to the police report.

Morris said Xavier Deanda, 4705 Erie Drive, was arraigned this morning before Midland County Justice of the Peace Keith Jobe, on two counts of burglary stemming from the break-ins.

Deanda was in custody in the Midland County Jail in lieu of $10,000 bond.

The four teen-agers — one 14 year-old, two 15-year-olds and one 16-year-old — also were arrested and charged with burglary.

The teen-agers were being held today in the Culver Youth Home, Morris said.

According to the police report, the man and the teen-agers are suspected in the burglary of one residence where about $1,500 worth of property was stolen, including firearms, jewelry and a video game.

Morris said police believe the suspects then fled the scene and hid out in the south bedroom closet at a vacant house on the same block.

Two rings believed to have been taken during the first burglary were found in the possession of one of the suspects, according to Morris.

21 El Paso residents become infected with measles

EL PASO (AP) — Twenty-one people here, including seven high school students, have reported being infected with measles in the first few weeks of January and health officials say they expect more.

In an attempt to curb the number of cases, officials at Coronado High School have banned extracurricular activities for the next two weeks, including some college testing and a protest rally of an ongoing tax rollback drive in the city.

Dr. Laurance Nickey, city-county health director, said Wednesday he is sending the majority of his nursing staff to Coronado Friday to give schoolwide immunizations to student, faculty and staff. Students who are not immunized because of religious reasons, illness or are medications, will not be allowed in school until the outbreak subsides.

The students also are being advised not to participate in social activities where they may come in contact with students from other high schools.

"We feel that its probably going to escalate much more in the near future," said Nickey. "We've been inundated with calls."

Bryant to start new campaign for SSC funds

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. John Bryant launched a new effort to secure funding for the superconducting super collider after hearing White House staff comments that the Texas congressional delegation was slacking off its lobbying for the giant atom smasher.

Bryant, a House Budget Committee member from Dallas, told President Bush he was "concerned by suggestions by one of your assistants that ... the delegation 'needs to be a little bit stronger' in lobbying for the SSC."

He said the Texas delegation has made tireless, bipartisan lobbying effort of Congressional colleagues for the super collider, which is to be built in Ellis County south of Dallas.

"The administration would be better served by shoring up support from within its own ranks before criticizing the SSC's strongest congressional supporters," Bryant told Bush in a letter sent Tuesday.

Bryant, a Democrat, said earlier he would urge the full $393 million in the budget committee for the 1991 fiscal year.

The White House press office had no comment Wednesday on the letter.

Jerry Rucker, a former Dallas city councilman who is vying for Bryant's 5th District seat in November, said Bryant didn't do that much to secure super collider support.

"While the majority of the work was being done by the Texas delegation, as well as hundreds of other Texans, seeking support and funding for the superconducting super collider, John Bryant was traveling the state of Texas seeking support for his race for Attorney General," Rucker said.

Bryant said his challenger was the first to inject politics into the effort to secure collider funds.

"Mr. Rucker had better decide whether he's for super collider funding or not," Bryant said.

Some scientists have said the super collider will cost more than the $5.9 billion originally projected. But others are backing the project, and 35 universities in 18 states have received SSC-related research funds.

U.S. Customs grounds blimps after one at Eagle Pass falls

AUSTIN (AP) — U.S. Customs Service ordered the maker of radar-carrying balloons used in the anti-drug war to bring down two in Texas and one in Puerto Rico when a third accidentally fell to earth, a newspaper reported.

But Customs failed to tell the House Ways and Means Committee, which oversees the agency, about the grounded blimps, the Austin American-Statesman reported Wednesday in a copyright story.

"I am not at all surprised" a Ways and Means staff member who asked not to be identified told the newspaper. "They respond to specific questions and queries we have, but historically they have never been very forthcoming with information, especially the kind that does not put them in a positive light."

Blimps in Marfa and Rio Grande City and one in Puerto Rico have been grounded since Dec. 29, when a blimp tethered 6,000 feet above Eagle Pass fell to earth.

Each blimp costs about $12 million, Susanne Moore, U.S. Customs spokeswoman, said Wednesday. Ms. Moore said the three Texas balloons, manufactured by General Electric, were still being tested by the manufacturer when they were brought down. Customs had not taken custody of them, she said.

"We want to make sure that what GE is giving to us is what we want," she said. "GE has to make the system work properly and to the acceptance of Customs."

Landowners crucial to saving playas, official say

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Private landowners are crucial to a plan for saving an estimated 25,000 playa lakes for bird habitat in five states, officials said.

An alarming decline in bird populations and shrinking wildlife habitat prompted the public-private Playa Lakes Joint Venture unveiled Wednesday, according to officials.

Playa lakes are basins that flood temporarily and serve as a crossroads for millions of ducks, geese, swan, cranes, bald eagles, and other birds during their regular fall and spring migrations across the United States. Numerous mammals also need the playas in the dry southwest.

"Our main goal in the joint venture is to work with landowners and if necessary to provide incentives to keep the playa lakes wet," Bruce Morrison, head of the habitat section with the New Mexico Game and Fish Department, said Wednesday.

About 99 percent of the playa lakes are privately owned, according to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

Incentives will include buying water rights from landowners to irrigate the playa lakes, particularly during the winter.

Studies by state and federal wildlife officials have found duck populations decreasing and their wetland habitats disappearing. According to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, duck populations are 24 percent below the average recorded from 1955-1988.

The $1.3 million venture announced Wednesday is designed to "secure, preserve and enhance vital waterfowl migrating and breeding grounds" in 84 contiguous counties in the playa lakes region of Texas, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Colorado and Kansas, according to the plan.

Participants include Phillips Petroleum Co., Ducks Unlimited Inc., the wildlife agencies of the five states involved, the National Wildlife Federation and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

DRAW

Midland spokesmen held that the discharge polluted underground water zones, created breeding cultures for mosquitoes, posed health problems and sanitation problems, caused flooding of farmland and roads, and tended to lower property values along the draw.

Following the current TWC hearing, evidence is to be presented to the three-member TWC for renewal, denial or modification of Odessa's permits. On the TWC board are Commissioners Buck Jim Wynne III of Dallas, Cliff Johnson of Palestine, and John Birdwell of Lubbock.

Midland County Commissioner Win Brown, who has contested Odessa's discharge into the draw, said that the new TWC board "is more attuned to the needs of the people, and they will render a fair decision based on fact."

The old board, which in 1984 renewed Odessa discharge permits and which earlier denied Midland's renewal permits, "apparently" was prejudiced against Midland and favored Odessa.

"I was one of the first to start complaining," Brown said today, "trying to get something done" as far back as the 1970s. "At the time, raw sewage was going down the draw," he said.

"A lot of damage has already been done to the groundwater," he said. "They (Odessa) need to pump the water away and use it for irrigation. I don't know the feasibility of creating another reservoir on the draw there, but that should be explored."

Brown said the new TWC water board "will weigh the facts and make a judgment based on fact and not on prejudice."

WTSU, A&M merger supporters to attend meeting

AUSTIN (AP) — Backers of a proposed consolidation of West Texas State University with the Texas A&M system say their presence at a committee meeting today should show the plan has widespread support.

About 120 people from the Panhandle paid $200 each to fly to Austin on a chartered jet to attend this morning's meeting of the Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board. The board will hear the recommendation of a committee on whether the merger should proceed. The board is scheduled to vote on the matter Friday.

Proponents say a merger would strengthen 6,000-student West Texas State and bring more research dollars to the campus in Canyon, 16 miles south of Amarillo.

Until recently, it seemed that bringing the proposal before the Coordinating Board was just a formality. The regents of both schools and the Legislature had approved the plan.

But last week, the Coordinating Board's staff of advisers recommended against the merger, saying it would be premature. The report, written by Texas Higher Education Commissioner Kenneth Ashworth, said it would make more sense to merge West Texas State with Lubbock-based Texas Tech, though neither school has expressed interest.

"We're not going to go down there bearing signs or anything," said state Rep. Dick Waterfield, R-Canadian. "We're just going down to listen."

The bill's co-sponsor, state Sen. Teel Bivins, R-Amarillo, said the Coordinating Board should beware of bucking public opinion.

Breckenridge discovered the accident on his way to work about 4:45 a.m. He combed the countryside looking for the victim, who had been thrown from the vehicle. After finding her, Breckenridge flagged down a passing sheriff's deputy, who went for help while Breckenridge administered first aid to the unconscious woman.

Breckenridge was born in Midland and graduated from Midland High School in 1971. He attended the police academy in Pecos and worked for both the Ector and Martin county sheriff's departments before moving to Houston.

Segments of 'Doctor Who' to be shown at Paproni's

From Staff Reports

Aficionados of the "Doctor Who" British television series may view videos of the British Broadcasting Corporation (BBC) program at 9 a.m. each Saturday at Paproni's Pizza near Wal-Mart Discount City at Loop 250 and Midkiff Road in Midland.

The showings are being sponsored by the Texas Time Lords, which is the only chartered "Doctor Who" fan club in Texas, according to Julia Frailey, club president.

The series, once available to West Texans by way of public television, is no longer aired in the Midland-Odessa area.

"Doctor Who" is a science-fiction fantasy.

"It has a real heavy injection of humor and satire," Mrs. Frailey said.

At the current Saturday showings, Texas Time Lords members are watching the last few episodes starring Jon Pertwee as "the Doctor."

"After that, we haven't decided what we are going to watch," she said. But those who attend the meeting can have input on which episodes, which date back to 1963, may be shown.

Mrs. Frailey said the Midland-Odessa club is eager for others to join.

"We want others to join up, particularly people who have different episodes of 'Doctor Who,' because I've been having to get episodes from my brother (Ed Scherer) in the Kansas City area."

The BBC series first aired on Nov. 23, 1963, Mrs. Frailey said. It was scheduled to air the day before but was preempted by broadcasts carrying reports on the assassination of President John F. Kennedy.

Officers of the Texas Time Lords include Julia Frailey, president and founder; Nancy Barton, secretary, and Melody Woodall, treasurer.

Neither Mattox nor Richards obtain endorsement of AFL-CIO

By JAMES CULLEN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

STATE

AUSTIN — Supporters of Ann Richards denied Jim Mattox the endorsement of the Texas AFL-CIO Wednesday night, but in the process both Democratic candidates for governor blocked the labor federation from endorsing other Democrats in downballot races.

Under the rules of the labor group, a candidate needed two-thirds of the convention vote to win endorsement, but the 521 delegates who represented 180,000 votes in affiliated unions were presented the endorsement report as a ticket, with Mattox at the top in the governor's race.

The Mattox and Ms. Richards campaigns then locked in a procedural standoff through three roll call votes, as Mattox supporters insisted that the convention consider all the races on one endorsement ticket and Ms. Richards' supporters blocked the ticket from getting the two-thirds vote it needed.

Among statewide candidates who lost the union endorsement, with money and organization that could prove vital on March 13, were John Odam for attorney general, Nikki Van Hightower for treasurer, Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower, Clint Hackney and Bob Krueger, in the Railroad Commission race, and several Supreme Court and Court of Criminal Appeals candidates.

After the first roll call voted 58 percent to keep Mattox on the ticket, Texas AFL-CIO President Joe Gunn reminded the convention that a failure to approve the ticket would result in affiliated unions being unable to support those candidates, although they could support candidates who did not seek the endorsement, including Ms. Richards and former Gov. Mark White.

George Anderson, a delegate from Communications Workers local 6127 in Odessa, said he and fellow delegate Robin Byrd of Midland were instructed by their local union to vote for no endorsement in the governor's race, but he was concerned that the failure to endorse in the downballot races could cause problems. "They're all friends," he said, "but it all comes down to you need two-thirds."

After a 54.5 percent majority opposed an attempt to withhold an endorsement in the governor's race, a last effort to endorse the proposed ticket, with Mattox for governor, got 57.5 percent but again failed the two-thirds test.

Gunn told reporters it was the first time a dispute in one race had prevented candidates in other races from being endorsed.

"Certainly I'm disappointed," Gunn said. "I regret it. I think we have some good candidates that our people wanted to work for, but under the rules of our constitution ... we're morally obligated that we cannot work for them because they tried for the endorsement and failed."

Gunn said he was unable to head off the trouble, although he declined to place blame. "I think you saw who was not yielding and who was pushing, and certainly I think the candidates have to answer for that," he said.

Mattox said Ms. Richards was a poor sport in refusing to allow the majority to rule. "We won the majority on three separate votes," he said. "She chose to destroy the endorsement of all the candidates on the ballot to get her will."

Mattox disagreed with Gunn's ruling that affiliated unions could not work for the candidates that were rejected. "It takes two-thirds not to endorse a candidate," Mattox said. "In this case, the convention took no action so it means that all the delegates, all the locals, all the internationals can endorse and assist whatever candidate they choose to follow."

Ms. Richards said Mattox was trying to put a "spin" on his defeat. "I thought my supporters did a real good job. I had hoped all along that we would not have to have that kind of long, drawn-out roll calls and I urged everyone in this race to go for no endorsement so we wouldn't have this, but I failed to convince them," she said.

"He insisted on this endorsement vote and was unsuccessful," she said. "I think this vote shows that working people have two very strong friends ... I'm just sorry we had to have it come to a vote."

Odam, who was denied union support in his race for attorney general, did not place blame, but said he and other statewide candidates should have worked to bring Mattox and Ms. Richards together.

Staubach leaves Luce campaign over abortion issue

DALLAS (AP) — A disagreement over the abortion issue has prompted former Dallas Cowboys quarterback Roger Staubach to sever his ties with the gubernatorial campaign of Dallas lawyer Tom Luce.

Luce has taken a pro-choice stand on the issue that has divided voters within the Republican party.

Staubach had served as co-chairman for Luce's campaign.

Luce had used Staubach's name on fund-raising letters as late as last month, but The Dallas Morning News reported Wednesday that Staubach had reassessed his public involvement in the campaign in light of his own opposition to abortion.

In a brief statement read by an aide, Staubach said Wednesday, "Tom Luce and I don't agree on the issue of abortion, but I feel there are many issues that are facing Texas such as education, economic development and the fight against drug abuse. On these issues we are in tune."

Lisa LeMaster, communications director for Luce, said the former football star had asked to leave the campaign.

"He (Staubach) was very kind to let us use his name to write one letter and author one piece of a statewide mailing" soliciting funds, Ms. LeMaster said.

Luce and GOP gubernatorial candidate Jack Rains have said they personally oppose abortion, but believe the decision should be the mother's.

Republican candidate Clayton Williams say he supports abortion only in cases of rape, incest or to save the life of the mother and Kent Hance would permit abortion only to save the life of the mother.

Bill Price, who heads the state's largest anti-abortion group, Texans United for Life, said he is pleased that Staubach has disassociated himself from the Luce campaign.

"I think it's a major defection," Price said.

Pilot hospitalized after plane crash

GALVESTON (AP) — A 44-year-old Florida man remains hospitalized today after his plane ran out of fuel and crashed into the Gulf of Mexico two miles offshore of Galveston.

U.S. Coast Guard Duty Officer Don Merwin said R.D. Whittington of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., suffered lacerations and hypothermia after the World War II-vintage warplane he was flying ditched into the gulf Wednesday afternoon.

Whittington was listed in serious but stable condition late Wednesday at John Sealy Hospital in Galveston.

Whittington clutched a seat cushion from his P-51 Mustang to stay afloat in the 56-degree water for two hours while the Coast Guard searched for him in a heavy fog.

"He was pretty dazed," Merwin said. "We had to put two people in the water to rescue him. But he was clinging to a seat cushion and was pretty much OK."

Whittington was en route from Fort Lauderdale to Scholes Field in Galveston to meet with friends from the proposed Lone Star Air Museum, Merwin said. Whittington radioed Coast Guard officials at 1:40 p.m. to say he was running out of fuel.

"He was having trouble getting in," Merwin said. "We've been having fog here and rain and then he ran out of fuel."

Division may be reduced

DALLAS (AP) — Defense Department planners will seek a reduction of the 2nd Armored Division, part of which is based at Fort Hood in central Texas, CBS-TV reported Wednesday night.

The reduction will be detailed by Secretary of Defense Dick Cheney Monday, the network reported. The Pentagon would not immediately confirm the report.

However, U.S. Rep. Albert Bustamante, D-San Antonio, said the report "probably is accurate. I see it as fairly accurate."

Bustamante made the remark to WFAA-TV in Dallas after meeting with Cheney Wednesday.

WFAA, quoting anonymous sources, said cutbacks were also targeted at Red River Army Depot near Texarkana and Bergstrom Air Force Base near Austin.

About 10,000 soldiers, one-fourth of Fort Hood's troop population, are connected with the 2nd Armored Division at the giant base. Part of the division is stationed in Europe.

On Wednesday, Cheney imposed a three-month freeze on new military construction contracts. He said the step was necessary "in light of the coming changes in the force structure and disposition of the U.S. Armed Forces."

Hance has execution plan

AUSTIN (AP) — Republican gubernatorial hopeful Kent Hance says he wants to speed up executions of convicted killers in Texas.

"Under our present system, the concept of swift and sure punishment has become a joke," Hance said.

The candidate said that more than 300 convicted murderers now reside on death row, and three of them have been there for more than 15 years.

Hance proposed Wednesday to have the Court of Criminal Appeals establish rules requiring that all death row appeals be decided within two years. The plan also would limit post-conviction appeals. It also calls for changing state and federal laws to end what Hance called "frivolous last-minute appeals" of such cases.

"These murderers have been convicted and their sentences should be executed. It is time to change the rules. It is time the criminal is punished," he said.

District judge nominated

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush Wednesday nominated state District Judge John D. Rainey of Angleton to fill a U.S. District judgeship for the southern district of Texas.

Rainey, 44, has been judge for the 149th District Court in Brazoria County for the past three years.

Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, nominated Rainey last July to fill the seat left vacant by Gabrielle McDonald, who resigned her seat in 1988 to return to private law practice.

Rainey, a Republican, is a Freeport native and a graduate of Southern Methodist University law school in 1972.

Rainey was involved with the Dallas-based firm of Taylor and Mizell before moving to Angleton in 1979, where he practiced civil law. He was elected to the state district bench in 1986.

Other inmates happy about Brandley's release

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Clarence Brandley's release from Death Row sparked excitement among his fellow inmates awaiting execution, but the Texas prisoners said the former Conroe janitor had a special case.

"I wish it was me, but my case ain't Brandley's case," said Carl Kelly, who faces execution next month for his part in a 1980 robbery-slaying in Waco. "The man was framed for a crime. I don't think he should ever have gone to trial."

Kelly, whose cell was four cells away from Brandley's, said Wednesday he wished Brandley luck as he watched guards lead his friend in handcuffs away from the death row wing Tuesday.

