George Wolf/Reporter-Telegram

The Frank Ramirez family has built a storm cellar in which to seek refuge should another violent storm, such as the 1987 Saragosa tornado, threaten the West Texas community. Standing on steps leading into the cellar are Ramirez, 52, his wife, Natividad, 47, and their 10-year-old daughter, Roseann.

Saragosa still burdened by sorrow

But community's life rebuilt with buildings

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

SARAGOSA — Memories of the "night of the black moon" still frighten and sadden the people here.

But the mercies of time are separating them from the lingering terror of May 22, 1987, when a sweeping tornado ripped half of the community apart, scattered it about the farms and ranches, and caused the deaths of 30 residents.

Inside the rebuilt Saragosa Catholic Church, now the shrine Santuario de Nuestra Senora de Guadalupe, in the Spanish-speaking community are large linen banners bespeaking thanksgiving in Spanish and English: "Te Damos Gracias, Senor" and "We Thank You, Lord."

The banners have been displayed since the Aug. 14, 1988, dedication of the new church to express thanksgiving for the "rebuilding of the church, which was totally demolished by the tornado, and (for) the great help that people received from many other places, including non-Catholic communities," said the Rev. Fidel Cervantes. The priest is pastor of the church-shrine, which is a mission of Christ The King Catholic Church in Balmorhea, which is eight miles southwest of Saragosa.

"They (the banners) express the gratitude to God for all of the benefits" of life and benefits which have blessed the humble community, Cervantes said.

Saragosa is a community of about 350 people, who mostly are rooted in farming, ranching, working in cotton gins and feedlots and other laboring.

As it does each spring, the tornado season once again has descended on West Texas. And though the season is a constant reminder of what could happen and what did happen, Saragosa's people are "gradually yielding to a better mood, more relax attitude, more openness" and are returning to normalcy "after the trauma," said Cervantes, who pastors both the Balmorhea church and the Saragosa mission.

The new church, which may seat 300 or more in its sanctuary, has facilities for retreats, workshops, study sessions, wakes and Masses.

The church building is adorned with sandstone-red colors so as "not to be excessively somber" and "not to give the impression of sadness but rather a sense of resignation, serenity, and acceptance," the priest said.

But just in case another severe storm descends on the community between Pecos and Fort Davis and within sight of the Davis Mountains, the Saragosa Multi-Purpose Center rests over an underground storm shelter designed to hold the people here should another tornado threaten them.

And at least one family, that of Frank and Natividad Ramirez, have built a storm cellar, bolstered by concrete and railroad ties, next to their blue house. Their new house was built by the Texas Baptist Men, a volunteer group of men who rebuild communities following disasters, with materials supplied by the American Red Cross.

"Thank God," said Mrs. Ramirez, a 47-year-old teacher's aide in nearby Balmorhea, "we didn't lose any family."

Her family had huddled safely in the bathroom while the tornado's force tore away most of the old house.

"It first came through here," she recalled, "and it jumped to the other side of the creek, and then it came back."

The 1987 tornado has brought the family closer together.

But rainfall, which is so dear and most necessary to the dry land, today frightens them when it is accompanied by dark clouds.

"We stick together," said Mrs. Ramirez. "We used to go see how it rained and all that — to meet the rain" as if to welcome the falling moisture to the West Texas dry lands.

"Now, we don't want anything to do with the rain," she lamented.

Jose Rosalio "Chalio" Candelas, a 69-year-old Saragosa grocer who survived the tornado which came on what he calls "the night of the black moon," remembers seeing houses and mobile homes "blow" apart and watching power-line poles "go inside" the half-mile-wide sweeping tornado. The sound of the rushing storm was similar to that of low-flying jet aircraft zooming overhead, he said.

Still, if another tornado even appears near Saragosa, Candelas, who has lived here since 1940, is bound to stay.

"I like this piece of land," he said.

His wife, Pas, said that the tornado was similar to a grand, sweeping broom.

"It was sweeping everything," she said. "I was scared to death — scared of the tornado."

But since then, she does not become overly wrought by dark clouds.

Arctic front drops about 5 inches of snow

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Arctic air that roared into West Texas early Saturday combined with an upper-level storm system, producing snowfall up to five inches. The snow, blown by strong swirling winds, coated area roads and made travel dangerous.

Several traffic accidents, but no serious injuries, were reported in Midland. Most of the mishaps were blamed on slick streets. Blowing snow in rural areas at times reduced visibility to near zero, and a winter storm warning was issued late Saturday, the Department of Public Safety reported.

After a predicted record-breaking low temperature below 20 degrees, conditions were expected to improve today, with some sunshine and a high in the low 40s expected, according to Pat Tyra, forecaster with the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport.

The cold front rolled through the Permian Basin from the South Plains at about 1 a.m., when the temperature recorded by the NWS stood at 46 degrees. By 4 a.m. the temperature had dropped to 27 degrees and high winds kicked up, Tyra said.

"The snow began falling just after noon, with no measurable amount until 6 p.m." the forecaster noted. "But after that it increased. Heavier amounts were reported, with between four and five inches reported in Andrews."

Heavy snowfall was also reported Saturday in eastern Pecos and northern Terrell counties, and in Marfa and Alpine, Tyra said.

Forecasters had predicted the late winter storm, but it was quite a sight when it actually appeared, Tyra said.

City hopes to get Texcap funds in June

By CHRIS VAN WAGENEN
Staff Writer

Take the money and run.

Hey, no highway robbery going on here, just some fast thinking on the part of city officials who claim Midland will save millions of dollars over the life of an $18.2 million loan.

That loan — involving Texas Capital Access Program funds — is expected to provide the necessary cash to complete a massive expansion at the city water purification plant with enough left over to construct a two-million gallon elevated storage tank.

"I hope to have an ordinance before council either by March 28 or April 11," said City Finance Director Troy Gifford. "This would be the last act before we borrow any money."

Better known as Texcap, the $750 million public works pool is big talk around city hall these days, if for no other reason than the prospect of borrowing lots of money for years to come at rates below conventional-styled loans.

That's good news for residents — and good news for other cities in Texas when Midland taps it. But it's bad news for investment bankers, who must forgo hefty flow-through or administrative costs that can add up to several hundreds of thousands of dollars in a hurry.

"So far so good," said City Councilman Gordon Marcum II. "The only critical milestone left is reaching a final agreement with Shearson-Lehman Brothers on limiting our liability on those (flow-through) costs."

Legal visas may cost French family right to live in Snyder

By LISA BELKIN
New York Times News Service

SNYDER — When Jack Pointeau came from his native France eight years ago and eventually settled in this small West Texas town, he did everything by the book. He applied for an investor's visa, which is granted to people who intend to invest in the local economy. He renewed that visa every year. He opened a business and paid his taxes.

Now the Immigration and Naturalization Service has told Pointeau that his investments are not substantial enough and that he, his wife, and their four children, will be deported at the end of April.

If he had come to the country illegally, immigration officials agree, he would be eligible for amnesty. But since he entered legally, he has to leave.

Immigration lawyers say his problem is increasingly common. "We've seen hundreds of investors caught in the changing definition of what is a substantial enough investment," said Charles C. Foster, a lawyer in Houston who is past president of the American Immigration Lawyers Association.

"The public tends to focus on the large numbers of people — the undocumented workers from Mexico, the Central American refugees, the boat people from Vietnam," Foster said. "But the INS is squeezing down everywhere, even on Frenchmen in West Texas."

The family came to the United States in the winter of 1981 on a tourist visa. They had just sold a small hotel in Paris and planned to travel around the United States for several months before returning home.

But Pointeau's wife, Francoise, said that they "fell in love with the San Francisco area," and that they were attracted by the freedom to make business decisions that they would have in the United States. Though they spoke no English, they bought a motel in Oakland, north of San Francisco, in the spring of 1982 and applied for an investor's visa, which they got the following September.

The Pointeaus soon discovered, though, that the motel was in a high crime area.

In November 1982, a friend said he knew of another hotel in a quieter town: Snyder, Texas. The Pointeaus sold the California property, and bought the Texas motel in March 1983. They bought a half interest for $212,000 in downpayment and loans. Travelodge Motels and Motor Hotels owned the other half.

"I thought 'it's a nice little town, very quiet,'" Pointeau recalled. "I thought, 'These people live on oil so it will last forever.'"

He was half right. Snyder is a nice little town of about 12,000 people about 70 miles from Abilene. But the oil boom did not last forever, and the fall in oil prices began just as the Pointeaus moved to Texas in the spring of 1983.

The motel has not been more than 30 percent occupied since the family arrived. Instead of buying a house, the Pointeaus live in the vacant rooms and cook in the kitchen behind the registration desk.

For the past six years, Pointeau has juggled a variety of side jobs. He sold frozen food and business cards with photgraphs on them. He designed a postcard of Snyder's mascot, the White Buffalo.

His children went through the local schools, accumulating honors along with their French-tinged Texas drawls. Mrs. Pointeau has been working toward a master's degree in French literature, which she said she will receive this summer, "if we are still here."

Each September, the Pointeaus' attorney, Eva Voisin, filed for an extension of the investor's visa. Last year, the Dallas regional office of the immigration service denied that application, and gave the following explanation: The investor's visa hinged on a "substantial investment," which theirs was not. They must own at least 51 percent of their business to qualify for such a visa and they only owned 50 percent. And their investment must not be their only source of income, and the motel apparently was.

The letter gave them three weeks, until Sept. 30, to sell their motel and leave the country. "How could I sell in three weeks?" Pointeau said. "How can I sell in three years in this economy? They say it is not a substantial investment. How much is enough?"

In this changing political climate, Mrs. Voisin won a six-month extension of the Pointeaus' deportation order, allowing them to stay until April 26. She has asked the immigration service to reconsider the case, and Pointeau is doing what he can to strengthen his status. He purchased the other 50 percent of the motel from Travelodge for $25,000 and he began a second business, a franchise of a company that wraps packages for mailing.

He said he is angry that he is in this position because he entered the country legally. When amnesty was granted to illegal aliens who could prove residency before Jan. 1, 1982, he went to the immigration office in Abilene and attempted to apply. He was told that having a visa made him ineligible.

"There were 300 people in that room," he said, "and I was the only one who knew English. I was the only one who bothered to learn English, and I'm the only one who obeyed the rules. So I'm the one who can't stay."

Pastor teaches would-be deacons how to translate faith into action

RELIGION

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — A class in Christian protest where the final exam may involve being arrested is teaching prospective deacons in the Episcopal Church how to translate their faith into action.

"Primarily, I'm hoping to get across that worship and liturgy are always inherently political because it has to do with ordering of life in the community," said the Rev. William Wylie-Kellerman.

The United Methodist pastor from Detroit discussed the course on a recent winter Saturday as he led a half-hour protest at the University of Michigan's School of Public Health, where scientists have conducted research involving mustard gas and nerve agent weapons.

Even though the class of about 25 members drew little attention as they sang hymns and read from the Bible, Wylie-Kellerman said the protest was important.

"Impact is often more than what is immediately visible," he said.

The course is offered for credit to students in the Episcopal deacon program of the Whitaker School of Theology in Detroit, or to anyone else who wants to transform religious beliefs into activism.

Each class includes a Bible study and a protest worship service against activities such as an institution's military research, weapons construction or investments in South Africa.

The class has been called a course in protest, but Wylie-Kellerman refers to it as a liturgical response to militarism.

"Liturgy is always political because there's a fundamental pledge of allegiance. Worship and liturgy declare an allegiance to the sovereignty of the word of God."

Worship can take on a whole new meaning when a setting changes, he said.

"The same identical prayer service done in a cathedral, moved to the gates of Williams International, you're going to hear the call for repentance in a different way," he said, referring to the cruise missile engine plant in Walled Lake where he will conduct a Pentecost service May 13.

"It's the same commitment and allegiance, but it just cuts you deeper. One of my clearest personal senses involved doing an Easter vigil liturgy at Wurtsmith Air Force Base: cutting the fence and walking down the runway toward the high-security area, looking down at the B-52s and renouncing Satan, renewing my commitment to Christ."

Members of the class say public witness is important.

"We're talking about taking the Gospel and trying to live the Gospel in such a way that what we do in worship really makes a difference in the way we live our lives," said Joan McDonald, of Huntington Woods. "We're trying to make a connection between Sunday and the rest of the week."

"We need to go out of that beautiful little cocoon (a church) onto the streets where people are killing and raping, making weapons that are going to kill. In terms of protest, or marking particular sites, it's making a public witness of our belief."

"It's an issue of peace and justice," said Dave Carlson, of Madison Heights, who hopes to become a deacon candidate. "Bill has taught me how to relate Scripture to contemporary society."

Wylie-Kellerman's course will conclude in May, when members of the class may participate in civil disobedience and could be arrested at Williams International as many other protesters have.

"We're programmed to feel we don't make a difference. That type of thinking can immobilize you," McDonald said. "It's good to be nurtured within a group, as small as it is."

Five barricaded nuns dismiss Vatican order

MORRIS TOWNSHIP, N.J. (AP) — Five nuns entered their sixth month barricaded in their monastery infirmary despite a Vatican opinion that calls for an end to the protest and evicts two women from the religious order.

The Vatican told two of the women whose vows expired during the protest that they they must leave and are no longer considered members of the Order of Discalced Carmelites, the Paterson Diocese announced Friday.

Two others were told they should seek a different convent. A fifth, a 71-year-old nun who suffers heart problems, would be allowed to stay in the Monastery of the Most Blessed Virgin Mary of Mount Carmel, said Tim Manning, a spokesman for Bishop Frank Rodimer.

The nuns said through a spokeswoman that the letters are a last-ditch effort by the bishop to get them to leave.

"Nothing came here with a Vatican seal on it," said the spokeswoman, Betty Sutton. "It's the bishop's final trick to get them out."

Five of the 13 nuns at the monastery locked themselves in the infirmary Oct. 4. They said they feared their pending eviction for protesting liberalizations such as television and candy, which were initiated by the new mother superior, Prioress Mother Theresa Hewitt.

Mother Hewitt has called the lock-in a "scandal" and criticized the rebel nuns for disrupting the cloistered lifestyle at the convent.

Perhaps the nuns' most unwanted notoriety came last week on an episode of "Hooperman," which featured its star, John Ritter, falling in love with a nun — one of five on the program barricaded in their monastery's infirmary, protesting liberalizations at the convent.

Rick Kellard, executive producer for the ABC series, said staff from the show saw news reports about the standoff and thought it would be a good way to have Ritter, who plays San Francisco detective Harry Hooperman, fall in love with a nun.

Strikers paralyze Eastern Airlines, threaten chaos

NATION

MIAMI (AP) — Striking Eastern Airlines workers paralyzed the financially strapped carrier Saturday, overwhelming management efforts to run a skeleton schedule and vowing to incite mass-transit chaos when the workweek starts.

Eastern managers thought they had prepared for the strike that began at 12:01 a.m. by hiring nonunionists and slashing the weekend schedule by up to 75 percent. Many passengers were rerouted to flights offered by rival airlines.

But when most pilots and flight attendants honored the Machinist lines it threw the company's strike battle plan into disarray.

Eastern said it was able to offer 85 flights Saturday. That compared with Eastern's goal of about 260 Saturday flights under its weekend contingency plan and with about 1,000 flights under a normal Saturday schedule.

"We've been able to mount only a limited schedule today," company spokesman Robin Matell said, admitting strike contingency plans fell well below management projections. "We were relying on what the pilots were telling us. Obviously, in that sense, it was a miscalculation."

Matell told a late afternoon news conference that operations were "better this afternoon than this morning" and said the airline expected more pilots to report for work Sunday.

But Ron Cole, Eastern pilots union spokesman, said: "It's very clear the airline isn't going to fly without us. The ball is in management's court."

The leader of the pilots union, Capt. John J. Bavis, accused Eastern in a statement of trying to give the impression that "labor is breaking ranks. This appraisal is either an overly optimistic prayer or an out-and-out lie."

The Machinists and sympathizers said they were mobilizing for massive pickets Monday that threatened to cause rush-hour nightmares, especially in the congested New York metropolitan area. Strikers planned picketing at commuter railroads and received assurances that no rail workers would cross their lines.

"This thing will really take off on Monday, when we take out the railroads," Machinists Local 1894 President Michael O'Connell at Kennedy International Airport said. "And we're prepared to do that."

In Philadelphia, a federal judge enjoined railroad workers in that city's mass transit system from honoring Eastern picket lines, and authorities in New Jersey said they were seeking a similar order against any secondary walkouts. They exhorted commuters to carpool or stay home if the disruption spread.

"There is no question that if the boycott occurs, it will cause massive delays and severely inconvenience New Jersey residents," said state Transportation Department Commissioner Hazel Frank Gluck.

Frank Ortis, a Machinist union local vice president, told The Associated Press the union was considering a picket Monday of Eastern's suppliers and contractors — including the Miami offices of British engine maker Rolls-Royce.

In Washington, John Peterpaul, general vice president of the Machinists, said picketing was organized at Eastern points nationwide and union officials were mapping prospective sites for secondary picketing.

But Transportation Secretary Samuel Skinner said the Bush administration would seek emergency legislation, if necessary, to prohibit strikers from broadening their protest to "hold American industry hostage."

The mass walkout that began at 12:01 a.m. Saturday by 8,500 mechanics, bag handlers and ground crews escalated a 17-month union-management battle at the nation's 7th largest airline which ordinarily schedules more than 1,000 flights with 100,000 passengers daily.

Both sides were deadlocked on $150 million in wage concessions that company boss Frank Lorenzo demanded in order to keep the carrier alive. Talks collapsed in Washington at midnight Friday and no new discussions were planned.

The main target of the striker hostility was Lorenzo, head of Texas Air Corp., which bought Eastern in 1986.

He is widely mistrusted by Eastern workers because of what they call his triumphant union-crushing campaign at sister carrier Continental Airlines in 1983. Many accuse him of provoking the strike to do the same at Eastern.

Union, airline never got close to settlement

WASHINGTON (AP) — Up to the midnight hour, federal mediators were holding out a glimmer of hope that Eastern Airlines might settle with its Machinists union, but in the end a 17-month deadlock remained unstuck.

The two sides were about as far apart as labor and management can get: $200 million.

The airline, facing $1 million-a-day losses, wanted its biggest union to take a 15 percent to 26 percent pay cut totaling $150 million. The union wanted 8 percent salary increases for its 9,100 members at a cost of $50 million, but offered in the final hours to start with a 15-month freeze, chief negotiator Charles Bryan said Saturday.

Each side characterized the other's position as outrageous.

Accusations flew back and forth: The company was out to bust the union. Organized labor wanted a strike to test President Bush. Parent company Texas Air head Frank Lorenzo wanted to chop up and sell off the 60-year-old airline. The union wanted a better deal than other employees who already had taken cuts. Management wanted a better deal than other airlines who operated at a profit without cutting salaries.

Overshadowing the charges and countercharges was already shaken public confidence in air travel because of recent accidents and terrorism, controversy over corporate takeovers such as the one that absorbed Eastern into the nation's largest airline company, and questions about Bush's relationship with organized labor in the first months of his administration.

These and other issues affecting aviation loomed over the final negotiations leading up to 12:01 a.m. Saturday when Bryan, the president of the Eastern local, declared: "It's shut down."

Pressure on both sides to reach a settlement came mostly from the National Mediation Board, which handles labor disputes in the transportation industry. Federal negotiator Harry Bickford had spent more than a year trying to get the two sides together.

Other pressures early on pointed to a strike. Organized labor declared strong support for the union, including pledges to honor picket lines no matter where they are set up. Eastern advertised the editorial support it was getting in its efforts to prevent Bush from stepping in to stop a strike.

Thursday, mediation board Chairman Walter C. Wallace had expressed strong optimism over the first new Eastern proposal in months, enthusiastically telling a news conference it offered a possible "breakthrough" in the talks.

It became clear Friday, however, that there wasn't going to be a breakthrough.

About three hours before the midnight Friday end of a federally imposed 30-day cooling-off period, Wallace said the union had rejected the new offer, which only slightly toned down the proposed salary cuts.

But that was not the end of the negotiation in what was supposed to be a secret Washington location.

Reporters, photographers and television crews gathered in the final hours on the sidewalk in front of the downtown Radisson Park Terrace Hotel to buttonhole negotiators as they entered and left. Hotel officials ushered journalists out of the hotel lobby, but periodically sent out hotel personnel to serve free coffee.

Eastern's team already had set up shop at a different location, which did remain secret. Much of the final bargaining was over the phone, said Wallace.

But a half dozen times during the evening, Eastern negotiators arrived and then left, refusing to talk with reporters.

Members of the Air Line Pilots Association, which represents Eastern's 3,500 pilots, also walked in and out of the meetings, but said little about the talks after issuing a statement threatening what they said would be safe and legal steps that would "substantially delay" flights nationwide.

Union negotiators remained silent to the outside world.

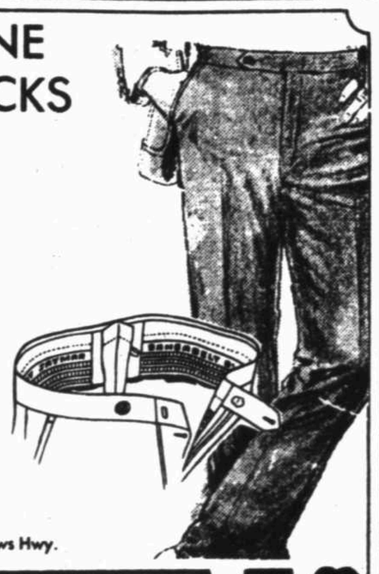

Later, Eastern chief negotiator Tom Matthews told reporters the company made several offers in the last hours, but accused the union of never wavering from its original demand. He said the company had modified its proposals to soften pay cuts.

Its major new offer would have reduced hourly top-scale wages from $18.83 to $16 for aircraft mechanics and from $15.60 to $11.54 for baggage handlers, with no hope of increases for five years.

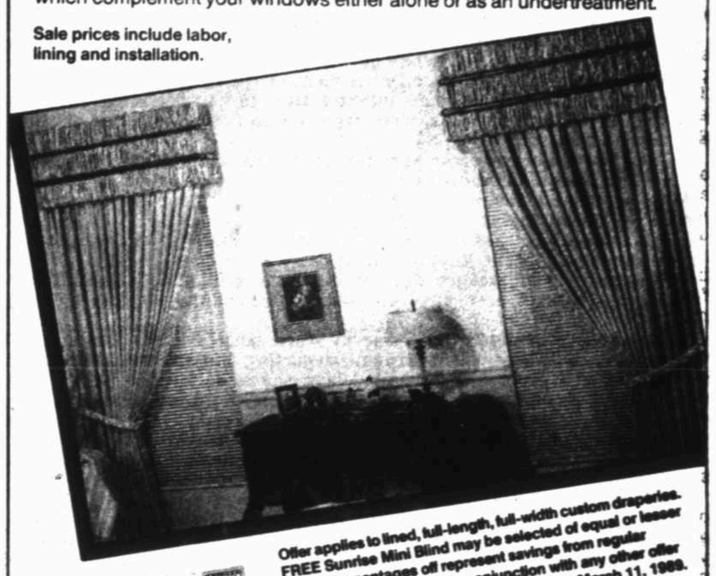

The cuts were a few cents kinder than the offer Eastern stuck with during months of talk, but they were still too harsh for the Machinists. Bryan said Eastern's bargaining demands were virtually the same as they had been since the beginning. The union, on the other hand, offered a 12-month wage freeze, then a 15-month freeze, in its final efforts to avert a strike.

Union demands included sweeping measures such as guarantees from Eastern that it would rebuild itself to its former size. Lorenzo has sold off some of its assets and is awaiting Federal Aviation Administration approval to sell Eastern's lucrative Northeast air shuttle services to New York developer Donald Trump.

WEATHER SUMMARY

SNOW

"The cold front was so rapidly moving by dawn it was already passing San Antonio and approaching Houston," he said. "Ice spread through East Texas and the Dallas-Fort Worth Metroplex."

The snowfall was expected to halt by Sunday morning, the forecaster said.

Sanding trucks from the State Department of Highways and Transportation were called out at 5:45 p.m., minutes after two traffic accidents, one involving an overturned truck, were reported on Intersate 20 east of Midland near a rest stop.

At least two minor accidents were reported at the same intersection, that of Midland Drive and Andrews Highway, according to police.

At the international airport, visibility was limited and one airline, American, cancelled all flights to Dallas-Fort Worth.

Crews worked on taxiways and runways continuously after 5 p.m., said airport operations agent Lupita Gomez.

"We have our maintenance working out here right now," she said late Saturday. "We don't have any cancellations except those called by the airlines."

All American Airlines flights Saturday were cancelled, Ms. Gomez said. None of the Southwest Airlines flights departing Midland was cancelled, though they did experience several delays, she said.

Airport crews performing "braking action" tests on runways and taxiways every half-hour reported no problems, Ms. Gomez said.

Crews also spread gravel on slickened airport roadways, she said.

Midland area law enforcement officers and ambulance crews were kept busy through Saturday with a steady stream of accident calls, one dispatcher reported.

"So far we've probably had four or five (accidents), all of them minor," said Sandi Spaulding, dispatcher with the Midland DPS office. "Right now the streets are becoming slick and ice-covered. In McCamey the visibility is almost zero."

Ms. Spaulding said she had received reports of snowfall up to six inches.

"Travel anywhere is discouraged," she said.

Forecasters predicted a new record low would be set for today. The previous record was 20 degrees in 1966, according to NWS records.

TEXCAP

Last week, Midland City Council passed a resolution authorizing the city to issue water and sewer revenue bonds equal to what will eventually be borrowed from the highly-controversial fund.

That controversy stems from one fact — that no other city in Texas has tapped the fund since it was first issued through the Texas Small Business Industrial Corp nearly three years ago.

City officials say privately that Texcap has been "smoke-screened" by investment bankers, who they say have intentionally clouded the issue. What has made some cities nervous is the fact that the fund was created just prior to the 1986 Tax Reform Act.

Gifford said Midland has to make one more "technical" move before using the fund. That will involve public notice about the city's intent and just what the money will be used for.

Once council takes appropriate action, Gifford said the fund's charter requires a 30-day waiting period before any actual money or paper (the bonds themselves) changes hands.

Texcap was the last pool of its kind set up with an "arbitrage" button that guarantees enhanced earnings on borrowed tax-exempted funds — earnings that have been estimated at a conservative $2 million per year.

In the meantime, Marcum said Gifford and First Southwest Corp. — the city's bond agent — will travel to New York City to ascertain whether Moody's and Standard & Poors intend to keep Midland's bond ratings at current levels. The trip is considered a formality.

"Right now, we're just busy getting the last details together on this application," said Marcum. "We want to have this ready to accept the money sometime in June."

That's fine with city Utilities Director John Lowe, who expects to open bids on the water plant expansion on March 22. "If everything falls into place, we plan to award that project by the end of May."

Lowe said expansion of the existing plant and construction of a 90-million gallon storage reservoir on the city's northwest side could take up to 24 months to complete.

Under the Safe Drinking Water Act, Midland has until 1993 to have its expanded system up and running in order to meet federal mandates established by the Environmental Protection Agency.

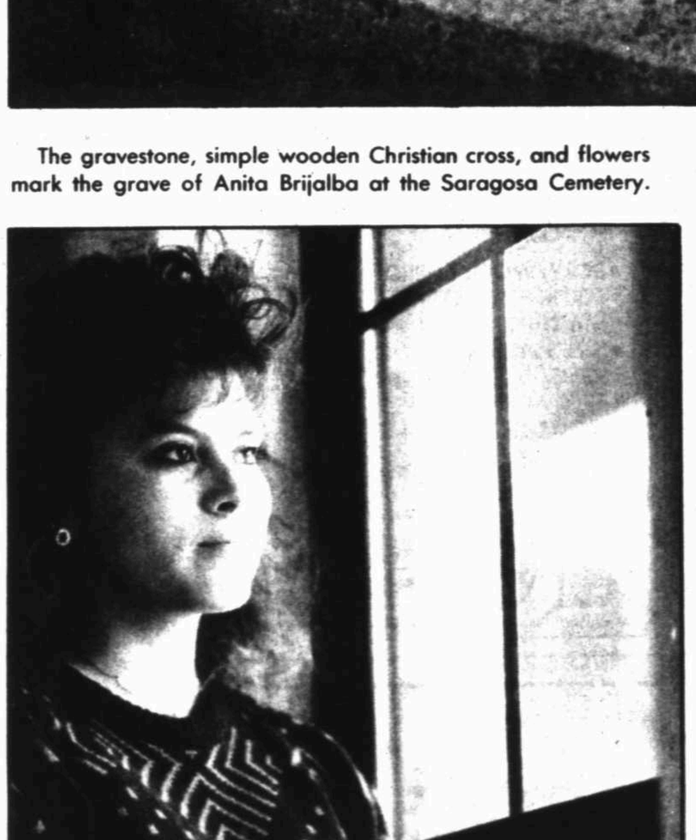

In addition, Lowe said other funds will be set aside to construct a two-million gallon elevated storage tank at the corner of Wadley Avenue and Lamesa Road. That project should be ready to go by September.

The gravestone, simple wooden Christian cross, and flowers mark the grave of Anita Brijalba at the Saragosa Cemetery.

Graves of other victims of the 1987 tornado are throughout the rocky cemetery.

STORM

"The clouds have appeared lots of times here. They never hurt me, so I am not afraid of them. I have to (enjoy life). What else can I do?" Even so, "I'm afraid for the kids," she sighed.

About a mile from the community is the Saragosa Cemetery, where most of the 30 victims of the Saragosa tornado are buried.

Among those is Anita Brijalba, who was 77 when the tornado struck. The woman, a friend of Mrs. Candelas, was "a very nice, hard-working woman. She was by herself. She wasn't married."

Mrs. Candelas and her husband knew all of the victims and their families.

Another victim was 1-year-old Jose Lionel Garza Jr., and his mother, Irma Rodriguez Garza, 30.

"Oh, he was a little bitty fellow," Mrs. Candelas said of the baby. The child was a "very good-looking boy."

Frank Fluentes is a 66-year-old farmer who was in his cotton field when the storm's imminence was signaled by lightning and thunder. He left the field and drove home to his wife, Lilly, and family.

His green house is next door to the blue Ramirez house and storm cellar.

"It (a tornado) happens, and you don't have a chance to do anything," Fluentes said. "If I see a black cloud, I keep my eye on it."

"I don't blame anybody (for the storm), because those things happen," said Fluentes, whose sister, Eva Miras, and brother-in-law, Pedro Miras, perished in the tornado.

His house was destroyed by the furious storm, which left about half of the unincorporated community homeless, in rubble and in grief.

"I could see nothing," he recalled. "Everything is gone. No houses anywhere."

Just as the destroyed church has been replaced by a larger building, so has the old community center been replaced by the spacious brick Saragosa Multi-Purpose Center, funded by the Meadows Foundation of Dallas. Most of the children and their parents were killed in the old community center.

The tornado ravaged the community about 8:20 p.m. on a Friday night, when pre-school boys and girls were about to graduate from the Head-Start Program in the community center.

Aidee Muniz, who is the center's 20-year-old day-care director, escaped the storm after her uncle drove about 12 people out of the community in his car.

"We saw it coming," she said. "It was dark. I was at the house then. I looked out and saw this black funnel cloud. I told my Mom, 'Mom, I think there's a tornado coming.'

"All of a sudden, it was dark, and it was raining and hailing."

The family jumped into the car.

"And we just barely made it out of town," recalled Miss Muniz, who lives on the "other side of town" that virtually escaped the tornado's powerful winds.

Almost as soon as Miss Muniz and her family had fled the tornado, they returned to much desolation. "In a second, everything was down."

"It was lightning real bad. People (were) running around, screaming for help. Everything was just leveled" on the side of town where the church, post office and community center were located.

Two of Miss Muniz's friends, Kathy Escovedo, 17, of Toyah and Elvira Casias, 16, of Saragosa, were killed in the storm.

"I couldn't believe it," she said of the deaths. "I couldn't accept it until I finally went where they had them (the dead)" lying in state for a wake and funeral Mass at the Balmorhea school.

"It's still hard to talk about it," she said. "It's something I will never forget."

Though Miss Muniz said she sometimes feels that surely there was "something" she could have done to "prevent" the deaths, she said that the people of Saragosa "are still going on with their lives. People are still crying."

Somehow, "all of those people could have survived" when the community center collapsed. "I know they could have survived if somebody could have told them (soon enough that) the tornado was coming."

Many died there even though they crawled under tables for protection when the tornado struck and the center was demolished.

At the Saragosa Multi-Purpose Center, children participate in fire and tornado drills. The center has classes for pre-school Head-Start students. Older students are bused to schools in Pecos and Balmorhea.

"They (children) get scared from time to time (in tornado drills), and we go down into the basement," Miss Muniz said.

Diane Jurado, a 29-year-old social worker and the center's building manager-in-training, was not in Saragosa when the tornado invaded the community.

"Even though I wasn't in the tornado, it (ominous weather) scares me," she said. "It would get cloudy and dark, and even I get scared, and I've never been involved in a tornado." Dark clouds shedding rain and lightning and thunder all "reminds me of what those people went through."

"And I am afraid it will happen again. I hope not. I don't think they will ever forget."

Time, Warner unite in 'old-fashioned merger'

NEW YORK (AP) — Time Inc. and Warner Communications Inc. have agreed to combine in an "old-fashioned merger," creating an $18 billion company that would be the world's largest media and entertainment empire, it was announced Saturday.

The resulting conglomerate, Time Warner Inc., would include publishing, film and music interests with estimated annual revenue of $10 billion, the companies said.

The company would surpass Rupert Murdoch's Australian-based News Corp. as the world's biggest company in the field of media and entertainment, which are two of the United States' most successful exports.

"There's never been a deal like this in the media business. This is going to be a frighteningly powerful company," said John S. Reidy, an analyst at Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc.

Some of America's most famous names would combine forces if the deal, which requires shareholder and regulatory approval, is consummated.

Munro

Ross

Time is the nation's leading magazine company, with such titles as Time, People and Sports Illustrated, along with Time-Life Books and the Book-of-the-Month Club.

Time also owns two of the nation's largest pay-cable television networks, HBO and Cinemax.

Warner has major movie and television production interests, including Warner Brothers and Warner Brothers Television and Warner Cable Communications.

Clint Eastwood and Barbra Streisand are regulars with Warner and Steven Speilberg makes some of his movies for the studios. Warner's recording artists include Madonna, Z.Z. Top, U-2, Fleetwood Mac, Prince and Paul Simon.

Warner, through its $1.2 billion acquisition of Lorimar Telepictures Corp. in January, owns such TV programs as Knots Landing, Dallas, People's Court, Alf and Falcon Crest.

This is a merger of equals rather than an acquisition, and thus cannot be directly compared to such megadeals as the nearly $25 billion leveraged buyout late last year of RJR Nabisco Inc. by Kohlberg Kravis Roberts & Co., a Manhattan investment firm.

The new company will have co-chief executive officers and a board of directors made up of equal numbers named by each company.

By merging in what is legally a tax-free pooling of interests, the companies avoid the financial drain that usually accompanies huge acquisitions. Glenn Britt, Time's chief financial officer, called it "an old-fashioned merger."

"I think we can contrast this to a lot of other transactions we see going on in America, where companies end up being over-leveraged and so constrained they can't do anything," Britt said.

"This is a very important business for this country and we think it's significant that we're forming what will be the largest global media company, and that it's American-owned and U.S.-based," Britt said.

Time executives have been predicting recently that there will eventually be about half a dozen global powers in the media and entertainment business and have vowed to make their company one of them.

Time Warner would be jointly led by J. Richard Munro, chairman and chief executive officer of Time Inc., and Steven J. Ross, his counterpart at Warner, according to a statement from both companies.

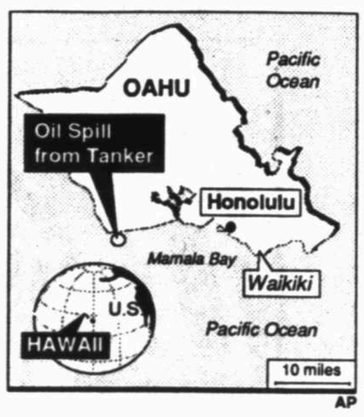

"Our complementary organizations are a perfect fit," Munro and Ross said in a statement.

Crews work to clean beaches of tanker's oil

HONOLULU (AP) — Crews worked Saturday to remove thick oil that had washed in along a 2-mile stretch of shoreline, while the Coast Guard checked damage to a tanker that spilled 33,000 gallons of oil when it ran aground, authorities said.

Coast Guard officials said it appeared no more oil would come ashore, and made a major revision in the estimate of the amount of oil spilled, which originally had been put at 117,000 gallons.

The 800-foot tanker Exxon Houston floated free of a reef Friday evening, about 24 hours after a storm drove it aground off a little-used stretch of coast 15 miles west of Honolulu and its famed Waikiki Beach.

AP

Coast Guard spokesman David Goff said that of 92,000 gallons of bunker fuel oil feared lost from the tanker's ruptured fuel tank, 84,000 were found in the tank Saturday, meaning 8,000 gallons were lost.

About 25,000 gallons of crude oil spilled into the ocean Thursday when the ship tore away from its mooring and floating hoses unloading the oil pulled free.

Some of the spilled oil washed to sea during the night, said Randal O'Grydziak, with the Coast Guard's Marine Safety Office in Honolulu.

"For the most part, it looks pretty good," O'Grydziak said. "Mother Nature overnight has through some tide changes done away with a lot of the (petroleum) product."

He said cleanup crews worked to remove oil-soaked vegetation, soak up oil in water pools in the coral reef and rake the affected beaches.

The state Department of Health had closed beaches along the soiled shoreline, O'Grydziak said.

Libert K. Landgraf, deputy director of the state Department of Land and Natural Resources, said there was no immediate evidence of injury or death to marine life or birds.

Coast Guard spokesman Keith Spangler flew over the tanker and shoreline Saturday morning and said no more oil was visible around the ship or off the coast.

"I really think most of it's ashore," Spangler said.

Coast Guard Lt. Brad Nelson said officials at the scene believed the pollution would be limited to the shoreline already affected.

"They're saying, 'If you have to have an oil disaster, this is the one to have,'" Nelson said.

The Coast Guard's Pacific Area Biological-Chemical Strike Team arrived from San Francisco late Friday and was standing by with a floating boom that skims oil off the ocean surface, Nelson said.

He said the team had not decided whether to use the 612-foot boom, which is towed between two ships.

The Clean Islands Council, a Hawaii oil spill cleanup cooperative, was contracted to perform the cleanup by Exxon Co. USA, the Houston-based domestic oil and gas division of Exxon Corp. Exxon Co. USA, will pay for the costs of the cleanup, according to Exxon attorney Leonard Alcantara.

Officials had planned to wait until high tide early Saturday to attempt to remove the tanker from the reef.

But it floated free on its own late Friday after workers pumped off more than 9,400 tons of ballast water.

Ex-Klansman Duke calls Jesse Jackson 'racist'

CHICAGO (AP) — David Duke, the former Ku Klux Klansman recently elected to the Louisiana General Assembly, called Jesse Jackson a "racist" Saturday and said affirmative action and minority set-aside programs should be abolished.

"I think the racists in this city are people like Jesse Jackson," Duke said at a news conference after addressing the national convention of the right-wing Populist Party of America.

Following the news conference, Duke posed with American Nazi Party vice chairman Art Jones, who shouted anti-Semitic and racial slurs at reporters and got into a shoving match with a television reporter who asked Duke about his connection to Jones.

The three-day convention that began Friday at a downtown hotel was attended by about 200 people, some of whom identified themselves as Ku Klux Klansmen and neo-Nazis.

"I think Jesse Jackson needs to back off his racist politics throughout the city," Duke told reporters. He called affirmative action, minority set-aside programs and integration of schools "racially discriminatory."

Set-aside programs ensure that a certain percentage of federal, state and local government contractors are minorities.

Jackson, reached at O'Hare International Airport where he was showing support for striking Eastern Airlines workers, declined comment on Duke's statements, except to say, "I don't think it's an American point of view."

Duke, who ran as the Populist Party's presidential candidate in 1988, won his Louisiana Legislature seat on the Republican ticket. He said he had agreed to address the group's annual meeting before his victory in Louisiana.

"I am a Republican. I will remain a Republican despite whatever Mr. (Lee) Atwater wants to do," Duke said.

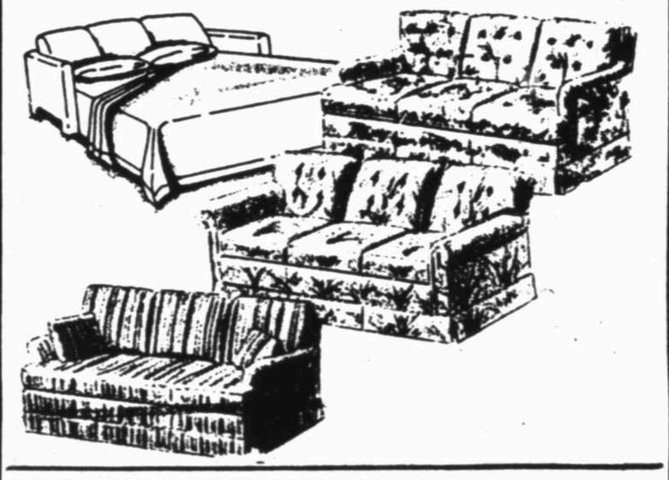

Atwater, chairman of the Republican Party, denounced Duke following his election victory.

Retired sergeant sticks to Tower story

By WILLIAM ROBBINS
New York Times News Service

PROTEM, Mo. — Despite efforts by senators to discredit him, a retired Air Force sergeant continued to insist Saturday that the dignitary he saw under the influence of alcohol on two occasions at an Air Force base in Texas was John G. Tower.

"I believe the man I saw was Sen. John Tower," Bob Jackson said Saturday in an interview at his mountainside mobile home in the Ozarks. "It would be hard for me to mistake John Tower. And I have been trained to observe people, places and things."

Jackson's allegations about Tower were made public several days ago by The Washington Post and other publications.

Thursday, Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., read portions of the sergeant's medical reports indicating that Jackson had serious psychological problems.

But the former technical sergeant said Saturday that despite efforts to label him as someone with psychological problems, he would take the same action again that he took early in February in calling the FBI to report what he had seen.

"I can't believe that the Air Force would treat me that way," he said in a wounded tone.

The former sergeant, 54, a tall, husky man who is writing a book and living on his military pension and disability payments, made the remarks after displaying a voluminous service record and a long series of performance reports signed by superior officers.

The performance reports were studded with words like "outstanding," "extremely dedicated," "knowledgeable" and "conscientious."

The sergeant received one of the most enthusiastic appraisals at the Rhein Main Air Force Base in 1974 by a superior, Col. Cornelius Nugteren.

"Technical Sergeant Jackson approaches all his tasks with a common-sense manner and has initiated actions on many areas that could be improved," the colonel said. "He has the ability to establish an immediate rapport with everyone from airmen to general and he uses it effectively in establishing a high degree of credibility with everyone he briefs.

"There are no functions or responsibilities that I would not entrust to Sergeant Jackson in full confidence."

Jackson continued to insist Saturday the incidents he was describing occurred at Bergstrom Air Force Base in Austin, Texas, in the period when he was there as the chief noncommissioned officer on a public information staff in charge of five enlisted men.

His duties, according to his performance report, involved administering the "community relations and public affairs activity as chief of that division. That means chief non-commissioned officer of that public information division. His responsibilities included managing media relations, answering noise complaints, supervising base tour programs and publicizing special events."

Rhett Dawson, a former Tower aide who is in charge of the transition at the Pentagon, has maintained that the nominee for defense secretary had visited Bergstrom only once, in August 1975, before Jackson was assigned to duty there.

A spokesman for Tower, who insisted on anonymity, said Saturday that "our answer to Jackson is the same one it was when the story first broke and that is that it is a plain damn lie." The spokesman said Jackson "lied about what his position was" on the base at the time.

Jackson said he was the senior non-commissioned officer in charge of the public relations unit on the base. But Robert E. Russell, a retired lieutenant colonel who was the base public information officer at the time, said that was not entirely true.

Before his retirement in July 1979, Jackson received a commendation, a copy of which he showed a reporter, on his performance in that post. The two events occurred, the sergeant said, in the period from Sept. 7, 1976, to April 18, 1978. But he said he could not be precise about the dates, explaining that they did not seem important at the time.

He went on to describe what he had told the FBI.

On the first occasion, he said, he saw a man he identified as Tower coming onto the base to "catch a ride somewhere" on one of the Air Force transport planes. "He was stumbling out of his car," Jackson said.

"He had difficulty walking. His motor movements were not what they should be. When I got closer to him there was an odor of alcohol. I could smell it when I was standing at the door as he passed by. He went from there to the flight line."

On another occasion, he said, he was on the flight line where planes were coming in, and on one flight line there was a "female crew chief."

He said a man, whom he identified as Tower, had just gotten out of a plane. Jackson said the man "appeared to be under the influence of alcohol and his motor movements were slow. He was overly cautious in walking although he did not stumble. His was not the carriage of a sober person."

The man he identified as Tower, who was then a senator from Texas, was accompanied by at least two people, Jackson said.

"The entourage stopped at the flight line where the flight crew was.

"The female crew chief, being an oddity, was introduced. Senator Tower approached and put his hand on her shoulder as if to say 'atta girl. His hand left her shoulder and slid down her back and brushed her bottom. It could easily have been described as accidental."

The description in the sergeant's service records is difficult to relate to the man described in one medical evaluation as average.

In the records produced by Jackson, the reviewing officers rating him in a long series of performance reports marked his performance as superior, with few exceptions rating the characteristics on a scale of zero to nine gave him the highest ratings, usually nine, but in some instances, dropping down to an eight. His last performance rating, dated Feb. 23, 1977, gave him nines and eights.

In a written summary, the reviewing officer said "Technical Sergeant Jackson, although new to the information career field, actively implies innovative solutions to the most critical problem areas, began an on-the-job training program and bolstered morale with his sincere approach to people and their problems."

Under a category called "Recommended Improvement," though, the rating said, "Technical Sergeant Jackson's high degree and dedication to his ideals and those of the Air Force, has, on occasion been interpreted as impatience with superiors and their prerogatives. Without meaning to be disrespectful, Technical Sergeant Jackson's idealism can interfere with communicating his first concern which has always been the effective and fair management of people."

Shortly before Jackson's retirement after 20 years of service, he was given physical and psychological examinations.

The first of those in early February cited medical disabilities including "early degenerative arthritis," in both knees, one of them the result of an old knee injury. The first medical report cited him as "normal when rating his psychiatric characteristic.

But a subsequent rating given him by a psychiatrist on the occasion of his final medical review included these words: "Mixed personality disorder; anti-social themes and hysterical features."

Jackson said Saturday. "That was the only time I ever saw him. And he and I just didn't get along."

Tower effort not lost cause, official says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Secretary-designate John Tower has moved out front in the Bush administration effort to salvage his nomination, pleading the case publicly and setting the stage for a possible last-ditch stand on the Senate floor.

A White House official insisted Saturday the effort is not a lost cause.

"We've still got some good prospects," among Democrats who would be needed to provide a majority vote in Tower's favor, said the official, speaking on condition of anonymity.

"We could still pull it out," the official said. "I admit it's very tough."

Tower, in comments published in today's editions of The Washington Post, said the Senate would be "damning the president's judgment" if it rejects his nomination and said he will not withdraw unless requested to do so by the president.

"The important thing is a majority of the Senate is going to subordinate the president's judgment to its own in the selection of people that the president feels he can rely on," Tower said in the interview with a small group of reporters.

Tower, who has pledged to abstain from alcoholic beverages if he becomes defense secretary, reiterated his contention that he does not have a drinking problem but said he has not stopped drinking entirely.

"I still have a glass of wine in the evening with dinner, although it's not on a daily basis," he said.

As the number of Democrats on record against the nomination grew, Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole raised the prospect of bringing Tower to the Senate floor to answer allegations against him.

"The request would be that John Tower be allowed to come to this chamber, to stand in this well, and to answer his critics face-to-face, charge-by-charge, rumor-by-rumor and fact-by-fact," the Kansas Republican said Friday.

Dole did not formally ask permission for Tower, once a senator himself, to speak from the floor, but said he was considering introducing such a motion.

"If we owe Senator Tower anything, we owe him the right to say, 'I've had my day in court,'" Dole said.

Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell said he would be "happy to consider any request" by the minority leader.

49 mushers charge off

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — Throngs crowding a downtown street covered with trucked-in snow cheered Saturday as 49 mushers and hundreds of dogs charged off on the first leg of the 1,168-mile Iditarod Trail Sled Dog Race from Anchorage to Nome.

The 17th annual race over the Alaska Range, across desolate stretches and along the storm-raked coast began in clear, windy weather at 9 a.m., with veteran musher Jerry Austin of St. Michael first out of the chute.

Susan Butcher, aiming for her fourth consecutive win and the $50,000 winner's share of the $250,000 purse, was 19th to leave in the succession of departures spaced two minutes apart. Rival Rick Swenson of Two Rivers, the only person to win the race four times, was No. 22.

"I feel great! I feel great!" Butcher, 33, of Manley said with a laugh as she hugged a well-wisher before the start of her 12th Iditarod. Last year, she finished in just under 11 days and 12 hours.

"I think that I can take the pressure," she said. "I know that everybody's gunning for me, I know that everybody's after me, but I don't see how they can be more after me than they were last year."

Light quake shakes canyon

WASHINGTON (AP) — A light earthquake shook the Grand Canyon National Park in Arizona Saturday, the U.S. Geological Survey said.

The tremor was recorded at a preliminary magnitude of 4.0 on the Richter scale and occurred at 6:41 p.m. CST, or 5:41 p.m. local time, said Survey spokesman Don Finley.

The Geological Survey's earthquake monitors in Golden, Colo., showed that the tremor was centered about 10 miles southwest of Grand Canyon Village and about 65 miles northwest of Flagstaff, Ariz., Finley said.

Saturday's earthquake was in the same area as several other earthquakes in the 3.0 magnitude range that occurred last September, Finley said.

Finley said there was no immediate information on whether the quake caused any damage.

Voracious sea lion returns

SEATTLE (AP) — A sea lion relocated to the Pacific Ocean in a campaign to stop the mammals from feasting on local fish returned to its hunting grounds here after traveling nearly 300 miles, a wildlife official said Saturday.

The California sea lion spotted near the Ballard ship locks Friday afternoon was the first relocated animal to return.

"He obviously likes it here," said Bob Byrne of the state Department of Wildlife. "He knows a good life when he finds one."

The sea lions wait by the locks and pick off steelhead, a seagoing trout, and salmon that are en route to their spawning grounds.

Officials have trapped 18 sea lions so far using a floating cage. Two died after being sedated for tagging and five more were released at the locks because of cold weather.

Man on FBI list arrested

BUTTE, Mont. (AP) — A man on the FBI's Ten Most Wanted list for fleeing child molestation charges was arrested while living under an alias at a campground, the FBI said Saturday.

Roger Lee Jones, 43, of Sarasota, Fla., was arrested at a KOA campground on burglary charges stemming from a February service station robbery in Great Falls, 150 miles north of Butte, FBI agent Toby Harding said.

Jones, who used the alias Mike Andrews, admitted his true identity in custody, Harding said.