Brandley, 38, who once came within five days of execution, was released on a $75,000 bond Tuesday, a month after the Tex Court of Criminal Appeals threw out his capital murder conviction for the 1980 rape-slaying of a 16-year-old Bellville girl. The court issued its final mandate in the case Monday, confirming its decision that Brandley did not receive a fair trial.

After securing the bond, Brandley's attorneys quickly hustled to the Ellis II Unit of the Texas Department of Corrections, retrieved their client and drove him to Houston for a tearful reunion with family members and supporters.

"Who wouldn't want to be walking out the gate, vindicated in most of the public's eye, going home to your kids, starting a new life?" asked inmate James Beathard.

"It happens so rarely. It's never happened that he walked directly off the row and out the front door — never out the front door of the death row wing," added Lester Bower, who is awaiting death for the slayings of four men during a 1983 robbery outside Sherman.

"It was the novelty of it," inmate Roger DeGarmo said. "It shows there is a way to handle the system."

But Beathard, like Kelly, said there will be little impact from Brandley's case on other death row inmates.

> "It happens so rarely. It's never happened that he walked directly off the row and out the front door — never out the front door of the death row wing."
> — Inmate Lester Bower, about Clarence Brandley's release

"As far as having implications for the rest of us here, one would have expected this would have a favorable effect, but I've seen it happen with too many other cases where it hasn't had an effect," said Beathard, sentenced to die in 1985 for killing a 14-year-old boy, one of three members of a Trinity County family slain in a plot to collect on their estate.

"The public looks at it and gets all interested in it and are thrilled to death until the end of the week when the next news story comes up," Beathard said. "You have your hopes up but you're kind of reserved."

"I'm cynical," DeGarmo agreed. "It's encouraging that something like this happens on a case. But you know the media — a week later and it goes inside the paper."

Beathard said often a case has to come into the public eye before significant progress can be made on appeals.

"This stuff has to play to the public before anything can happen, before the courts can take any action, before the Legislature can take any action. I'm just becoming real cynical how the public reacts and how much attention they really pay to this stuff," Beathard said.

But DeGarmo, convicted of the 1979 abduction-slaying of a woman in Fort Bend County, couldn't help but daydream about freedom after Brandley's release.

"I'm sad that I do not have that opportunity to embrace my loved ones," DeGarmo said. "If I'm ever released, if media or anyone else wants to talk with me, they're going to have to talk to me on my way out of Texas because I'm not stopping when I leave. And you can take that to the bank. I think I've had my share of Texas."

TDA says Valley freeze will have $450 million impact on economy

AUSTIN (AP) — South Texas producers suffered $138 million in crop losses from the Christmas freeze, which will have a $450 million negative impact on the state economy, the Texas Department of Agriculture has reported.

Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower also said Wednesday that more than 17,500 workers are facing the rest of the winter without jobs or adequate food, shelter and clothing.

"Thousands of our poorest neighbors now need help to pay for food, utility services, transportation and repairs to pipes that were frozen during last month's cold blast," he said.

Freeze damage was calculated based on data gathered from hundreds of field inspections in Cameron, Hidalgo, Starr and Willacy counties, Hightower said. Inspectors also went to the Winter Garden area to ascertain damage in Uvalde, Maverick, Frio and Zavala counties.

Nearly half of this season's citrus crop was lost, including a 100 percent loss of the Valencia orange crop, according to the Agriculture Department. The loss is estimated at $46.8 million.

If tree losses prove to be severe, growers can expect only a minimal harvest in 1990, and a 1991 harvest a quarter the size of that in 1988, the agency said.

Vegetable losses are estimated at $48.7 million, and nursery losses at $8.3 million. The sugar cane industry lost $4.6 million, and the aloe vera industry $29.5 million.

Aquaculture operations and grazing pasture also were hurt.

The $450 million includes the impact the money from the crops would have had as it worked its way through the state economy, said Agriculture Department spokesman Andy Welch.

Of the workers left jobless, more than 10,000 do not qualify for unemployment compensation, Hightower said.

But the disaster declaration issued by President Bush opens up a number of programs, he said. For example, farm worker families can qualify for assistance under the federal government's emergency food stamp program.

Church and civic groups also can help fill the gaps, Hightower said.

19 cities top 100,000 population

AUSTIN (AP) — Nineteen Texas cities have topped 100,000 in population and 40 other cities have exceeded 50,000, according to estimates released Wednesday by the Texas Department of Commerce.

The estimates, which were prepared by Dr. Steve Murdock of Texas A&M University, show that between 1980 and 1988 Abilene, Brownsville, Laredo and Plano grew to more than 100,000 in population.

During the same period, Bryan, Carrollton, College Station, Denton, Harlingen, Killeen and Temple increased their population to more than 50,000.

Among the state's 254 counties, seven — Rockwall, Hood, Williamson, Hays, Denton, Collin and Bastrop — experienced a population increase of at least 50 percent from 1980 to 1988. But 97 counties are estimated to have lost population during that eight-year period.

Thirteen cities in Texas more than doubled in population, primarily in smaller communities. The largest of the 13 was Round Rock in Williamson County, with an increase of 161 percent, from 11,812 in 1980 to 30,782 in 1988.

Among cities with a population of more than 100,000, Plano was the fastest-growing area with a 64 percent increase.

Here, according to estimates prepared for the Department of Commerce, are Texas' 10 largest cities:

Houston 1,889,853; Dallas 1,049,741; San Antonio 994,292; El Paso 512,361; Austin 507,462; Fort Worth 472,183; Corpus Christi 256,530; Arlington 230,951; Lubbock 188,700; and Garland 176,388.

Defense maintains battered wife forced to kill woman

DECATUR (AP) — The issue in Sharon Green's murder trial is not whether she was a battered wife, but whether she acted willingly in stabbing and beating two women with a hammer after her husband brought them to the couple's mobile home in late 1985, prosecutors say.

Defense attorney Charles Baldwin and Mrs. Green, 29, both maintain that she was a battered wife and that although she had knowledge of the slayings — indeed, admitting in one of her statements to police that she was forced to stab the women — she feared for her life if she went to the police.

Green and her 28-year-old husband, Ricky Lee Green — whom she says she will divorce after her trial — are accused of sexually assaulting and killing the women in the couple's mobile home in the Wise County town of Boyd.

Still jailed in Wise County, Mrs. Green spoke Wednesday at an impromptu news conference after a brief pre-trial hearing in the Decatur courtroom, where her much-publicized, long awaited murder trial is scheduled to begin Feb. 5.

Mrs. Green said Wednesday she is not bitter, feels at peace with herself and feels confident she will be vindicated.

"The Lord's with me. I feel everything's going to be all right," she said.

Wednesday's hearing set the scene for her trial, with District Judge John R. Lindsey agreeing to the individual questioning of jurors.

Green told authorities his wife was a willing participant in the killings.

Mrs. Green initially was indicted on a capital murder charge, but later the charge was reduced to murder. He is charged with capital murder in those cases.

Green remains in Tarrant County Jail in Fort Worth, charged additionally with two sexual mutilation slayings — that of a 16-year-old boy in April 1985 and that of a Fort Worth television advertising executive in December 1986.

District Attorney Pat Morris said the issue is not whether Mrs. Green was a battered wife, but whether the crimes were committed under duress, what he called an affirmative defense.

Hearing loss connected to loud noises

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Millions of Americans are unwittingly suffering a hearing loss because of exposure to loud noises at home, on the job and during recreational activity, a federal advisory panel said Wednesday.

Experts convened by the National Institutes of Health said millions are being exposed to irreversible and untreatable hearing damage because of an increasingly noisy environment.

While some efforts have been made to reduce occupational noise exposure, the experts said too little attention has been paid to potential hearing damage caused by devices like stereo music players and snowmobiles.

The panel estimated that more than 10 million Americans have suffered some hearing loss because of exposure to excess noise.

"Inconsistent compliance and spotty enforcement of existing governmental regulations have been the underlying cause for their relative ineffectiveness," said a draft report by the 14-member panel.

The group, consisting of doctors, researchers and public representatives concerned with hearing problems, was particularly critical of a decision by the federal government in 1982 to eliminate the Office of Noise Abatement and Control within the Environmental Protection Agency.

The panel said the government needs to establish a central agency or interagency group to be responsible for practical solutions to noise issues.

The defunct EPA office was to specify acceptable levels of sound from numerous sources, including consumer devices, and work with other agencies on noise sources for which they are responsible.

The conference chairman, Dr. Patrick E. Brpokhouser, director of the Boys Town National Research Hospital in Omaha, said the panel hoped groups concerned with noise issues would use the report to bolster arguments for more federal action, including enforcement of existing noise control regulations.

"Everybody who has two ears has an interest in preserving their hearing," Brookhouser said at a news conference that concluded the panel's three-day meeting.

"Our increasingly noisy environment places more and more people at risk. Many of the individuals who are losing their hearing don't know it."

The panel said sounds with an intensity of less than 75 decibels are unlikely to cause hearing loss even over a long durations of exposure.

The sound level of ordinary speech is about 65 decibels, and 75 decibels is equivalent to the noise from a dishwasher or vacuum cleaner.

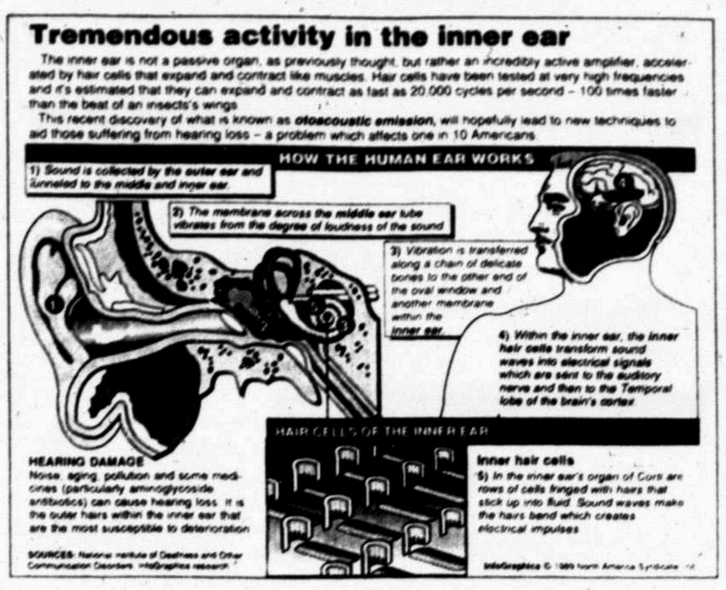
But exposure to sound levels above 85 decibels are potentially hazardous if endured for eight hours a day for prolonged periods, the report said, and higher levels could cause permanent damage from shorter durations. The panel noted that 85 decibels is roughly equivalent to the sound of a power lawn mower or a food blender.

While 10 million of the 28 million cases of hearing loss that afflict Americans are associated with loud noise, experts said it was unclear if the incidence of impairment had risen in recent years because few studies of the problem had been made.

Brookhouser said that although some sources of intense noise like certain occupational settings have existed for decades, there were some newer problems to which many people were exposed, including rock concerts and personal stereos.

Dr. William W. Clark of the Central Institute for the Deaf in St. Louis, who studied noise exposure from leisure activities, noted in a presentation prepared for the panel that personal stereos can produce up to 115 decibels through their earphones, which makes them potentially hazardous at maximum volumes.

The panel's report said more research is needed on how different types of noise damage the hearing. Most structures of the inner ear can be damaged by loud sounds, including all cell types in the cochlea, which contains the highly specialized hair cells that turn vibrations into electrical impulses that go to the brain.



New osteoporosis treatment tested

N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — The most effective measure against osteoporosis in menopausal women has been estrogen-replacement treatments.

But recent studies linking the hormone therapy to an increase in endometrial and breast cancer has women and doctors questioning whether it is worth the risk.

There may be hope in a drug called calcitonin, an alternative to estrogen that not only prevents further degeneration of skeletal tissue, but also replaces lost bone mass and improves calcium absorption.

The drug has been approved by the Food and Drug Administration in injectable form, but because of difficulties many people have in administering shots, clinical trials currently are taking place to examine the benefits of calcitonin as a nasal spray.

Osteoporosis is a potentially crippling affliction common in older women that thins the bones and makes them susceptible to fractures.

When loss of bone occurs in the spine, patients may experience shortened stature, curvature of the back and pain in both the back and abdomen.

Women who take calcium pills sometimes can prevent the onset or progression of the disease, but there has been no successful treatment for patients who have substantial bone loss.

The calcitonin nasal spray, which is still at least four years away from FDA approval, could change that.

"The biggest target market, of course, is menopausal women, but this may be something that can be given earlier — to younger women — as their estrogen levels start dropping in the mid-30s," Dr. Stuart Silverman, an adjunct associate professor of clinical medicine at UCLA who is directing research on the drug, explained.

The prescription spray is used once a day from the onset of menopause to replace the estrogen the woman's body no longer produces.

Possible side effects include an allergic reaction to the spray or nausea. Overdosing on the spray is impossible, Silverman said, adding that calcitonin is taken in spray form instead of a pill because its particular protein molecule makeup is better absorbed this way.

Although calcitonin could be a major player in the fight against osteoporosis, its approval still depends on the outcome of clinical trials and approval from the FDA, a process that could take two to three years after lab data is submitted.

Chocolate affects sphincter muscle, can cause heartburn

Which is most likely to cause heartburn — onions, cabbage or chocolate? Surprisingly, it's chocolate, says Dr. Donald O. Castell of Bowman Gray School of Medicine in North Carolina.

Carper

The reason: Chocolate affects the sphincter muscle of the esophagus. Ordinarily, when you swallow, this muscle relaxes, letting food pass into the stomach, then quickly closes.

But chocolate can cause the muscle to relax at the wrong time, so that stomach acid backs up into the esophagus, causing the burning, painful sensation known as heartburn or acid indigestion that strikes about 20 million Americans daily.

In Dr. Castell's tests, a group of people prone to heartburn experienced a backwash of stomach acid within an hour after downing a chocolate drink. Dr. Castell says chocolate is highest of any food in a chemical called theobromine which is a muscle relaxant.

Dr. Castell's advice: "If you are prone to heartburn, cut out or cut back on chocolate." He also suggests doing your own test. "Eat chocolate and see what happens. I get heartburn every time I eat a couple of chocolate-chip cookies," he says.

Worried about high cholesterol? Try olive oil. It's the best of oils in protecting arteries from the ravages of high cholesterol, say most experts.

In fact, a recent study in the Netherlands found that a high-fat olive-oil diet was better at reducing cholesterol than a low-fat diet. For 36 days half of a group of 48 healthy individuals ate a high-fiber, low-fat diet (22 percent of calories from fat). The other half ate a high-fat diet (41 percent of calories from fat), most of it from olive oil. The cholesterol of the low-fat dieters fell an average 17 points. But the cholesterol dropped 20 points in the olive-oil eaters. Also crucial, the desirable HDL cholesterol, that helps ward off heart disease, went down in the low-fat dieters, but not in the olive-oil consumers.

But this does not mean you should overdose on olive oil, cautions Dr. Scott M. Grundy of the University of Texas Health Science Center at Dallas. Olive oil, like other fats, is high in calories and can add unwanted pounds, leading to other health problems.

Best advice: Use olive oil instead of saturated animal fats and polyunsaturated oils like corn and safflower. In other words, when you must eat fat, make it olive oil.

To keep your teeth, eat lots of fruit and brush often. Something in fruit seems to ward off periodontal or gum disease — the No. 1 cause of tooth loss, according to recent research.

Dental researchers in South Africa noted that apple and grape workers who ate a lot of fruit, at least eight apples or eight bunches of grapes a day during picking season, had better periodontal health, as judged by a lower incidence of bleeding and receding gums.

The bad news is the fruit pickers had more cavities as measured by missing, decayed or filled teeth. The apple and grape eaters had two to two-and-a-half times more cavities than a group of workers who harvested grain.

Apparently, the sugar — even though it is natural fructose — in so much fruit still rotted the teeth. Thus, heavy fruit eaters like candy eaters need to brush and floss frequently.

How fruit might fight gum disease is unknown. One possible explanation is that apples and grapes, along with other fruits, are high in antioxidants, compounds known to guard cells from attack by various infectious and other disease-promoting agents.

AIDS-related disease caused by other organism

Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Kaposi's sarcoma, a disease thought to be caused by the AIDS virus, actually is caused by some other unidentified organism, according to two new medical studies.

Scientists now are embarked on a search to identify and isolate the agent that causes the disease.

These findings, published in the Jan. 20 issue of the British medical journal, The Lancet, bring scientists closer to solving the mystery of Kaposi's sarcoma. It is the second highest cause of death among AIDS patients, behind AIDS-related pneumonia.

Researchers at the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta and New York University Medical Centers also have done studies that lead them to believe that the organism is sexually transmitted, has a low incidence in the heterosexual community and is most likely to cause disease in people whose immune systems are impaired.

The findings may lead to improved treatment and prognosis for the 13,600 people now afflicted by KS, which manifests itself as brownish-purple lesions on the body.

It is not known if KS is caused by a virus, bacteria, fungi, or chemicals called "growth factors."

"There is a clue there — we just don't yet understand what it is," said Dr. Thomas A. Peterman of the CDC.

The findings have major implications: KS may not be inevitably fatal for people who are not also infected by the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV), which causes AIDS.

If the health of the immune system improves, the symptoms can actually disappear. This might explain the cases of so-called "AIDS cures." However, in people with both KS and HIV infections, the disease can be aggressive.

People may be unknowingly infected by the organism but not have symptoms. And, unless the immune system is impaired, the body may not fall victim to the organism. This is the case in other infections, like pneumonia or herpes.

KS can be prevented by "safe sex." This has been demonstrated as gay men change their sexual behavior. For example, in 1981, 77 percent of San Francisco AIDS patients had KS; by 1988, the rate had fallen to 22 percent.

Scientists now believe that the two epidemics — KS and HIV — may have coincided. Or, they say, perhaps HIV predisposed people to develop KS symptoms.

KS is unlikely to be a form of cancer, as once thought. This theory influences therapy. Doctors say that few cancers jump 100-fold, as KS did in the early 1980s, unless they are caused by an infection. And cancers rarely take advantage of people with suppressed immune systems, as KS does.

In one paper, CDC researchers report that they looked at the disease's odd patterns of transmission and concluded that some agent other than HIV had to be responsible.

Two intriguing clues developed. KS is 20 time more common in gay men than in other people with AIDS, so researchers suspected that gay men might be exposing themselves to the KS agent through sexual intercourse. And KS afflicts only 3 percent of AIDS patients in Kansas, compared to 31 percent in New York, so there seem to be pockets of population that the organism has not penetrated.