He was held without bond in the Great Falls jail on charges of burglary and felony theft, and was scheduled to appear before a Cascade County justice of the peace Monday, Great Falls police Sgt. Russell Sinnott said.

INS actions called 'chilling'

ALBUQUERQUE (AP) — The president of the nation's largest Hispanic group said the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service's recent handling of asylum applicants in southern Texas is will have a chilling effect on the Hispanic community.

"We are arbitrarily sending people back to Central America," Jose Garcia de Lara, president of the League of United Latin American Citizens, said Friday.

"It is appalling to make someone prove they are being persecuted when we are the ones sponsoring those wars," he said.

He spoke in Albuquerque as part of a panel sponsored by the national office of Substance Abuse and Prevention.

He said the league, with 140,000 members nationwide, will oppose the renomination of INS Commissioner Alan Nelson.

"Commissioner Nelson has sent a chilling effect through the Hispanic community by the way his office has been dealing with immigration," de Lara said.

Man arrested after threats

LAKEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — A man has been arrested for allegedly telling children at a school that he was going to get an assault rifle and kill them, Los Angeles County authorities said.

James Rollin McLane, 27, was arrested Friday and booked for felony investigation of threatening schoolchildren, sheriff's Deputy Hal Grant said. No weapons were found in his home.

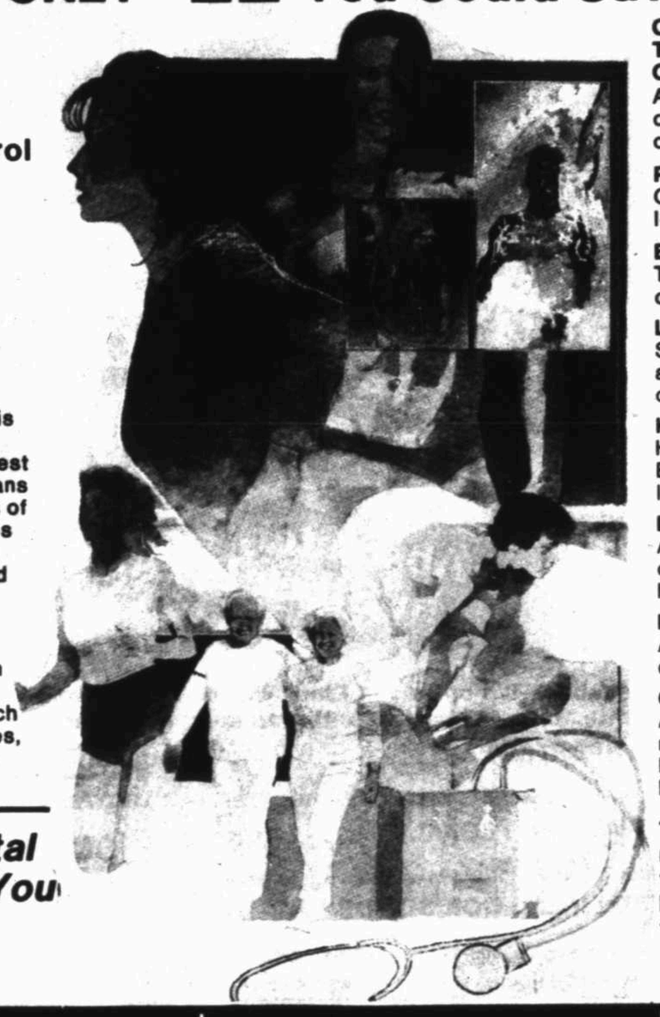

McLane, described as an unemployed painter, allegedly made the threat Wednesday during recess at Grover Cleveland Elementary School.

"He confronted several schoolchildren through a chain-link fence and told them he was going home to get an AR-15 rifle," Grant said. "He said he was going home and would return to kill them."

500 protesters jeer 'Aryan Woodstock'

NAPA, Calif. (AP) — About 500 protesters turned out in a cold rain Saturday to jeer 100 neo-Nazi skinheads attending a white supremacist rally that had been billed as an "Aryan Woodstock."

About 200 police, some of them in riot gear, kept the demonstrators in a soggy field about a mile from the whites-only gathering at a ranch in Napa County about 40 miles northeast of San Francisco.

Protesters yelled "Nazis go home!" and other taunts, and wielded placards with such messages as "My Family Died Because of Facism."

William Herrell, 88, of San Jose, was slightly injured during the four-hour protest when he was dragged across a barbed-wire fence by demonstrators when he tried unsuccessfully to enter the rally.

"I don't want to destroy other races. I just want to keep them separate," Bob Spittler, a member of the Aryan National Socialists, said as the rally began Friday night.

Among the protesters Saturday was Irv Rubin of Los Angeles, national chairman of the Jewish Defense League.

"People of good will cannot ignore this," Rubin said. "No matter how small their number, there has to be a statement against their ideology. This is a battle of humanity versus the forces of evil ... if we don't expose it, it's kind of like letting a cancer grow on the body politic."

Organizer Tom Metzger, a former Ku Klux Klan leader who heads a group called White Aryan Resistance, had estimated that 2,000 people would attend, but Napa County Sheriff's Deputy Richard Lonergan estimated attendance at about 100.

The event was initially billed as an "Aryan Woodstock" because organizers had hoped to present performances by the skinhead bands Midtown Boot Boys from Oklahoma, the Hammerheads from Wisconsin and Hakenkreuz from Detroit.

However, Napa County Superior Judge W. Scott Snowden ruled that a permit was needed for the musical portion of the event.

Metzger, who had argued a permit was not needed because the concert was to be held on private property and admission was by invitation only, decided to go ahead with the political portion of the rally.

Britain assures Rushdie of support

WORLD

LONDON (AP) — The government assured novelist Salman Rushdie of its unwavering support Saturday, and Iran suggested London could defuse the crisis over Rushdie's new novel by banning the book and prosecuting the writer.

The Indian-born author questioned government support for him Friday after Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and Foreign Secretary Sir Geoffrey Howe said Rushdie's "The Satanic Verses" has offended some Britons as well as Moslems.

Tehran Radio welcomed their statements Saturday but demanded Britain take "concrete action."

"The British government, by accepting that the book is insulting, cannot object to the death sentence on the writer, which has been issued in line with Sharia (Islamic law)," it said.

Iran's parliament speaker, Hashemi Rafsanjani, considered leader of the pragmatist camp within the Iranian hierarchy, said the rift over the book "seems difficult to heal."

"Even if the apostate Rushdie is executed, if Britain apologizes or if the book is withdrawn, the rift remains part of a global arrogance plot," the radio quoted Rafsanjani as saying. He offered no suggestions as to how the controversy could be resolved.

Britain repeatedly has demanded Iran's spiritual leader, Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, rescind his Feb. 14 death sentence on Rushdie for writing the novel, which some say insults Islam.

The Foreign Office reiterated Saturday that Britain will not discuss the Rushdie affair with Iran until the death threat is withdrawn.

PLO seeks 'serious' negotiations with U.S.

KUWAIT (AP) — A newspaper Saturday quoted a PLO spokesman as saying informal talks with U.S. officials are "beating around the bush" and that "serious" dialogue focusing on an international peace conference should begin.

The comments by Yasser Abd-Rabboo, the PLO's information department chief, were reported by the Al-Anbaa newspaper.

Abd-Rabboo was quoted as saying the Palestine Liberation Organization "notified Washington a week ago that it was time to resume a serious and in depth dialogue to prepare for an international conference."

"Dragging on with informal contacts that have been taking place in Tunis is beating round the bush and will not help bring about a settlement," the newspaper quoted him as saying.

Abd-Rabboo could not be reached directly for comment, according to an aide in Tunis, who demanded anonymity. There was no immediate reaction from the State Department. It did not return telephone calls from The Associated Press.

Fire threatens coastal forest

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — More than 150 firefighters and volunteers Saturday battled a forest fire in the Monte Pascoal National Park, the last great wildlife reserve of Brazil's Atlantic coastal forest and home to about 1,000 Indians.

Firefighters have been unable to contain the blaze, which entered the park Friday, fire chief Solange Borges of the Brazilian Forestry Institute said.

Borges said the fire had already destroyed more than 62 acres of the park, which is 900 miles northeast of Rio de Janeiro. He spoke by telephone from the city of Salvador, 1,055 miles northeast of Rio.

The park is the last untouched sanctuary for rare wildlife and vegetation on the Brazilian coast and is home to 1,000 Pataxo indians who live on a reserve in it.

The fire began 28 days ago as a series of brush fires throughout the northeastern state of Bahia. It has destroyed more than half Brazil's Atlantic Forest, sweeping south through more than 80,000 acres of virgin wilderness.

Laos delays joint search

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Laos Saturday postponed a scheduled joint excavation with the United States to search for the remains of missing American soldiers, a spokesman for the U.S. Embassy in Bangkok said.

A 14-member team of U.S. experts was to fly to Laos aboard two C-130 transport planes Sunday morning for the dig, but the Laotians did not give the planes clearance to enter, spokesman Ross Petzing said.

Petzing refused to comment when asked why Laos put the project on hold.

However, the Laotians may have been irritated when the United States earlier this week criticized them for allegedly failing to cooperate in the war against narcotics.

An annual report that Secretary of State James Baker sent to Congress lists a handful of countries that it declares ineligible for U.S. aid because of their support for drug trafficking.

Soviets print Bush book

MOSCOW (NYT) — The Soviet Union has published 50,000 Russian-language copies of President Bush's campaign autobiography, "Looking Forward."

The Foreign Ministry spokesman, Gennadi I. Gerasimov, said the publication Thursday marked the first time that a "a book of this kind, showing the human development of a U.S. president" had been made available in the Soviet Union.

Nigerian author threatened for his defense of Rushdie

New York Times News Service

LAGOS, Nigeria — Islamic militants have threatened to kill Wole Soyinka, the author and Nobel laureate, for his defense of Salman Rushdie and the British author's right to publish "The Satanic Verses," according to diplomats and news reports here.

The threat followed publication of an article in several Nigerian newspapers in which Soyinka called Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini of Iran a "sick and dangerous man who has long forgotten the fundamental tenets of Islam."

"If Salman Rushdie dies, then his work must be unleashed upon an expanding leadership by every available means," Soyinka wrote, "and the ayatollah must be punished for his arrogance, for his hubris and the implicit blasphemy in his arrogation of a supreme will."

Soyinka's remarks have drawn strong protests from Nigeria's large Islamic population.

In the northern city of Kaduna last week, about 300 Moslems reportedly marched through the center of town where a letter of protest against Rushdie was handed over to the British consul.

According to an independent newspaper, The Democrat, some of the placards read "Hand Over Rushdie for Justice" and "Wole Soyinka must die."

A Western diplomat said there were similar demonstrations in several other cities in the north, which is predominantly Moslem.

Reports that Soyinka had personally received death threats could not be confirmed.

Several telephone calls made over several days to his home in Lagos have gone unanswered.

Soyinka, who is regarded as a fierce champion of political freedom in Africa, was awarded the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1986. It was the first time that the Swedish Academy had awarded the prize to an African writer.

The 55-year-old writer was the son of Christians, but much of his poetry and prose has been dominated with elements from his Yoruba ancestry.

Yusufu Mamman, a spokesman for the head of Nigeria's military government, Gen. Ibrahim Babangida, said: "We don't have an official position on this issue because we are a secular state. At the same time, we respect the sensitivities of people of different cultures and backgrounds."

He added: "We have never had a case of anyone killed on account of expressing his opinion on any issue."

VERSES

Rushdie, 41, who was born into a Moslem family in India, is in hiding. Friday he telephoned the office of Paddy Ashdown, leader of the centrist Social and Liberal Democratic Party, and said he was worried about the commitment of the government's support for him.

Asked to comment Saturday on Rushdie's misgivings, Mrs. Thatcher said: "I want to say that the government has not changed its position at all on this."

The Sunday Times reported that some British artists had "succumbed to the climate of fear caused by widening Moslem intimidation."

It said an unnamed BBC broadcaster, acting on police advice, withdrew an article on the controversy from The Sunday Times. It also said a painting featuring Khomeini in a critical light which has been on display throughout Britain has been dropped from a forthcoming exhibit at London's Covent Garden.

The weekly Observer reported that at the British Library, "The Satanic Verses" is locked on a shelf reserved for rare books and pornography, and can only be read in a high-security reading room.

Home Secretary Douglas Hurd, who joined Mrs. Thatcher at a Conservative Party conference in London, was asked about reports that Rushdie fears for his continued police protection.

"The protection is afforded to him by the police — not because he requests it, not at my direction, but because it's their professional assessment that he needs that protection," he said.

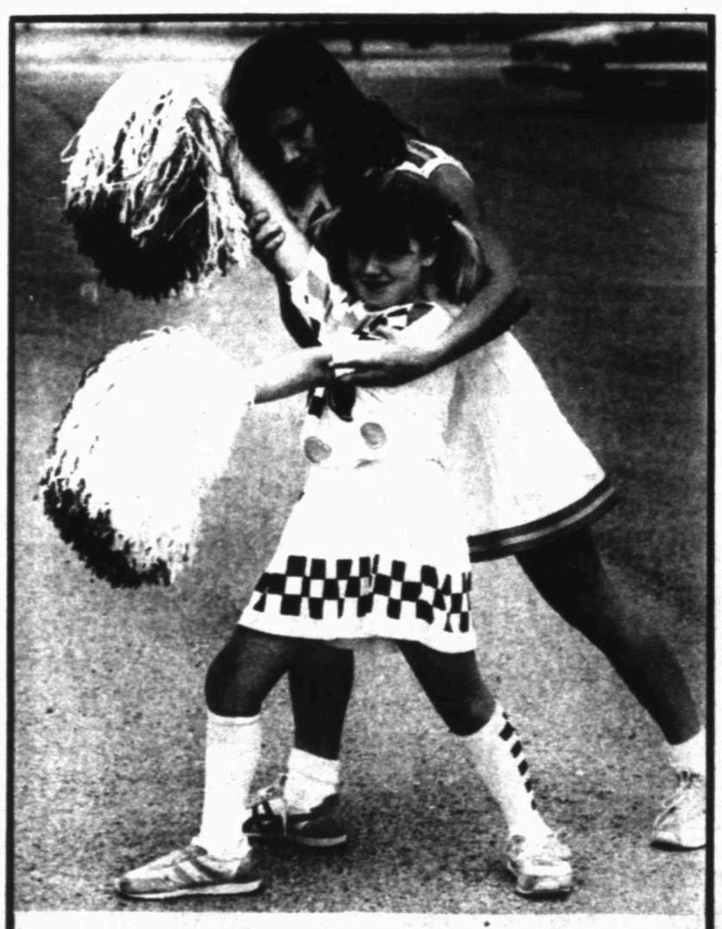

Hurd said he understood "the hurt and insult being felt" by Moslems over the book, but "the overwhelming majority" of Britons accept Rushdie's right to free expression.

Tehran Radio called on the British government to clarify "whether or not freedom of expression and writing can be a license for defamation and insult.

At least 5 killed in British train wreck

LONDON (AP) — A passenger train struck the back of another train outside London Saturday, sending rail cars careening into the yards of nearby homes and killing at least five people, police said. As many as 80 people were hurt.

Earlier death tolls in the capital's second major rail accident in less than three months ran as high as 12 but could not be confirmed.

Scotland Yard put the confirmed death toll at five dead and 80 injured. Earlier it had said six died. It did not explain the change.

St. Helier Hospital reported two deaths there, and Mayday Hospital's emergency chief, Kambiz Hashemi, said three people were dead at that hospital.

Reports of deaths reached 12 earlier in the day when Hashemi reported four dead at Mayday and six more dead at the scene of the crash — a claim that could not later be confirmed. There also was apparent confusion over the number of times the two deaths at St. Helier had been counted.

Hashemi said his hospital admitted 52 casualties, 20 of them in serious or critical condition. Twenty-four were discharged and three transferred to hospitals specializing in head and spinal injuries.

Firefighters had to cut dozens of passengers from the wreckage of the trains, and authorities said some were trapped for hours after the 1:39 p.m. collision near the Purley station in Surrey.

Both trains originated in southeast England cities and were traveling north to London.

A British Rail spokesman said it appeared a train that originated in Horsham, West Sussex, was crossing from the local line to a main track when it ran into the back of a train that originated in Littlehampton.

Littlehampton is about 50 miles south of London and Horsham is about 30 miles south of the city.

The spokesman, speaking on condition of anonymity, said it was not known why both trains were on the northbound track at the same time.

The trains collided a few hundred yards outside the station on London's southern outskirts, sending several cars hurtling down an embankment into the yards of homes, witnesses said. It was not known if anyone was hurt in the houses.

Several rail cars came to a precarious rest on the steep slope, and residents were advised to leave their homes until the wreckage could be cleared.

Soldiers keep Peace Now out of West Bank

ATAROT, Occupied West Bank (AP) — Soldiers Saturday blocked roads and turned back hundreds of Israeli peace activists hoping to meet and discuss peace with Palestinians in the occupied West Bank.

In the occupied Gaza Strip, the army restricted access for reporters while British Foreign Office Minister William Waldegrave toured the Jabaliya refugee camp. At least two Palestinians were reported shot and wounded in violent protests that broke out after the visits.

Angry activists of the Peace Now movement accused Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin of thwarting the meetings with Palestinians in Arab towns.

"We weren't planning assemblies or marches or protests — just meetings," said Peace Now spokesman Tsali Reshef.

One of the activists, Yochanan Spruch of Jerusalem, called the government "plain stupid."

Reshef called a Defense Ministry spokesman and demanded an explanation for closing the roads. He quoted ministry spokesman Eitan Haber as saying Peace Now did not receive permission for the visit.

Parliament member Ran Cohen accused Rabin of bowing to pressure from right-wing Jewish settlers who oppose the peace meetings. Settlement leaders launched a campaign Friday to stop the meetings and urged Rabin to block the contacts, saying they would encourage terrorism.

A Defense Ministry official who demanded anonymity said the army was concerned Jews would clash with fellow Jews if the meetings took place.

Five separate convoys of Israelis left Jerusalem, Tel Aviv, Haifa and Beersheba for West Bank villages early on the Jewish Sabbath, and all were stopped by army roadblocks, activists said.

In one case, activists headed for southern Hebron abandoned their cars at army roadblocks and walked to the village of Beit Sahour, where they held an impromptu peace rally, Israel Radio said.

Venezuelans pay human price for $420 billion foreign debt

By ROBERT GLASS

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP) — The blood bath triggered by Venezuela's attempt to revive its economy underscores the gravity of Latin America's $420 billion foreign debt.

Venezuela, the world's eighth-largest oil producer, has long been regarded as an oasis of prosperity and stability in a region swamped by poverty and political upheaval.

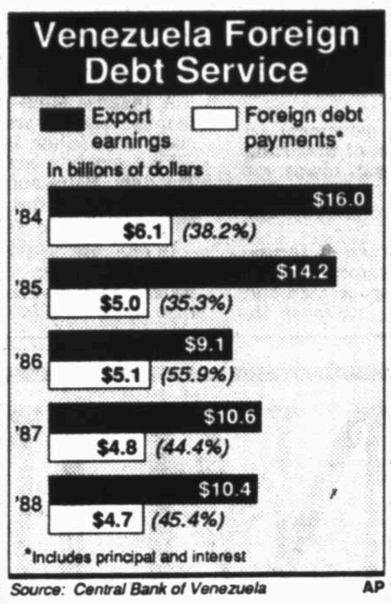

But last week, rioting left at least 300 people dead. Venezuelans, accustomed to three decades of democratic rule, witnessed the specter of soldiers and tanks patrolling the capital under martial law.

The disturbances broke out Monday when bus fares rose 30 percent by government decree. At the same time, prices on a range of basic goods and services such as gasoline, bread and electricity rose sharply under the government's economic-adjustment program, which also provided for a rise in interest rates and a currency devaluation.

To offset price increases, the government doubled the minimum wage to the equivalent of $110 a month. But for many Venezuelans, the wage increases were cut in half by higher transport fares alone.

President Carlos Andres Perez announced the measures Feb. 16, two weeks after taking office, to satisfy requirements of the International Monetary Fund and Western creditor banks. The main requirement was that Venezuela lift government subsidies that had kept prices artificially low for years.

Had the government not imposed the price increases, Perez said Friday, it would have had no chance of obtaining $4.8 billion in loans from the IMF.

He linked the civil unrest directly to Venezuela's $33 billion foreign debt, saying interest payments were consuming 70 percent of oil revenues and undermining the nation's ability to provide for its 18 million people.

Moreover, the president said debt-burdened nations throughout Latin America were vulnerable to similar uprisings spawned by economic hardship.

"I hope this painful sacrifice by our country will cause the leaders of the industrial powers to reflect that we are not exaggerating when we say the crisis is serious," Perez said.

According to a study last year by the Caracas-based Latin American Economic System, a regional think tank, the region spent $139 billion from 1982 to 1987 in servicing foreign debt. Not only did that not dent the obligation, debt actually grew over the period, mostly because of more loans just to pay interest.

If the trend continues, the organization said, the standard of living of Latin Americans will not return to levels of the 1970s until the year 2000.

Venezuela is the region's fourth-largest debtor behind Brazil, at $114 billion; Mexico, at $106 billion; and Argentina, at $54 billion.

Venezuela, however, is one of the few developing countries that has been trying to repay debt, dipping into reserves built up before the collapse in world oil prices in 1986. The others simply reschedule their debt.

Peru, with a foreign debt estimated by the World Bank at $19 billion, has paid almost nothing on its debt since President Alan Garcia in 1985 imposed a ceiling on debt payments of 10 percent of the nation's export income. Its foreign reserves have since run out, and the country has entered into a steep recession.

Venezuela's government is seeking to defer further interest payments on its foreign debt until September. Perez said any decision on delaying payment beyond that will depend on the success of his new economic program.

The major debtor nations have been urging creditor nations for years to come up with a comprehensive plan for solving the debt crisis, but no formula has emerged.

A U.S. banker based in Caracas said the Latin debt crisis could be traced mainly to ill-conceived government economic policies.

Rebels, Colombian officials resume talks after shooting

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Guerrillas and government officials from Colombia Saturday resumed peace talks interrupted by the shooting death of a leftist leader at Bogota's airport.

The talks were the third between the two sides this year in search of a way to end a quarter-century of political violence in Colombia.

Antonio Navarro Wolf, leader of the delegation from the rebels' April 19 Movement, told reporters before entering the talks that rebels had "a concrete proposal" to present to the government.

He did not say what the proposal contained but described it as "what we think has to be done on an emergency basis to strengthen and broaden this process to respond to death with life, to darkness with hope and to war with peace."

Before Friday's session Wolf said the talks were intended to set the stage for a peace agreement in Colombia.

Rafael Pardo Ruedo, the government's representative, said the Bogota government continued to support the talks as a move toward peace.

"It is a process that can be difficult but is a light of hope for Colombia at this time," he said.

"The road that must be followed is the road to democracy. The majority of Colombians believe that democracy is the solution," he said.

Before entering the session at a luxury hotel, representatives of both sides condemned the killing Friday of Jose Antequera, an executive board member of the Marxist-oriented Patriotic Union, and another man and the wounding of eight others at Bogota's El Dorado Airport.

Antequera, whose party was formed by the guerrillas, was the apparent target of the attack, authorities in Bogota said. He had received death threats from right-wing paramilitary organizations in Colombia.

He and other political leaders, accompanied by bodyguards, had arrived at the airport to fly to Cucuta, near the Venezuelan border and Barranquilla, on the Atlantic coast.

An official from the Attorney General's office also was killed and bodyguards killed one of the attackers, police said. Three other attackers were captured.

More than 75,000 Colombians have died in political violence in Colombia in the past 25 years. More than 1,000 have been killed in the last three years.

The April 19 Movement is the largest of the six insurgent groups and has about 10,000 members.

The first day of talks ended early Friday when delegates learned of the shooting.

Midland High School senior Bliss Brown, like seniors everywhere, is discovering that graduation can be an expensive ordeal.

Senior frills 'graduate' to major expenditure

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

When Rudy Carrasco earned his diploma 25 years ago from Midland High School, a senior typically spent about $80 on the frills and social necessities associated with graduation, he said.

Carrasco, now assistant principal at his alma mater, saw his money cover the traditional basics such as cap and gown, class ring and invitations.

But as the meat of the 1989 graduation season rolls around, Carrasco said last week that he's seeing seniors spend hundreds — and sometimes thousands — of dollars on fun and accessories for the ceremonious occasion.

Students not only face rising costs for the graduation commodities but must contemplate buying an array of items including $4 class key chains and $15 commencement videos.

Students with only moderate tastes for class rings, tuxedos, dresses, flowers, invitations, pictures and only a few extras, such as the $12 class panoramic picture or a $9 to $25 memory book, easily could spend between $300 and $500.

"I don't think they should overdo it," said Carrasco, who paid for his own graduation costs. "I don't want students to put a burden on their parents or even put a burden on themselves."

Invitation and picture packages can be the most expensive items, sometimes costing as much as $300 each, Carrasco said.

Carrasco said some unwittingly go overboard on invitation packages, which range from about $60 to $300, depending on the number ordered through the school. "Students will buy 200 when they only need between 50 and 75," he said.

"Where are they going to mail them all?" Carrasco asked. "I don't know, but they buy them anyway."

MHS senior Michele Phillips, 18, had a different view of bulk invitation buying. She plans to utilize all 200 of her invitations.

"They pay for themselves," said Miss Phillips, referring to the potential cash mines in the return cards and letters from family friends and relatives, including distant cousins.

Miss Phillips said a majority of students stick to the middle of the road when buying high school memorabilia and usually snub items such as the $14.50 souvenir senior mugs and $7 deluxe tassels.

Rather than spending between $65 and $325, or more, on a class ring, some even opt for watches, necklaces and other jewelry sans school insignias, she added.

"A lot of girls don't want to wear their high school ring in college," she said, "so they'll buy some kind of jewelry that doesn't have anything to do with high school."