In a second paper, the New York City researchers found that six men with KS were not infected by HIV. The men's cells didn't contain the AIDS virus. Doctors suspect that these men may have a benign and non-lethal form of KS.

Before the AIDS epidemic, KS was a rare disease affecting only elderly men of Mediterranean origin. When AIDS hit, the number of cases of KS skyrocketed, so doctors assumed there was a link.

Travelers can be candidates for blood clots

OKLAHOMA CITY, Okla. (AP) — More than fatigue and stiffness accompany the tedium of driving long distances or spending hours on an airplane.

"When you sit for a long time without contracting the muscles in your legs a stagnation of blood flow develops, particularly in the veins which return blood to the heart," says Dr. Thomas Whitsett.

"While this may not be a problem for most people," says the professor of medicine at the University of Oklahoma Health Sciences Center, "it may mean trouble for those who have a propensity to develop blood clots."

Whitsett says most blood clots start small and build up over time. Sitting for long periods in the same position without moving leg muscles may allow a clot to form and grow.

People at risk, he says, include anyone who has a leg cast, those over age 60, smokers, the overweight, those who have had clots before. Also anyone who has suffered congestive heart failure, a stroke or has any of several types of cancer.

"Women who have had a baby in the last four weeks are also at risk," says Whitsett, pointing out that many new mothers take long trips to show off their new offspring to relatives.

Exercise is the best method of protection from blood clots and for relieving stiffness and boredom on long trips, he says.

"My advice is to stop the car every hour, get out and walk around or stretch for a few minutes," he says. "For those on an airplane, they can get up and walk in the aisle and can help circulation by bending the feet up and down at the ankles."

While you should avoid tight-fitting clothes, knee-high support hose are good because they help the flow of blood back to the heart, Whitsett says.

The bidding:

2 NT	Pass	3 NT	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Queen of ♡

Here's another chance to see whether you're more adept at rubber bridge or duplicate. How would you play this hand at three no trump after the lead of the queen of hearts.

Despite 20 high-card points and a wealth of prime cards, South was content with two no trump at his second turn—the hand was flat and lacked intermediates. Note North's raise to three no trump. A bid of three spades would have shown a six-card suit and an unbalanced hand. Also, notice that four spades has no play.

Assume you win the first heart (there's no point to ducking) and play the queen and king of spades. When East shows out you have only eight tricks and no way to get a ninth. You have tackled the hand correctly if the game is duplicate. The odds on a 3-2 break are 68 percent, while a 4-1 break occurs less than three times in 10. This was not your lucky day.

Playing rubber bridge you are not interested in the odds on a particular break. Your chief concern should be making your contract. With five fast tricks in the other three suits, and no imminent threat, you are interested in the best chance of obtaining four tricks from the spade suit.

That's easy enough. At rubber bridge, win the king of hearts, cash the queen of spades and duck a spade, conceding a trick in the suit. Win any return and cash the board's top spades, establishing a long spade in dummy as your fulfilling trick. That costs you an overtrick whenever the suit splits 3-2, but you will make your game a whopping 96 percent of the time.

Basinger ready to roll after buying town in Georgia with 'Batman' funds

ATLANTA (AP) — Kim Basinger welcomes you to visit Braselton, the town she bought with the help of "Batman."

Basinger

"It's a perfect place for filming," the actress said after signing papers Wednesday night in Atlanta to close the transaction that gives her most of Braselton, a northeastern Georgoia town of 500 people.

Miss Basinger, whose movies include the blockbuster "Batman," said she hopes to use some of the 1,728 acres for which she paid $20 million to build a "major film studio" and a "major recording studio," perhaps the biggest on the East Coast and maybe even the biggest in the world.

But she also has promised to keep a flavor of the old-time South.

"I have always dreamed that I would play a major role in preserving a small rural Georgia town similar to the town where my grandparents lived," said Miss Basinger, who attended high school in nearby Athens.

"This is God's little 1,800 acres," she said with a chuckle.

It was that kind of thinking that encouraged the Braselton family — which has owned most of the town for more than 110 years — to sell.

"She stated that she would do well for the community and she would do her best to make everybody love her," said H.B. Braselton, co-manager of the family business.

"With her background and publicity, I think (the deal) will put Braselton on the map — make it a tourist attraction," added Harrison W. Braselton.

Miss Basinger now owns the community's downtown, its water and sewer systems, a bank, a post office, a manufacturing plant and various retail properties.

Her plans include a 671-acre industrial park, 510 acres of commercial and retail development and 547 acres for residential use. The industrial park is adjacent to land where Mitsubishi has invested $36 million for new offices and plants.

Henry Edward Braselton, the town's mayor, said he has no intention of leaving the city his father founded in 1878.

"It's an historic day and there's some sadness. You don't do something all your life and change without some sadness," he said. "But we think we did the right thing. We're happy it was Kim who decided to purchase it because she's a local person, being from Athens, and she's real sweet."

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. theater is superficial, says Arthur Miller, who's in London for rehearsals of his play "The Price," which opens next month.

Contrasting unsubsidized theater in the United States with the state-aided British theater, Miller said American theater often has degenerated into a search for titillating ways to fill unsubsidized and expensive seats.

During a break at the Young Vic theater, the 74-year-old playwright told reporters that standards in British theater could fall if subsidies were reduced.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Conservative government favors financing the arts by private business sponsorship.

Miller, known for such works as "Death of a Salesman" and "The Crucible," said unsubsidized American seat prices made an evening at the theater so expensive that general audiences would not go unless a critic said the production was a masterpiece, even if the critic was wrong.

He said that meant audiences in the United States have become a self-serving clique and the plays appear tailored to match the audience.

PIQUA, Ohio (AP) — The guest list includes Fords, Edisons and Firestones, and the man who's catering the party Friday night marking the restoration of Henry Ford's winter home in Florida is excited about it.

Don Smith, a caterer whose previous jobs were always Ohio affairs, also conceded Wednesday that he's a bit nervous. "I guess we call this stage fright," said Smith, owner of the Allisten Manor restaurant and Smith Catering in this western Ohio city.

More than 500 guests are expected at Ford's home — called The Mangoes. The historic, lodgelike residence is owned by the city of Fort Myers.

Also on the guest list is Donald Trump. NBC-TV weatherman Willard Scott of "Today" will serve as master of ceremonies.

Smith said his company landed the job by chance. Suzanne Edwards, who coordinated the restoration of the home, was impressed by Smith's job at her niece's wedding reception last summer. He said his company later made a presentation to the restoration committee.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "It's Anybody's Guess" whether game show host Monty Hall is out to "Beat the Clock" or "Strike It Rich." But apparently "The Sky's the Limit" now that he's bowed out of a new "Let's Make a Deal."

Hall

Hall will not be the host when "Let's Make a Deal," the show he co-created, produced and starred in for 4,300 episodes, returns to the NBC daytime schedule come summer.

"I'm looking for new fields to conquer," said Hall, 64.

Hall, who keeps busy doing commercials and making guest appearances, may also pop up on the show from time to time as a surprise guest.

The new version of the show will originate from the Disney-MGM Studios Theme Park in Orlando, Fla. Hall will remain a half-owner of the new version.

A former sportscaster, Hall has also been the host of such shows as "It's Anybody's Guess," "Beat the Clock," "Strike It Rich" and "The Sky's the Limit."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A woman who claims she was the companion of "Star Trek" star William Shatner has sued him for $1 million in a "palimony" lawsuit.

Vira Montes claims in her Los Angeles Superior Court lawsuit that she was Shatner's "companion, confidante and homemaker" from September 1984 until early this month.

The lawsuit, filed Wednesday by attorney Marvin Mitcheison, said she gave up a career as a medical assistant in exchange for Shatner's promise of financial support.

Mitcheison said Shatner has remained married to Marcel Shatner, his second wife, throughout the relationship with Montes. Mitcheison said the actor spent time with each woman.

The lawsuit says Shatner, 58, had promised to marry her.

Shatner starred as Capt. James T. Kirk in the "Star Trek" television series and subsequent movies. He also had the title role in the series about Los Angeles policeman "T.J. Hooker."

Israelis hope to reap benefits from East European changes

By KARIN LAUB

JERUSALEM (AP) — The anti-communist revolutions in Eastern Europe have yielded a bonanza for Israel in renewed diplomatic ties and the Israelis hope it also means the end of training and weapons support for Arab radicals.

New openings toward Israel by countries that once firmly backed the Arab cause end a two-decade Soviet-bloc boycott of the Jewish state imposed by Moscow after the 1967 Middle East war.

"We are now opening a new page in our relations with Eastern Europe," said Yossi Ben-Aharon, a top aide to Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir.

Foreign Minister Gyula Horn of Hungary, who recently visited Jerusalem, described the changes as "irreversible."

"The old order cannot be restored," the Jerusalem Post quoted him as saying in an interview.

But it remains unclear whether the renewal of ties will translate into long-term diplomatic support for Israel in the Middle East conflict.

Horn indicated Hungary was more interested in flourishing economic ties than the Middle East conflict. However, he said he supported an international Middle East peace conference, a proposal accepted by the Arabs but staunchly rejected by Shamir.

"The Eastern Europe of today is not as pro-Palestinian as before, but if Israel continues its hard line toward the Palestinians, we cannot expect to win the support of these countries," said Moshe Zimmermann, a historian at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem.

Palestinian analysts, meanwhile, acknowledged the Palestine Liberation Organization suffered a diplomatic setback in Eastern Europe because of its association with the overthrown communist dictators. They said the PLO faced an uphill struggle to win the support of the new leadership.

"The Eastern Europe of today is not as pro-Palestinian as before, but if Israel continues its hard line toward the Palestinians, we cannot expect to win the support of these countries."

— Moshe Zimmermann, Hebrew University historian

"The atmosphere is, to a certain extent, hostile to the Palestinians," said Ghassan Katib, a prominent Palestinian Communist and West Bank university lecturer. "We must establish a dialogue with the these new forces."

Anti-Arab sentiment is especially strong in Romania, where Arabs were identified in revolutionary quarters as fighting in the ranks of the hated Securitate secret police who sought to crush the popular uprising against dictator Nicolae Ceausescu.

In the meantime, the new Eastern European leaders are knocking on Israel's door to renew ties cut in 1967. Hungary was first in September, while Poland and Czechoslovakia are expected to follow this spring. Romania never severed ties, although it supported and trained Arab guerrillas.

Israel never had relations with East Germany, but a senior Israeli official said such ties were expected if, as seems likely, the East Germans drop their refusal to accept moral responsibility for the Holocaust.

In light of East Germany's economic problems, Israel would be satisfied with a token payment of reparations, the official said.

Eastern European leaders are mainly driven by the need to rescue their crippled economies, and Israel, a close ally of the United States, is seen as an important mediator.

"They believe Israel can pave the way for improved economic relations with the Western world," said Mark Heller, an analyst at Tel Aviv University's Jaffee Center for Strategic Studies.

But Israel is also seen as an economic partner in its own right. Israeli exports to Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union jumped to $100 million last year, up 70 percent from 1988.

The new Eastern European leaders, whose political survival depends in part on their ability to end food shortages at home, are especially interested in Israel's agricultural know-how.

In December, the government-owned Israeli company Agridev signed a cooperation agreement with Bulgaria under which Israel will provide experts and equipment to run Bulgarian farms. A similar agreement is expected to be signed with Poland.

East meets wild West in form of ETSU students

EAST BERLIN (AP) — A group of students in East Texas Baptist University say they will be bringing back vivid memories of a country in transition and increased appreciation for their own country after heading for home Monday.

The students are winding up a weeklong tour of Berlin in which they also have served as goodwill ambassadors for the East Texas town of Marshall and its annual Fireant Festival.

"I'm going to thank my parents when I get home," said Elizabeth Blakney, a student from Ruston, La. "Now, I understand what they mean when they tell me I should be thankful. It makes me feel bad when I remember times I wanted more or wanted a better car."

Blakney and the other students met East Berliners at the Brandenberg Gate along the Berlin Wall Friday. They handed out a suitcase full of gifts provided by the Marshall Chamber of Commerce. The items included hats, T-shirts, bumper stickers, American flags, key chains and plastic batons that glow through a chemical reaction.

In return, they were given makeshift mementos by the East Germans, including a hand-painted postcard with pieces of the Berlin Wall attached.

"They don't have what we take for granted," Ms. Blakney said. "Some go to bed hungry. We need to help others more."

Texas A&M interim coach John Thornton ...makes debut with win over Rice

Thornton wins debut as Aggies beat Rice

Associated Press

SWC Roundup

COLLEGE STATION — Interim head coach John Thornton got off to a winning start Wednesday night when Lynn Suber scored 22 points to lead Texas A&M past Rice, 89-82, in a Southwest Conference basketball game.

All five Aggies starters were in double figures, led by Tony Milton with 20 points and Darren Rhea with 18. Brent Scott led Rice with 27 points and 13 rebounds.

The victory broke a three-game losing streak for A&M, now 10-10 for the season and 3-3 in SWC action. Rice, which had won four straight conference games, fell to 9-7 and 4-2.

Texas A&M led by as many as nine points in the first half, but Rice pulled to within 45-41 at halftime. Marvin Moore's three-point basket with 14 minutes remaining gave the Owls a 55-54 lead, but Suber and Rhea countered with baskets that put A&M ahead 58-55, and the Aggies never again trailed.

Thornton was named interim coach on Monday after the firing of Shelby Metcalf, who had been the Aggies' head coach for 26½ years.

Several A&M players said they dedicated the game to Metcalf.

"This game was for Shelby. I was playing this game strictly for Shelby. Before the game, we had a little talk, and I told the team, 'Let's take 3 for Shelby," Milton said.

Guard Brooks Thompson said: "We were so emotional. We had a lot of inspiration and a lot to prove to Texas A&M and ourselves. We've become a lot closer the past two days. I just wish Coach Metcalf could have been here for us to come together."

TCU 62, Texas Tech 52

FORT WORTH — Kelvin Crawford scored 15 points as Texas Christian kept Texas Tech winless in the Southwest Conference.

The win pushed the Horned Frogs to 9-8 overall and 3-4 in SWC action. The loss dropped the Red Raiders to 5-12 overall and 0-7 in the league.

Craig Sibley added 14 and Tony Edmond had 11 for TCU.

Reserve Barron Brown led the Red Raiders with 14 points. Will Flemons and Derex Butts added 12 each for the losers.

TCU raced to an 18-8 lead as the Raiders missed 11 shots in a row. But the Frogs squandered the lead and was up by just 26-25 at intermission.

TCU went on a 10-0 scoring run to take a 45-33 lead with 10:11 to play. But Tech raced back with an 11-4 run over the next three minutes to trim the TCU lead to 49-44 with 6:58 to play.

But Edmond converted a three-point play and Sibley and Reggie Smith added buckets to put TCU back up by 12 with under five minutes to play.

Houston 64, SMU

HOUSTON — Houston's Byron Smith scored 19 points and Carl Herrera pulled down 19 rebounds and blocked six shots as the Cougars defeated the Mustangs.

Houston improved to 13-6 overall and 4-3 in the conference, while SMU fell to 6-9 and 1-5.

Herrera had 14 points, including six straight that put the Cougars ahead 50-40 with 8:19 left. SMU pulled to within 50-47 on Vernon Perdue's layup with 5:26 remaining, but the Mustangs failed to score after that. Herrera had four points and two steals in Houston's 14-0 closing streak.

John Colborne led SMU with 11 points followed by 10 points apiece from Perdue and Rod Hampton.

In the first half, SMU was scoreless for more than four minutes as Houston built a 26-18 lead with 4:40 left after Craig Upchurch's fast break dunk.

Upchurch finished with 10 points.

Houston committed 11 first-half turnovers, but still led 30-24 at halftime.

Denver secondary unit confident against 49ers' top receiver corps

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — That blur with the ball, prancing into the end zone, is Jerry Rice. Or is it John Taylor?

Does it really matter?

Not if you play cornerback or safety for the Denver Broncos. Rice might be an All-Pro and the game's most dangerous receiver, but he ranks even with Taylor in the minds of members of Denver's secondary.

"They're fast, quick and strong," cornerback Tyrone Braxton said. "They are great receivers, one as good as the other, as dangerous as the other.

"But it's not an overmatch. I have the heart and that's what counts."

It helps, but as hard as Braxton tries, he'll have a tough time making up for the imbalance he has in facing Rice-Taylor. Tyrone's heart could be as big as Colorado, but can it negate the edge in skill held by San Francisco's receivers?

Nor will Wymon Henderson be any better matched with them at the other corner, despite his protestations.

"I can run with them," claimed Henderson, like Braxton a starter for the first time this year. "But my biggest asset is being able to tackle them. I'm strong at that, where others have missed.

"Something in their style makes them difficult to tackle. Why, I can't answer."

Rice can.

"It's God-given," the most valuable player of last year's Super Bowl said. "But it's something you also have to keep working at.

"I have pride in everything I do, whether it's laying bricks when I was a kid or playing football. So I want to do everything I can as well as I can."

If Rice and Taylor, who was a no-show for Wednesday's news conference, excel Sunday, the Broncos are in serious trouble. Rice (82 catches, 1,483 yards, 18.1 average, 10 touchdowns) and Taylor (60, 1,077, 18.0, 10) have torn apart better sets of cornerbacks than Denver has to offer.

"Most teams have been rolling up a cornerback and trying to get a piece of us at the line," Rice said. "But we've been able to avoid that with success.

"If Denver gives us the deep ball, we'll go for it. If they let us take the underneath areas, we'll take them."

And pay a price for it, according to safeties Steve Atwater and Dennis Smith, who must offer plenty of help to the cornerbacks.

"They're human. We're going to have to put our helmets on their receivers all day," said Atwater, a first-round draft choice last spring who solidified the secondary. "The main thing is to make the tackle. They are going to get some catches; you can't stop everything. We've just got to contain them."

"I try to hit receivers and running backs as hard as I can," Smith said. "We've got to make them pay for making catches, make them think about them. Intimidation is part of my job."

Such talk and such tactics aren't likely to bother Rice or Taylor. Both are used to attempts to rough them up. Beaten defensive backs throughout the league can attest to that.

"As a defensive back, all you know is to hit," Rice said. "The receiver catches the ball and he gets hit.

"You have to let the defensive back know you're not intimidated, which is why John and I are known as good blocking receivers. You have to let them know you're here to play football, not just catch passes. The only opportunity to get them back is to block them. You have to establish yourself."

Rice and Taylor, who caught the winning touchdown pass in last year's Super Bowl, have established themselves far more emphatically than the men who will try to cover them Sunday.

Braxton, a 1987 12th-round draftee from North Dakota State, was a backup safety until earning the left cornerback's job in training camp.

"I knew they would test me," he said, and he was thrown at early, intercepting a pass and returning it for a score on Denver's first defensive play this season, against Kansas City.