But Miss Phillips said the cost of stockpiling memories for the future is worth it.

"It's a one-time deal," she said. "It's like getting married or something. You've got to spend a lot of money to do it."

Midlander primed for abortion fight

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Scot Northern doesn't mince words when it comes to the two touchy subjects of abortion and sex education.

The Midland landman wants to protect a woman's legal right to have an abortion and he wants Midland's public schools' sex education courses to include the word "condom."

But Northern, the new president of Planned Parenthood of West Texas, Inc., and his counterparts throughout the nation, face a turbulent year.

The fate of the 1973 Supreme Court decision that legalized abortion is under fire now more than ever.

At least 20,000 members of the group known as "Operation Rescue" — self-proclaimed "front-line soldiers in a holy war against abortion" — have been arrested while picketing in 115 U.S. cities since 1987.

And the number of Supreme Court Justices supporting a reversal of the 1973 ruling, Roe v. Wade, may be in the majority now, legal experts have speculated.

"The pro-life faction is doing some very dramatic, radical things. If we want to stoop to that level we can get on the news," says Northern, 31.

"But if we want to take a more level-headed approach ... a more calculated approach ... a more reasonable approach, then that's not newsworthy."

He also believes a majority of Americans are proponents of legalized abortion and will come out of the woodwork to back Planned Parenthood's stance.

To further Planned Parenthood's mission — that every child born be loved and wanted — education must play a crucial role, he says.

According to the Texas Department of Health, 15.5 percent of all births in the Permian Basin in 1987 were to unmarried women.

In addition, statistics show that in households where there are children under the age of six, 40 percent of the mothers and 33 percent of the fathers didn't graduate from high school.

"We're in a tough position because the local school system in Midland has no sex education. That's derelict, irresponsible and cruel to the children that desperately need and deserve to know how their body functions," Northern claims.

The Midland Independent School District does teach students in the junior, freshman and high schools sexual education subject matter.

But in teaching about conception and how the AIDS virus spreads, Midland schools — unlike their Odessa counterparts — speak only of abstinence as a manner of prevention of both pregnancy and spread of the deadly virus.

"Sure, I've exercised abstinence. It's not the real world. I think we should abstain from running red lights and using crack and I think everybody should live in a 'Father Knows Best'-household," Northern says.

"I think that abstinence should be up there at the top of the list, however, if the children don't understand what the ramifications (of sexual activity) are, what in the world are they supposed to think?

"The Midland school district can't use the word 'condom,' but the U.S. Surgeon General can?"

Northern wasn't always so publicly volatile on the subject of abortion and sex education. When first asked in 1986 to join Planned Parenthood's board, he admits he was "pretty lukewarm.

"Then I read an article in the paper about two ladies, both in their 20s, who'd been out partying and they had their eight children (locked inside the house) die in a fire.

"For some reason something just clicked in my brain that said, 'You know, there's a lot of ignorance out there and somebody needs to do something.' That's what this organization does and tries to do," Northern believes.

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

Scot Northern, the new president of Planned Parenthood of West Texas, Inc., says he'll play hardball to get his message across to the public.

"We're in a tough position because the local school system in Midland has no sex education. That's derelict, irresponsible and cruel to the children that desperately need and deserve to know how their body functions."

— Scot Northern, president, Planned Parenthood of West Texas, Inc.

In addition to providing family planning services and medical examinations, Planned Parenthood conducts activities for teens that officials there hope educate them about the trials of growing up.

The "Esteem Machine," a teen theater troupe has traveled to Permian Basin school districts — not Midland's — to stage presentations dealing with the hard issues such as alcohol and drug abuse, teen suicide, peer pressure and sexuality.

Several churches in Midland, however, have presented Esteem Machine programs.

Rehabilitation facility about ready to open

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

The "We're Open" sign is about to go up at the Midland County Rehabilitation Center.

The 48-bed community-corrections facility for rooming and boarding probationers who otherwise might be serving "hard time" in the Texas Department of Corrections is on line to replace a 35-bed facility being rented at the Midland Dorm in far south central Midland.

The 12,500 square-foot building, located on the site of an old warehouse at the intersection of Main Street and Industrial Avenue, cost an estimated $500,000 for construction, equipment and furnishings.

"It's a beautiful building," said County Commissioner Durward Wright, one of three elected officials present Thursday for the construction walk-through — the final inspection before residents are allowed to move in weekend after next.

GARY OTT

Is garbage 'as good a place as any' to fulfill your needs?

Ott

For a brief moment I thought I was viewing a scene from the "Grapes of Wrath."

But, no, that couldn't be.

This was Midland, Texas. 1989. Things like that don't happen here.

But it did.

It was Thursday night. I had just enjoyed a delightful meal at a local restaurant and was heading to my car for the return trip home. It was beginning to turn dark, but there was still just enough light to see things faintly.

Maybe that's what threw me. Maybe, just maybe, I wasn't really seeing what I thought I was.

At least I hoped I wasn't.

But under closer scrutiny, I was proven wrong. It was indeed happening.

He was an old man. He had long stringy hair and was dressed in baggy pants and a dirty flannel shirt. He had on a hat that was too big for his head. It covered his ears and made him look like a character out of a John Steinbeck novel.

He was walking down the alley, stopping periodically to rummage through garbage cans.

I stopped and watched.

He carried a large trash bag with him and each time he checked a Dumpster, he would retrieve a few items and place them in his bag. Then he would continue on his way.

I don't know why I was so affected by that scene. It happens everyday in every city in the country. Poor people have the same needs as you and me and they are more than willing to take what the rest of us reject — our garbage.

The man said his name was Willard and that he was just passing through town.

"I don't got no job," he said.

Then he laid a little philosophy on me.

He said, "A man does what he's gotta do. If you ain't got nothing, then you go look for something. Garbage cans are as good a place to look as any."

I stared in silence, thinking about what he had just said.

He started to walk away, but then stopped and said, "You ain't never been poor, have you?"

I said no. For some reason, I felt guilty.

"It ain't so bad," he said. "You get used to it. You don't figure there's any other way to live."

Maybe so, I thought. He certainly didn't seem overly concerned with his plight. Best I could tell, he accepted his fate. He didn't appear particularly happy or sad. He was just there.

I had a couple of questions for him.

"How do people treat you when they see you going through trash cans?"

"I don't know," he shrugged. "Mainly they just ignore me — pretend I'm not there. I think it makes them feel funny or something. They stare a lot. But, really, people are pretty nice."

"Do they give you money?"

"Not usually," he said. "They sometimes offer me a job, instead."

"Do you accept?"

"Nah," he grinned. "I'd rather have the money."

I laughed and said, "Wouldn't we all?"

Then I wished him luck and headed for my car. As I glanced over my shoulder I could see him approaching yet another trash can.

To each his own.

Local bookstore sponsoring class in herbal cooking

From Staff Reports

"The Flavour Connection," a cooking school sponsored by Pages and Prints Bookstore, will be held at the Girl Scout Program Center from 6:30 p.m. to 9:30 p.m. March 14.

Based on the book "Southern Herb Growing," written by Madalene Hill and Gwen Barclay, instruction will focus on recipes developed by the authors.

The book gives advice and comfort to southern gardeners who have to battle particular pests, soils and climate conditions.

The last section of the book presents 100 recipes, accompanied by photographs as they were developed by the authors in their greenhouse-restaurant in Houston.

Tickets are $10 and can be purchased at the bookstore. For more information, call 687-5172.

Texarkana mayor apparently survives recall try

TEXARKANA (AP) — Two-term Mayor Joe Frost apparently has survived a Saturday recall election spurred by allegations of city charter violations.

With one box still to be counted late Saturday, 2,018 voters — 51 percent — said Frost should not be recalled while 1,948 called for his removal. Officials said the number of ballots in the remaining box wouldn't be significant enough to sway the outcome.

Frost apparently averted the recall challenge in absentee voting, where he enjoyed a 267-vote advantage.

Only 18.4 percent of the voters in this northeast border town of about 31,000 voted in the recall election. Officials expected about 5,000 to cast ballots, but the turnout was restricted by an ice storm that moved into the area early Saturday.

Frost and representatives of the group seeking his ouster were not immediately available for comment.

For Lee High School senior Tony Builta, 18, graduation means going all out at prom time rather than frivolously spending on things remembered.

"It's my last year, and I want to go out with a bang and have a good time," Builta said, adding that he anticipates spending about $60 to take his date to dinner on prom night.

Builta and his male classmates attending the event later this spring also will spend between about $40 and $100 for a tuxedo, while their dates could dish out between $200 and $300 for a new dress.

Although MHS has no prom, it did have "Catoico," an all-school dance in February similar to and about as formal as a prom. On top of its prom, Lee also holds a Catoico-type affair in February called "Rebelee Court," for which more tuxedos are rented and more dresses bought.

Meanwhile, area flower and tuxedo shops already have begun licking their monetary chops at the thought of graduation season.

"It's a great time of year," said April Murry, assistant manager of Mister Penguin Tuxedo at 411 Andrews Highway. "It's very important to our business."

Ms. Murry, whose store rents about 160 tuxedos to prom-goers annually, said the boys usually go further than the basic suit, even choosing tails, top hat and cane.

"You're only going to do it once, so you might as well go all out," Ms. Murry said. "The appearance counts for a lot when you're going to the prom."

And, of course, how could the ethereal package be complete without a corsage or boutonniere?

Although graduation season doesn't necessarily mean boom time for Ron's Floral Design, 3303 N. Midkiff Road, flower sales to seniors attending school-sponsored formals have risen, according to co-owner Ron Huse.

"We've been open for seven years, and we've seen a good increase ever since we opened," Huse said.

Huse said he's seeing boutonnieres becoming more popular and elaborate, with one usually selling for between $7.50 and $25.

Pushing the boundaries of ornate graduation revelry, a handful of lucky students with eclectic social tastes may land one of two stretch Lincoln Towncar limousines from Continental Limousines in Odessa.

But to rent one of the white, $51.75-an-hour (two-hour minimum) megacars — complete with moon roof, AM/FM stereo with cassette player, mood light, VCR and telephone — a customer must make a deposit early, said Leslie Harwell, who books the cars. She said that around prom time she gets at least 30 requests from students in Midland and Ector County high schools.

"Where the kids get the money, I have no idea, but they come up with it," said Ms. Harwell, whose young customers, usually six at a time, sometimes use the roadway Love Boats for up to six hours as they cruise the loops or travel between Odessa and Midland.

Although she may not spring for a limousine, Peggy Meek said that by commencement time she probably will have spent up to $4,000 on her daughter, Connie, soon to become a Lee graduate.

"At this point I think we may have to take a second mortgage out on our house," said Ms. Meek, who's paying for it all through her insurance coordinator job with Midland Family Physicians.

Ms. Meek said the costs include four new dresses for various senior functions and a multitude of memorabilia. She said she also will hold a party for some of Connie's senior friends.

"It's the little things, and it's one thing after another," she said. "But it's a special time. When they get out into the real world, it's not going to be like that anymore.

"They'll never be able to catch that senior feeling again. She's (Connie) deserved it. I'm pretty proud of her."

ABORTION

"I'd like to have them play at the assemblies at all the junior and freshman and senior high schools here in Midland. That is a very positive way to get the message across because it's peers in front of peers," he explains.

Another service, "Straight Talk," brings parents and their children together to talk about issues not discussed because of a communication problem in the home.

Northern's quest to educate the public about these touchy issues must be done in a positive manner because negative campaigning "breeds contempt on both sides," he says.

He realizes those who support legalized abortion are often a passive bunch who'd rather "sit home and watch a Cosby Show rerun" instead of working to keep the right to have an abortion a federal law.

"I'm very lucky. I was given the self-confidence to stand up for what I believe in. The other folks, once they get involved in it, will realize it's a lot more fun than sitting on the side of it.

"It makes you feel good about yourself because you are giving a damn. You are standing up for something you believe is right. You are making this community a better place," Northern asserts.

"The planet can just stand so many folks. You and I were very fortunate in that we grew up in a "normal" loving, middle-class home.

"I can't pretend to say what it's like to grow up with siblings, cousins, aunts, uncles, parents, grandparents in a two-room apartment," Northern said, pausing for a moment. "But it doesn't sound very pleasant."

But troubles nonetheless exist. Those who don't support legalized abortion think the act is nothing short of murder. Convincing a population otherwise, while remaining positive and fair, should prove a challenge, Northern says.

"But we'll get the job done."

CENTER

The center still lacks kitchen and laundry equipment, Commissioner Win Brown said, adding that the installation of those accouterments was due to begin late Thursday afternoon.

The arrival of office equipment and other furnishings is expected early this week, according to County Engineer Bill Harral.

The rehabilitation center, formerly known as a restitution center, was established in Midland in 1985, as part of a statewide effort to reduce the influx of non-violent prisoners into the state's penitentiary system.

The building of the new center was supported by the three state district court judges, who form the Midland Judicial District and who monitor the program.

Midland County's chief adult probation officer G.W. Thompson reports to the judges on the Adult Probation Department and overseeing the center.

Center Director Terry Luck is excited about the center's opening. "I'm ecstatic," he said of the new facility that will house up to 36 men and 12 women in two separate wings.

In addition to helping salvage people from the criminal life, Brown noted that the rehabilitation center program saves taxpayers money by reducing the prison population.

Center residents are required to work outside jobs to pay for their room and board and to carry out volunteer community service work.

The statewide program was authorized by the Texas Legislature in 1984 to divert people from the penitentiary, including those repeat offenders who otherwise would be prison bound.

Recently, the program has been expanded to take in first offenders to help prevent them from becoming full-time criminals.

Wright said the facility will "do the job and do it adequately."

"I think we have something in which to be proud," he said. "And at the same time, it's designed to be cost-neutral to the taxpayers."

The building, which is owned by the county, is being leased to the Midland Judicial District for $6,000 per month.

All told, the new center will be less costly to operate than the older facility, and will permit the expansion of career and day-to-day living programs for the residents, who generally are in their 20s and 30s, Brown said.

DEATHS

William J. Grissett

Services for William J. Grissett of Midland will be at 2 p.m. Tuesday in the sanctuary of Memorial Christian Church.

Grissett

He died Friday following a lengthy illness.

Grissett was born in Grimes County on May 11, 1901. He was the son of C.P. and Nancy Grissett. He grew up on a farm near Iola and was valedictorian of Iola High School. He attended Mechanical College in Wichita, Kansas and Draughn's Business College in Fort Worth.

He was an early pioneer in the Permian Basin oil industry. He went to Texon in Reagan County in September of 1924, where he started work on the pipe line gang as an employee of Big Lake Oil Company. Within 30 days, he was made pusher of the pipe line gang. After progressing through the ranks, Grissett was promoted to general manager of the company in 1950. He held that position until he was transferred to Midland in 1956.

As a member of Memorial Christian Church, Grissett served as a deacon and as chairman of the property and grounds committee. He also was an active volunteer with the Boy Scouts, serving as vice president of the executive board of the Concho Valley Council in San Angelo in 1955. Later he worked with the Midland Boy Scout program.

Grissett was on the board of Casa de Amigos and served as a volunteer with the High Sky Girl's Ranch, Christmas in April and the Santa Rita Club at the Petroleum Museum. He was a charter member of the Permian Basin Petroleum Pioneers.

Survivors include his wife, Fay Grissett of Midland; two sons, Charles William Grissett of Louisville, Ky., and John David Grissett of Houston; three brothers, Dan Grissett of Sinton, Edwin Grissett of Dubberly, La., and Alf Grissett of Houston; three sisters, Martha Collins of Houston, Doris Mobley of Austin and Elien Walker of Iola; eight grandchildren; seven great-grandchildren and several nieces and nephews.

Pallbearers will be Gordon Craig, Bill Hendon, Bob Leibrock, Jerry Sides, Garner Wilde and Loydd Wornell.

Honorary pallbearers will be Cecil Barton, Lt. Col. Clayton A. Bird, Printus Burkhart, Bill Brashear, Bob Conaway, Dave Fitzgerald, Ed Gideon, Gene Greenwood, Ed Groves, Lloyd Harlan, George Hemenway, Vance Hendricks, Roger McCracken, Larry Melzer, Charles Mussett, Steve Odom, Clark Storm, Richard Stubblefield, H.A. Tuck, Fred Yates and John Younger.

The family requests memorials be directed to Memorial Christian Church or the Petroleum Museum.

Jack Anderson

Funeral services for Jack Anderson of Midland will be at 11 a.m. Monday at the Ellis Chapel with Rev. J.B. Stewart, associate minister of First United Methodist Church, officiating. Interment will follow at Resthaven Memorial Park with Ellis Funeral Home in charge of arrangements.

Anderson died Thursday night at a Midland hospital.

He was born March 18, 1920, in Penicuit, Scotland. He came to the United States with his family at the age of three. The family settled in Detroit, where he attended school and graduated from high school.

He married Wilma Prather in Detroit on Jan. 26, 1945. They moved to Midland in 1946. He was employed in the oil business as a consulting geologist.

He was a member of the West Texas Geological Society and was a member and major donor for many years of the Midland Memorial Hospital Walking Blood Bank.

Survivors include his wife; one brother, James Anderson of Albuquerque, N.M.; two godsons; three brothers-in-law and several nieces and nephews.

The family requests memorials be directed to Hospice of Midland, P.O. Box 2621, Midland, Texas, 79702; or to a favorite charity.

Danny Martinez

Danny Martinez, 16, of Midland died Thursday afternoon at his home.

Martinez

Rosary will be 7 p.m. today at the Ellis Chapel with Jessie Guajardo officiating. Mass will be at 9 a.m. Monday at Our Lady of Guadalupe Catholic Church with Father Domingo Estrada officiating. Interment will follow at Fairview Cemetery with Ellis Funeral Home in charge of arrangements.

Martinez was born June 27, 1972 in Midland. He was a student at Lee High School at the time of his death. He was a member of Our Lady of Guadalupe Catholic Church and was active in the All-Star program.

Survivors include his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Rick Garza of Midland, his father, Agustin Martinez of Midland; one sister, Michelle Martinez of Midland; his grandparents, Mrs. Lupe Gutierrez of Midland, Mr. and Mrs. Jesus Garza of Midland and Mr. and Mrs. Trinidad Martinez of Midland; and one great-grandmother, Mrs. Juliana Jaure of Midland.

The family requests memorials be directed to the youth group of Our Lady of Guadalupe Catholic Church.

She died early Saturday at a local hospital.

Lawrence E. Watkins

Services for Lawrence Edward Watkins, 56, of Midland are pending at Sizemore Funeral Home.

Watkins died Friday in a Midland hospital.

MISD superintendent rejects appeal of fired employee

From Staff Reports

The appeal by a fired Midland Independent School District employee has been turned down by MISD Superintendent Joseph Baressi, a representative for the employee said Saturday.

"We received the letter from Dr. Baressi on Friday, indicating he was going to deny the appeal at the superintendent level," said Kay Walling, regional representative for the Texas State Teachers Association. "He felt the original decision was justified."

David Marin, a 40-year-old eight-year veteran of the district, was fired in December 1988 for alleged tardiness and misconduct. But Ms. Walling said the firing was unjustified. Marin is seeking reinstatement and back wages.

"At this point we will appeal Dr. Baressi's decision to the school board," she said.

Ms. Walling said Marin was fired because he "knew too much" about improprieties at the MISD warehouse, including theft of equipment.

"David Marin had been terminated because he knew too much about what was going on," she said. "We made it clear the tardiness had been exaggerated. Other employees at the warehouse had greater instances of tardiness and were never even written up."

One allegation of misconduct by Marin "definitely" has been disproved, Ms. Walling contended.

Witnesses will be lined up for the appeal to the school board, which must be made within 10 days, she said.

BEWARE
Before you invest in a treadmill, ask these questions.
1. Can you walk on it first and try it out?
2. Will they deliver it?
3. Will they assemble it?
4. Do you have to pay extra money for a year warranty? If so, why?
5. Do they have a LOCAL serviceman?
6. Will it start at ZERO m.p.h. (Like you do) or does it force you to start at 1.5 m.p.h.
7. Does it have a full year warranty or a disappointing 90 day warranty?
8. Does it have at least a full one horsepower motor, or an underpowered ½ H.P.?
9. Is it noisy? (it won't get any better)
10. Can they put you on a personalized program to meet your fitness needs?
If the answer to any of these questions is no, BEWARE — A Bargain treadmill today could be an expensive mistake tomorrow.

Small business seminar opens doors Tuesday at Midland College

By H.A. TUCK

A three-week Small Business Development Seminar begins Tuesday at Midland College. Sessions are scheduled on Tuesday and Thursday from 7-9 p.m. in Room 115, Occupational-Technical Building.

Tuck

Each session may be attended separately. The fee is $5 per session or just $20 for all six.

"Import-Export Potentials" is Tuesday's subject. Speakers are James Turnbull, vice president of First National Bank of Lubbock; Delbert Henry, vice president of I.C.E. Company, Inc., Dallas; and Dale Gravelle, vice president of United Bank, Midland.

Henry is associated with a freight-forwarding firm dealing with overseas markets. He will be available all day Tuesday for free individual consultations. Persons interested in making apointments with him should call 685-4657.

On Thursday the subject will be "Marketing Research and Marketing Your Product" with David Heath, Midland College, and Guy McCrary, Midland marketing consultant, speaking.

"Basic Accounting, Part I" is the subject for Tuesday, March 14. On Thursday, March 16, topics include "Basic Accounting, Part II," and "Choosing Accounting Software for Personal Computers."

On March 21, the subject is "Keeping Records for Tax Purposes." The series closes March 23 with "Managing Your Business."

To register, you should call 685-5657. Registrations will be accepted at the door.

EDUCATION IN BRIEF

District 4 Community Meeting will be held at 7 p.m. March 9 in the Jane Long Elementary School Cafeteria.

Please plan to attend this very important meeting to hear the results of the School Board's Citizens Advisory Group planning meetings.

This is an opportunity to voice concerns and interests. Public attendance is urged in order for the Advisory Group to include all concerns in their report to the Long Range Planning Committee.

• • •

ODESSA — District XVIII Texas State Teachers Association, an affiliate of National Education Association, will conduct its annual House of Delegates at the Odessa Hilton, Loop 338 and University.

Friday evening a legislative update will be held with legislative representatives in attendance. This session will commence at 7:30 p.m.

Mrs. Ollie Besteiro, TSTA Vice-President and Mr. Keith Geiger, NEA Vice-President will be present for the House of Delegates meeting and will be available for a press conference at 9:30 a.m. Saturday, March 4 at the Odessa Hilton.

• • •

Parents of sixth graders who will be attending San Jacinto Junior High this fall are invited to attend the final San Jacinto PTA meeting at 7 p.m. Tuesday, March 7. The brief business meeting will be followed by a "Mini-Showcase" which will allow sixth grade parents to become familiar with electives offered at the junior high level.

Five short courses set to begin March 13 at Midland College

From Staff Reports

The Midland College Department of Continuing Education will offer five short courses beginning March 13. The courses are as follows:

"Hunter Safety" will be taught by Duane Ervin on Monday through from 7-10 p.m. March 13-16. A complete course in Hunter Education, this course will include instructions in rifle, shotgun and bowmaking handling and safety, outdoor ethics, laws and regulations, conservation, hunting traditions, wildlife identification, field care of game, and wilderness first aid and survival. The class is limited to 20 students and the fee is $15.

Dan Rush will be teaching "Bookkeeping II" from 7-10 p.m. Tuesdays March 14-May 9. A continuation of Bookkeeping Fundamentals I, this course covers combination journals, general and subsidiary ledgers, payroll systems, and inventories and also introduces automated data processing. The class is limited to 30 students and the fee is $43.

"Threat Awareness" will be taught from 6-10 p.m. Tuesdays and Thursdays March 14-16. This eight hour seminar taught by Bob Bolton of Innovative Solutions, Inc. presents information on how to protect yourself and your family. Students will be taught how to prevent becoming a victim at home, work, or out in public. Instead of presenting defensive tactics, the principles of behavioral security are stressed along with physical security measures that can prevent an intrusion. The course fee is $40.

Lucy Nye will be teaching "Accessorizing Your Home" from 7-10 p.m. March 15. Now is the time to plan those different touches to brighten or even dramatically change your home. Students will hear advice and suggestions from a professional interior designer, learn to use color, texture, special arrangements, and unique design concepts to create their own special effects. The course fee is $5.

"Certified Notary Public Seminar" will be taught on from 1-4 p.m. March 16. For individuals who are already notaries, this seminar provides information on the "New Law" effective September 1987, duties and responsibilities of the commissioned notary, and thorough coverage of record maintenance, proper charges and posting fees, etc. The course fee is $65.

For more information on these and other Continuing Education short courses, come by the Office of Continuing Education in the Administration Building or call 685-4518.

Senators should stop their 'show'

As the weeks have dragged on in the debate over whether John Tower should be confirmed by the Senate as President Bush's secretary of defense, Tower's opponents have gone to extremes to make the former U.S. senator appear unworthy of the post.

Yet, while admitting that he formerly was a heavy drinker, that he has been something of a "ladies man" who had even been unfaithful to his last wife, and that he earned large sums of money after leaving the U.S. Senate by serving as consultant for defense contractors, Tower has come through the Senate Armed Services Committee assault with little more than a reputation-lashing. Numerous charges of missteps that would mark him unsuitable for service as secretary of defense have been raised, but none has been proven. At this point, the investigation of Tower appears to be motivated more by personal and partisan considerations than by any real knowledge that would make him unable to adequately serve in the Pentagon's top spot.

One must cast a jaundiced eye on the actions of Senate Armed Services Committee chairman Sam Nunn, the Georgia Democrat whose committee recommended that the Senate not confirm the former Texas senator. Nunn reportedly has aspirations to seek the presidency four years down the road and, in addition, probably would not relish having someone of Tower's defense expertise and legislative in-fighting ability to confront for the duration of Bush's presidency.