Braxton led the Broncos with six interceptions and is considered the team's best cover man.

Henderson signed as an unprotected free agent. He had been a free agent who caught on with Minnesota after playing in the USFL.

He grabbed a vacant spot at right cornerback and held it all year.

"Plan B is a great deal. It was an opportunity to see my true value," Henderson said. "Someone gave me the opportunity to play and now I'm starting because I earned it."

Now he's earned the opportunity to guard Rice-Taylor.

"I'm not about to back away from that challenge," he said. "Speed-wise, I'm comparable. Rice is a very relaxed receiver and, if I'm not exactly in the right position or not looking, I could get hurt by him.

"Taylor used to be an easy guy to jam and throw off. Watching him on film, he's not that way anymore."

To not be Super losers anymore, the Broncos will need to cover all bases, starting with Taylor and Rice.

Big soccer weekend set

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

Tom Esikhati wants his soccer team to polish its skills this weekend.

Eddie Bull just wants a couple of "W's."

Both Midland High coach Esikhati and Midland Lee mentor Bull have busy weekends planned. The MHS Bulldogs host Amarillo Tascosa on Friday and Amarillo High on Saturday at their new field adjacent to Midland Freshman School, while the Lee Rebels host Brownwood on Friday and Amarillo Tascosa on Saturday at Lee.

The Lee-Brownwood match will start at 8 p.m. at the Hogan Park Soccer Complex, but the Rebels will host Tascosa at 12:30 p.m. on their new field inside the Lee running track.

The two local teams open District 3 play by facing each other Tuesday at Midland Freshman.

MHS, 2-1, opened its season by placing second in the prestigious North Dallas Tournament of Champions last weekend. The Bulldogs knocked off North Dallas and College Station A&M Consolidated en route to a 1-0 loss at the hands of highly-regarded Dallas Hillcrest.

Lee, 1-0, beat Brownwood in its lidlifter. Bull said everything the Rebels do this weekend will be geared to getting ready for Midland High.

"We're getting ready to play on Tuesday," he said. "There's not a whole lot of scouting to do. My team just has to do the best it can."

Jordan Reed scored both Rebel goals at Brownwood, but Bull was even more pleased with the Rebels' mental outlook in the opening match.

"The kids wanted to win," he said.

While Lee is injury-free going into the weekend, Midland High will be without starting midfielder Joseph Martinez, who is out for two weeks with a bruised knee and possible cartilage damage.

Jason Farr and Jeff Lanning will try to pick up the slack left by Martinez' loss. Martinez played either midfield or halfback, depending on the alignment that the Bulldogs are using at the time.

Esikhati said the weekend will be an opportunity for the Bulldogs to fine-tune their attack and work on some of the finer points of the game.

"We will slow down our tempo and polish our skills," Esikhati said. "We want to work on our attacking, instead of run, run, run all of the time like we did last year."

Chris Lanning, Mario Rodriguez, Shane Barden and James Woolsey all scored once for the Bulldogs in the Dallas Tournament.

Elsewhere in District 3 this weekend, both Abilene High and Abilene Cooper will host a tournament Friday and Saturday; Odessa Permian hosts Amarillo High on Friday before traveling to Stephenville on Saturday, along with Odessa High; and San Angelo travels to A&M Consolidated.

Fernandez has no fear of Graf

Australian Open

MELBOURNE, Australia (AP) — Most women have the usual two chances of beating Steffi Graf — slim and none — but American teen-ager Mary Joe Fernandez gives herself a slightly better shot.

Fernandez, too young to know fear, says she can beat Graf in the finals of the Australian Open if she can stop the two-time defending champion from dictating the style of the match.

That is no easy task, as Graf's last 47 opponents found out, but the West German is not at the top of her game right now after taking six weeks off and pushing herself in practice before coming here.

Graf looked vulnerable today as she struggled to beat Czech Helena Sukova 6-3, 3-6, 6-4 in the semifinals, just after Fernandez skipped to 6-2, 6-1 victory over West German Claudia Porwik.

"I'm far away from playing good tennis," said Graf, who double-faulted four times in the first set and hit 48 errors in the match.

"I just don't have the right timing and the right feeling for it," she said. "It's good to know I won that match even though I didn't play well."

Even before Graf's near upset, the calm and confident 18-year-old Fernandez, of Miami, Fla., gave herself a chance.

"I will have to play aggressively against her," said Fernandez, who reached the semifinals of the French Open last year but will be playing Saturday in her first Grand Slam final.

"I can't let her dictate the points," Fernandez said. "If she dictates, she usually wins, so I am going to have to put a lot of pressure on her and try to attack her and, hopefully, not make too many unforced errors, not give her too many free points, and serve well. I am going to have to play very well."

Graf has beaten Fernandez in their three previous matches, on hard courts and clay in 1986 and on the grass at Wimbledon in 1988. But Fernandez, two years younger than Graf, is stronger and more versatile now.

Fernandez prowled the baseline like a young Chris Evert and ripped passing shots by the net-charging Porwik.

Fernandez, with a white sweat band around her forehead and her long, brown hair tied in a pony tail, raced through the match in 67 minutes.

She said she knew Porwik, 21, was nervous and took advantage of it.

"You could tell after the first couple of games, she was shaking her racket and hitting the ball up," Fernandez said. "Once you see that, you have to take advantage of it. I tried to keep on top of her the whole match."

"I was a little bit nervous playing in a semifinal for the first time in my life," Porwik admitted. "But really I think I was just too tired. I was physically tired and mentally tired and made too many mistakes."

Porwik made 49 errors, 20 more than Fernandez.

MHS, Lee host large high school swimming invasion

By JIMMY PATTERSON
Assistant Sports Editor

The Midland Lee girls and Midland High boys swim teams are favorites to finish in the upper echelon of this weekend's Midland Invitational Swim Meet in their respective divisions.

The largest-ever high school swim meet in Midland will be held Friday and Saturday with events scheduled for both the Lee High pool and City of Midland Swim Center on North A Street.

Between 450 and 500 swimmers from Region I will take part in the Midland Invitational. Twenty teams from throughout West Texas, and even squads from Carlsbad, N.M., and New Mexico Military Institute Prep School will make the journey to Midland.

Diving events and swimming preliminaries will be held Friday. Girls' diving begins at 8:30 a.m. at the Lee pool; boy's diving will follow.

Swimming prelims begin at 1 p.m. Friday at the COM Center with swimming finals set for 10 a.m. Saturday, and concluding at approximately 1 p.m.

Midland High's tandem of Matt Seay, Matt Houston and Moss Fennell will lead the Bulldog boys in swimming categories, while the Lee girls have the depth and chart record necessary to figure in the top three in several events including team standings, according to Lee head coach John Bettina.

"We've always been at or near the top as far as dual meets and invitationals this year," Bettina noted. "Our girls team should finish within the top three. A lack of depth may keep the boys back in the pack, but still in the Top 15."

The Lee girls are led by Stephanie Reed, who hasn't been beaten in the 200 or 500 freestyle events in each of her dual meets and invitational events this season.

Bettina will also look to other top swimmers such as Mimi Morison (100 butterfly), Heili Whitlow (100 backstroke), Kerrie Stiles (50 freestyle), Ginger Brininstool (200 IM, 100 breaststroke), Adinda Kelder (100, 200 freestyle) and Tana Moore (50, 100 freestyle).

Reed, Morrison, Whitlow, Stile and Brininstool have made the finals at each event they have participated in this season. Morrison has made it to the Top 3 at each meet.

Lee's three girl divers — Melissa Gibson, Carrie Forsythe and Dominque Blanton — have all finished in the Top 3 all season and are considered favorites in that event.

"Teamwise, I would think we'd be as close to the favorite as anyone," Bettina said.

As for the boys, depth has been a problem this season. Two, though, "stand above the rest," according to Bettina.

Stacy Davis and Mike Dougherty are the only two lettermen who return from last season.

Davis's strong suits are the 200 IM and 100 freestyle while Dougherty has excelled in the 100 fly and 100 free.

Bettina considers San Angelo Central to be a strong favorite in the boys division.

Midland High coach Larry Ridge said of his boys' team: "I figure we'll finish in the top two or three in seven of the 11 events. Our biggest drawback is that we don't have the depth San Angelo has. None of their kids are quite the quality as our boys, it's just they have so many of them."

Seay, Houston and Fennell are all undefeated against district competition.

Seay will go in as a favorite in both the 200 IM and 100 breaststroke. Houston is a good choice in the 100 butterfly and 100 backstroke, and Fennell will be favored in both the 200 and 500 freestyle.

Those three will join together with Rob Neatherlin in the 200 medley relay, an event in which the team has been timed four seconds better than any of the competition in the invitational.

Ridge, a former prep swimmer and head coach at Permian, will also be counting on high finishes from other boys' team members such as Rhett McKeller (100 backstroke, free relay), Steve Becker (500 freestyle), Brannon Durham (50 freestyle), and Jason Thompson (200, 500 free).

McKellar, Durham, Becker and Neatherlin will also join forces as a threat in the 400 freestyle relay.

The Lady Bulldog swimmers will look for Carrie Henry to rack up some points for the team. Henry is undefeated in the 50 and 100 freestyle events in all invitationals this season with the exception of the Texas Interscholastic Swimming Coaches Association meet held in San Antonio late last year.

Other MHS girls who will figure in the final outcome include: Lori Stephens (50 free, 100 breaststroke), Heather Norton (100 butterfly), Linda Cartwright (distance events), Heather Reed (backstroke) and Alexis Beck (100 butterfly).

Henry, Stephens, Reed and Beck will also combine for the medley relay.

Ridge also looks for Robin Koiro — MHS's one diver of note — to do well in that event.

Riley nabs 500th win

Associated Press

NBA

Pat Riley had plenty of people to thank for his unprecedented run of coaching success — all the players he's had on the Los Angeles Lakers.

"The team is committed to many things; all of those things are about winning," Riley said Wednesday night after the Lakers beat Indiana 120-111 for his 500th coaching victory. "I will say that about my 300th, then 400th, 500th and even 600th — it's a great team."

Riley became the 13th coach in NBA history to win 500 games, and he did it much faster than any other coach — in 684 games. Don Nelson of Golden State achieved his 500th win in 817 games.

The defeat of the Pacers also assured Riley of his eighth All-Star coaching berth in nine years.

"I can't believe I've coached 700 or 800 games," Riley said. "Life flies. It seems like just yesterday, but versatility and depth are winning it for us."

Magic Johnson led the Lakers with 32 points, including 15 in the fourth period and 26 in the second half.

"When a game is close, especially when you're on the road, there comes a point when I say, 'Hey, I've got to stretch it out now. I've got to take us from a two- or three-point lead to six or nine,' " Johnson said. "That's when I decided. I looked up and said, 'It's about that time.' "

Spurs 106, Clippers 98

San Antonio's victory over Los Angeles tied its franchise record of 17 consecutive wins at home.

Terry Cummings scored 31 points and David Robinson added 24 points, 15 rebounds and seven blocked shots for the Spurs, who also won 17 straight at HemisFair Arena during the 1980-81 season. They also climbed back into a tie with Utah for the Midwest Division lead.

Danny Manning paced the Clippers with a career-high 31 points and Charles Smith and Ken Norman added 24 apiece.

San Antonio led 95-90 with 4:38 left in the game, then scored the next 11 points to put the game out of reach. Robinson scored four points and Cummings three during the spurt.

Kings 129, Warriors 99

Sacramento, which lost 27 of its first 36 games, routed Golden State for its second straight victory by 30 or more points.

Vinny Del Negro scored a season-high 27 points, Wayman Tisdale had 24 and Kenny Smith for the Kings, who beat Utah 136-104 on Monday night.

Bucks 119, SuperSonics 112

Milwaukee snapped Seattle's five-game home winning streak behind the scoring of Jack Sikma and Ricky Pierce.

Sikma scored nine of his 28 points in the fourth quarter and Pierce added 10 of his 27 in the final period, including a clinching basket with 27 seconds left.

Xavier McDaniel led all scorers with 32 points and Threatt finished with 27.

Celtics 116, Heat 95

Boston won for the fourth time in five games, with Robert Parish and Kevin McHale scoring nine points each in the decisive second period against Miami.

Parish scored 23 points and Larry Bird 20 for Boston. Glen Rice had 22 points and Sherman Douglas 18 for the Heat, who lost for the fourth consecutive time.

76ers 125, Magic 103

Philadelphia overwhelmed Orlando for its sixth consecutive victory behind Charles Barkley's 27 points, 16 rebounds and 11-for-13 shooting.

Otis Smith had 33 points and 16 rebounds, both career highs, for the Magic, who led 8-7 before the 76ers, who lost at Orlando on Nov. 18, scored 13 straight points to start a 25-8 run that gave them a 32-16 lead with 4:14 left in the first quarter.

Hawks 103, Cavaliers 86

Atlanta handed Cleveland its fifth straight loss, taking a 31-12 lead after one quarter as John Long scored 10 of his 19 points in the period.

The Hawks, winning their second straight after a six-game losing streak, never trailed after building a 6-0 lead on two baskets by Long and another by Alexander Volkov, who scored eight points in the runaway first quarter.

The Cavs, who got 20 points from Mark Price, got no closer than 10 after the first seven minutes.

Georgia spills LSU in OT

Associated Press

Top 25 Basketball

Chris Jackson enjoyed another pretty fair game. But from the free throw line, No. 16 LSU was pretty foul.

The Tigers missed the front end of 10 straight 1-and-1s late in the game and, despite Jackson's 45 points, lost to Georgia 94-92 in overtime Wednesday night.

"We knew that free throw shooting was our Achilles heel," LSU coach Dale Brown said. "And last year, we were the best free throw shooting team in the league and No. 4 in the nation. Maybe they should get their tails out there a little early and practice shooting free throws."

LSU failed at the foul line in the last seven minutes of regulation and the first three minutes of overtime. The Tigers made just 20 of 36 free throws and Shaquille O'Neal missed eight of 13.

Georgia, meanwhile, saved itself at the foul line. The Bulldogs sent the game into overtime at 79-79 when Rod Cole made three free throws with four seconds left. Cole was fouled on a 3-point shot that missed and, under Southeastern Conference rules, was given three tries.

Georgia is 11-5 overall and 4-3 in the SEC. LSU is 12-4 and 4-3.

Jackson hit 15 of 29 from the field, including 6-for-12 from 3-point range, and hit nine of 11 at the foul line. He missed a 48-foot toss at the end of regulation and a pair of 3-point tries in the last 20 seconds of overtime.

"We did a great job defensing Jackson," Georgia coach Hugh Durham joked. "We held him to 45 points in 45 minutes."

No. 8 Duke 85, North Carolina State 82

Phil Henderson scored 25 points and Duke made its first three shots in overtime to win at home.

The Blue Devils, the nation's second-best free throw shooting team, missed two foul shots in the final 30 seconds. But North Carolina State's Chris Corchiani missed two 3-pointers, including one at the buzzer that would have forced a second overtime.

Duke (15-3, 5-1 in the Atlantic Coast Conference) tied it at 74 with 17 seconds left in regulation on Christian Laettner's tip-in. The Wolfpack (13-5, 2-3) rallied from an 11-point deficit in the second half but never led in overtime.

No. 9 Oklahoma 107, Iowa State 96

William Davis had 24 points and 14 rebounds as Oklahoma pulled away from Iowa State. The Sooners ended their first two-game losing streak in two seasons and won their 39th straight at home.

Oklahoma led 91-90 before Damon Patterson and former Midland College star Skeeter Henry each scored four points during a 10-3 run. Iowa State got no closer than three points after that.

Henry scored 18 points for Oklahoma (13-2, 2-1 in the Big Eight). Kirk Baker had 18 points and 15 rebounds and Victor Alexander scored 20 points for the Cyclones (6-9, 1-2).

Michigan State 75, No. 12 Indiana 57

Kirk Manns returned home and scored 25 points as Michigan State became the winningest visiting team ever at Indiana.

Manns, who won an Indiana high school scoring championship as a senior, helped the Spartans win for the sixth time at Assembly Hall. The Hoosiers are 229-31 overall and 134-25 in the building.

Michigan State (15-3, 4-1) fell behind 8-0 but led 35-27 at halftime. Manns shot 10-for-14 from the field and the Spartans finished at 56 percent.

Eric Anderson scored 12 points for Indiana (13-3, 3-3), which shot 44 percent from the field and was 8-for-18 from the foul line.

No. 15 St. John's 83, Providence 75

Boo Harvey made 10 of 12 foul shots in the final five minutes and St. John's won at Providence. The Redmen (17-3, 6-1) broke a first-place tie with Georgetown in the Big East.

Jayson Williams scored 23 points and Harvey had 18 for St. John's. Carlton Screen scored 18 points, all in the second half, for the Friars (11-5, 4-3).

No. 20 Connecticut 99, Central Connecticut 77

Connecticut won its final game at the 35-year-old Field House as Chris Smith scored 19 points, including five 3-pointers.

Four years ago, the leaky-roofed Field House was declared unfit for Big East play, forcing the Huskies to the Hartford Civic Center for conference games. Connecticut will open its $28.5 million, 8,100-seat Gampel Pavilion in Storrs on Saturday against St. John's.

Cy-Fair back in first place

KLEIN, Texas (AP) — The Cy-Fair Bobcats moved back into first place in District 16-5A after the district's executive committee reversed its decision that cost the team five victories because of a player who had been ruled ineligible.

The committee had voted last week to order Cy-Fair to forfeit five basketball games and had declared that James Blaine, a reserve postman had transferred from Jersey Village to Cy-Fair for athletic purposes.

At Wednesday's committee meeting, called at the request of Bailey Marshall, director of the University Interscholastic League, committee members voted to suspend Blaine for a year, but did not vote to force Cy-Fair to forfeit the five games.

The action moved Cy-Fair from 2-5 in district play to the district lead with a 7-0 record and virtually assured the Bobcats one of two playoff berths for the district. Bryan High School moved from 6-1 to 5-2 and in second place.

Marshall had requested the second meeting because Bryan was the school that had brought up the question about Blaine's transfer. He said that constituted a protest, and under the rules of the UIL, a team that files a protest in ineligible to vote. Bryan voted during the first meeting.

Bryan principal Jerry Ellis said he will try to talk to Marshall today.

Players still skeptical after baseball talks

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — They came from all around Florida, 37 baseball players, and listened to what the owners had to say. Five hours later, they left no less skeptical than when they had arrived.

"We asked a lot of questions," Toronto's John Cerutti said. "The questions we're asking are, 'What's in it for us?' We're satisfied with the present system."

The Major League Baseball Players Association expressed more doubts about management's revenue-sharing and pay-for-performance proposals during Wednesday's bargaining session. The talks continue today and then recess until next Wednesday at New York.

Donald Fehr, executive director of the union, will brief players on the status of negotiations tonight. Owners have threatened not open spring training camps as scheduled on Feb. 15 and have called a Feb. 9 meeting in Chicago to weigh their options.

"They asked tough questions and I would expect them to ask tough questions," Chuck O'Connor, management's chief negotiator, said. O'Connor repeated that the threat not to open training camps was "very serious."

"It was interesting," Frank Viola of the New York Mets, the 1988 American League Cy Young Award winner, said. "Not much happened, though."

After the bargaining session, Fehr repeated that he would tell players not to work out on their own if clubs locked them out.

Among the players attending Wednesday's session were Orel Hershiser of the Los Angeles Dodgers, Gary Gaetti of the Minnesota Twins, Danny Jackson of the Cincinnati Reds and Paul Molitor of the Milwaukee Brewers.

Mets co-owner Fred Wilpon also sat in as did general managers Harry Dalton of Milwaukee and Frank Cashen of the Mets. Cashen explained the pay-for-performance plan, which would tie salary scales to statistics for players with less than six years in the majors.

"The whole idea of being able to assess a player's worth just by statistics is ridiculous," said Cerutti, a four-year veteran who made $417,000 last year. "It doesn't take into account defensive skills, bunting, moving guys over."

O'Connor suggested that perhaps players currently in the majors could remain under the present system of salary arbitration if the union agreed to bring new players under the salary scale plan and the revenue-sharing proposal, which would allot 48 percent of earnings for player salaries. Fehr said he wasn't interested in a two-tiered wage structure and that it hadn't worked in other industries.

O'Connor, who said that only the "central piece" of an agreement be reached before management ordered camps open, said he still thought an agreement could be reached by mid-February. He said he understood players' reluctance to the plan.

"We're asking for change," O'Connor said. "Any time somebody's asking for change ... there's a reaction that resists change naturally."

Braves obtain Presley from Seattle

Associated Press

The Atlanta Braves have traded pitching and promise for power.

The Braves acquired third baseman Jim Presley, a one-time American League All-Star, from the Seattle Mariners on Wednesday in exchange for pitcher Gary Eave and minor league third baseman Ken Pennington.

In 1986, when he hit 27 homers and drove in 107 runs, Presley was named to the AL All-Star squad. However, the 28-year-old Presley hit only .236 with 12 homers and 41 RBIs last season. He played in only 117 games due to a back injury.

In addition, three players who had filed for salary arbitration reached agreement with their respective teams.

Pittsburgh Pirates first baseman Sid Bream, who was offered $510,000 and filed for $530,000, reportedly split the difference and signed for $520,000. He made $510,000 last year when he missed all but 19 games because of knee problems.

Relief pitcher Terry Leach signed a one-year contract with the Kansas City Royals. Leach, a 35-year-old right-hander who was 5-6 with a 4.15 ERA last season, had asked for $575,000 while the Royals offered $450,000. He reportedly signed for $500,000.

Catcher Scott Bradley, 29, who hit .274 in 103 games with Seattle, agreed to a one-year contract for $460,000. He had asked for $520,000 and was offered $400,000.

"Presley is completely healthy now," Braves general manager Bobby Cox said. "He's a tough player, a gamer, who'll be good to have in the clubhouse. He should be the guy to supply us with the power we need. We'll keep an open mind about positions and will continue to try to make further deals."

Presley, the Mariners' fourth-round selection in the June 1979 draft, has a .250 career average with 115 homers and 418 RBIs in 5½ seasons. He averaged 26 home runs and 93 RBI per season from 1985 through 1987.

Oilers, Glanville still at it

HOUSTON (AP) — Friction has developed between Oilers owner K.S. "Bud" Adams and former head coach Jerry Glanville over the transfer of several assistant coaches to Atlanta where Glanville now coaches the Falcons.

Adams warned Glanville in a Jan. 22 letter that he will file tampering charges if Glanville tries to hire any more members of the Oiler coaching staff, according to published and broadcast reports.

But Glanville said he is not frightened by the letter.

"It doesn't bother me. Nothing from there can surprise me," Glanville said from Atlanta late Wednesday.

Glanville already has hired three of his four former assistants: Wide receiver coach Ray Sherman, defensive line coach Doug Shively and linebacker coach Floyd Reese.

Adams told Glanville he has warned other assistant coaches against speaking with their former supervisor.

"Currently, there are three of your former assistants who have been advised in writing not to entertain or solicit offers from other clubs," Adams said in the letter. "These assistants are (quarterback coach) Kevin Gilbride, (special teams coach) Richard Smith and (strength and rehabilitation coach) Steve Watterson.

"I have received unconfirmed information that one or more of these assistant coaches have received direct or indirect offers to come to work for you in Atlanta," Adams wrote. "They have not been given permission to leave and you are reminded that you are prohibited from discussing employment with them. If I learn that what I have heard is true, I will be disappointed and will refer the matter to the commissioner."

Glanville told reporters he had tried to call Adams Wednesday, but only was able to talk to the owner's secretary.

"Anything I did was totally legal and he knows that," Glanville said. "I would have told him dates and times everything happened, if I had talked to him."

Copies of the letter were sent to Rankin Smith Sr. and Rankin Smith Jr., the owners of the Atlanta Falcons, to NFL Commissioner Paul Tagliabue and the three Oiler assistants, all of whom have a year remaining on their contracts.

More jobs headed for Midland

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

A major new business will be moving to Midland and will employ about 50 initially, according to Joanne Langston, president of the Midland Chamber of Commerce.

Half of the new employees are expected to be office personnel and the remainder field or plant personnel.

Langston would not reveal who the employer is, the nature of the business or how many employees will be involved ultimately. She said details about the new business would be released Friday at a 9:30 a.m. press conference.

Reports of two new businesses coming to Midland, each employing 50 initially and later increasing the number of employees, has been circulated for several weeks.

The positive news of a new employer in town offsets news of Midland's latest economic indicators which were mostly in the negative column in December compared to a year ago.

According to numbers released by the Midland Chamber of Commerce Wednesday at its regular monthly board meeting, postal and sales tax receipts, airline boarding, employment, bank deposits and residential permits were all down, as were natural gas connections. The only positive indicators were water and telephone connections which were up and new commercial permits and valuations.

The Midland real estate market, however, showed strong gains. Midland is no longer a buyer's market, according to Midland Board of Realtors President Roy Proctor.

"There is finally parity in the market," said Proctor, reporting to the Midland Chamber of Commerce. "There are about 900 homes in the inventory of homes for sale, and about the same number looking to buy." The 900 home in inventory is the lowest since 1982, according to Proctor and has caused prices to increase.

He noted that the sales price of homes had also increased. In 1988 the average value of a residential sale was $72,909. In 1989, the value had increased to $73,560.

Proctor said Midland Realtors were looking forward to a good first quarter. He also noted that the Board of Realtors would undertake a major remodeling of its offices on West Wall this year.

Construction was the keynote of other reports to the Chamber.

Midland Memorial Hospital Administrator, Ray Branson said the hospital would have to look at new construction within the next 12 months, and MISD Superintent Joseph Baressi said the school district was still studying sites for a new junior high school and would have a Overseas interest rates hurts U.S.

By LOUIS UCHITELLE
N.Y. Times News Service

Interest rates in Japan and West Germany are suddenly surging and in the process dragging up U.S. rates at what most economists say is just the wrong moment for the nation's fragile economy.

Rarely has the global economy forced itself so vividly on the United States.

West Germany and Japan, currently the engines propelling the world's economic growth, are trying to curb inflation. But their chief tool, higher long-term interest rates, is spilling over into the weak U.S. economy and that could be a hammer blow, further slowing growth.

"This is a terribly inconvenient time to have rates pulled up," said Lawrence Veit, economist at Brown Brothers Harriman & Co.

Experts say that the huge federal deficit has left the U.S. economy hostage to a continual flow of investment funds from abroad.

In today's international economy, with so few legal or practical obstacles to the flow of money across national boundaries, borrowers in this country must match the higher interest rates being offered abroad. Otherwise, savers throughout the world will pursue higher returns by buying the bonds being issued in Japan and West Germany.

Although the market's spontaneous forces, not the Federal Reserve, have pushed up long-term rates, the phenomenon nevertheless puts the central bank on the spot. The Federal Reserve could stand pat, allowing the market flows to take their course. But the higher interest rates could well nudge the vulnerable U.S. economy into recession.

Higher interest rates spread throughout the money markets.

In the United States, mortgage rates have rebounded in the last month, just when the housing industry is weak. Many corporations, already heavily in debt, are facing higher monthly payments, which would further cut into their profits. Car loans might be pushed up as the

RTC defends moves on low-income housing

WASHINGTON (AP) — An official of the agency overseeing the savings and loan bailout today defended it against complaints from Democrats that it is dragging its feet in establishing a program to provide housing to poor people.

"The (Resolution Trust Corp.) is moving forward to quickly develop a program," said Stephen S. Allen, director of the agency's low income housing.

However, Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez, D-Texas, chairman of the House Banking Committee, said earlier testimony from Allen's superiors "did not demonstrate a commitment to making lower income occupancy of these properties a reality."

Allen acknowledged that only 700 properties are being offered initially in the low-income housing program, out of a total of more than 26,000 residential properties.

However, he said about 10,000 properties eventually will be moved into the low-income program, with most of them, 5,174, in Texas; 966 in Oklahoma; and 881 in Louisiana.

Republicans on the panel said the housing program could increase the cost of the bailout to taxpayers. The properties should be sold as soon as possible to reduce carrying costs, they said.

Meanwhile, in testimony Wednesday, a top regulator edged closer to admitting what private analysts have been saying for months — that President Bush's $50 billion savings and loan bailout doesn't provide enough money.

L. William Seidman, nicknamed the bailout czar for his dual role as chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. and the RTC, stopped just short of acknowledging taxpayers need to make a second installment on the cleanup.

"Someone will be back to ask for more money one of these days. I think that's a high probability," Seidman said.

Panel members reacted with dismay, but Seidman assured them the crunch would likely come after congressional elections this November.

Seidman resisted several efforts to pin him down to a new loss estimate, but figures in his testimony suggest losses in the range of $74 billion to $82 billion.

As of Jan. 16, the RTC had seized 333 institutions with assets totaling $136 billion. The loss on those is about $42 billion, he said. The remaining $8 billion would be enough to cover the losses at additional S&Ls with assets of $40 billion.

However, the Treasury Department's Office of Thrift Supervision is predicting the failure of another 225 to 295 institutions, with assets of $160 billion to $200 billion. And, Seidman said his agency found "no reason to question" that estimate.

Japanese company plans Texas complex

DALLAS (AP) - Matsushita, Japan's largest electronic company, will build a massive manufacturing complex in the Fort Worth area, a Dallas newspaper reported today.

The Dallas Morning News, in a copyright story, today quoted industry and trade sources as saying Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. has narrowed its choices to sites in Tarrant or Denton counties.

Both sites are near Fort Worth's newly opened Alliance Airport, real estate industry sources said.

Nippon Keizai Sanyo Shimbun, a Japanese industrial newspaper, reported that the maker of Panasonic electronic products will choose one of three sites "within the city of Fort Worth."

"It's probably in your area," Mike Kitadeya, a spokesman for a U.S. subsidiary, Matsushita Electric Corp. of America, said late Wednesday.

Sources in Texas said sites in Dallas County are out of consideration. Earlier reports had indicated Matsushita would build a manufacturing complex in the Dallas area.

The Japanese company is negotiating to buy 1,000 acres of land on which to build a 500,000 square-foot facility in a campus-like building, sources said. The sources added that the likely site is probably between Alliance Airport and the U.S. Treasury Department currency plant in north Fort Worth.

Another site under consideration, sources say, is near the intersection of Interstate 35W and Texas 114 in Denton County.

Kitadeya said the complex would house "several factory operations" and would include manufacturing facilities and space to house "some overall administrative functions."

Environmental costs cut Chevron, Exxon profits

By THOMAS C. HAYES
N.Y. Times News Service

DALLAS — Two giant oil companies, Chevron Corp. and Exxon Corp., reported Wednesday that they had reduced their profits by a total of more than $1.7 billion in the fourth quarter, in large part to deal with their environmental problems.

In recent days, many oil companies have for the first time reported in detail the costs they incurred in 1989 in attempts to minimize potential damage to the environment.

These costs included cleanups from spills, anti-pollution steps at refineries and other improvements in production and transportation activities that were intended to make them safer.

These decisions to disclose such costs are seen as the industry's attempt, in the wake of the Exxon Valdez oil spill in Alaska last March, to convince a skeptical public of its efforts to protect the environment.

The Alaskan spill, the worst in the nation's history, resulted in a political backlash last year that some government officials and industry analysts said set back the industry's efforts to develop oil reserves in coastal and offshore regions.

In reporting quarterly and yearly earnings, Chevron said it had lost $663 million in the fourth quarter, compared with a profit of 51 cents a share in the comparable period a year earlier. For the year, Chevron's net income was $251 million, a drop of 85.8 percent.

Exxon reported that fourth-quarter net income fell 45 percent, to $745 million, or 61 cents a share. For the year, Exxon earned $3.81 billion, or $2.98 a share, down 27.6 percent.

Chevron, the nation's fourth-largest energy company, said it would reduce the value of its investment at the giant Point Arguello field, off the California coast near Santa Barbara, by $445 million, as part of $1.2 billion in charges against net income

Oil prices near $22

From Staff and Wire Reports

Oil prices have turned higher after declining the past three days.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, March contracts for West Texas Intermediate were up 36 cents to $21.95 in midmorning trading. The contract slipped a penny to close at $21.59 Wednesday after falling 17 cents Tuesday.

Prices headed lower at the opening bell in response to an industry report that showed an increase in oil inventories.

Among refined products traded on the New York Merc, regular unleaded gasoline for February delivery lost 0.24 cent to 59.38 cents a gallon, while other contract months were mixed.

February heating oil gained 0.29 cent to close at 59.57 cents a gallon while the contract for March delivery rose 0.29 cent to 57.36 cents a gallon. Contracts for later delivery declined.

The report by the American Petroleum Institute, a trade association representing mainly large oil refineries, said that heating oil and gasoline stocks rose last week, while crude oil supplies declined.

Prices rebounded in the afternoon as large refiners moved into the market.

Larry Lawrence, manager of options and technical analysis for Elders Futures Inc., said refiners who hedged against declining refinery margins by buying crude and selling products did the reverse — bought products and sold crude.

"That spurred buying in products and firmed us," Lawrence said.

Dollar mixed, gold steady

LONDON (AP) — The dollar was mixed in quiet trading in Europe this morning, supported by Wall Street's recovery at the end of the previous day's session.

Gold was steady at lower levels after a roller-coaster day of trading on Wednesday.

Currency trading was hectic Wednesday after Dow Jones industrial average fell 60 points at the start of trading in New York, but the index regained all but 11 points by the end of the day.

In Tokyo, the dollar closed at 145.30 yen, down 0.50 yen from Wednesday's close of 145.80 yen. Later in London, the dollar traded at 145.13 yen.

Mitsuhiko Kinugasa, a trader with Daiwa Bank, said speculative investors remained on the sidelines due to their concerns over the New York stock market's performance.

The British pound traded at $1.6545, down from $1.6555 late Wednesday.

London's gold dealers fixed a recommended price of $417.15 a troy ounce this morning, down from $421.50 bid late Wednesday.

In Zurich, the bid price was $417.00, from $420.00 bid late Wednesday.

The Hong Kong gold market was closed today for the Lunar New Year holidays. Trading will resume on Jan. 30.

Silver in London to a bid price of $5.23 a troy ounce, from Wednesday's $5.34.

Stocks fall in heavy trading

NEW YORK (AP) — Interest rate worries took a further toll on the stock market Wednesday, sending prices broadly lower in heavy trading despite bargain hunting and program buying.

The Dow Jones industrial average plunged more than 60 points at the opening after traders learned overnight of a sharp decline in the Tokyo stock market — which itself has been unsettled by rising interest rates in Japan.

The Dow Jones average recovered ground as the session wore on and bargain hunters and program traders moved into the market. But the index still closed with a deficit of 10.82, ending at 2,604.50 and extending its slide over the last three weeks to more than 205 points.

Declining issues swamped advancers in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchangelisted stocks, with 384 rising, 1,207 falling and 399 unchanged. In the early going, losers held a 16 to 1 advantage over gainers.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 207.83 million shares, up from 179.30 million in the previous session.

Interest rates remained the stock market's nemesis, analysts said.

The drop in the Japanese market intensified fears that rates would have to climb further in this country to stay competitive in the international marketplace, the analysts said.

Also troubling Wall Street was the disappointing sale by the government Tuesday of 40-year bonds to finance a rescue plan for troubled thrift institutions. The auction sent market interest rates higher and made investors uneasy about the Treasury's quarterly refunding sale scheduled for next month.

Meanwhile, as the outlook for interest rates worsened, investors were also facing the possibility that the recent slowdown of the economy might deepen in the months ahead, and some analysts expected further selling.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Existing home sales fall 4.6 percent

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sales of existing homes edged down in December, bringing the 1989 total to 3.43 million units, or 4.6 percent less than the previous year's sales, a real estate trade group reported today.

The National Association of Realtors said December sales totaled a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 3.55 million units, down 1.1 percent from 3.59 million units in November.

The Realtors attributed part of the last month's decline to severe weather conditions in the Northeast and South and to a large drop in the West from an extremely high November level.

For the year, sales were down from the 1988 total of 3.59 million units which the Realtors said was the strongest year of the decade.

The national median price for existing single-family homes in December was $92,500, 4.3 percent above the December 1988 median of $88,700. The median price for the year was $93,100, also up 4.3 percent from 1988.

Employment costs rose 5 percent in 1989

WASHINGTON (AP) — Employment costs rose 5 percent last year, largely because of rising health insurance costs, while wage and salary gains lagged behind inflation, the government reported today.

The Labor Department said its Employment Cost Index, considered one of the best gauges of inflationary wage pressures, showed an increase equal to the 5 percent rise in 1988 in wages, salaries and benefits paid to American workers.

Benefit costs jumped 6.1 percent in 1989, compared to a 6.8 percent gain in 1988. But the 1988 increase was attributed in part to a 5 percent increase in the employer's Social Security tax rate — a rate that stayed steady in 1989. Escalating health insurance costs last year kept the cost of benefits high even without a change in the Social Security tax, the Labor Department said.

Auto sales up 3.7 percent in mid-January

DETROIT (AP) — Car and truck sales in mid-January rose 3.7 percent compared with last year, mainly because of strong, incentive-inspired light truck buying, automakers said.