Another possible factor, beyond simple partisanship, is that during much of his career in the U.S. Senate, John Tower wielded considerable power and influence and no doubt stepped on many congressional toes. It's likely the owners of some of those still feel a twinge of pain.

The debate in the full Senate in the past couple of days has taken on an air of righteousness we cannot recall in the past. And while there is nothing wrong with demanding higher standards on the part of our Washington leaders, the high-minded stance being assumed by some opponents does seem a little out of character.

John Tower probably won't be confirmed by the U.S. Senate. The odds are against him. Still, he is President Bush's choice for the job unless he can be proven unqualified or unless strong evidence can be presented that would indicate he might not be able to make the tough decisions he would have to make as secretary of defense.

To date, at least, such evidence has not been brought forward. On the contrary, too many false accusations have been aired publicly while the information that proved those charges false was advanced privately by the FBI to the Senate committee.

He should be confirmed and if his actions later bring discredit to the Bush Administration he can and should be fired.

But there's been enough of this ridiculous partisan posturing by "righteous" politicians.

Be wary of Iran

Soviet officials should be cautious in counting rewards flowing from the sudden warming of their relations with Iran. The transformation claimed by Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze, after decades of wary hostility before and since Iran's Islamic revolution of 1979, is subject to further change on the whim of the unpredictable Ayatollah Khomeini. Some of the causes of past strain in Soviet-Iranian relations are still in the picture, and could come to the fore again.

Shevardnadze's personal session with Khomeini was regarded in some circles as a coup for Moscow in the long East-West rivalry for influence with Iran. The ayatollah and his followers for years ranked both superpowers about equally for purposes of condemnation. Shevardnadze's visit was well timed to help change that situation. The Soviet military withdrawal from neighboring Afghanistan — where pro-Iranian Moslem factions are among forces fighting the Soviet-backed government — blunted one point of friction. So did the truce in the Iran-Iraq war, in which the Soviet Union was Iraq's principal supplier. Iran now seeks Soviet help in forwarding peace talks with Iraq.

Shevardnadze's trip also coincided with Iran's newest round of alienation from the West, following Khomeini's issuance of a "death sentence" on author Salman Rushdie for writing a novel allegedly insulting to Islamic believers. Western European governments have united in deploring the ayatollah's action. Relations between Iran and Britain, where Rushdie is a citizen in hiding, are particularly strained.

The Soviet foreign minister unfortunately ignored a British request to urge Khomeini to withdraw the threat to Rushdie. Shevardnadze instead used the occasion to exploit anti-Western feeling, joining Tehran's campaign for the removal of U.S. naval forces from the Persian Gulf.

Gains won by Moscow with such diplomacy could turn out to be fragile. Khomeini may soon be gone from the scene, allowing less fanatical Iranian forces to renew the search for more normal relations with the West. The Soviet-Iraqi connection could be the subject of more trouble between Moscow and Tehran. So could Moscow's touchy relations with the Moslem populations in the Soviet Union. The ayatollah still cannot approve of the state atheism of his northern neighbor.

The episode indicates that, even with friendly Mikhail Gorbachev in charge of the Soviet machinery, East-West rivalry in the rest of the world — and particularly on the Soviet periphery — is still alive. Let's hope the competition is not as destructive as it was at the depths of the Cold War.

— San Francisco Examiner

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, March 5, the 64th day of 1989. There are 301 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On March 5, 1770, the "Boston Massacre" took place as British soldiers who had been taunted by a crowd of colonists opened fire, killing several people.

On this date:

In 1766, a Spanish official, Don Antonio de Ulloa, arrived in New Orleans to take possession of the Louisiana Territory from the French.

In 1867, an abortive Fenian uprising against English rule took place in Ireland.

In 1868, the Senate was organized into a Court of Impeachment to decide charges against President Andrew Johnson.

In 1933, in Germany, the Nazi Party won a majority of seats in parliamentary elections.

In 1946, former British Prime Minister Winston Churchill, during an address at Westminster College in Fulton, Mo., spoke of an "Iron Curtain" stretching from the Baltic to the Adriatic.

In 1953, Soviet leader Josef Stalin died at the age of 73 after 29 years in power.

Ten years ago: The White House announced that President Jimmy Carter would visit Egypt and Israel in a personal attempt to negotiate final terms of a peace treaty.

Gorbachev seeking Bush's assistance

WASHINGTON — The warmth of relations between the United States and the Soviet Union has caused the frost to come off the Cold War. But the combination of warm air and a quick thaw sometimes generates a fog. In the mist this time is a message from Mikhail Gorbachev, and from some Western allies, that the United States should be falling over itself to help rebuild the Soviet economy.

Jack Anderson

The danger is that the Bush administration will readily agree to fund Gorbachev's perestroika in ways that will come back to haunt us if Gorbachev is ousted or assassinated. As intelligence analysts see it, never have U.S.-Soviet relations depended so much on the health, safety and good fortune of one man in Moscow.

Gorbachev's task in revitalizing the Soviet Union is formidable. Even with Western help, he is unlikely to produce concrete results for at least another five years. By then, his critics in the Politboro will have enough of a case against Gorbachev to force him out. Not the least of their complaints will be his failure to keep the rebellious republics in check.

We have been through the rosy glow of detente before, starting in the 1970s with Richard Nixon. With Western help, the Soviets massively expanded their military and were able to buy high-technology that made them a greater threat than they were in the 1960s.

Then came the December 1979 invasion of Afghanistan. President Jimmy Carter woke up to the fact that if the detente-minded Soviets could take over a country in a couple of weeks, perhaps they were a threat to the United States, too. As an additional slap in face, the Soviet invasion was led by military trucks from the Kama River truck factory, which the United States had built for the Soviets during detente. The plant was supposed to be turning out only civilian trucks.

Now, here we are again. The allies want to reward Gorbachev for withdrawing from Afghanistan on Feb. 15. They want increased trade and credits for the Soviet Union. The West European lobby, led by West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, wants to give Soviets whatever they need to put food on their tables and televisions in their living rooms.

The message in the secret embassy cables from Moscow, reporting on confidential discussions with Gorbachev's aides, is clear: Gorbachev believes President Bush owes him. He thinks he helped Bush win the election. Intelligence sources tell us that Gorbachev reckons he resurrected the Reagan-Bush administration from the death grip of Iran-contra by signing the intermediate range nuclear missile treaty. Now he wants payment.

George Bush knows better than Miss Manners how to say thanks, but in this case, there is a danger that he might be too gracious.

For beginners, Gorbachev wants into the Western-dominated General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. GATT was founded in 1947, is based in Geneva and is a 96-country compact that administers the current world trading system.

A recent cable from the U.S. Embassy in Moscow, stamped "confidential," spelled out how eager Gorbachev is to join that club: "Dr. Lev Karpov, head of the economic department of the Institute of USA and Canada Studies, told us that the Soviets had just contacted the GATT secretariat, at very high levels, in order to get further clarification on GATT accessions procedures and entry requirements. Asked how the meeting went, Karpov said it had been successful..."

Gorbachev wants into GATT to influence trade around the world and enhance the Soviet's credit rating. And it wouldn't hurt him to have another forum for spreading the communist political agenda. GATT membership would add significant prestige, and bolster Soviet bids for membership in the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund and other international economic fraternities that could help the Soviet Union out of its economic Bermuda Triangle.

RUSSELL BAKER

Kicking a habit no job for the 'drug czar'

NEW YORK — It began with William Bennett, the "drug czar." "Drug czar" meant he was supposed to break the country's narcotic addiction. Well, it turned out Bennett was a cigarette smoker.

Russell Baker

Oh boy! Cigarette smoking, though not illegal, made a lot of people fighting mad. What's more, smokers had been officially declared nicotine addicts. So President Bush got protests. "What's the idea appointing a nicotine addict to stamp out drug addiction?" asked cigarette haters.

Bennett said, "There, there," and announced he would quit smoking.

Nobody asked how he was going to quit smoking and be "drug czar" at the same time. As people know who have actually quit smoking, it is a full-time job that leaves the quitter unable to do or think about anything else for several months.

If Bush had really expected Bennett to do any serious drug czaring, he would have forbidden him to try breaking his cigarette habit on government time.

Things got worse when John Tower promised never to drink any alcohol so long as he was secretary of defense.

You know how it is with people struggling to give up things like cigarettes and Chateau Latour. They get fidgety, scratch themselves a lot and become short-tempered with people who are not giving up anything. Naturally it was like this with Bennett and Tower.

One day at the White House where everybody had got together to discuss ways to make America kinder and gentler, Secretary of State Baker said he wished Bennett and Tower would stop fidgeting and scratching themselves, as it distracted him from thinking up gentle ideas.

"If you had to give up the great wines of Bordeaux, you'd fidget too," snarled Tower.

"It's easy for Baker to talk like Mister Wonderful," growled Bennett. "He's never given up anything."

Baker said Bennett was so desperate for a smoke he couldn't think of anything but tobacco, so he didn't know what was going on.

In fact, Baker said, he had given up a huge stack of bank stock in order to join the Bush team. Despite that sacrifice, he said, you didn't see him fidgeting and scratching and getting on his high horse, did you?

"Giving up a stack of stock doesn't affect the fidgeting system like giving up a stoup of stout," Tower said.

Baker said, "Well, there are some people here who haven't given up anything," and he looked at Robert Dole, the Republicans' main man in the Senate, who, according to the lore of political journalists, had lost the presidency to Bush because people thought he was too mean.

"Quit lying about my record," Dole replied, "or I'll kick you in the kidneys." The fact was, he said, that he had given up mean talking, mean thinking and mean acting to help Bush's kinder-gentler-America policy.

"You know it. Bush knows it. The country knows it," Dole said. "Sure it's tough giving up cigarettes, Corton Charlemagne and stock stacks, but that's nothing compared with breaking the habit of speaking candidly about George Bush." And he scratched vigorously, followed by a fidget.

To pacify Dole, Bush announced that he too would make a sacrifice that would probably cost him months of scratching and fidgeting. Yes, he said, as of that very moment he was giving up herbal tea.

That broke the dam, of course. Instantly the most vital men in America were pledging themselves to abandon their most deeply embedded vices.

Secretary of the Treasury Brady gave up Louis Rukeyser's "Wall Street Week" on public television, Secretary of Commerce Mosbacher gave up scrapple, Secretary of Housing Kemp gave up collecting baseball cards and Vice President Quayle swore to abandon his annual effort to read Plato's "Republic."

Detailed reports of this orgy of sacrifice naturally leaked to the press within the hour. Thus originated journalism's difficult and exhausting backslider beat.

Overnight hundreds of cunning, highly skilled investigative reporters had the entire Bush team under round-the-clock surveillance.

These squadrons of journalists were sworn to let the public know the instant Bennett sneaked into his cellar for an unfiltered Camel, Tower was served a coffee cup filled with Chateau d'Yquem, Brady sneaked a peek at Rukeyser, or Quayle delved into Glaucon's questions to Socrates.

Many reporters assigned to the backslider beat quit the trade, declaring that the absurdity of politicians had made it impossible for reporters to tell their children how they spent their lives.

You could tell the Bush people a mile away in those days. Fidget, fidget; scratch, scratch.

GEORGE F. WILL

Economic panel may have plan for future

WASHINGTON — What a mismatch.

The Democratic minority on the National Economic Commission met the Republican majority in a thinking contest. The result should mortify Republicans who read the results. The power of the Democratic report is increased by the contrast with the thin, pedestrian, almost perfunctory Republican report.

George F. Will

But the party-line division obscures significant agreements. Neither side took the "Deficit? What deficit?" view advocated by those who say better bookkeeping turns the deficit into something benign. Neither side is of the school that says the deficit exists but doesn't matter. And, amazingly and splendidly, both sides agree that the task is not merely to balance the budget but to run a substantial surplus for many years.

The Republicans, allowing the virtue of loyalty to require the vice of illogic, toe the party line. They say that with $82 billion in new revenues anticipated in fiscal 1990, spending restraint without tax increases will suffice to balance the budget. But then there is this remarkable Republican commitment: "We support the enactment of legislation to establish deficit or surplus targets whose purpose would be to eliminate gradually the non-Social Security deficit."

So the commission came to a consensus far more significant than all its disagreements. The Democrats say: "The surplus goals are readily indentifiable: They should be approximately equal to the combined surpluses of the Social Security trust funds."

The non-Social Security deficit is what the budget deficit would be were it not now masked by the trust-fund surpluses, which today are approximately $60 billion and are growing by $1 billion a week. How do the Republicans propose to hit the "surplus targets" they endorse while their party is tirelessly inflaming the nation's taxaphobia?

To the Republicans' Grammy-award winning pop-music economy policy ("Don't Worry, Be Happy") the Democrats respond that, "Optimism is no substitute for responsibility." The nation needs a decades-long program to deal with what is by now a decades-old decline of economic vigor.

From colonial times to the 1960s, say the Democrats, a balanced budget was the norm. Deficits were produced primarily by wars, and the national debt generally was reduced expeditiously. In 108 of the last 200 years, the budget was in surplus. But in the peaceful Reagan years, the national debt increased almost as much in constant dollars as it did during World War II.

Even the much maligned (by conservatives) Keynesian doctrine holds that in times like these — sustained growth near full employment and capacity — the budget should be in surplus, not counting the trust funds. One consequence of huge deficits in a country with a small saving pool is underinvestment. The consequence of that is economic anemia.

In 1973 something un-American — or is it still? — happened. Median family income stopped growing and began declining. Only in 1987 did it reach the 1973 level. Nothing like that had happened here before: 14 years when family income was below the previous high.

This has been called "the quiet Depression." It coincided with meager growth of productivity and the flood of baby boomers into the labor market. As the Democratic report says, "The unprecedented size of this cohort had given the impression of unprecedented power and influences" — it had its own political, musical and commercial culture — "during its adolescence and early adulthood, when it stormed or frolicked through various institutions of the social order. Now it found itself in a notably unsentimental, much less indulgent institution, namely the labor market." The baby boomers were a glut depressing the price of their services.

Today the hourly pay, measured in U.S. dollars, for production workers in Japan, West Germany, Italy and France is higher than for U.S. workers. Today's nearly full employment is partly a result of demographics (the baby bust after the baby boom) and partly a result of low investment. The Democrats argue that in Japan robots are doing tasks still assigned in America to workers.

The Democrats on the commission argue, and the Republicans seem to agree, that the Social Security surplus should be used to retire the federal debt, thereby freeing trillions of dollars for productive investment. This could make American capitalism what it has not recently been — a system of strong productivity growth. If the debate about the deficit can begin anew from that consensus, the commission will have been a historic success.

Do we still hold sway over the tools of technology?

Bill Modisett

This is the Age of the Computer, and it would be difficult to dispute that this technological advancement has changed human life for the better. Computers do everything nowadays — wake us up in the morning, cook our breakfast, assist us at work, even entertain us in the evenings.

But for all the good these machines do, one has to wonder if there is not a danger posed by being tied so closely to machines that do your work, relieve your physical and mental toil — at least to a degree, even "think" for you in some instances.

The potential hazards of automation have been discussed for centuries. Henry David Thoreau, the 19th-century American remembered for the book, Walden, and other writings, warned that "Lo! Men have become the tools of their tools."

But have we? Do our tools control us or do they, as many claim with apparent justification, give us the ability to do today the same job we performed in years past with greater ease and more efficiency? Are we better at what we do because of advances in automation?

Without a doubt, that seems to be the case. Twenty years ago in the newspaper industry, many writers still cranked out their stories on manual typewriters — old manual typewriters! With the dawning of the computer age, newspapers began to convert, first to a system that used computers to "read" type from typewritten pages produced by electric typewriters, then from full computerized typewriters.

The change has been astounding. Over two decades newspapers have gone from antiquated, inky, hot-metal shops to sleek, professional publications utilizing "cold type" processes. The change means greater ease of writing, making corrections or changes, greater speed and efficiency to reduce the time between an occurrence and the publication of a story about it. It means cleaner operations that are no doubt safer for the workers.

But the advancement in computer technology has not really given reporters or editors the ability to think more logically, to report more perceptibly or to write more vividly. Those are human characteristics and I'm not really sure that any computer will be able to capture the essence of humanity that gives a human being the ability to communicate with another human being and to evoke emotional responses in that person.

There are dangers, as Thoreau warned, in any technological advancement. Fire gave mankind the ability to cook food, but also to burn himself and threaten others. The wheel gave man the ability to construct devices for travel and movement, but also the ability to wage war with battering rams and, eventually, guns that could be rolled to the battle site. The list could be extended ad infinitum.

Technology gives man the ability to improve his life or to end it. There is no in-between.

The ability to choose which of the two mankind pursues is left to our intellect and morality. Man makes machines. Man must decide how to use those machines.

U.S. policy indecision causing unease in Central America

MIAMI — Absence of policy guidelines and appointments for key posts are creating particular unease in Central America. The most important and pressing decisions are on the people who will be named to manage relations.

Flora Lewis

After the Reagan administration took power eight years ago, a whole level of State Department officials and ambassadors was ousted to make room for carefully picked hard-liners.

They were the people who built up the Contra army to fight Nicaragua's Sandinista regime, run as a "covert operation" for several years. After it was finally forced into the open, Congress balked, and it was again financed clandestinely, through the Iran-Contra scam.

There have been some staff changes since, but by and large they are the same kind of people, giving lip service to Central American attempts at political accommodation, but eager to press on for military solutions. They are quick to claim, of course not for attribution, that the Central Americans can't act unless Washington demands.

Some still use vintage Jeane Kirkpatrick vocabulary about virtues of "friendly authoritarians" and evils of "hostile totalitarians," though with a hint of nostalgia for the diminishing breed of authoritarians.

These diplomats no longer wear broad-brimmed planters' hats and crumpled linen suits. Air-conditioning has made the costume anachronistic, but they talk as though nothing else were different.

They are urging Washington to plunge on as before, regardless of Congress, naming a few outspoken members as "unconscionable" and "traitorous" for opposing their plans. They admit, for example, that all Honduran authorities, both civilian and military, want the Contras removed from their country and resettled.

But they insist that the 11,000 fighters and their families, some 60,000 people in all, should be sustained by the United States as an organized force until ... well, since they are sure the Sandinistas will never permit free elections, the implication is to keep the fighters ready until the United States decides to send them back to war.

Central American governments, troubled as they are, are more in tune with broader world trends to seek a political way out. The other four worry about Nicaragua's bloated army, but even the military men see danger to their own countries' economies in a force spiral. They would rather go for negotiation.

It is accepted, even in Nicaragua now, that nothing enduring can be achieved against Washington's firm will. But there is also a spreading sense, especially among rising professional and modern-minded business groups throughout the region, that American power there is essentially a veto, dictating what must not be, but unable to be constructive.

In country after country, people point out that there isn't a real chance for development from feudal poverty without peace, but neither is there a lasting hope for peace without the economic and social development that must come from their own efforts.

Asked what they want from the United States, they all say help, and support for the compromise agreements they are painfully working out among themselves.

They aren't at all sure what to expect, though one senior Guatemalan official said gleefully the big difference so far was that "Washington didn't say what it wanted before" the recent Salvador summit talks.

There, Nicaragua made specific new free-election pledges, and the others promised to plan to disarm and disperse the Contras. All called on the Salvadoran rebels to accept elections.

Still, nothing will get far until there is a much clearer sense of the Bush administration's intentions. Guatemala's president, Vinicio Cerezo, said jokingly when he was asked for his recommendations to Washington, "I wouldn't presume to advise the empire."

He, like the other elected presidents, is embroiled with domestic troubles and scandals. They are all near the end of their terms, and don't want added outside problems.

Washington has extra clout in most of the countries' internal affairs now because of the U.S. military buildup. It helped professionalize armies, particularly in El Salvador and Honduras, and it also made military establishments more dependent than ever on Washington. This serves to limit the options of the extreme right.

It can be used to advance basic American as well as Central American interests if Washington takes a sound course now. But that will require another sweep of American officialdom to replace the hand-picked diehards who believe their task is only to save Central America from itself.

Accidental pregnancies not always unwanted

On page 1-B of the Feb. 16 edition of the Midland Reporter-Telegram, in an article discussing condoms and AIDS, Ms. Jane Marler Dees writes:

"National Planned Parenthood statistics reflect that nearly 50 percent of the annual six million pregnancies in this country are accidents.

"Of those three million unwanted cases, about half are aborted, a Planned Parenthood spokeswoman in New York said today."

Since 50 percent of six million is three million, someone has made the assumption that all accidental pregnancies are unwanted pregnancies. If this is Planned Parenthood's assumption, no one should be surprised; if this is Ms. Dees' assumption, it is a classic example of how the personal biases of individuals in the media subtlely and incessantly pervade and form public opinion.

MHS basketballers deserve our salutes

I would like to take just a few moments to highlight a group of young men of which Midland should be especially proud. The MHS varsity basketballers have been receiving some ink in the paper of late with their efforts to qualify for the state playoffs. They succeeded and for that we salute them.

However, this tribute is not for their winning scores; it is for the way they have represented themselves, their school, and their city. These young men have, without exception, displayed the kind of exemplary behavior we all should salute. They have demonstrated the utmost of respect for the officials, their coaches, and each other. During the 30 games in which they participated, I can recall only one incident with a player — a technical foul called on one of the players — and that call was made by a referee who mistook the player's disgust with himself for disgust with a call by the referee. The challenge of an official's call, a coach's decision, or disgust with a teammate was never seen on their faces.

You may have read some of their names in recent weeks: Greg Lewis, Dexture Young, Tracy Bascus, Bart Saddler, Dorey Thompson, Scott Melzer, Aundria Shaw, Gary Nathan and Ben Wilson. These are the players who have been recently recognized for their quality play. There are others who are just as deserving of the exemplary behavior tag. These are J.J. Johnson, Tony Henderson, Eddie Mayes, Rudy Garcia and Dwight Brown.

All but two of these young men are seniors and will soon graduate — I would like to say to them that they have done themselves, their school, and the city proud. In a few years when they think back upon their high school days, their senior year, and their success on the basketball court, I hope they also remember how proud we were of them for their character and class. There is a large number of their fans, like myself, who wish them nothing but the best in their future. Thanks for the good times; you are very special.

Not only pediatricians treat babies, children

With regard to your story in the Sunday, Feb. 26th, Reporter-Telegram about the shortage of pediatricians in Midland, please advise your readers that a doctor who is in "Family Practice" is also qualified to treat babies and children.

There are many fine doctors in family practice in Midland and much to be said for having one doctor treat your whole family.

I encourage your readers to consider this alternative.

Local network affiliates shortchanging viewers

During the television viewing week of Feb. 5 through Feb. 11, the "Big Three" national television networks, ABC, NBC and CBS broadcast a total of 65½ hours of programs, "In stereo where available."

Unfortunately, for those of us who paid extra for television receivers with stereo sound capability, the stereo sound on those programs was, locally, "unavailable." This owing to the three local network affiliates', KOSA, KMID and KTPX, all having continued to shortchange their local audiences, through refusing to "get with the times." The times being, having the capability of transmitting the audio portion of their programming "in stereo."

The three local television network affiliates seem content to continue limping along on antiquated equipment, disdainful of their ever more sophisticated audiences.

I hope there are others among the local populace who feel as I do. If so, make your displeasure known to the station managers at KMID, KOSA and KTPX. Perhaps if there is enough outcry, they'll get off their rear ends and update their stations' audio transmission equipment.

Chain bookstores show their cowardice

Now that the big chain bookstores have put most of the small, independent booksellers out of business, we readers read what they decide to sell us. But now the big stores, in an unbelievable display of cowardice, are allowing the ayatollah to tell us what we must not read.

From now on I will boycott the chain stores and buy from the local, independent dealers who don't take orders from the ayatollah.

Readers' views on: Tower debate

Shouldn't senators' codes be higher?

John Tower served in the U.S. Senate over two decades, presumably in a manner satisfactory to the other members of the Senate, for he chaired many committees and was not reprimanded for his actions, at least publicly or of record.

Some present members of the Senate have indicated that his moral turpitude is unacceptable for military standards. In my opinion, the disturbing problem is not what he did or didn't do, but rather shouldn't the standards for a U.S. senator be at least as stringent as those for an Army private?

L.W. Randerson
Midland

Senators upset by Tower's strong stand

The pious pronouncements from certain of the U.S. Senate and some in the media indicate that each is distressed to learn that John Tower or anyone else may have ever had a drink or to have done anything out of line in their personal lives. Senators Nunn and Kennedy would certainly want to set examples. The facts are that Tower has showed that he can be tough on national defense, and that is not what some of these people want in a secretary of defense.

John Tower has promised to never take an alcoholic drink while he is head of the Defense Department. I do not advocate anyone swallowing alcoholic beverages. But I am reminded of Abraham Lincoln and of U.S. Grant, when the latter was stubbornly winning battles for the Union, when other federal commanders were unable to defeat the Southern forces.

When various spokesmen of that day criticized Grant's drinking to the president, Lincoln said that perhaps he should find out what brand of whiskey Grant drank, so as to pass it on to all his generals.

Bush off to good foreign policy start with whirlwind Asia trip

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. — President George Bush is off to a good start on foreign policy after completing a whirlwind trip to Asia. The visit was largely symbolic, but it clearly demonstrated a sense of even-handed fairness that should stand the president well in the future.

Hearst

It was obvious that the leaders and people of Japan were deeply pleased that the president himself attended the funeral of former Emperor Hirohito. Bush's presence was more than a mere formality because the United States was expressing its profound sorrow despite the controversy over Hirohito's role in World War II. I don't think the Japanese will ever forget the historic gesture and significance of Bush's attendance. In this instance, a symbolic act was very important.

In Beijing, Chinese leaders welcomed the president's efforts to define a "special relationship" between their country and the United States. Those seemingly symbolic words later took on real meaning when Bush expressed approval of next May's visit to China by Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev. Bush saved face for everyone by stressing the special U.S.-China relationship without reflecting on the Soviets.

Beijing blundered by blocking Chinese human rights activist Fang Lizhi from accepting the president's invitation to dinner. It simply made them look as if they had something to hide or be ashamed of in the treatment of their own people. The action was again only a symbol but it raised some disturbing questions.

The president's trip to South Korea represented real change. Bush welcomed South Korea's attempts to create a new relationship with their old enemy in North Korea. Nevertheless, demonstrators continued to assail the United States. It is well to remember two things about these rioters: Nations are usually ambivalent at best about the presence of foreign troops on their soil — even defense forces like the Americans; and the shouters represent a small percentage of the Korean population.

The United States faces many serious problems in Asia, particularly our trade deficits with Pacific Rim nations. But the president said a lot when he stressed that we are in the Far East to stay. America is not only a Pacific power but, more importantly, it is still the area's greatest source of stability.

The protracted Senate debate over John Tower's fitness to become Secretary of Defense dogged Bush every mile of his Asian trip. Indeed, the intensity of the confrontation seemed, at times, to overshadow it.

We must get the Tower battle and all its senseless recrimination behind us as soon as possible. I have been greatly distressed at the national quagmire that has been created by this mess because the president, Congress and the country must move on.

I have not taken sides in this unseemly spectacle. Some of the language and charges are unworthy of responsible public figures.

Few individuals are more qualified to hold the post of defense secretary in view of Tower's experience as chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, then the nation's chief arms negotiator, and his long Senate record on defense matters.

Nevertheless, it is evident that the former senator's judgment has sometimes been poor at best. But that goes for some lawmakers as well.

A number still accept very large campaign contributions from certain interest groups, including defense contractors. Some continue going to resorts with all expenses paid by others, including defense contractors.

So some senators operate by a double standard when it comes to the very issue by which they harshly judge Tower. None of this partisanship helps the country. I believe the American people will ultimately hold members of the Senate accountable for their conduct in the Tower imbroglio.

In the final analysis, it appears that perception has become the overriding consideration in this struggle. Specifically, whether Tower's personal character is seen as a proper model and sufficiently disciplined to lead the 2 million men and women in uniform and the 1 million Defense Department civilians.

And whether his ultimate ability to function as secretary has been so severely damaged in this national brouhaha that he could not serve effectively. It is now clear that the most negative perceptions have come very close to reality.

The sorriest part of all this is that the spirit of bipartisanship, which permeated the relations between the president and Congress from the beginning, has been diminished.

I am hopeful that this goodwill can be re-ignited in the name of old-fashioned common sense. We face too many big questions for such division.

The Democrats and Bush must make up with each other, as they did after the presidential campaign, since we cannot afford the luxury of a split society. It will prove too costly in solving our truly meaningful affairs of state.

There was no winner in the Tower battle. All of us lost because we projected the image of a nation interminably squabbling about one issue when we face a mountain of much more serious problems at home and abroad.

MISD participating in Texas Public Schools Week activities

From Staff Reports

The Lone Star of Texas will shine on the Midland Independent School District as it joins 1,100 public school districts in observing Texas Public Schools Week March 6-10.

"Our district has so much to be proud of and this is one of the best opportunities to let the community see our students and teachers shine," said Dr. Joseph P. Baressi, MISD superintendent.

The community is invited to visit any of Midland's public schools during Texas Public Schools Week.

Additionally, several campuses have scheduled special visitation opportunities:

■ Lee Freshman High School — Parents are invited to visit school during the week. On Tursday, a special academic Awards Program will take place 6:30-8 p.m. in the LFHS cafeteria.

■ Alamo Junior High School — On Tuesday at 7 p.m. in the auditorium, orientation night for 6th grade parents will be held. On Wednesday and Thursday at 9:30 a.m., a school tour for 6th grade students will be held to familiarize them with Alamo campus.

■ Goddard Junior High School — On Tuesday at 7 p.m, in the cafetorium, parents of sixth grade students are invited to a special PTA Open House. Teachers of elective subjects will present the program. This program is for parents only. On Wednesday and Thursday, 6th grade students who will attend Goddard next year will visit Goddard campus with their classmates. These students will attend a special program, visit with elective teachers and be provided a tour of the building. The program will begin at 9:30 a.m.

■ Bunche Elementary — All Head Start parents are invited for lunch during the week beginning Monday. The schedule is as follows:

Monday, 11 a.m., Rooms 102 and 111;

Tuesday, 11 a.m., Rooms 112 and 108;

Wednesday, 11 a.m., Rooms 107 and 119;

Thursday, 11 a.m., Room 109 and Home base-Lopez.

Kindergarten parents are invited for lunch on Monday, 11:45 p.m.-12:15 p.m., Room 115 and 117; Tuesday, 12:15 p.m.-12:45 p.m, Room 116 and 118; Wednesday, 12:15 p.m.-12:45 p.m., Room 100 and 113; Thursday, 11:45 p.m.-12:15 p.m., Room 114.

■ Crockett Elementary — Parents invited to visit classrooms and have lunch with students as per schedule sent home on Friday, March 3.

■ De Zavala — Parents invited to lunch with students. On Tuesday, De Zavala Choir will be performing from 12:30 p.m.-1 p.m. On Wednesday, De Zavala Strings will be performing from 12:30 p.m.-1 p.m., and on Thuraday, there will be a talent show from noon-1 p.m. All activities will take place in the cafeteria.

■ Fannin — Parents are invited to stop by and visit the classroom or plan to have lunch one day with your child.

The schedule is as follows:

Monday, Kindergarten and 1st grade, 10:50 a.m.; Tuesday, 2nd grade, 11 a.m.; Wednesday, 3rd grade, 11:15 a.m.; Thursday, 5th grade, 11:30 a.m.; and Friday, Special Ed and 5th grade, 11:30 a.m. There will be a book fair all week for students and parents.

■ Henderson — Flag raising ceremony everyday at 8 a.m. by Cub Scouts and classroom visitation all week.

■ Jones — On Monday through Thursday parents are invited to come and enjoy the school lunch. Visit classrooms and browse the PTA Bookfair 8:30 a.m.-3:30 p.m. Tour the school with student guides 11:15 a.m. Lunch hours are grade 1, 10:45 a.m. Monday; grade 2, 11 a.m. Tuesday; grade 3, 11:15 a.m. Wednesday; grade 4, 11:40 a.m. or 12:10 p.m. Thursday. On Friday, 8:30 a.m.-3:30 p.m., citizens can visit classrooms or 12:10 p.m. tour classrooms with student guides. On Saturday, 9 a.m.-11 a.m. parents can come make educational games to take home to play with your child at a "Make and Take" workshop given by Anson Jones teachers. Call the school to make reservations.

■ Long — Parents are invited to visit the classrooms and participate in the activities there all week. On Thursday at 7 p.m. District 4 Community Meeting will be held in the school library.

■ Milam — Parents are invited to visit and have lunch with students. The schedule is as follows:

Monday, kindergarten, 10:30 a.m., Tuesday, 1st grade 10:50 a.m., Wednesday, 2nd grade 11:10 a.m., Thursday, 3rd grade 11:25 a.m., Friday, 6th grade 11:55 a.m.

■ Parker — Parents invited to visit and have lunch. The schedule is as follows:

Monday, 1st grade,

Mexican border bandits, smugglers prey on Central American refugees

HOUSTON (AP) — Mexican border bandits and smugglers are finding easy prey along the Rio Grande among Central American refugees desperate to cross the river and better their lives in the United States, authorities say.

"It's a very opportune time for the smugglers to do their work," now that refugees can't get passes to travel in the United States merely by applying for asylum, said Deputy Chief Jerry Hicks of the U.S. Border Patrol office in McAllen.

The U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service on Feb. 21 began requiring refugees crossing the Rio Grande in search of asylum to apply at border cities rather than giving them travel permits to apply at cities of their intended destination.

All but a few of the applications filed in the Valley since then have been denied in a one-day review process and the denied applicants have been placed in INS detention at the first step toward deportation.

Consequently, many refugees have abandoned the legal immigration process and are hiring smugglers called "coyotes" to sneak them past border guards and immigration checkpoints, Hicks said.

"We used to have two or three alien-smuggling cases a day. Now we have eight or nine a day," he said.

Most illegals arrested by the Border Patrol in McAllen in past years were Mexicans, but recently the Nicaraguans, Salvadorans and other non-Mexicans amount to half of the agency's arrests in the sector, which stretches from Rio Grande City to Brownsville.

"We have been averaging 100 OTMs (other than Mexicans) a day but Sunday we got 157, Monday 184, Tuesday 248, Wednesday 203, Thursday 211, and they are really moving today," Hicks said Friday.

"Last night, in Harlingen, there were 30 aliens in a boxcar and one alien had a pair of bolt cutters he was going to use to cut his way out when they got to Houston."

Houston is a major stopping point for many of the Central Americans who ultimately end up traveling to Miami and other cities far from the Mexican border.

Michael McMahon, assistant director of the INS office in Houston, said some refugees without travel permits who got past the border checkpoints in Falfurias and Kingsville have applied for asylum at the Houston INS office. They were upset to learn they cannot get work permits here, he said.

Such permits, which allow refugees to work while their applications are pending, are offered only when applicants cannot be processed within 60 days. The Houston INS intends to process all claims within that deadline, he said.

Consequently, many refugees intending to file asylum claims in Houston have changed their minds, McMahon said. They are instead traveling on to Miami, where the INS asylum process is backlogged and work permits are given to new applicants. Los Angeles and New York also are major travel destinations for the 14,000 refugees who obtained travel passes between Jan. 9 and Feb. 21.

Store's owner claims innocence in drug charge

PLAINVIEW (AP) — A health-food store owner accused of selling an herbal mixture containing the tranquilizer diazepam says prosecutors will have a hard time proving she sold the stuff knowing it contained a controlled substance.

Doris Gaither, owner of Nature's Way health food store, said she had the mixture tested for diazepam herself and believed it to be clean.

To aid in Mrs. Gaither's fight, health-food advocates have started a legal defense fund for her.

At a rally held Thursday for Mrs. Gaither, $500 was contributed by the Texas Wellness Council to help defray the costs of fending off felony charges of delivery of a controlled substance.

She was indicted in Hale County last fall in connection with the sale of a herbal mixture called Chuifong Toukuwan. U.S. Food and Drug Administration and Texas Department of Health tests have shown the compound contains diazepam, the generic name for the commercial tranquilizer Valium.

But Mrs. Gaither said she had the mixture of about 20 herbs, manufactured in Hong Kong, tested at a private laboratory in Lubbock last summer after she heard rumors it might contain diazepam. That test, by Forensic Associates, found none of the chemical.

Many of the approximately 60 participants at the rally touted the benefits of the product, other herbal remedies and nutritional supplements. Many said they had been longtime customers of Mrs. Gaither and had always known her to be honest.

Airport may have to shut in foggy weather

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Two accidents, one involving a small plane, have damaged navigational equipment at San Antonio International Airport and may force the facility to close during times of low visibility.

Pilots will be able to land at the airport before the equipment is repaired, but only if visibility is more than one-quarter mile and tail winds are not too high, Federal Aviation Administration officials said Friday.

A twin-engine Cessna overshot the airport's main runway early Friday, knocking out navigational aids. Earlier, a van slid off a road adjacent to the airport and ripped 80 feet of cable to navigational equipment.

Navigational equipment for most situations — but not extremely low visibility — probably will be operational by today, said FAA Regional Director Bill Czervinske.

He told the San Antonio Light that all the equipment needed for normal instrument landings should arrive and be fully installed and tested within two weeks.

The Cessna pilot, I.C. Oldenberg, overshot the runway as he was making his second landing attempt during a foggy drizzle. He aborted his first try after an aircraft behind him was cleared to land on the same runway.

Airport officials said the Cessna traveled past the 8,500-foot runway, striking rows of lights and knocking down an FAA navigation shed. The plane came to rest after completing a 180-degree spin. It broke in half at the fuselage, and one propeller was stripped off in the crash.

Lighthouse workers force it to justify subminimum wages

By WENDY E. LANE

LUBBOCK (AP) — The Southwest Lighthouse for the Blind was founded to provide employment and rehabilitation for the visually impaired.

But in the past seven months, blind workers have gone on strike over wages and working conditions, one Lighthouse workshop was closed and 13 employees laid off. Now the workshop is being asked to prove the $2.05 an hour it pays most blind employees doesn't violate the Fair Labor Standards Act.

"I think they're trying to have more of a factory out there than to do something for the blind," says David Rocco, a former Lighthouse worker who led the workers' strike in August and was laid off in January.

The wage dispute began in August when 14 blind workers, wearing signs reading "Lighthouse wages are from the Dark Ages" while carrying their white canes, walked off their jobs to protest the $2.05 hourly wage and their $65-a-month health insurance fee.

The strikers demanded the same $3.35 minium wage that Lighthouse pays sighted workers doing the same job.

The workers returned to their jobs two weeks later after union cards were distributed. The National Labor Relations Board has since ordered a union election, and negotiations have begun between Lighthouse and the Teamsters.

The U.S. Labor Department is investigating the workshop's wages, and Lighthouse officials are scheduled to appear next month before an administrative law judge to defend the separate wage scales for blind and sighted employees.

A non-profit organization started in a Lubbock garage in 1955, the Lighthouse now employs 55 workers — about 40 of whom are blind — and five staff members, said director Bob Crane.

Those figures are disputed by Rocco and Lighthouse worker Joe Morales, who said only 25 blind workers are employed there. "There are more sighted people there than blind," said Morales, who was laid off in January but later rehired.

The facility is under contract to the federal government to produce military items such as helmet chin straps and pads.

"We're a rehabilitative facility," said Crane. "We like to take people, train them and place them in the private sector."

He said, however, that most people who come to work at the Lighthouse remain there because they aren't capable of working elsewhere.

Crane acknowledged that the organization, supported by government contracts and donations, is suffering financially. He declined to comment further on the subject.

Lighthouse officials also refused comment on the pending hearing or the wage dispute.

According to workshop officials' testimony at the NLRB hearing, the Lighthouse posted a profit on its sales to the government for 1987, but finished its 1988 fiscal year in the red.

In October the Lighthouse closed its Amarillo workshop, which employed 20, citing financial problems.

In January, 13 workshop employees, including Rocco and two others who participated in the strike, were laid off. Lighthouse officials said there wasn't enough work and materials for them.

The Lighthouse dispute comes at a time when the blind are increasingly questioning their treatment at such facilities. About 100 sheltered workshops employ 6,000 visually impaired people nationwide.

"When you're paying $2.10 an hour you're going to have a lot of wage disputes," said National Federation for the Blind President Mark Maurer. "It's not enough money to live on."

Employees at workshops in Houston and Cincinnati have formed unions in the wake of wage and labor disputes, while unionization efforts by workers in Little Rock, Ark., were denied by an appeals court.

The Cincinnati case, in which blind workers at the Cincinnati Association of the Blind sought to unionize, went to the U.S. Supreme Court. In 1982 the high court let stand a lower-court ruling that the workshop had to recognize the workers as a bargaining unit. The workshop had argued the workers were clients receiving rehabilitation rather than private employees.

Lighthouse officials used the same argument in the NRLB hearing.

A national advocacy group for the blind maintains that in many workshops, the blind are exploited, not rehabilitated.

"Blind people have been exploited in workshops since workshops came into being," said James Gashel, director of governmental affairs for the National Federation of the Blind in Baltimore.

Part of the issue stems from a clause of the Fair Labor Standards Act which allows sheltered workshops to pay subminimum wages.

The provision states that a subminimum wage must be paid according to how much the worker produces compared to an experienced, non-impaired worker in the same job.

The Lighthouse employees are the first to take action under a 1986 addition to the law that allows them to question their wages. The National Federation of the Blind is seeking to have the subminimum wage provision changed.

While the workshops are set up as benevolent institutions, Maurer said, such facilities underestimate the capabilities of the blind.

"What they think is that if you're blind you can't really be expected to do anything much," he said. "They think that if they're giving you $2 an hour they're being charitable to you.

"It's unreasonable to expect someone to produce and then not be paid for their production."

History brews in Dallas' West End

DALLAS (AP) — The Dallas Brewery in the downtown West End Historic District will soon house a manufacturer, bottler and wholesaler of beer for the first time since Prohibition.

The West End Brewing Co. is scheduled to start producing West End Lager by the end of March, founders Allan Dray and Jerry R. Cole of Tyler predict.

"Allan and I have been reading about the micro-brewing industry and have been interested in it for a long time," Cole said. "We really felt like the West End was the spot for the brewery, and when we found the Brewery Building, we thought — how can it be better than that?."

The new venture is a second career for both — Dray has 40 years in the oil business and Cole spent 25 years in electronics retailing and wholesaling.

The company already has commitments from several restaurants and bars in the West End to sell the homegrown brew.

The brewery will occupy an 8,000-square-foot area of the Brewery Building's basement and the automated plant will start production with six employees.

The last beer made in the gray-brick building was Dallas Splits and Tipperary Beer from 1890 until 1920.

Cole said West End plans to produce 5,500 barrels of unpasteurized beer the first year.

Last-ditch effort to save trees begun

AUSTIN (AP) — Glen Dunaway has been complaining for months about oak wilt, a spreading fungus that has been killing the stately trees in the state capital.

"I started out knocking on doors, telling my neighbors that our oaks are in trouble. We've already lost dozens of trees (on a nearby block) ... and it's moving this way," Dunaway said.

Thus, the roar of a trenching machine Friday, digging a 3-foot-deep ditch through Dunaway's front yard was music to his ears.

Standing next to Dunaway for a curb-side press conference was U.S. Rep. J.J. "Jake" Pickle, who announced that the U.S. Forest Service has committed $244,600 to suppress oak wilt in Texas during fiscal year 1989, which began in September.

The funds will go to the Texas Forest Service, which will reimburse half of the $10,000 that Dunaway and 16 others in his Northwest Hills neighborhood are paying a contractor to dig a quarter-mile of a 6-inch-wide trench in front of nine homes and to remove seven dead oaks.

Oak wilt has been detected in more than 30 Texas counties. A 1986 survey found that at least 10,000 of an estimated 250,000 oaks in Travis County have been infested. Paul Jacobs of the city parks department said the fungus crept into Northwest Hills about 10 years ago. Other hard-hit neighborhoods in Austin include Travis Heights, Barton Hills and Tarrytown.

State officials will only reimburse trenching projects — which prevent the fungus' spread by severing interwoven roots between the oaks — when residents coordinate their efforts through neighborhood associations like Lay's.

STATE IN BRIEF

'Beauty shop bandits' accept plea bargain

HOUSTON (AP) — Melchor Longoria Ortega Jr., 42, and his wife, Helen Marjean Smith-Ortega, 37, known in police circles as Houston's "beauty shop bandits," won't be going to trial later this spring after all.

In a plea bargain agreement Friday, Ortega agreed to accept a life sentence, but only after prosecutors agreed to a 35-year sentence for his wife.

The two pleaded guilty before state District Judge Jay W. Burnett. The sentence means Ortega will be behind bars until at least 2003, but his wife could be released within five years.

"I suppose it's love," defense attorney Tom Steinmeyer said, calling the sentence for Ortega's wife "a heck of a deal."

The couple was arrested after a string of robberies committed shortly after their releases from prison. The couple said in statements to police that they were supporting heroin addictions.

Between mid-May and June 13 of last year, a pair of bandits robbed at least 20 Houston beauty shops, wig stores and gift shops. Prosecutor Alvin Nunnery said the bandits amassed at least $50,000 worth of loot from the businesses and patrons.

MHMR suit ends in mistrial

AUSTIN (AP) — A state district judge declared a mistrial in a $2.2 million lawsuit against the state mental health system after a state's attorney talked too loudly about confidential information during a bench conference.

Travis County District Judge Harley Clark halted the trial of a lawsuit brought by Opal Petty, 70, who claims she was committed involuntarily to state institutions for more than 50 years.

Clark stopped the week-old proceedings after jurors and spectators overheard statements about the federal governmental assistance checks received by Petty, the Austin American-Statesman reported Friday.

Petty spent 51 years in Austin State Hospital for the mentally ill and San Angelo State School for the mentally retarded until her release in 1985. Her lawsuit claims she has never been mentally ill or mentally retarded.

In damage lawsuits, evidence about a plaintiff's secondary sources of income, such as insurance payments or government benefits, is not admissible.

Cold hit oat crop hard

AUSTIN (AP) — Severe damage to Central Texas oat fields from last month's cold weather has far exceeded predictions, according to the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

Williamson County Extension Agent Ronald E. Leps said last month's freeze ruined 50 percent to 80 percent of the oats in his county.

"We were set up for this one," he said. "We had warm and moist temperatures before the freeze came through. The oats kicked up and started going. Then the arctic cold front came through and caught them unprotected."

The freeze actually harmed only the tips of the oats, but the rain that followed soaked the tips, causing them to droop and shield the rest of the plant from the sun, Leps said.

Escapee turns himself in

LOVELADY (AP) — An escapee from the Texas Department of Corrections turned himself in Friday, officials said.

Thomas Baxter, 41, who escaped Feb. 19 from the Eastham Unit, was picked up at a northwest Houston convenience store by TDC authorities at about 5:30 p.m. without incident.

Baxter escaped with Robert Morgan, 34, who was captured.

B-1B's instrument landing system 'flawed'

AUSTIN (AP) — The Air Force's controversial B-1B bomber is equipped with a fundamentally flawed instrument landing system, a University of Texas aerospace engineer says.

"Pilots are trained to use the instrument landing system, and the B-1B doesn't have a reliable one," Wallace Fowler, an aircraft expert and UT-Austin professor of aerospace engineering told the Austin American-Statesman.

Lt. Col. George Peck, spokesman for the Strategic Air Command responsible for the bombers, acknowledged the nation's fleet of B-1Bs is operating with deficient instrument landing systems that do not give glide slope or altitude information.

Fowler said the lack of that information could have contributed to the November crash of a B-1B in South Dakota.

The South Dakota crash was the third involving a production-model B-1B in 14 months. The first accident, in which three aviators were killed, involved a collision with a flock of birds. The second crash was caused by a fire in one engine. The crew escaped injury.

Peck denied that B-1B crash at night and in bad weather at Ellsworth Air Force Base, S.D., was caused by the landing system. The Air Force has blamed the accident on pilot error. The crew escaped injury, but the plane was destroyed.

The B-1B has been the most maligned aircraft in service history, with the principal controversy involving the plane's sophisticated electronic defense system, which has not worked as expected.

The landing system problem was reported recently in "Aviation Week & Space Technology" magazine, which said it was described in Air Force documents relating to the South Dakota crash.

U.S. Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, a member of the Senate Armed Services Committee and a proponent of the bomber, has urged the Air Force to make the system fully reliable as soon as possible, the newspaper reported.

Instrument landing systems are standard equipment on virtually all military, commercial and private aircraft. Normally used when visibility is limited, they received information from radio transmitters on airport runways.

The systems provide a pilot with data showing the plane's altitude during descent and whether it is to the right or the left of the runway's center line.

The B-1B's system is "less capable" than those in commercial aircraft, Peck said.

Clean sweep

A gardener sweeps the leaves off the street under the shade of blooming trees as temperatures rose to almost 80 degrees Saturday morning. All that soon changed, however, as a fast-moving cold front swept through the city, dropping temperatures into the 40s by early Saturday afternoon.

Homeless Austin man pitches tent in street

AUSTIN (AP) — A homeless Austin man pitched a tent on a downtown street and says he will live there until he is arrested or told to move as a protest to draw attention to problems of street people.

"It's my home and I'm going to live in it," said Bruce Lester, a member of the Austin Street People's Advisory Council, which called a news conference Friday.

The tent rests on a bed frame with wheels, and Lester can pull the mobile shelter by himself. The structure's sides are made of bed sheets covered with a large piece of clear plastic and supported by bamboo poles.

Lester said he will wheel the tent out of a nearby parking garage at night, when there is free parking along the street, and wheel it back inside during the day to avoid costly parking tickets.

He said he will keep living in the tent until arrested or told to move on. The tent's first parking place was in front of the advisory council's headquarters.

The group originally planned to park the tent on Austin's busy night-club strip but couldn't reserve a parking plastic.

Lester, who is a founding member of the advisory council, said he got the idea for the mobile tent from one he pitched as a youngster in Montana.

Wayne Wheeler, 11, helped Lester build the tent and will be Lester's first "houseguest."

Wheeler and his mother, who are homeless, met Lester when they came to the advisory council office. Wheeler said he was not afraid to spend Friday night sleeping in the tent in downtown Austin.

NAACP petitions FHA to withhold highway funds

AUSTIN (AP) — The NAACP asked federal officials to withhold $935 million for Texas highway projects because of alleged discrimination against women and minorities in the state highway department.

"Our concerns cover the full gamut of discrimination — from failure to hire to the failure to promote to the discriminatory working conditions," said Gary Bledsoe, president of the Austin chapter of the National Assocation for the Advancement of Colored People.

In a letter to the Federal Highway Administration, Bledsoe said, "We are asking that you investigate this matter and withhold federal funding pending your inquiry," the Austin American-Statesman reported.

Leslie Clark, the state Highway Department personnel chief, said the department does not discriminate. "We have seen an increase in the number of black employees almost every year," he said.

John Conrado, Federal Highway Administration division administrator in Austin, said it is unlikely the U.S. government would withhold funds pending an investigation.

"I think I'd get shot on the spot," he said.

But Conrado said federal highway officials have withheld funding from at least two states for discrimination against state highway employees.

"It's true we hold the purse strings, but that is not something we do lightly," Conrado said. "Potentially, it can be very serious."

Conrado said Bledsoe's complaint would be forwarded to Washington.

In his complaint, Bledsoe said there are no black administrators and only seven Hispanics and four white women among the 185 top jobs at the Highway Department.