The eight major U.S. automakers said Wednesday they sold cars and trucks at an average daily rate of 29,877 from Jan. 11-20, compared with 28,819 last year. Car sales were even and truck sales shot up 9.4 percent.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Fund purchase plus dividends equal real cost

By BILL DOYLE

Q. My wife and I cannot agree on whether we have a gain or a loss on an investment. We bought 221 shares of a mutual fund for $5,000 three years ago. Since then, we have reinvested dividends totaling $2,168 to buy 118 more shares. The 329 shares we own now are worth $6,554.

One of us says the total amount we invested was $7,168 and, if we redeem the shares now for $6,554, we would have a $614 capital loss. The other argues that, because only $5,000 of outside money was invested, the redemption of the 329 shares for $6,554 would achieve a $1,554 capital gain.

What do you say?

A. The first person is correct. You have a $614 "unrealized" capital loss. You won't "realize" that loss, unless you sell. Nonetheless, it's a real loss because the value of your shares is $614 less than the money you have invested.

You put $7,168 into that investment. That includes the $5,000 you call "outside money," which came from your bank account, wallet or purse, and the $2,168 of reinvested dividends. All $7,168 was your money.

The dividends you reinvested to buy additional shares increased the total amount you invested by $2,168. You had a choice of what to do with that money. You could have taken the dividends by check. Instead, you chose to reinvest. Your cost of the 329 shares you now own is $7,168.

Q. I have $78,000 invested in a tax-exempt mutual fund. I am pleased with it, even though it is not government insured. I take half the interest monthly. The interest is lower than I could get on certificates of deposit, but I don't pay tax on it. Is this a safe investment for me, a 73-year-old woman?

A. To begin with, mutual funds do not pay "interest." They pay dividends. A mutual fund collects interest and/or dividends from securities it holds in its investment portfolio and, after deducting its operating expenses, passes that money on to fund shareholders as dividends.

A tax-exempt mutual fund holds municipal bonds, which pay interest not subject to federal income tax. As a result, the fund's dividends also are free from federal income tax.

Tax-free interest and tax-free dividends generally are lower than taxable interest and taxable dividends. So, unless you are in either the 28 percent or 33 percent income tax bracket, you usually get more after-tax "keeping money" from taxable income. If you are in the 15 percent income tax bracket, as many senior citizens are, you would do better with taxable interest or taxable dividends.

Most mutual funds cannot be called "safe." That's because the values of fund shares can — and do — fluctuate. However, although there is some risk involved, the majority of mutual funds have been good long-term investments.

The only mutual funds whose shares do not rise and fall in value are money market mutual funds, whose share values stay constant.

Q. When I invested in a mutual fund, the broker told me my money would be with a very large and reliable old company. He said if this company should fail, most other companies would go under. He assured me my investment is safe. Is this all true?

A. Based on what you say he said, that broker started out being totally honest and went downhill from there.

The fund you named is managed by a company almost 100 years old. It's unlikely, but not impossible, that company would go belly up. Lots of financial companies have gone under, without taking all other companies down. Even if the management company does go bust, your mutual fund — a separate corporate entity — should survive.

The broker's assurance about the "safety" of your investment can be chalked up to overenthusiastic salesmanship.

Reunification can't be avoided, mayor says

■ Romanians enjoying freedom — 3D

EAST BERLIN (AP) — A popular politician who quit the Communist Party said today that East Germany never developed its own identity during 40 years of Communist rule and that reunification with West Germany is "unavoidable."

The East German government said it has lifted all barriers to competition between companies and that foreign investors may buy majority shares of enterprises here if the projects are "in the public's economic interest."

The announcement by Economics Minister Christa Luft is a major concession to Western businesses, which had shown little interest in joint ventures and other investments when the government said it would limit foreign ownership to 49 percent. Ms. Luft said the revision was made to stimulate the investment necessary to revive East Germany's flagging economy.

Also today, the ADN news agency said Communist Party chief Gregor Gysi had been invited to Washington next week for talks with President Bush on Eastern Europe. It did not say when the trip would occur and said it was "private."

The Communist Party faces growing opposition among East Germans, in part because of its opposition to unification with West Germany.

Wolfgang Berghofer, the mayor of Dresden, quit the party this week. In a speech to the Dresden City Council today, the popular leader said of unification: "It is unavoidable that what belongs together will grow together."

"The only question is in what time frame and in what manner it will occur," he said.

"There remain two separate rights of citizenship, but this can no longer be compared to national identity," Berghofer said.

Berghofer's defection from the Communists came on top of strikes and mass demonstrations against the party, which has been accused of being too slow to adopt reforms.

A one-hour strike in Dresden Wednesday shut down 200 of the city's most important offices and services, and police in Leipzig rallied in support of pro-democracy activists.

A leading East German economist warned in a report published Wednesday that the economy could collapse if the country doesn't swiftly convert to a free-market system.

Siegfried Schiller, a Communist and deputy director of Dresden's economic research institute, said such a collapse could come within a year without radical reforms.

"The house is on fire and the government is wasting time posturing," Schiller told the newspaper Die Union. "Every attempt to shore up a planned economy must be resisted."

He said he feared half-hearted reform attempts could cut off critical supplies of raw materials before East Germany can afford to buy them from the West.

Economics Minister Luft also proposed the speedy introduction of market-oriented economic reforms, a West German TV network reported Wednesday.

Ms. Luft suggested allowing the East German mark to be freely exchanged for other currencies by 1992, dismantling price controls, reducing state subsidies and introducing performance-oriented salaries and a new taxation system, ZDF television reported.

Ms. Luft also wants to end the state's monopoly on foreign trade.

However, Communist Premier Hans Modrow's government has resisted moving toward a free-market economy, calling instead for a "third way" between capitalism and communism.

But pressure for a conversion to capitalism has built up in recent weeks, with West Germany's powerful business community sensing vast new opportunities.

Azerbaijani Communists expel leader

MOSCOW (AP) — Communist leaders in Azerbaijan today blamed their former leader for allowing ethnic strife to explode into warfare and expelled him from the party. More Soviet troops were reported killed in attacks by militants.

Military authorities continued efforts to restore order in the southern republic's capital, Baku.

More than 100 people were detained overnight, military authorities reported, and "measures designed to neutralize the activities of certain illegal informal organizations" continued, according to the official Tass news agency.

This was in reference to pro-independence groups that the military has targeted in its effort to end the nationalist uprising.

Families of servicemen were being flown out of Baku amid reports of attacks on Soviet soldiers who were deployed to quell the violence, which began as anti-Armenian rioting and evolved into a fight for secession by some Azerbaijanis.

At least 171 people have been killed since the unrest broke out Jan. 13.

The republic's Central Committee convened at 11 p.m. Wednesday and ousted Abdul-Rakham Vezirov, who was named party leader during Azerbaijani-Armenian unrest in May 1988. He was given a mandate to restore order after a long-running land dispute between Azerbaijanis and Armenians erupted.

Vezirov, a former diplomat and career party official, was expelled from the party for "serious mistakes" that led to the current crisis, said Baku journalist Tunzala Kasumova. Vezirov had been removed as party chief earlier in the week.

Vezirov was replaced by Ayaz Mutalibov, the republic's prime minister.

Meanwhile, Tass said militant nationalists were continuing attacks on Soviet troops, who entered Baku Saturday. It said two soldiers were killed Wednesday and one seriously wounded.

Strikes continued in the city in defiance of a military ban, and public transport was at a standstill, Tass said.

Azerbaijanis have pledged not to end their strikes until Soviet troops withdraw.

The harbor at Baku, a Caspian Sea port of 1.8 million, was reported calm today following reports of a harbor fight Wednesday between military troops and Azerbaijanis blocking the waterway.

The military commander of Baku, Lt. Gen. Vladimir Dubinyak, said in a radio announcement today that occasional gunfire rang out during the night at the port but that no one was killed.

Azerbaijanis stand near anti-Gorbachev graffiti painted on the wall near Baku's Communist Party headquarters. The small sign in the middle reads, "Gorbachev, you are the killer of our children," and the wording next to the Gorbachev caricature reads, "The U.S.S.R. is the stronghold of colonialism!"

He said authorities detained more than 100 people during the night, 68 for curfew violations.

Leila Yunusova, an Azerbaijani activist, said 100,000 of Azerbaijan's 380,000 Communists have torn up their party cards — signaling growing resentment of central authorities in Moscow for ordering the crackdown.

Wednesday, soldiers rounded up 43 activists and banned rallies in Baku.

Tass today cited Baku Radio as saying troops had detained Mamed Ali-Zade, chairman of the Defense Committee of the grassroots Azerbaijan People's Front nationalist movement.

It said he possessed various weapons, "symbols of the popular front, medicines, radio equipment and propaganda materials calling on the population to resist authorities."

The Communist Party daily Pravda said 400 dependents of ethnic Russian servicemen were flown out of Azerbaijan Wednesday night, because of fears that Azerbaijanis angry over the troop deployment would turn on them.

About 100,000 ethnic Russians live in Baku.

Pravda said the refugees were being taken to military facilities and public buildings in Moscow and Kiev and that others are being housed by the Black Sea fleets.

Wednesday, Tass reported, the Soviet military evacuated more than 16,000 wives and children of soldiers from the region because of increasing threats against Soviet troops.

Armenians and Azerbaijanis have been in dispute for decades over the region of Nagorno-Karabakh, which is controlled by Azerbaijan, a predominantly Shiite Moslem republic, but populated mainly by Armenians. Most Armenians are Christians.

Anti-Armenians riots in Baku on Jan. 13 escalated into armed clashes between groups of Azerbaijanis and Armenians. Thousands of Armenians fled as nationalist extremists gained strength in Azerbaijan, and militant Azerbaijanis began fighting Soviet troops who were deployed to restore order.

The newspaper Izvestia on Wednesday characterized resistance to the Soviet occupation of Baku as "partisan war," including frequent night attacks on patrols.

The battle in Baku's harbor was the first involvement of ships in the conflict.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Czech leader calls for unified Europe

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — President Vaclav Havel of Czechoslovakia called today for a unified Europe that incorporates Soviet bloc countries that are adopting democratic reforms and market-oriented economies.

Havel

Havel, who arrived in Poland today to present his vision of a unified Europe to the National Assembly, told a newspaper that formerly Communist countries "should integrate with Europe in a coordinated way."

"The existing European structures are theoretically created for the whole continent but in reality they just reflect the division of Europe and they are actually Western European structures," Havel told the Solidarity newspaper Gazeta Wyborcza in an interview.

"A lot of action is required on both sides, an effort to lead to a real integration," he said in the paper, which carried a front-page photo of Havel under the headline "We welcome a friend."

Israeli jets hit Palestinians

SIDON, Lebanon (AP) — Israeli planes attacked bases of Palestinian terrorist Abu Nidal in south Lebanon today, apparently in retaliation for the killing of an Israeli colonel in a guerrilla ambush, police said.

There was no immediate casualty report.

Four jets fired rockets at bases near Sidon that are controlled by Abu Nidal's Fatah-Revolutionary Council in Kfar Jarra and in the Majdalyoun Valley, police said.

"A huge column of smoke can be seen from a distance," a police spokesman said. "Ambulances have been dispatched to the stricken area."

The attack came five days after guerrillas shot and killed Col. Yitzhak Rabimov in Israel's self-proclaimed security zone. He was the highest-ranking Israeli officer to be killed in Lebanon since Israel withdrew the bulk of its forces in 1985 after invading three years earlier.

Moslems kill Indian officers

SRINAGAR, India (AP) — Moslem militants fighting for Kashmir's secession from India opened fire today on air force officers, killing at least four, police said.

The killings raised to at least 61 the number of people killed in Kashmir since Saturday, when the lingering Moslem movement for secession from Hindu-majority India flared.

Most of the killings have occurred in confrontations between troops enforcing an around-the-clock curfew and mobs of militants defying the curfew.

"The attack makes it clear that the terrorists want to make targets of anyone who is associated with the Indian government," said a police official, speaking on condition of anonymity.

The air force officers were waiting for a bus to take them to the Srinagar airport when they were attacked by assailants who drove up in a car, the police official said.

ANC's Mandela committed to nationalization

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Jailed black nationalist Nelson Mandela said today that he and the African National Congress are irrevocably committed to the nationalization of banks, mines and monopoly industries.

Leaders of the United Democratic Front, a nationwide anti-apartheid coalition aligned with the outlawed ANC, released the statement from Mandela, saying it did so to clarify his position on economic issues.

Mandela, the leader of the ANC, is expected to be freed within weeks.

"The nationalization of the mines, banks and monopoly industries is the policy of the ANC and a change or modification of our views in this regard is inconceivable," Mandela's statement said. "State control of certain sectors of the economy is unavoidable."

Terror Lekota, chief spokesman for the Front, said Mandela asked that the statement be released because of "innuendos in press reports that comrade Nelson Mandela no longer subscribes to nationalization and that in this regard he is in conflict with the external leadership" of the ANC.

The ANC's exiled leadership, based in Lusaka, Zambia, says it envisions a mixed-economy for South Africa, but it has an ideological preference for socialism. South Africa currently has a capitalist economy dominated by the country's 5 million whites.

Mandela, the country's best known black leader, is imprisoned at Victor Verster Prison outside Cape Town, but is widely expected to be released within weeks. Business Day, the country's top financial daily, said today that Mandela "almost certainly" will be released in February.

However, The Star of Johannesburg, the country's largest circulation daily, quoted sources as saying no date had been set for Mandela's release. Justice Minister Kobie Coetsee was in regular contact with Mandela, and the ANC leader was being briefed on plans for his release, sources told Business Day.

Mandela, 71, has been imprisoned for more than 27 years and is serving a life sentence for sabotage and plotting to overthrow the white-led government.

He has been meeting regularly with anti-apartheid leaders, and a group of five activists visited him today at Victor Verster Prison outside Cape Town.

Business Day also said the government plans to partially lift the state of emergency and remove restrictions on the United Democratic Front, the country's largest anti-apartheid coalition.

The Front was effectively banned two years ago, but it has since declared itself legal. The Front has been operating more or less openly since President F.W. de Klerk assumed power in August.

The Business Day report cited unidentified government sources who spoke to the newspaper following Wednesday's meeting between de Klerk and his Cabinet.

Phones easier for disabled to use

By CALVIN SIMS
N.Y. Times News Service

Keeping in touch with long-distance loved ones can be especially frustrating for people who have difficulty using the telephone. But now there are more high-tech devices and services available to help the disabled and the elderly get the most out of their telephones.

Products and services to help overcome sight, speech and motion impairments are being offered nationwide by telephone companies and equipment manufacturers, some free of charge. Many phone companies also offer special discounts on local and long-distance telephone service for the disabled.

Recently, International Business Machines Corp. introduced a system that will allow deaf people to communicate with anyone who has a push-button telephone. The system translates a deaf person's words, typed into a personal computer, into a synthesized voice that is transmitted through the phone system.

The listener spells out responses on a Touch-Tone telephone keypad. The tones are converted to letters that appear on the deaf person's computer screen.

The IBM system costs about $600 and does not include the IBM computer, which starts at about $800.

New York Telephone, a division of Nynex Corp., recently opened a Communications Center for Disabled Customers in Manhattan. Service representatives are available to demonstrate equipment.

FOR PEOPLE with impaired vision, New York Telephone offers without cost an enlarged number ring that goes under the dial of a rotary phone and enlarged stick-on numbers for Touch-Tone phones. The company also offers free an overlay for callers who have difficulty dialing. When pressed, the overlay pushes down the "0" button to dial an operator.

There is also a raised Touch-Tone grid that fits over the telephone buttons, making dialing easier and reducing dialing errors by motion-impaired users.

For customers who have a hearing or speech impairment and use nonvoice equipment like a facsimile machine to communicate, New York Telephone reduces its charges for local services, leased channels and private-line circuits.

If a customer's impairment makes him or her unable to use a telephone directory, New York Telephone waives all charges for using directory-assistance operators.

Telephone devices available

N.Y. Times News Service

For information on special telephone products and services for the disabled, call the customer-service office at regional Bell telephone companies.

In New York, New York Telephone operates a Communications Center for the Disabled in Manhattan at 204 Second Ave. at 13th Street. It is open from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.; 212-395-2400 or 800-482-9020.

It offers these devices, either for purchase or lease:

- Weak-Speech Handset: Increases the volume of the speaker's voice; $79.95 to buy or $5.50 a month to lease. After 24 months, the customer owns the equipment.
- Impaired-Hearing Handset: Increases the volume of the voice on the other end of the line; $16.95.
- Signalman Relay: For those who cannot hear the ring of a conventional telephone. A lamp plugged into this equipment flashes when the telephone rings; $27.03.
- Tone Ringer: Concentrates the sound energy of a ringing telephone into a frequency that can be heard by most people with impaired hearing; $43.66 to buy or $1.74 a month to lease.

Customers may also be exempted from operator-assistance charges if their disability makes it difficult to dial a full telephone number and calls have to be placed by dialing "0."

To take advantage of any product or service discount for the disabled, a person must have a hearing, speech, vision or motion impairment.

The phone company requires certification from a licensed physician, specialist or social-service agency.

American Telephone and Telegraph Co., the nation's largest long-distance carrier, offers an artificial larynx, which simulates the natural vibrations of voice, for someone who has lost the use of the larynx.

Users press the hand-held unit against the throat and form words with the mouth to simulate speech. The device is $129.95 and can be leased.

FOR PEOPLE with severe motion impairments, like quadriplegia, AT&T has a hands-free telephone device called Directel, which allows the disabled person to use a breath of air to place, receive and disconnect calls.

When the user blows into the mouthpiece, he or she is connected to a telephone operator who dials the call. Directel is $499.95.

The IBM computer system, called Phone Communicator, is not the first telephone device developed for the deaf. Deaf people have been able to communicate over telephone lines for more than two decades using a miniature teletype system.

Several telephone companies now offer relay services in which operators, equipped with conventional telephone equipment and telecommunications devices, serve as go-betweens.

The relay operator receives a message typed by the deaf person on a computer screen, reads the message to the person on the other end of the line and then types the response back.

For low-income customers, New York Telephone has Life Line, a service that offers discounts on telephone service and installation charges.

To be eligible, customers must receive benefits from programs like Medicaid, food stamps, Supplemental Security Income, Aid to Families with Dependent Children and the Home Energy Assistance Program. For information, call 1-800-555-5000.

Most states offer similar progams for low-income residents.

IN CALIFORNIA, Pacific Bell has installed free telephone lines in city shelters and community-service agencies. The lines are intended to assist homeless people and anyone else in need to obtain employment, welfare, health care and shelter.

Frozen desserts made for 'healthy' indulging

By LINDA ANDERSON

Anderson

For the last few years, health-conscious Americans have been looking for ways to indulge themselves in tasty treats and maintain their health at the same time.