Blacks make up 2.3 percent of the department's professionals, while Hispanics and women account for 8.8 and 27.4 percent, respectively.

Overall, blacks make up 5.9 percent of the Highway Department's 15,000-plus work force, while Hispanics and women fill 16.1 percent and 17.2 percent of the jobs, respectively.

Bledsoe said all three groups are underrepresented when compared with the Texas labor force, where almost 12 percent are black, 24 percent are Hispanic and 45 percent are women.

BEE SMART

The Reporter-Telegram will sponsor the 1989 Regional Spelling Bee April 15 at Midland College.

School spelling champions from Midland, Martin, Glasscock and Upton counties will compete for the top prize of an all-expenses-paid trip to the National Spelling Bee in Washington, D.C.

This daily column on words, their spellings, meanings and origins will be published through April 14. These words are typical of those used in bees but may not necessarily be used in competition.

splurj

splurge — (verb) The expression to "splurge" was apparently first used around the 1840s, when pioneers were heading West to such places as California seeking gold. As the pioneers moved West, they coined new phrases — among them was "to splurge." "Splurge" means to have a burst of activity or to indulge oneself in some unusual activity, expense, pleasure, or luxury. If you win your regional spelling bee, you'll be able to "splurge" with a trip to the national Scripps Howard Spelling Bee and a chance to see the sights in Washington D.C.

Physicians & Surgeons Hospital

House Calls

Volume 3, Number 5 | This Newsletter Is Provided by Physicians and Surgeons Hospital | March 1989

Camille Sabbey, R.Ph. outlines plans for the week.

Prescription For Poison Free Home

A combination of prescription drugs with over-the-counter medicines can be harmful. To make the public aware of drugs and their various effects, especially in combination with other drugs, Physicians and Surgeons Hospital is sponsoring a Brown Bag Day on Tuesday, March 21.

People are asked to put their prescription medications in a bag and bring them to the hospital at 3201 Sage St. from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Camille Sabbey, R. Ph., with HPI Healthcare Services, Inc., will be conducting a medication check in the hospital's front lobby. "I will explain the medication and what it does and answer any questions the person may have," she said.

Pharmacists sometimes don't have the time to explain how to take the prescription properly and how it might react with other drugs and foods. "Some peple think taking a prescription twice a day might mean at 9 a.m. and 1 p.m. when it really means take it at 8 a.m. and 8 p.m. Some prescription medicines should be taken with food and others should not be taken with meals," Ms. Sabbey said.

Brown Bag Day is part of National Poison Prevention Week March 19-25. Ms. Sabbey will have brochures available on how to prevent accidental poisonings in the home and a poison lookout checklist. People who would like the printed literature but are unable to come to the hospital may contact Lana Cunningham at 683-2273, Extension 25, and the brochures will be mailed.

Ms. Sabbey also will have pamphlets about various prescription drugs to hand out to those who request it. "I will explain what side effects they need to look for and when they should be contacting their physician," she said.

National Poison Prevention Week has been observed since September 1961 as an annual reminder to raise community awareness about the danger of accidental poisonings. Theme for this year is "Children Act Fast...So Do Poisons!" This year an estimated 130,000 children under the age of 5 will be victims of accidental ingestion of poisons. All parents are urged to be cautious about the storage and use of all household chemicals or drugs, Ms. Sabbey said.

In the case of accidental poisoning, Ms. Sabbey advised the adult call a National Poison Control Center toll-free at 1-800-441-0040. The caller should be prepared to give the child's age, weight, product name and amount swallowed. The recommened antidote listed on the container is not always the best route to follow, she said.

For more information about Poison Prevention Week, contact Ms. Sabbey at 683-2273, Extension 35.

When Poisoning Occurs

If an accidental poisoning occure in your household, remain calm and first telephone the Poison Control Center toll-free at 1-800-441-0040.
The National Poison Prevention Week Council asks that the caller be able to give the following information:
– The victim's age, weight, and type of poison involved. Also know if the poison was swallowed, inhaled, absorbed through the skin or splashed into the eyes.
– If any first aid was given.
– If the person has vomited.
– Your location and how long it will take to get to the nearest hospital.
– If possible, find the label of the poison taken. Labels generally provide first aid and contents information.
– If medicine is swallowed DO NOT give anything by mouth until advised by emergency personnel.
– If chemicals or household products are swallowed, follow first aid instructions on the container. Then call for professional advice about whether to induce vomiting.

Searching For Source of 'Red' Urine

By NICK SHROFF, M.D., F.A.C.S.
Midland Urology Center

Questions about the color of urine often yield colorful answers from the patient but leave the doctor uncertain as to what is meant by "red."

The appearance of blood in the urine, known as hematuria, makes a person anxious and fearful of serious infection or injury or even cancer. The basic approach is to obtain an accurate history, perform a careful examination and carry out appropriate tests.

Hematuria is listed as the complaint in 15 percent of urologic emergencies and the only symptom in about 20 percent of patients with urologic disease. It may be a serious sign and should be regarded with same gravity as abnormal bleeding from any body opening. Infections, stones, tumors and urinary tract obstructions account for bleeding in about 75 percent of the patients.

Questions about the color or urine often yield colorful answers that leave the doctor uncertain as to what the patient meant by "red." The word "red" is often used loosely to encompass pink, brown, black or orange urine. All that is red in the urine is not necessarily blood. When ingested, beets, rhubarb and candies containing red aniline dyes can mimic bloody urine. Sometimes drugs like pyridium, Azo-dyes and phenolphthalein stain the urine.

GETTING TO THE CAUSE OF RED URINE:

The work-up for the patient with discolored urine tends to be easy, but it sometimes can be difficult. A young woman unfamiliar with her anatomy may confuse vaginal bleeding with hematuria. Once it is determined that there is true hematuria rather than contamination from vaginal or rectal lesions, it must be determined if the bleeding is coming from the kidneys, bladder, prostate or urethra.

TO GET TO THE SOURCE, ASK THE RIGHT QUESTION:

Is the red color present throughout urination or only at the end? The timing and relationships of bleeding to the urine stream may provide a rough guide to the site of origin. Bleeding at the beginning of the stream indicates a lesion in the urethra or bladder neck. Terminal hematuria generally is associated with bladder lesion. Total hematuria suggests bleeding from the upper urinary tract, such as the kidney or ureter. However, any type of bleeding can occur with any lesion, and timing of the hematuria may be misleading.

ARE THERE CLOTS IN THE URINE?

This simple observation by the patient or doctor may rule out a large group of disorders involving certain types of kidney inflammation, such as glomerulitis. The presence of red cell cast indicates bleeding from the kidney. Usually wormlike, stringy clots originate in the ureter or kidney, while round globulated clots are suggestive of bladder bleeding.

If there is back, flank or radiating colicky pain from the loin to groin it suggests the presence of stones. If there is bleeding from any other part of the body to suggest a clotting disorder, the patient may be taking anti-coagulant medication or aspirin or other drugs and should be asked about these.

ESTABLISHING THE CAUSE

Hematuria, whether gross or microscopic, painful or not, is a manifestation of a potentially serious, underlying disease until proven otherwise. It is unfortunate to neglect the urinary bleeding until an irreversible progressive kidney disease or a genitourinary tumor makes itself overtly manifest. On the other hand, it is unnecessary to subject the patient to needless extensive and repeated studies for nonprogressive lesions or a self-limited condition. Therefore, the extent to which a search for the exact cause is carried out must be individually determined and custom tailored.

A dipstick test can detect occult blood in the urine and is used as a screening test. The dipstick can also be used by patients for followup during the course of their treatment.

BLADDER INFECTIONS

The single most common cause of hematuria is hemorrhagic cystitis. A woman age 20-30 with a classical history of urinary bleeding, frequency, burning sensation while voiding and urgency is most likely to have acute Urinary Tract Infection (UTI). If she responds to medical treatment, then a wait-and-see attitude is prudent before ordering expensive and invasive tests.

"Honeymoon Cystitis' actually is a urethritis and may occur after any episode of sexual activity. After a period of rest from intercourse and with antibiotic treatment, soon the urine is back to normal color instead of a previous portwine or tomato juice color. As a rule, extensive investigation of the urinary tract is not warranted.

To attribute the hematuria to cystitis requires proof of UTI and a followup to prove that the hematuria clears following appropriate treatment. If the hematuria persists, an underlying pathological condition may need to be excluded and a detailed study conducted. Application of clinical judgement and thoroughness contribute to successful management.

Bleeding from the urethra is nearly always bright red and usually manifests as initial intermittent hematuria. Women may notice blood on the toilet paper after urinating. Urethral caruncles are small cherry-colored lesions that are painful and very tender. In males, inspection of the external opening (meatus) may reveal warts (condyloma) or ulceration.

Bladder cancer Hematuria is the usual initial symptom and occurs in over 80 percent of the patients. A small lesion may require only simple cauterization treatment whereas the same tumor discovered after a longer interval may need extensive surgery. Therefore, painless hematuria should not be ignored. X-rays like the Intravenous Pyelogram (IVP) and cystoscopy usually are performed. Patients in whom no apparent cause for hematuria can be found are advised to undergo cystoscopy during an episode of bleeding to help locate the source.

Cancer of the bladder and prostate may co-exist or a lesion in one organ may invade the other.

INJURY (TRAUMA)

Patients should be questioned for a history of trauma, either accidental or self-induced. Recently, a 16-year-old male complained of severe persistent urethral bleeding following morning erections. X-rays of the urethra revealed a fistula caused by a perineal injury suffered while riding a bicycle.

Trauma to the kidney varies in severity. Contusions in the absence of X-ray (pyelographic) abnormality are managed by bed rest.

Kidney, urethral and bladder stones can cause either gross or microscopic hematuria. The patient's description of the pain of passing a stone is the classic clue. But pain may be absent. An IVP is the test of choice for confirmation of stones and cystoscopy is helpful. Blood tests like calcium and uric acid level sometimes aid in the diagnosis.

Kidney tumors often are discovered as a palpable mass and confirmed on IVP X-rays. A sonogram helps to differentiate a cystic mass from a solid kidney tumor. Bleeding from kidney cancer can be profuse and, on occasion, life threatening, requiring emergency surgery.

CONCLUSION

Bloody urine is not an uncommon condition which causes alteration in the appearance of urine and induces patients to seek medical and urological help. Hematuria is not infrequently the sole sign and is sometimes associated with other urinary symptoms and signs.

Dr. Nick Shroff is a practicing urologist in Midland.

A Challenging Climb For New Director

First came the feeling of wanting to help people. Then came the excitement of challenge. Sonja Cothran found the combination for the perfect career choice -- nursing.

She started in nursing in 1969 upon graduating from Capital City School of Nursing in Washington, D.C., and receiving her licensure. Her career has been built on stepping up a ladder of challenges. The most recent step she took saw her coming to Physicians and Surgeons Hospital as Director of Nursing.

On the previous rung, Ms. Cothran, R.N., CNOR, had worked at Lea Regional Hospital in Hobbs, N.M., as the OR Supervisor. While there she served as staff nurse in the ICCU, co-patient care coordinator for MICU, SICU and Emergency Room and cardiac rehab coordinator. She also worked as consultant to the Director of Nurses.

"There was a general feeling of wanting to help people," she recalled of her reasons for choosing nursing as a career. "I had worked as a Candy Striper and really enjoyed that."

Then she encountered the excitement of challenges in nursing school. "The more I learned, the more I wanted to know about the disease process and how to help people through it."

After receiving her licensure, Ms. Cothran began climbing the ladder of challenges by working in a wide range of nursing. She has worked as staff and charge nurse in various departments, including neurology/neuro-surgical units, as charge nurse on the 7-3 and 3-11 shifts in ICCU and the Emergency Room.

Through the years she has sought to expand her training and upgrade her abilities. She is certified as an Advanced Life Support Provider and Instructor and is a Certified Nurse of the Operating Room.

The opportunities and challenges in nursing are more evident today, according to Ms. Cothran. "There are opportunities in every area of nursing. There's an aspect of nursing that has to be carried out by the Registered Nurse, and R.N.'s carry a great deal of responsibility," she said.

Southwest drubs Tascosa, 77-52

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

See Sidney shoot.

See Sidney shoot layups.

See Sidney shoot short jumpers from the baseline.

See Sidney turn almost everything he touches into two points.

Fort Worth Southwest senior Sidney Baker used a textbook shooting performance to propel his Rebels into the Class 5A state tournament Saturday. The 6-3 forward made 14-of-15 field goal attempts for a game-high 28 points in Southwest's 77-53 romp over Amarillo Tascosa in Region I finals action at Chaparral Center.

Southwest, 34-3, travels to Austin later this week for a shot at their first-ever state basketball championship. Tascosa finished at 25-8.

For Baker, his success was as easy as watching Dick and Jane run through the pages of a preschooler's picture book.

"Our guards handled the ball well and Clay (McCook) and Steve (Mueller) set great picks," Baker said. "It was really a team effort."

Baker fueled a 14-0 Southwest run with 12 points in the last five minutes of the first half. The Fort Worthers' spurt effectively eliminated any thought that Tascosa might have had of pulling off its second upset in as many nights — little over 12 hours after the Amarillo school had knocked off defending region champion Fort Worth Dunbar on Friday night.

The Tascosa Rebels, Midland High's conquerors in bi-district play last weekend, kept the score respectable for the first 11 minutes. Southwest led by as many as five in the first period, but Tascosa scored four points in the final minute of the first period to pull within one, and the T-Rebels even took a 24-23 lead on one of Matt Harkins' five three-pointers.

But Tascosa wouldn't score again in the half after Harkins' go-ahead shot with 5:03 left. Meanwhile, Southwest got its fast break going for Baker's short-range heroics to take a 37-24 halftime lead.

Southwest expanded its lead to 20 points with 6:52 left in the game, but Tascosa busted loose for 10 points in the next 63 seconds, including two three-pointers by Harkins — to cut the Fort Worth lead to 55-45 with 5:49 left.

For the second straight night, Tascosa used a late press to scare its foe. But after Harkins' last three-pointer, Baker struck for three baskets and David Thomas added a basket and free throw to put the game out of reach.

That doesn't mean that Southwest coach James Wood wasn't anxious.

"They got in a press that we weren't prepared for," Wood said. "We panicked and had players in the wrong spots.

"They did to us what they did to Dunbar (when Tascosa erased a nine-point lead in the final two minutes Friday)."

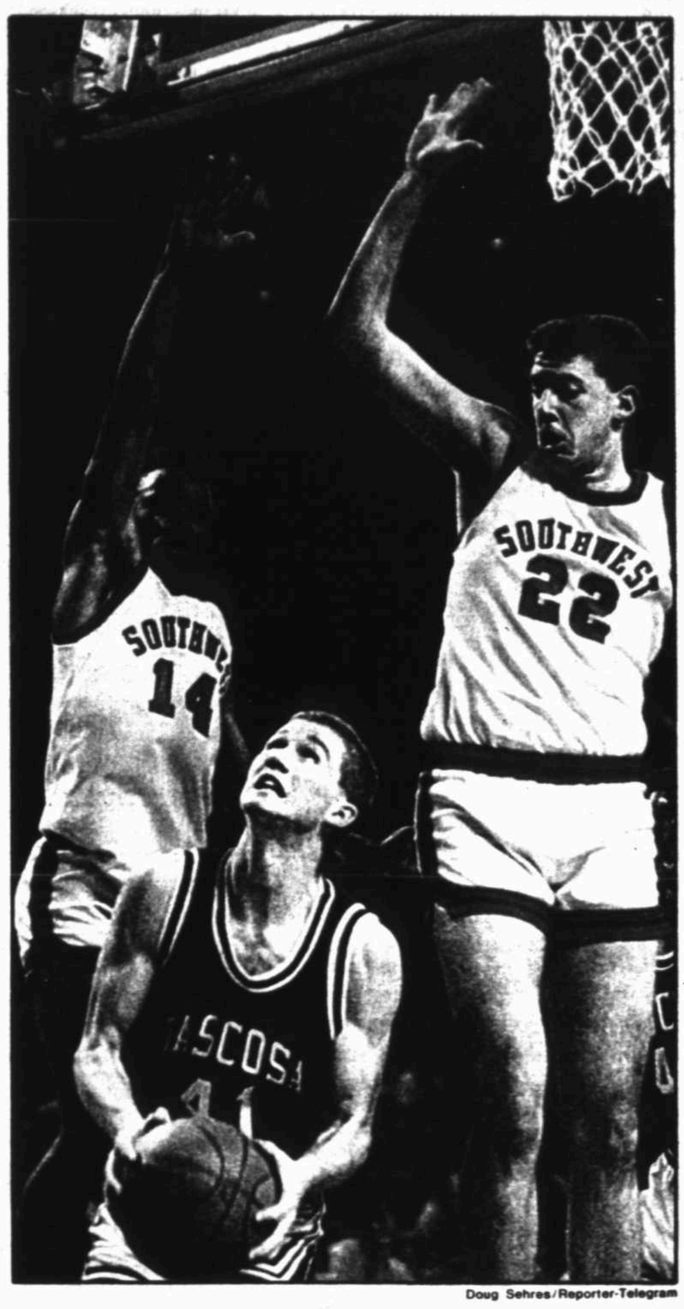

But it wasn't enough, and Tascosa was denied its first-ever trip to the state tourney.

"I think Southwest had a few more weapons than Dunbar," T-Rebel coach Rick Gilmore said. "They have an excellent team.

"We still had a chance when we were down 10. I felt like if we could get the score within four or six points that we could make anything happen.

"We saw that their press never gave up," Southwest guard Adrian Adams said. Baker credited backcourt mate Walter Nealy with getting things going after Tascosa's spurt.

No. 1 Arizona nudges Bruins

From Wire Reports

LOS ANGELES — Sean Elliott scored 26 points and took control in the final minutes as top-ranked Arizona beat UCLA 89-86 Saturday in the final regular-season game for both teams.

Jud Buechler had 18 points and 14 rebounds for Arizona, 24-3 overall and 17-1 in the Pacific-10 Conference. The Wildcats clinched their second straight league title Thursday with a victory at Washington State.

UCLA, which suffered a 38-point loss to Arizona two weeks ago in Tucson, is 19-8 and 13-5.

UCLA's Trevor Wilson, who finished with 30 points, made a bank shot and teammate Kevin Walker hit a 3-pointer to bring UCLA within three points.

Following an Elliott layup, the Bruins cut the margin to 86-84 on a layup by Wilson, who had 22 points in the second half. But Anthony Cook, who scored 17 points, helped clinch the victory for Arizona with a pair of free throws with 31 seconds left.

Missouri 66, Colorado 65

COLUMBIA, Mo. Greg Church had 21 points, including four free throws in the final 11 seconds, as seventh-ranked Missouri, 24-7, 10-3, held off a Colorado, 7-20, 2-12, as the Tigers a perfect record at home this season.

Reggie Morton's 3-point basket for Colorado with 48 seconds left cut the Tigers' lead to 63-60. After Missouri's Lee Coward missed the front end of a one-and-one, Morton made a basket to bring the Buffaloes to within 63-62 with 18 seconds left. Church then hit his two one-and-one opportunities, the first with 11 seconds left, the second with five. Morton, who led Colorado with 19 points, hit a 3-point basket at the buzzer for the final score.

Michigan 119, Iowa 96

ANN ARBOR, Mich. — All Michigan coach Bill Frieder needs is some R&R. Rice and Robinson, that is. Rumeal Robinson hit 16 of his 22 points in the first half and teammate Glen Rice picked up after intermission with 29 of his 33 points as the 10th-ranked Wolverines, 23-6, 11-5, breezed to a Big Ten victory over No. 11 Iowa, 21-8, 9-7.

The Wolverines were no match in the second half, scoring 71 points and making 69 percent of their shots. Michigan, which shot 63 percent for the contest, entered the game leading the nation with a 57.8 percent average.

"Overall, the key for us was aggressiveness," said Rice, the Big Ten's leading scorer with a 24.9 average. "We played hard and that let us win the game. The only reason they shut me down in the first half is because I wasn't working as well as I was capable of."

In their previous meeting, Michigan beat Iowa 108-107 in double overtime.

Ball St 92, WMU 79

KALAMAZOO, Mich. — Paris McCurdy scored 22 points, including 16 in the second half, as No. 19 Ball State, 25-2, 14-2, defeated Western Michigan, 12-15, 6-10, in a Mid-American Conference. The victory was the 12th straight for the Cardinals.

NC State 110, Wake 103

GREENSBORO, N.C. — Rodney Monroe provided the key points and his North Carolina State teammates provided the stamina as the 20th-ranked Wolfpack, 20-7, 10-4, beat Wake Forest, 13-14, 3-11, in the first quadruple overtime game in Atlantic Coast Conference history.

N.C. State will win the regular-season ACC title outright if North Carolina loses to Duke on Sunday. If the Tar Heels win, they will share the crown with N.C. State.

Monroe finished with 26 points, including shots that put N.C. State into two of the overtime periods.

Monroe grabbed the rebound of a deliberately missed free throw by Kelsey Weems with two seconds left in regulation and lofted in a shot while falling on his back to tie the game at 77.

N.C. State overpowered a tiring Wake Forest team in the final overtime of the game, which lasted more than 2½ hours.

Senior Chucky Brown scored a career-high 34 points for N.C. State, which led 42-37 at halftime. Avie Lester scored 18 while Howard finished with 11 points and 12 rebounds. Corchiani scored 10 and added 10 assists.

Lee girls tie for swim title

At Regional meet

From Staff Reports

LUBBOCK — New records and high finishes characterized Midland showings at the Region I swim meet here Saturday.

In a real shocker, Midland Lee tied El Paso Coronado for the girls team title, while Midland High placed fourth. The Lee girls finished with 41 points, while MHS added 23.

The Midland High boys placed third in team standings despite record-breaking performances from Matt Seay and Moss Fennell. The Lee boys finished 12th.

The Lee girls exceeded Coach John Bettina's expectations, to say the least. Bettina expected more of a middle-of-the-pack finish, especially with the loss of freestylist Chris Tom, who sat out the meet with the flu.

But divers Ann Sullivan, Melissa Gibson, Carey Forsythe and Dominique Blanton scored 15 of the 41 Lee points Friday night to get the Lady Rebels rolling.

Stephanie Reed added a win in the 500-meter freestyle and a second in the 200 freestyle. Sullivan was the other Lee qualifier with her diving win.

For MHS, two-time state meet qualifier Michaela Hasek made it three straight with wins in the 200-meter individual medley and 100 backstroke. hasek also anchored the winning 400-meter relay team that included Lori Stephens, Alyssa Archer and Francis Allen.

Seay set school records in both the 100 breaststroke and 200 IM, though he won only the breast event. Meanwhile, soph teammate Fennell won both distance freestyle races, setting a new MHS mark in the 200 free.

The winner in each regional event — and the next eight times statewide — qualifies for the state meet later this month in Austin.

Team Girls: 1. Midland Lee and El Paso Coronado 41. 4. Midland High 23.
Boys: 1. Amarillo. 3. Midland 39, 12. Lee 4.

Boggs affair tests Red Sox

By MURRAY CHASS
N.Y. Times News Service

Conflict. The theme prevails throughout baseball, and spring training has hardly begun. It comes in an assortment of sizes and kinds. It always has, always will.

Start with Boston. When it comes to comparing the Wade Boggs affair with other intramural messes, who is in a better position to judge than Rick Cerone?

Cerone once brashly told George Steinbrenner to excuse himself and his plumpness from the Yankees' clubhouse, adorning his suggestion with some of the choicest terms from the vocabulary of the clubhouse.

"This is something completely different from what went on with the Yankees," said Cerone, now a Boston catcher, "because it involves a player against other players rather than the owner against players.

"Most of the controversy in New York stemmed from George against Winfield or George against Reggie or George against the manager. This involves players more directly."

With the Yankees, Cerone said, the off-field turbulence didn't affect the players on the field. The Red Sox, he said, can only wait and see if the fallout from the Margo Adams magazine articles affects them.

If the Red Sox were to get off to a slow start, Cerone acknowledged, "that may make it tougher. I just wish the media would quit writing about it. They'll continue to write about it even when it seems calm. That's similar to New York.

"I hope that from now until the second article comes out, you don't have to read about it in the paper. My feeling is report on it, get it out but get it done and go on to something else. Enough has been written on this. Let's get to playing baseball."

The Penthouse papers, though, refuse to die, and it's not necessarily the reporters who won't let them die.

Just when the matter seemed to be receding into a holding pattern, Haywood Sullivan, one of the team's owners, summoned Boggs and the other players mentioned in the first Penthouse article to a meeting Friday to clear the air and determine if the players could live with one another during the season. Then he held a news conference with Boston reporters.

"We were all ready to start writing about baseball," said Dan Shaughnessy of The Boston Globe.

Cerone, a veteran of two terms with the Yankees, was involved in a fight with Dwight Evans last season in an incident that stemmed from the Boggs affair. The episode, though, wasn't quite as remarkable as the clubhouse incident after a playoff game in 1981 when Cerone played for Team Turmoil.

It was after the fourth game of the division playoff against Milwaukee that Steinbrenner charged into the clubhouse and began berating the players for their play. Cerone, one of those singled out by the owner, interrupted him, referred to him by an unflattering name and invited him, in a severe tone, to get out.

OC Wranglers leave no doubt

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

WACO — Region V Cinderella lost its golden slipper here at Highland gym here Saturday night and Odessa College's Wranglers ate it.

The Wranglers roared to a big 31-8 spurt in the second half to break open a close game and cruised to the title with a 108-77 victory, leaving Ranger with a 17-16 record and tournament upsets over South Plains and Howard College. OC advances with a 33-1 mark.

OC's Larry Johnson, who is headed for UNLV next year, drew tournament MVP honors with 94 points and 63 rebounds in three games. He had 25 points and 24 rebounds against the Rangers.