Well now, thanks to some frozen food manufacturers who know a likely market when they see one, fitness freaks can have their ice cream and eat it too. Frozen desserts have entered the "health conscious" realm.

We took a couple of these frozen desserts home to check out for taste, price and advertising accuracy. One was Borden Premium Ice Milk and the other was Mocha Mix Non-Dairy Frozen Dessert from Pesto Food Products Inc. Both were chocolate chip, one of my personal favorites. The small taste-testers and I were joined in this research project by some of our younger friends who are planning to never outgrow their need for ice cream.

A ½-gallon carton of Borden ice milk cost $2.09, while a ½-quart carton of Mocha Mix cost $1.99.

Both products have label advertising claiming healthy attributes. Borden ice milk is supposed to have "33 percent less fat than ice cream," and Mocha Mix is said to be "low in saturated fat" and "100 percent milk-free" and contain "no cholesterol."

From there, the label advertising gets serious. Mocha Mix's advertising claims are the more "well" commercial of the two: "Mocha Mix Non-Dairy Frozen Dessert is the classic." A rich, creamy ice cream alternative. Lots of smooth, delicious flavor, but no butterfat or milk solids. The delicious dessert for today's consumer tastes and active lifestyle."

Borden label advertising was more general. The end of the carton contains a letter, signed by Elsie herself, and addressed to "Dear Customer:" "We go to extra lengths to make sure our ice cream (of course, this is ice milk, but that's beside the point) meets the high standards of freshness and quality you have come to expect from Borden. For your benefit, we guarantee these standards."

Ingredients information shows some interesting facts. First on the ingredients list for Borden ice milk are "cream and nonfat milk," followed by sugar, corn syrup, whey, chocolate liquor and cocoa butter, which are followed by ingredients with hard-to-pronounce names and artificial flavors and artificial colors.

Mocha Mix's ingredients are even more imaginative: water, sugar, corn syrup, partially hydrogenated soy bean oil and chocolate chips (with their ingredients listed separately), plus complicated-sounding words that I couldn't begin to pronounce, much less know what they are.

One other interesting fact: a ½-cup serving of Borden ice milk contains 120 calories and 4 grams fat (or 36 calories from fat), while a ½-cup serving of Mocha Mix contains 100 calories and 3 grams fat. In fact, Mocha Mix label information says the product gets 49 percent of its calories from fat, 3 grams polyunsaturated, 3 grams monounsaturated and 1 grams saturated fats.

In the taste test, all young tasters liked both products equally — in fact, they all asked for seconds. They couldn't tell the difference between the one made with milk and the one made without — but I could. And since Mocha Mix is more expensive than Borden ice milk — not to mention more fatty with fat — and none of us are allergic to milk, I know which one I'm more likely to buy again.

Prices listed are from a local supermarket. Prices at other locations may vary.

Phone fraud still big problem on campus

By CALVIN SIMS
N.Y. Times News Service

With college students back on campus, beginning new semesters, long-distance telephone companies are continuing their nationwide crackdown on students who steal telephone services by using illegal credit card numbers and access codes.

To combat telephone fraud, the companies are closely monitoring all long-distance calls placed from college campuses so that they can quickly detect patterns of abuse.

The long-distance carriers have also started an information campaign to let students know that they will be prosecuted for stealing telephone service. In some cases, the companies have agreed not to prosecute students if they come forward and pay for the illegal calls.

Two years ago more than 1,000 students at North Texas State University in Denton confessed to using stolen telephone credit card numbers to make long-distance calls and agreed to pay MCI Communications Corp. about $100,000 for the illegal calls.

The same year about 400 students from American University in Washington faced prosecution for using unauthorized codes, but, under an amnesty program offered by the phone company, they agreed to pay MCI $32,000 for stealing long-distance service.

ALTHOUGH TELEPHONE fraud on college campuses has shown a slight decline in the last two years, law-enforcement and telephone company officials say many students continue to steal long-distance service by charging calls to someone else's account, especially at the beginning and end of semesters.

"College students, more than any other group in society except maybe prisoners, are prone to telephone fraud because they are generally away from home for the first time, and they are lonely and probably short on cash," said Rami Abuhamdeh, executive director of Communications Fraud Control Association, an industry group financed by telephone companies and law-enforcement agencies that fight crimes involving communications.

Telephone fraud costs long-distance companies like MCI, American Telephone & Telegraph Co. and US Sprint more than $500 million a year, or about 1 percent of the industry's total revenue, the fraud-control group said. Colleges, military bases and prisons account for 30 percent of the todal, or $150 million, and incidents of telephone fraud on college campuses constitute the greatest portion of institutional fraud, the group says.

Students use a wide variety of methods to make the calls at no expense to themselves.

The most common way is to use someone else's telephone credit card or access number. These have usually been obtained illegally by using computer-software programs.

Computer hackers often sell the stolen codes to other students for a few dollars. Recently, students have started tapping into the switchboards of large corporations to make the illegal calls.

In the past students used "blue boxes" that generate computer tones and connected their telephones into a company's long-distance lines.

"THE TEMPTATION is often too much for students to resist because they feel that it's all right to rip off the phone company because it has big, deep pockets," Abuhamdeh said.

The companies have also added equipment that thwarts blue boxes and have begun a nationwide deterrent campaign that includes instructional films, posters and leaflets warning students that they are breaking the law if they use stolen codes.

The maximum sentence for a conviction of telephone-code fraud is 15 years in prison and a $50,000 fine.

"A lot of students think that it's impossible for us to trace the fraudulent calls back to them, but the fact of the matter is that we can, and we will," said Robert F. Fox, US Sprint's vice president of corporate security.

"Colleges are usually located in isolated towns, and we keep thorough records of every call made. We even obtain school records and match the destination of the illegal calls with the home address of students enrolled at that particular school."

MCI said the student abusers at American University had obtained the calling codes by either stealing long-distance credit cards from student mailboxes or using computers to find the secret codes.

Most vulnerable to computer hackers are long-distance carriers that continue to use five-digit and nine-digit calling-card codes, which are easier to obtain than the new 14-digit codes. Some MCI customers still make calls on an older system that accepts five-digit codes, which the company says are being phased out.

Now that phone companies have made it more difficult for students to obtain access codes that are assigned to residential customers, some students are going after the switchboards of large corporations.

The students call a company's toll-free 800 number and punch in stolen access codes to gain entry to the switchboard's long-distance lines.

One hacker, John Draper, who was nicknamed "Cap'n Crunch," spent six months in jail in the 1970's for illegal use of the telephone network.

Draper found that a whistle that came as a prize in Cap'n Crunch breakfast cereal emitted the precise 2,600-cycle frequency that the phone company used to move long-distance traffic over its network.

"Ever since the first telephone was placed on a college campus decades ago, I imagine that students have been a special problem for the phone company," said Ronald Porter, corporate security manager for AT&T.

DEAR ABBY

Heart patient handicapped by parking laws

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Concerning handicap parking spaces: In Massachusetts, the law is such that if you are in a wheelchair and cannot walk even one step (as my mother was) you cannot get a handicap plate. I know. I begged the powers that be to give her one. She had doctors' requests, but the answer was a resounding NO. You must have at least one foot missing.

My uncle, who lives in New Mexico, has a handicap plate, and he can dance the jitterbug! He is a handicapped veteran. The laws are not as strict in New Mexico.

Why the entire country doesn't have uniform laws concerning parking spaces for disabled people is beyond my comprehension. I live in Florida now, and while I am not familiar with the laws of this state, this I do know: Even though a borrowed vehicle has handicap plates that entitle the owner to park in a preferred area, no able-bodied person should use that space.

Everyone seeing anyone whom they believe to be a healthy person drive into the handicap parking space should write the license number down and report it. If the person is not qualified, then reporting them will finally result in the revocation of the plate for whom it is issued. And people who own the plates will be more careful of the inconsiderate persons they lend their cars to.

Before my open-heart surgery in Massachusetts, I could not walk 10 feet. I could not get a plate either. — E.C. IN WINTER HAVEN, FLA.

DEAR E.C.: One does not have to have a "missing foot" to get a handicap plate in Massachusetts. According to the Massachusetts Registry of Motor Vehicles, one must suffer the permanent loss of the use of at least one foot or leg, not the foot or leg itself. Your difficulty in obtaining a permit for yourself may have arisen because your physician could not state that your handicap was permanent.

This year, the Massachusetts RMV further expanded the law to include "class 3 and 4" heart patients, by virtue of the severity of their disease.

Although every state does not have the same requirements for the issuance of handicap plates, almost all respect plates issued by other states. And Massachusetts confers reciprocity on handicap parking permits for all states and Canadian provinces.

DEAR ABBY: My name is Jeremy and I am 9 years old, and already I have a problem.

My grandfather is an animal control officer, but the kids make fun of me and say that he is a "dog catcher." Well, the truth is that he does pick up dogs, but that is for their own good, so they don't get killed while running down the road by a fast car that can't stop in time. Some kids don't understand this. Please explain this in your column. — JEREMY IN NEW JERSEY

DEAR JEREMY: I have explained it several times, but there are some things one cannot explain enough. In August of 1984, the following letter appeared in my column.

DEAR ABBY: I am your animal control officer. I am not the dreaded "dog catcher" or the "murderer" you call me.

It is not I who allows your pet to roam the streets, to contract diseases from other free-roaming animals, to be hit by passing motorists or poisoned by rotting garbage. I am the one who must look into those sick, pain-glazed eyes, try to remove the animal without causing it further pain, and then humanely "put it to sleep" to put an end to its suffering.

It is not I who allows your pets to breed, then dumps the unwanted puppies and kittens on roadsides and in shelters. I'm the one who must find the tiny animals before they die of starvation, exposure or disease, and as an act of mercy exterminate them. It hurts me to be forced to kill hundreds of thousands of animals each year, but because of your irresponsibility, I have no choice.

It is not I who abandons unwanted animals on farm roads, telling myself some friendly farmer will surely take them in and give them a good home. But I am the one who must pick up the frightened animal who waits in vain for its beloved master, wondering why it has been abandoned. I am the one who must help that friendly farmer trap, tranquilize or kill that animal because it has begun to roam in packs with other abandoned hungry animals, killing livestock, fowl and game.

I am not the one who breeds and fights dogs in the name of "sport." But I'm the one who fights the breeders and participants and must pick up the dead and dying animals that have been left behind.

It is not I who keeps a pet confined in an area too small, without food, water, shelter or exercise. But I must deal with the irresponsible owner who does.

It is not I who refuses to spend the time and money to keep up regular inoculations that all pets require. But I am the one who must pick up the sick animal that is dying of a preventable disease.

So remember, the next time your child is bitten by a stray dog, your trash is dumped and scattered, your pet is lost, stolen, poisoned or hit by a car, it is the animal control officer you call — not the "dog catcher." The next time your pet is picked up, or you are cited for neglecting or abusing it, remember, I am only trying to get you to fulfill your responsibility to your pet, your neighbor and yourself.

Do not scorn me. Respect me, for I am the product of your irresponsibility. I love animals, and I care. — ANIMAL CONTROL OFFICER

DEAR OFFICER: Thank you for a powerful message that needs to be repeated often.

No pet should be allowed to breed indiscriminately. Please, please have your pet spayed or neutered. And if you have a dollar or two to spare, please send it to your local S.P.C.A. so it can feed and care for all those kittens and puppies a little longer — instead of exterminating them immediately for lack of funds.

I love animals, and I care, too.

DEAR ABBY: I see letters in your column quite often from wives who are upset with their husbands because they "look" at other women.

I think all men like to look at good-looking women, but some are more sneaky about it than others.

Fifty years ago, my boyfriend was a girl watcher. When I complained, he told me that as long as he lives, he'll look. That was the truth, because we've been married for 48 years and he's still looking.

It doesn't bother me a bit because he's a "looker," not a "toucher." We have a wonderful marriage, and he's still the most exciting man I've ever met. — IN LOVE WITH A LOOKER

DEAR IN LOVE: Congratulations; may it ever be thus. There's nothing wrong with subtle looking, as long as the saliva doesn't run down his chin. And by the way, some women also like to look at attractive men, which is OK if they do it discreetly.

CONFIDENTIAL TO BETTER LATE THAN NEVER IN ATLANTA: That's what Noah said to the zebra who said he understood that passengers were supposed to arrive in alphabetical order. What's your excuse?

Here is an up-to-date guide for formal church weddings, at-home weddings or second-time-around weddings. To order, send a long, business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. Supermarkets try new labels to prevent theft

N.Y. Times News Service

There's a new type of security system coming to your supermarket.

Instead of the bulky plastic tags that hang off clothing, these are tiny electronic circuits often disguised as bar code pricing tags or concealed inside packages.

A handful of supermarkets across the country, including stores operated by Safeway, Lucky and Ralphs, are installing costly security systems like this to boost profit margins and protect high-ticket merchandise such as liquor, film, cigarettes and meat.

"Most people think of shoplifting in terms of clothing. It's always surprising to learn that shoplifting occurs in supermarkets," said Albert Wolf, chairman and chief executive of Thorofare, N.J.-based Checkpoint Systems Inc., one of the principal suppliers of security systems to supermarkets.

Theft can be nearly 1 percent of store sales, and supermarkets operate on margins usually less than 2 percent.

The security tags won't be on everything. They cost between 3 cents and 4 cents apiece — too much for grocers to place on every one of the hundreds of thousands of items they keep in stock.

Instead, the grocers tag merchandise most likely to be stolen.

In addition to costly items such as liquor, these easy-to-conceal goods include cosmetics and batteries.

"The beauty of the system is that since the tags blend in and are imperceptible, you can get away with tagging less than 20 percent of the merchandise, and the shoplifter isn't going to know what's tagged and what isn't," said Thomas Nicolette, president of Knogo North America, a Hauppauge, N.Y.-based supplier of detection systems.

The security system, which looks like a set of metal arches, is triggered when a shopper walks through either the checkout aisle or store exit carrying merchandise.

If the detection device is on the aisle, it will sound if a customer passes between the metal arches concealing goods that should be on the checkout counter.

At the store exit, the device works like an airport security system by separating customers from their purchases.

The shopper wheels the cart through one passageway and walks through another. Anything that is on the shopper and not in the cart will trigger a beeping alarm.

The systems enable supermarkets to reduce theft by 30 percent to 80 percent a year, depending on such factors as where the systems are located and what merchandise is tagged, Nicolette said.

The systems cost between $2,000 and $3,000 apiece, so outfitting a 10-lane supermarket can add up. For that reason, retailers will use them only in stores that have security problems.

Newscasters' credibility divided by gender

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

In a conversation I had with a twentysomething the other day, she observed that women had taken over television news. "If you ask me," she said, "women have no need to complain anymore. We've got all the equality we can handle."

I flipped on the TV set. "That's a great-looking tie Tom Brokaw has on," I said. "Have you noticed how well he accessorizes his suits?"

She looked at me blankly. "I've never noticed."

"I suppose you didn't notice Dan Rather stopped wearing sweater vests and Tom Fenton wore a smashing fur coat at the Berlin Wall a few weeks ago?"

"Do you honestly think I'd notice what Dan or Tom was wearing?" she asked.

"You noticed Connie Chung's sweater enough to write her and ask her where she got it!"

"That's different."

"So what do you think of Bob Simon's hair? After it blew out of control in Israel, he's wearing it shorter."

"Who cares?" she said, throwing up her hands.

"Someone cares," I said. "Two hours were devoted to Jane Pauley's hair on her last day of the 'Today' show. You know how it is when you're in your 30s ... the hair is the first to go."

"I know what you're driving at," she said. "Jane isn't old, but it is a young industry."

"Tell David Brinkley," I said. "What do you think about Bill Plante's eye job? Will it buy him a few more years?"

"What eye job?"

"It didn't get much play in the tabloids," I said. "They were too busy with Joan Lunden's 45-pound weight loss and Kathleen Sullivan's drop of 20 pounds. What's a few bags under the eyes compared to that?"

"Look," she said, "there are rules. If you're on television, you have to be thin."

"Like Charles Kuralt?"

"At least he didn't lose his credibility doing commercials like Linda Ellerbee."

"Funny," I said, "Willard Scott drinks the same coffee, and he never lost his."

"Make your point," she said stiffly.

"The point is, male newscasters can be overweight, bald, pale, graying and unshaven. They can be a former prom king and have enough wrinkles to plant a spring crop and still be taken seriously. They're where they are because they're good! Their counterparts, however, have a different set of rules. And until the day comes when one of the anchors of a major network is Danielle Rather, Tanya Brokaw or Pia Jennings, we're not there yet. If you have a problem handling all that equality, call 911."

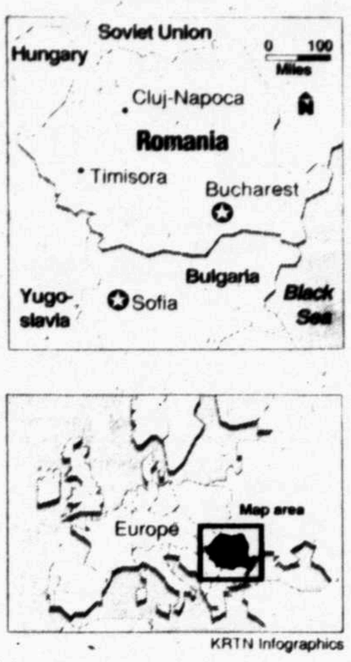
ROMANIA: Restoring Basic Rights

No-holds-barred press savors freedom



KRTN Infographics

By VIOREL URMA

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Two days before he was ousted, Nicolae Ceausescu, the "best son of Romania," held the limelight in the state-run press. The newspapers Dec. 20 published 12 photographs of him on a state visit to Iran.

Three days after the dictator and his wife, Elena, were executed on Christmas Day, the daily newspaper Truth published its first anti-Ceausescu cartoon, a "Report From Hell," which showed the former first couple in a boiling cauldron.

"We protest!" shrieks Elena. "We want to boil only in a golden caldron!"

The press has been using its new freedom with a vengeance, informing Romanians each day of more excesses committed by the reviled Ceausescus.

On Dec. 26, Truth began serializing excerpts from "Red Horizons," the memoirs of former counterintelligence chief Ion Pacepa, who defected to the United States in 1978.

In his book, published in the West two years ago, Pacepa chronicled how Ceausescu and other Romanians tried to steal Western technological secrets and recruit Jimmy Carter's brother as an "agent d'influence," or spied on Romanians abroad and at home, sending and executing death threats.

Elena Ceausescu was portrayed as a domineering, crude woman who relished listening to tapes secretly made each week at her children's apartments and the homes of top officials.

"What can be read in the pages of this book appears to be the fruit of a sick fantasy and yet, every word is true," Truth said as it introduced the Pacepa excerpts to Romanians.

"The publication of this book played an uncontested role in revealing in all its hideousness the true face of a dictatorship which with diabolical cunningness had managed at the outset to outfox a part of the world," the newspaper said.

The United States and other Western powers originally cultivated Ceausescu for his relatively independent foreign policy within the Warsaw Pact, moving away only when Ceausescu's rule grew harsher and other Pact countries began to reform in the mid-1980s.

The personality cult Ceausescu built during his 24-year rule took on the trappings of worship and pervaded practically all aspects of public life. His portrait lined the streets in Bucharest and other Romanian cities.

Now, the leader formerly called the "genius of the Carpathians," the "hero among heroes" and the "founder of a new country" is called "Romania's No. 1 terrorist," a "paranoid" and a "Doberman," an allusion to pets he reportedly fed with imported meat.

His portraits and books have been burned by angry Romanians who suffered widespread food and energy shortages and were spied upon by the Securitate, Ceausescu's secret police.

"He called himself with the most abject impudence 'the most beloved and esteemed,' but he talked like the illiterate peasants from the beginning of this century," Ion Marin wrote in Truth in an editorial titled "Vipers."

Mrs. Ceausescu, the second-most powerful person in the country, "added to her name the title of scientist of 'world repute,' but she omitted to say that she could not write and she could hardly read at all," Marin said.

Elena, whose official title was "Academician Dr. Eng. Elena Ceausescu," was trained as a chemist, but officials said privately even while she was in power that her title was merely political.

Truth has published Elena's school records and marks, showing that she dropped out of school, like Ceausescu, after the fourth grade.

In other recent articles and editorials Romania's avid readers learned that:

■ Thousands of women died seeking abortions over the past few years due to woefully inadequate medical conditions linked to Ceausescu's near-ban on abortions.

Ceausescu decreed the virtual abortion ban to encourage procreation. Romania's new interim government swiftly lifted the law.

■ Mrs. Ceausescu had deposited in savings the equivalent of $130,000 at the official rate of exchange for her daughter and each of her two sons.

■ She canceled Romania's subscriptions to international news agencies to save $75,000 annually and stopped delivery of all foreign newspapers to keep Romanians isolated, according to the official news agency Rompres.

■ Ceausescu's obsession with being photographed cost the country $28 million. The photos were heavily retouched so he would look younger.

As soon as Ceausescu was overthrown Dec. 22, Agerpres abolished censorship and pledged to inform subscribers in Romania and abroad "in an honest and civilized way."

On Jan. 2, the facelift was completed with a name change. Agerpres, an acronym for Agentia Romana de Presa — Romanian Press Agency — now is Rompres.

Aside from the desire to break with Ceausescu's era, the name change may have been prompted by a desire to get rid of unkind jokes. "Ager" in Romanian means quick, or quick-witted — a description that always gave Romanian and foreign journalists a laugh when applied to Ceausescu's docile news agency.

Defector describes tyrant's escape plan

By BRYAN BRUMLEY

WASHINGTON (AP) — Executed Romanian dictator Nicolae Ceausescu once had contingency plans to flee to China and direct a guerrilla war from there against anyone who tried to topple him, his former head of intelligence says.

Under a secret "Plan M," the Securitate secret police were to disguise themselves as civilians, retreat to hidden bunkers and wage guerrilla war, Ion Pacepa said in a telephone interview with The Associated Press.

"My job would have been to take Ceausescu out of Romania," Pacepa said in one of the few interviews he has given since he defected in 1978.

"Ceausescu's refuge at that time was China, where he was to live there as long as need be," said Pacepa. He declined to disclose his current address, where he lives under an assumed name.

Ceausescu, the last of the hardline Warsaw Pact bosses to fall from power, kept close ties with officials in other conservative communist countries, such as China and North Korea, as well as with Islamic leaders in Iran.

At the time of his defection, Pacepa was a two-star general and acting head of Romanian external intelligence. In his book, "Red Horizons," he detailed Ceausescu's efforts to obtain Western technology on behalf of Moscow.

The book also chronicled the extravagant use of power and wealth by Ceausescu and his wife Elena, who were executed after a secret trial on Christmas Day.

Pacepa said he agreed to speak to the AP because his daughter, Dana Damaceanu, her husband and two other relatives had been escorted to safety from Romania by U.S. Rep. Frank A. Wolf, R-Va. His daughter had been under virtual house arrest for a decade and was arrested by the Securitate during the upheaval, he said.

The contingency plan for Ceausescu to survive a rebellion, as described by Pacepa, resembled what was occurring in Romania until the fugitive leader was captured in a secret bunker on Dec. 23.

Officials of the provisional Romanian government said they killed the Ceausescus because they feared the Securitate might rescue them and because they wished to encourage pro-Ceausescu forces to give up. Romanian television repeatedly broadcast footage of the secret trial and the bodies of the executed Ceausescus to prove they were dead.

By the time Pacepa defected, Ceausescu had built miles of secret tunnels linking his downtown palace to other buildings and to two airports on the outskirts of Bucharest, the Romanian capital.

Romanian radio reported during the uprising that the Securitate retreated into a maze of secret tunnels, from which it was launching attacks.

As part of Plan M, said Pacepa, Romanian intelligence established safe houses in West Germany and two neutral countries, Austria and Switzerland, to "give Ceausescu the means to wage a guerrilla war from abroad."

The safe houses were occupied by Romanian "illegals," Romanian-born agents who had documents saying they were natives of the countries in which they were living. They used "burst transmitters" to broadcast coded messages in brief transmissions that are hard for intelligence agencies to detect, he said.

"There were a dozen radio stations to illegally communicate with the Securitate in Romania and Ceausescu in China," he said.

Pacepa cooperated with Western intelligence after he defected and said most of the "illegals" had disappeared or were taken into custody.

Ceausescu's agents tried several times to kill Pacepa after his defection, and they harassed and repeatedly arrested and beat his daughter in Bucharest, he said. The threats and harassment worsened after Radio Free Europe broadcast Pacepa's book over its Romanian-language service, he said.

The U.S.-funded radio station "deserves a lot of the credit" for toppling Ceausescu, said Pacepa. "In Romania, people were not able to watch West German or Austrian television" as reformers could in East Germany, Hungary and Czechoslovakia.

Churches welcome new leadership

By SLOBODAN LEKIC

BUCHAREST, Romania (AP) — Baptists, probably the most oppressed worshipers under Nicolae Ceausescu, are professing their faith openly for the first time since the dictator's relentless persecution stifled them decades ago.

"Numerous people from all walks of life, including many army officers and soldiers, have been coming here in the past few days to tell us how afraid they had been in the past to say they were believers," the Rev. Ilie Tundrea of Bucharest's Bethany Baptist Church said.

As in other countries with rigid Communist regimes, believers were considered unreliable citizens, not allowed to hold leading positions in an officially atheist system.

No religion was encouraged, but Tundrea said in an interview "it was worse for Protestants, because the authorities could not tolerate our evangelical activity."

Ceausescu was overthrown Dec. 22, and the first large Baptist gathering was held Dec. 31 in Oradea, northwestern Romania. About 10,000 worshipers packed a sports arena with the approval of the new authorities.

For the first time since the Communist takeover in 1947, state radio and TV broadcast a live Christmas service from the Patriarhie Cathedral in Bucharest.

In recent annual U.S. State Department reports on human rights, the Ceausescu regime ranked among the worst offenders. It was accused of running a police state with no freedom of expression, and religious tolerance only for such recognized faiths as the Romanian Orthodox or Jews.

Baptist pastors were denied permission to preach and arrested for distributing Bibles. The Communists never recognized the Roman Catholic church because the Catholic bishops refused to recognize the supremacy of the state.

About 80 percent of Romania's 23 million people are believed to be nominal followers of the Orthodox faith and 6 percent are Roman Catholics.

Romania has about 300,000 Baptists, up from 60,000 two decades ago. Most of the Baptists, Pentecostals, Seventh-day Adventists and other Protestants are in the western Transylvania region and in Bucharest.

Under Ceausescu, who ruled Romania for 24 years, the Baptist Church was given special attention because its rapid growth was seen as a threat.

The Romanian Orthodox church was treated more leniently because it generally limited itself to such traditional ceremonies as Mass, marriages and funerals.

"Securitate officers were present at every single service to record what was being preached and we were forbidden from baptizing," Tundrea said, referring to the Ceausescu's secret police.

He said police cars always were parked outside the church and the telephones of leading Baptists were tapped.

Believers who refused to become informers were harassed at work and "many were jailed for years after they were accused of being servants of Western capitalism," the pastor said.

Official reaction to construction of a church in Comanesti, 135 miles north of Bucharest, illustrated the hardships Baptists faced under Ceausescu.

The building was torn down in 1989 after authorities accused local church leaders of "stealing construction materials and other socialist property," and four were imprisoned. They were released after the revolution.

Lack of Bibles and other Christian books forbidden in Romania was partially overcome through the efforts of missionaries from Western Europe and the United States, who imported the books in special hidden compartments in their vans, Tundrea said.

Pastors often were summoned for interrogation by the security police and were even forbidden to preach from specific sections of the Bible.

They could not mention the Book of Revelations "because it speaks of the second coming of Christ, this Ceausescu did not accept," Tundrea said while helping unload a Dutch truck bringing food aid for distribution by his church.

In 1977, a group of pastors wrote a letter to Ceausescu complaining about persecution in the country, Tundrea said.

"After that, every one of us was interrogated each day for six weeks," he said in a whisper, then laughed and said aloud: "You see, I am still living in the era before the revolution."

For us, the revolution was a miracle. We can now be free to participate in a 'Christian revival in Romania,' the pastor said.

"I believe ... we will have opportunity to print Bibles and magazines, establish new contacts and organize evangelical activities, because people feel such a big hunger for them now."

Professors, publishers overtaken by events

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Revolutionary changes sweeping Eastern Europe have professors and textbook publishers scratching their heads about keeping up with history in the making.

It's a mind-boggling world for Soviet bloc specialists, said Sovietologist Ben Eklof of Indiana University.

"And it's very stressful," he said. "I've begun to wish everyone over there would play baseball for a month or so and give me some time to rethink things."

The campus confusion started as Soviet bloc governments began toppling in last fall. College syllabuses had to be tossed out and curricula overhauled.

"Some of my colleagues are waiting for things to settle down, but they might as well give up waiting because I don't think that will happen for another generation," said Adam Ulam, who directs Harvard University's Russian Research Center.

"It's exciting and tiring at the same time," said Henry Krisch, an author and professor at the University of Connecticut. "It's as though someone in history has hit fast forward and processes that normally take a long time are seen in a short period."

Independent political journals and newspapers have blossomed in Eastern Europe. Artists and theorists are speaking out. Scholarly exchange and travel opportunities are opening.

In many cases, U.S. professors have opted to use newspapers and free-form classroom debate on current events instead of the standard and now outdated texts.

"Right now I'm in a quandary as to whether to offer my course again next fall because I'm not sure if anything of a permanent, published nature will be available," said Edwin Gere, a professor at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

Publishers have similar problems. The books from which generations of high school and college students learned about the Soviet bloc suddenly need daily revision.

"The academic headaches are reflected in the publisher's office," said Frederick Praeger, editorial director at Westview Press Inc.

"You cannot publish books that deal with the current situation in the Soviet Union or Eastern Europe because it changes just about every day," Praeger said from his Boulder, Colo., office. "On the day you publish, the book is out of date."

Eileen Peters, vice president of Scott Foreman and Co.'s international division, said several publishing houses were considering supplements for college survey texts.

Chaotic politics changing even quiet places

By DAVID BINDER
New York Times News Service

IASI, Romania — In many parts of this country, the popular uprising against Romania's communist government was a scene of tragic bloodshed. But here in the heart of Moldavia, it has unfolded more like an operetta.

As recounted by a number of people in Iasi who witnessed the events, there was no storming of the party headquarters as in Bucharest and other cities. There were no shots fired, and no deaths.

Instead, they said, at about the time President Nicolae Ceausescu was fleeing his headquarters in the capital last December, the first party secretary of Iasi County hurriedly called her principal deputies together.

"I am a niece of Ceausescu," the party chief, Maria Ghitulica, supposedly said. "Take good care of this. I've got other things to do."

With that, the story goes, she was out the door and off in a limousine. The other communist leaders followed pell-mell, as did the entire staff of the local detachment of the state security police from their nearby headquarters.

Within an hour, thousands of Iasi citizens and units of the Romanian army who had been alerted to the events in Bucharest by radio reports, gathered in front of the party and police headquarters, then simply walked in unopposed, said Luca Arbore, a journalist. The first several hundred inside the party headquarters proclaimed Doru Tigau, a 43-year-old philosophy professor, the head of the local branch of the newly formed Council of National Salvation.

He and others addressed the crowds from the same balcony used by Ceausescu when he last spoke in Iasi, on Sept. 15. Among the speakers was Pimen Suceveanu, vicar of the local archbishopric of the Romanian Orthodox Church.

"I spoke as a pastor," he said, "to keep order and discipline and not to allow a hatred or wrath to boil over."

As the speeches continued, army units tracked down Ms. Ghitulica, her deputies and the security police chiefs and placed them under house arrest, pending investigation by a still-to-be-appointed independent commission.

Over at Radio Iasi, which had been closed in 1985 along with four other regional stations on the orders of Ceausescu, Stefan Daraban, a technician, picked up Radio Bucharest's signal of the dictator's downfall.

Within two hours, he and a makeshift crew had cranked up the Marconi transmitter and put Grigore Ilisei, a former radio reporter, on the air.

"Here is Radio Iasi," Ilisei proclaimed. "Thirteen hundred kilohertz. After five years of silence, years of the dictator Ceausescu, you hear the voice of Radio Iasi in liberty."

The station is now broadcasting eight hours a day, although so far no one on the staff has been paid.

Despite the inactivity of Ceausescu security forces here, the station remains under army guard.

All over Iasi, citizens have moved swiftly to eliminate reminders of Ceausescu — his photos, his books, his propaganda banners.

At the huge Cultural Palace, which includes museums of history, ethnography, and fine arts, staff members happily ripped down a gigant tapestry picturing Ceausescu and his wife, Elena. The work had been forced on the museum by the now-deposed minister of culture, Suzana Gadea.

"We had been able to stall on having a section in the historical museum on the Ceausescu epoch," said Doina Lemny, an art historian, "but not the tapestry."

"Ceausescu didn't like Iasi," Ms. Lemny said. "His last visit to Iasi was a fiasco. People stayed away. It was passive resistance."

Iasi (pronounced yahsh), founded in the 14th century, was the political and cultural capital of Stefan the Great, the ruler of Moldavia. It emerged as Romania's leading cultural center in the nineteenth century. Its university, founded in 1860, is the nation's oldest, as is its fine arts museum, founded the same year.

It now appears, however, that the daring young men who took over the town and county government three weeks ago never really got a grip on things.

A new mayor of Iasi was named one day and ousted the next. In another incident, a rumor spread that Arab terrorists had attacked the postal telegraph office.

Tigau, receiving a warning Thursday while in the midst of a newspaper interview, pulled a pistol and ordered the army to counterattack. The terrorists turned out to be some Yemeni exchange students who were simply trying to reach him by telephone.

"My policy is non-violence," said Tigau. He said that the closest Iasi came to real trouble was when two helicopters landed some elite police troops about 18 miles outside of the city. "They vanished into the forest," he said.

"A revolutionary has to know how to drive and how to use arms," Tigau said, his voice hoarse from chain-smoking. "I thought I was apolitical. I suddenly discovered I was a highly political person."

With that he invited two foreign journalists to accompany him on a 50-mile drive northwest to the Cotnari Winery, where, he hinted darkly, there was a threat of violence in the vineyards.

He took the wheel of a five-speed Dacia and drove at speeds of up to 80 miles an hour on the narrow highway, dodging horse carts, tractors, hikers, bikers, trucks, stray dogs and a pig.

At Cotnari, it turned out that all was well, and he settled in for a brief wine tasting.

One recent morning, Tigau found himself out of the politics of the new Rumania. He and the entire leadership of the Iasi National Salvation Front were removed by local army commanders, a high-placed official said.

"Things were getting too chaotic under them," the official said. "So the army will run things in the county until a new governing commission can be formed. The same thing is happening in some other counties."

3 parties call on provisional government to step down

BUCHAREST, Romania (AP) — Three opposition parties today called on the provisional government to resign and allow a new, broader-based caretaker government to run the country until elections are held in May.

The call reflected mounting dissatisfaction with the National Salvation Front, which has reversed its original promise not to get involved in Romania's first free elections in more than 50 years, promised for May 20.

The front took power in December during the bloody popular revolt that overthrew Communist dictator Nicolae Ceausescu, who was executed Dec. 25 along with his wife, Elena. The front has had trouble earning the peoples' trust ever since, partly because some of its members are linked to the previous regime.

In a communique published in the newspaper Romania Libera, the National Peasant Party, National Liberal Party and the Social Democratic Party of Romania called for a new interim government to rule until the elections, and said it should include all parties, youth, and former dissidents.

The three opposition parties, which before World War II dominated national politics, recently became active again in Romania.

A leading dissident poet, Ana Blandiana, also criticized the front's announcement that it would field candidates, telling Romania Libera that move was "burdened with future dangers" for the country.

"Illusions Lasted Only One Month," headlined the Romania Libera.

"The front's participation in the (May) elections could lead to re-establishing a single party, under other forms, and to missing, perhaps definitively, the chance that Romania become a really democratic country," the newspaper editorialized.

Wednesday, 1,000 people demonstrated outside the front's headquarters to demand it not take part in the elections.

In response, the front again published in today's newspapers its Jan. 3 decree outlawing demonstrations in Bucharest and allowing them only in some parks, unless they are approved by police 48 hours in advance.

The announcement said those taking part in illegal protests could be sentenced to up to 30 days in jail or fined up to $250.

The Peasant Party, which before World War II dominated Romanian politics with 2 million members, condemned the front's decision to contest the election, and some of its members joined the Bucharest demonstration Wednesday.

Today's communique indicated that the Peasant Party and two other revived groups prominent before the 1947 Communist takeover have formed a virtual alliance against the front.

The three-party statement said that by deciding to take part in the elections, the front lost the neutrality needed to administer the balloting.

"What kind of elections are we talking about when the National Salvation Front has monopolized in a totalitarian way all the key systems of the state," the communique said. "The front has funds ... and controls television, radio and the newspapers."

While the front has set up a nominally separate provisional government, its executive council in fact makes all major governmental decisions.

The three parties accused the front of trying to usurp the revolution that overthrew Ceausescu's 24-year rule. "This victory belongs to the people and cannot be confiscated by anyone," it said.