Ranger's Kenneth Austin scored a game high 29 points to also land an all-tourney berth, but he missed his last seven shots from the field while OC was on its home stretch run.

Ranger was expected to compete with OC by virtue of the three-point shot, and did hit 10, but OC countered with with nine of 11, five from all-tourney pick Lynn Collins, who had 23 for the night.

"Ranger was really crowding people inside the paint to stop Larry and that left me open," said Collins, who had 16 first half points. "Then they came out on me and that opened up Johnson inside."

OC coach Dennis Helms tried to worry about Ranger, but had problems.

Jimmy Johnson is guy who checks probability charts

By AL CARTER
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — It was a long shot. But Jimmy Johnson, as usual, hadn't checked the probability charts.

Unbeaten Texas A&M was going to whip Arkansas, win the 1975 Southwest Conference football championship and play in the Cotton Bowl. No one really doubted it. Except perhaps Jimmy Johnson, Arkansas's defensive coordinator.

"Let me show you how much I believe we're going to win," Johnson told his skeptical brother-in-law the night before the game. He took off his most prized possession — his Cotton Bowl watch, earned while serving as captain of the Razorbacks' 1964 national championship team.

"You take this watch," Johnson said, "because I'm fixing to win another one tomorrow."

And he did. Arkansas rolled into the Cotton Bowl with a 31-6 victory and one of the great upsets in SWC history.

LAST weekend Johnson, the son of a Port Arthur dairyman, found himself at the center of another historic upheaval on the Texas football scene. Jerry Jones, an Arkansas oil tycoon, purchased controlling interest in the Dallas Cowboys from H.R. "Bum" Bright, a financially strapped Dallas banker.

Jones immediately named his former University of Arkansas football teammate, Jimmy Johnson, to coach the team — and thereby replace Tom Landry, the only man to coach the Cowboys since the team's founding in 1960.

Landry, a genuine Texas legend, had coached in five Super Bowls. Johnson's first day as Cowboy coach was his first day on the payroll of any professional football club. Hostility greeted him in buckets. Skeptics doled out long odds of Johnson turning around a Cowboy team that had slipped, in recent years, to the bottom of the NFL stack.

Again, Johnson forgot to check the probability charts. Such is the grist for mathematicians. Johnson, however, was trained in pyschology. His watchwords have been positive thinking, ambition, opportunism and, of course, football.

JOHNSON'S career has been distinguished by a fierce desire to suceed.

That desire earned Johnson national attention over the past decade as he soared from the ranks of an obscure sideline assistant to head coach of a national championship team at the University of Miami.

Now 45, Johnson has tempered the often sophomoric self-assuredness that marked his reign as a rookie coach at Oklahoma State and once even earned him a disparaging nickname among his colleagues — "Smiley." Just one season into his stint at Oklahoma State, Johnson sent feathers flying around the Big Eight Conference with an infamous preseason boast — "We're gonna knock their eyes out."

Johnson's team won only three games that year.

Johnson ate crow, but pressed ahead with his high-energy style of coaching. As the odds of success grew shorter, his memory grew longer. Passed over twice for the Arkansas head coaching position, he jumped in 1984 to coach the Miami Hurricanes, national champions the previous season.

Johnson returned the Hurricanes to the national championship throne in 1987. Along the way, Miami blistered Arkansas 51-7, one of the worst losses in Razorback history.

JOHNSON was immersed in self-confidence very early on. One of three children — his brother Wayne is a chemical plant employee in Baytown — Johnson seldom gave in to boyhood setbacks. He played linebacker and guard at Port Arthur Jefferson High School and impressed college scouts with his spirited play and effervescent attitude.

He played three seasons at Arkansas, earning all-conference honors at guard in 1964. He hadn't planned to coach. A career as an industrial psychologist was more to his liking. But members of Frank Broyles' Arkansas coaching staff liked Johnson's gung-ho attitude toward football.

They eased him into a series of assistant coach appointments —at Louisiana Tech, Wichita State, Iowa State, Oklahoma and, then, back at Arkansas. Given control of the Razorback defense, Johnson established himself as head coaching material. But when Broyles retired in 1976, Johnson was passed over in favor of Lou Holtz. After a brief stint as Jackie Sherrill's assistant at the University of Pittsburgh, in 1979 Johnson was offered the opportunity to clean up one of college football's biggest cesspools — Oklahoma State, a school mired in NCAA probation.

OC

"I woke up Friday morning with Midland College on my mind and I woke up Saturday morning with Midland on my mind and I knew it should be on Ranger," said Helms. "It's just human nature and you have to fight that."

The Wranglers ended the first half with an 8-0 run in the last 1:50 of play to break open tight 40-40 tie in a game that had produced five ties and seven lead changes up to that point.

The Rangers got 20 first half points from three-point genius Austin while OC's Johnson was held to a meager two points and no field goals through the first 11 minutes of play. However, Johnson scored 11 points in the last nine minutes of the first half and OC began to gain momentum.

Guard Lynn Collins led OC in the first half with 16 points, hitting four-of-five shots from fantasy land.

Despite the OC sweep in the Region V tournament, the Wranglers still have their work cut out for them before landing that national tournament berth in Hutchinson, Kan. OC will have to defeat either Tyler or San Jacinto in a bi-region game to gain the school's first national tourney berth.

Tyler and San Jacinto are playing a best-of-three playoff in Region XIV. Thursday, Tyler upset San Jacinto in Houston to end the amazing Raven home court winning streak at 101, but San Jac returned the discourtesy with a 105-91 win Saturday in Tyler. The rubber game is set for Tuesday night in College Station.

Johnson hopes OC can go further last year after losing in the bi-region game to San Jacinto.

"We just want to go as far as we can," said Johnson. "We fell out too early last year and didn't make it to the big tournament. Maybe we can do that this time."

Helms said, "I like to think we are a little better than last year. It wasn't a case of us not wanting it last year. We just got beat by a good team."

Midland's Charles "Smokey" McCovery was an all-tourney selection after games of 19 and 35 points. Howard's Terrance Lewis and Ranger's Reginald Davis, who had 21 points against OC, were the other two picks.

McEnroe

MC ENROE WINS WCT— John McEnroe shook of the fatigue of a four-set match only 12 hours earlier to earn a record fifth WCT Finals title Saturday with a methodical 6-3, 6-3, 7-6 victory over fellow American Brad Gilbert. McEnroe, 11-1 lifetime against Gilbert, whose only victory over McEnroe was in the first round of the 1985 Masters. McEnroe took six months off the tour after the loss to Gilbert, saying "I'm not going to play tennis if I lose to jerks like that."

NASCAR 200— Rob Moroso won the Goodwrench 200 NASCAR Grand National Saturday at North Carolina Motor Speedway when race leader Harry Gant was black-flagged two laps from the finish due to a reported oil leak. Moroso, who started his Oldsmobile from the pole, earned $15,350 for his third career Grand National Division victory. Dale Earnhardt, in a Chevrolet, finished 1.43 seconds behind Moroso.

NHL EXPELS PROBERT— Bob Probert's notorious career with the Detroit Red Wings was dealt perhaps its final blow Saturday when he became the first player expelled from the NHL for getting caught with cocaine. NHL President John Ziegler said "It is a special privilege to play in the National Hockey League. If you choose to be involved with illegal drugs, you will lose that privilege," Ziegler said. "If (drug use) is your choice, we want you out of our business."

RAIDERS, NFL SETTLE— The Los Angeles Raiders and NFL reached settlement Saturday in a decade-old, multimillion-dollar anti-trust suit involving the football team's move from Oakland to Los Angeles.

MIAMI GT POLE— Pete Halsmer, driving a new Mercury Cougar XR-7, grabbed the pole position for the Miami IMSA GT race with a fast lap of 84.167 mph Saturday on the downtown circuit. Rod Millen of New Zealand was second in a Nissan 300ZX at 83.930, followed by Hans Stuck of West Germany in an Audi 90 Quattro at 83.773.

ETC....Carl Icahn's Rose's Cantina, ridden by Eddie Maple, came from off the pace to score an easy six-length victory in the Next Move Handciap for fillies and mares 3-years-old and up at Aqueduct...Mercedes won the $500,000 Florida Derby as favored Dixieland Brass failed to finish at Gulfstream Park. Dixieland Brass, winner of four straight stakes, pulled up lame din the final turn...

Goosie shares 1st in Vintage

INDIAN WELLS, Calif. (AP) — J.C. Goosie never won a PGA Tour event in 23 years on the circuit. Now, the 59-year-old golfer is tied for the lead after the second round of the Vintage Invitational seniors tournament.

Goosie shot 68 on the Mountain Course at the Vintage Club and birdied four of the last five holes Friday for a 36-hole total of 5-under-par 139. He is tied with first-round leader Bob Charles, who shot a 71.

Goosie's most remarkable shot came on the the 15th hole — a 516-yard par-5. "I was still 115 yards from the cup, hoping I could get up and down for the par," Goosie said of his fourth shot. He thought he would bogey or worse, but the ball disappeared into the cup.

"I took a pitching wedge and hit it just right," he said. "It went into the cup in the air for a birdie.

"That pumped me up. I thought I could walk on water."

Goosie, administrator of the Space Coast mini tour in Florida, is looking for his first Seniors Tour victory in nine years.

Miller Barber is third at 140 after shooting a 70. He's one stroke in front of seniors rookie Tom Shaw and Don January, both of whom shot 70.

Defending champion Orville Moody had a round of 71, but is four strokes back at 143.

Goosie, who carries two putters in his bag, feels that club is all that's prevented him from winning in the past.

"It got so bad, I once three-putted nine out of 18 holes," Goosie said. "That's when I knew there had to be a better way to putt."

Goosie now putts side-saddle on down-grain putts and the conventional way on all others.

Jaycees' Juco All-Star cage classic set April 7

From Staff Reports

The fourth annual National Junior College Athletic Association All-Star Classic will be held 7 p.m. April 8 at Chaparral Center on the Midland College campus. The Midland Jaycees again are sponsoring the game.

Don Burdick, Jaycee project chairman for this year's classic, said he expects next month's contest to be the best one to date.

Proceeds from the game go to fund the various civic and charitable projects of the Jaycees.

The annual contest matches junior college all-stars from Texas against their counterparts from the remainder of the U.S.

Once again plans for the annual banquet on the eve of the all star game are being completed, Burdick informed, and will be announced in a few days.

Game tickets are on sale at the Chaparral Center box office, Bill Williams Sports, Bill Williams Tire Center, or may be purchased from any Midland Jaycee.

UM wary of coach's background

MIAMI (AP) — Concerns about Miami coaching prospect Dennis Erickson's longevity at other schools and attention to his players' academics have arison as speculation continues about a successor for Jimmy Johnson.

The Hurricanes have lost Howard Schnellenberger and Johnson, new coach of the Dallas Cowboys, in the last six years. Both won national championships at the school but left for more lucrative opportunities.

Besides Erickson, Miami offensive coordinator Gary Stevens is in contention for the job.

Erickson met with Athletic Director Sam Jankovich at his home Friday and came away saying, "Sam said he's got a couple of days left in the process. I feel I'm still in it. He said I was."

Back at the office, Erickson was greeted by an airplane pulling a banner that read "Hire Gary Please."

Miami President Edward Foote has insisted on the football program improving its standards after several incidents in the Johnson years embarrassed the school.

The football team improved their off-field reputation last season, and all of the current seniors are on schedule to graduate.

Erickson, 41, left Wyoming after just one year to take the Washington State post where he has completed two years of a five-year contract. It includes a buyout clause that means Miami would have to compensate the Pacific Ten school between $100,000 and $300,000 to hire its coach.

Erickson didn't keep as tight a rein on his players' academic progress as his WSU predecessor Jim Walden, The Miami Herald and The Tampa Tribune reported.

And Erickson didn't return to Laramie to talk with his Wyoming players after deciding to head west. Fans bid him farewell with a bomb threat and rock through his window.

The way Erickson has handled the Miami situation has already prompted editorial criticism in Washington newspapers.

"I can't imagine why you'd blow your fragile credibility here just to look around," Spokane columnist Dan Weaver wrote. "I like your act coach, but the exit needs work."

Sources told the Herald that Jankovich and Erickson have reached a coaching staff agreement allowing Erickson to bring most of his Washington State aides and keep at least two Miami assistants.

Pate storms from 9 back to take lead

CORAL SPRINGS, Fla. (AP) — Steve Pate shot an 8-under-par 64 to come from nine shots back and take the third-round lead Saturday in the $800,000 Honda Classic.

"I shot lower than I hoped," said Pate, who one-putted 11 times on the TPC course at Eagle Trace.

That combined with a collapse by second-round leader Dan Pohl to provide Pate with a one-stroke lead going into Sunday's final round.

Pate, a two-time winner last season, completed 54 holes in 201, 15-under par. He was among the 72 golfers whose second rounds were halted by darkness Friday night.

"I was 4-under with seven to play," Pate said. "I knew the cut would be 4-under, so I was just trying to get in the last two rounds."

Pate birdied three of those seven second-round holes, then moved in front with his bogey-free third round.

"Probably the best putting round I've had this year," said Pate, who went 5-under for the round when he holed a 45-foot birdie putt on the ninth.

He came within six inches of holing out a wedge shot on the 10th, birdied the 14th from 15 feet, scored from 10 feet on the 16th and then saved par — and the lead — with a 10-footer on the final hole.

"I didn't expect to be in this position at all. I had no hope of this," Pate said. "But the guys in front of me weren't doing much and with the wind, the golf course was much tougher today."

Pohl, who led by three strokes after shooting a 62 in the second round, shot a 75 and was two strokes back at 203.

"Absolutely brain dead," he muttered after hitting an approach into a bunker on the 14th hole, where he made one of his five bogeys.

Virgil Hill keeps 175-pound title

BISMARCK, N.D. (AP) — Virgil Hill retained his World Boxing Association light heavyweight title Saturday, scoring a unanimous 12-round decision over Bobby Czyz.

It was Hill's fifth defense of his belt, which he won in September 1987, and his third in his home state in front of 8,500 fans at the sold-out Bismarck Civic Center.

Czyz had been attempting a comeback after losing his own world title more than a year ago.

Hill, 24-0 and a 1984 Olympic silver medalist, thwarted Czyz' punching power by dancing around the challenger and scoring with jabs and left hooks, effectively using his 7½-inch reach advantage. When Czyz managed to back Hill into a corner or onto the ropes, the champion used his qucikness to escape.

There were no knockdowns during the fight, although Czyz staggered Hill in the third round with a pair of combinations. Hill fell briefly to one knee, but referee Tony Perez signaled that he slipped.

Hill's best showing occurred in the 11th round when he scored several times with the right hand.

Bulldogs claim shortened T of C

By JIMMY PATTERSON
Sports Writer

For the first time in its 15 year history, the Tournament of Champions fell victim to foul weather.

Bitter cold, blustery winds, blowing snow. That's not baseball weather. Not even in West Texas.

After two days, coaches of the six high school teams met Saturday morning and voted to cancel the event and crown Midland High the tournament champion. It was Midland High's first tournament championship in the history of the event.

Because of its shortened length, Midland High's will be a title with an asterisk. The Bulldogs did, though, display the necessary baseball prowess to earn the right to the title following their 9-8 win over Lubbock Monterey Saturday night. The Bulldogs won all three games they participated in at the T of C.

BOTH TOURNAMENT director Ron Greeley and Midland Lee head coach Ernie Johnson said the tourney was cancelled due not to the prospect of snow but because of the sub-freezing temperatures which greeted area residents. Temperatures remained in the 20s throughout Saturday with wind chills at subzero and blowing afternoon snows.

"We met with all the coaches," Greeley said, "and everyone said that this early in the season it's not worth the risk getting the players injured."

Because of the cold conditions, risk of muscle pulls and other weather-related injuries.

LUBBOCK Monterey, which finished with two wins and one loss, was awarded second place and Fort Worth Southwest, 1-1, was third.

Midland Lee would likely have finished fourth after defeating Thomas Jefferson, 9-2, Friday night. Lee was to have met Southwest Saturday at 10 a.m. Midland High was scheduled to play at 5:30 p.m. Saturday in the championship game.

Also due to the cold, no Most Valuable Player was named and the post-tourney banquet was canceled.

GAME 7 (Friday night)
Midland High 9, Monterey 8

In what eventually turned out to be the championship game, the Midland High Bulldogs defeated the Lubbock Monterey Plainsmen, 9-8.

Scott Melzer finished with three singles in four at bats, drove in two runs and scored two.

The big inning for the Bulldogs was the second when five runs came across. MHS sent 11 men to the plate in the frame. Monterey starter Brent Houtchens helped the Dogs by throwing four wild pitches that inning.

Pat Mowles had a triple and Will Sowders a double in the lengthy inning. After the five-run barrage, the Dogs never trailed again.

MHS' James Madrid, a sophomore, won the game despite throwing eight wild pitches.

Midland High, now 4-1 on the season, will attempt to keep its win streak alive, travelling to Monterey Tuesday for a 5 p.m. doubleheader.

Midland Lee, 1-3 on the year, hosts Lubbock Coronado Tuesday in a 5 p.m. doubleheader at Angel Stadium.

Midland's Morrow-Essex second in Austin tennis

From Staff Reports

AUSTIN — The unseeded pair of Luke Morrow and Harper Essex used several upset wins to place second in boys doubles competition at the Austin I.S.D. Tennis Invitational here Friday and Saturday.

Morrow and Essex knocked off the third-seeded pair from Lubbock Monterey and the No. 2 seed from San Antonio Churchill en route to their finals match in one of the toughest tournaments in the state against the top seeds from Austin Westlake.

"They're finally playing up to their capabilities," MHS coach Steve Hoover said. "They really concentrated well."

Other MHS netters at Austin included Liz Ameel in girls singles; Leo Wei in boys singles; and the girls doubles pair of Krissy Hall and Susan Johnson. None of those players survived the quarterfinals, however, though only partial results were available by press time.

First Round
Morrow-Essex def. Brandon-West (Round Rock Westwood) 6-2, 6-2.

Second Round

New UT-OU contract may mean steroid tests

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The University of Texas is considering including mandatory steroid testing in a new contract for the UT-Oklahoma football series, Texas athletics director DeLoss Dodds said Saturday.

"Donnie (Duncan, University of Oklahoma athletics director) and I talked about that over a year ago and we put a contract together that we both looked at," Dodds said.

"There's been continuing talks about the contract, but we haven't decided anything on (steroid testing) yet," Dodds said. "It's all conversation right now."

Duncan could not be reached by AP Saturday.

Dodds said other proposed additions to the contract included that the officiating crew be neutral. He said he expected the contract to be signed "pretty quick," but declined to speculate how soon.

The UT-OU game contract expired last fall.

Texas football coach David McWilliams said he knew Dodds was "looking at" adding mandatory testing for steroid use to the contract, and called it "a good idea."

"We play on an even field in conference," McWilliams said. "But this was not an ultimatum on our part."

The Southwest Conference tests players for steroids, but the Big Eight does not.

SWC Commissioner Fred Jacoby said Friday that he knows of no other league that conducts drug tests. The NCAA tests for a wide range of drugs before some bowl games and championship events in other sports.

Lee golfers take first in Andrews tourney

From Staff Reports

Midland Lee golfers captured first place honors in a weather-shortened Andrews Invitational Friday.

The scheduled two-round tournament was hampered by Saturday's cold and cancelled after the first day.

Rebel linksters finished with a 322; Beau Brown was second in the medalist race.

Midland High's Bulldog golfers finished tied for seventh with Big Spring. Both schools shot 341.

While one group of Lee golfers was winning in Andrews, the other Rebel fivesome was having its trouble in Austin.

J.J. King had a two-day 161 and Kelly Daviss a 168 to head up a Lee group which finished 15th out of 27 teams.

Both Midland High and Midland Lee compete Thursday and Friday in the San Angelo Classic.

Strawberry in dramatic return

Associated Press

Darryl Strawberry made a dramatic return from a one-day walkout with a three-run homer and Darren Reed's three-run shot capped a five-run seventh inning that rallied the New York Mets to a 9-8 exhibition victory over the Los Angeles Dodgers on Saturday.

It was the teams' first meeting since the Dodgers won last year's National League playoffs.

Strawberry, who left camp Thursday after throwing a punch at first baseman Keith Hernandez and was fined $750 when he failed to show up Friday, put the Mets ahead 3-2 with his first spring homer in the third inning off Tim Belcher. Strawberry has been upset because the Mets refused to renegotiate his contract.

He said he came back "because I felt it's right for me to come back to be a part of this team and my teammates at this time."

But he still threatened to leave the Mets after 1990, the year in is contract.

Los Angeles went ahead 8-3 with four runs off Wally Whitehurst in the fourth inning, including John Shelby's solo homer, and two more off John Mitchell in the sixth. Reed's second homer in as many spring games capped the seventh-inning comeback against Chris Jones and John Wetteland.

Jeff Hamilton homered for the Dodgers off Mets starter Sid Fernandez, who allowed two runs in three innings.

Pirates 2, Cardinals 1

A ninth-inning error by rookie second baseman Geronimo Pena set up Felix Fermin's game-winning sacrifice fly.

Dann Bilardello led off with a single off Jeff Fassero and was sacrificed to second. With one out, Pena bobbled a potential double-play grounder to load the bases and Fermin's fly ball scored pinch-runner John Cangelosi. Pittsburgh's other run off Joe Magrane in the first inning was also unearned. It came on an error by shortstop Rod Booker.

Red Sox 5, Tigers 2

Jim Rice hit a three-run homer and Carlos Quintana and Ellis Burks added solo shots in a five-run third inning.

Quintana led off with a home run off Frank Tanana. Wade Boggs singled for his fifth consecutive hit and Marty Barrett also singled. Rice followed with a home run and one out later Burks also homered.

Blue Jays 9, Phillies 2

Rob Ducey had four hits and Jesse Barfield three in Toronto's 16-hit attack. Toronto scored single runs in the second and third innings off Mike Maddux and two in the fourth off loser Bob Sebra. Scott Service gave up Toronto's last five runs, including Kelly Gruber's two-run homer.

White Sox 3, Rangers 2

Eddie Williams tripled home one run and scored another in a three-run fifth-inning Chicago rally. Paul Wilmet, the third of five Texas pitchers, gave up all the runs on four hits and a walk. He also balked home the final run.

Chicago starter Jack McDowell pitched three hitless innings. Chad Kreuter homered off Ken Patterson.

Royals 6, Reds 2

Bill Buckner's two-run homer capped a four-run eighth inning off Kent Tekulve, who allowed five hits and a walk in his first inning for the Reds. Pat Tabler's sacrifice fly broke a 2-2 tie and Jim Eisenreich's triple put Kansas City ahead before Buckner homered.

Marty Brown homered for the Reds, who committed five errors.

Twins 4, Astros 3

Jarvis Brown hit a tie-breaking two-run single off former Minnesota reliever Mark Portugal in a four-run seventh inning. With two out in the seventh, Charlie Kerfeld walked Paul Sorrento and Rafael Delima, then allowed run-scoring singles to Doug Baker and Al Newman. Portugal relieved and gave up Brown's two-run single.

Minnesota's Frank Viola, the 1988 American League Cy Young Award winner, allowed four hits and two runs in three innings. Houston managed only three hits over the last five against Roy Smith, Balvino Galvez, Jeff Reardon and Jim Davins.

Cubs 5, Athletics 4

Mark Grace hit a two-run homer off Oakland's Storm Davis in the third inning. Chicago's Mike Harkey, a highly regarded rookie projected to be in the Cubs' starting rotation, gave up a run and four hits in three innings. Oakland's Steve Howard hit a two-run homer off Dean Wilkins in the ninth.

Indians 7, Giants 4

Cleveland reliever Rich Yett struck out six in three innings and San Francisco shortstop Jose Uribe's throwing error led to three unearned runs in the second inning, two coming on Jerry Browne's single.

Bud Black pitched three scoreless innings for the victory. Loser Rick Reuschel allowed six hits and three unearned runs. Kevin Mitchell homered for the Giants.

Padres 4, Angels 2

California reliever Greg Minton walked four batters in the fourth inning, helping San Diego score three runs. Minton could not protect a 2-0 lead, walking Joey Cora with the bases loaded to force home what proved to be the winning run.

San Diego starter Dennis Rasmussen and California's Chuck Finley each pitched three scoreless innings.

Mariners 13, Brewers 2

Steve Balboni hit a grand slam in a nine-run fourth inning. Seattle had 15 hits off five Milwaukee pitchers and the Brewers committed six errors that led to eight unearned runs.

The score was 1-1 in the fourth when the Mariners sent 13 men to the plate. Balboni's homer came off Chris Bosio, who allowed all nine runs in the inning. Shortstop Mario Diaz batted twice in the inning and drove in four runs with a single and a bases-loaded triple.

Braves 1, Expos 1

Atlanta pinch runner Dennis Hood scored on a sacrifice fly by Jeff Weatherby in the ninth inning and the Braves and Montreal played to a 13-inning tie. Montreal scored in the seventh on Alonzo Powell's RBI double.

Jordan sparks UT to SWC swim title

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Texas sprinter Shaun Jordan lowered the conference record in the 100-yard freestyle Saturday night for the second time in less than eight hours, helping the Longhorns wrap up their 10th consecutive title in the Southwest Conference Swimming and Diving Championships.

Texas easily outdistanced the field, leading from start to finish in the three-day meet. The Longhorns finished with 912 points, followed by Southern Methodist with 748 points.

Texas A&M finished third with 455 points, Arkansas fourth with 400, Texas Christian fifth with 399 and Rice sixth with 100. Baylor, Houston and Texas Tech do not field teams.

Jordan, who was named the meet's outstanding swimmer after sweeping all three sprint events in conference-record times, won Saturday's 100 freestyle with a time of 43.06. That lowered the record he set in the morning's preliminary heat with a time of 43.17.

Chris Jacobs of Texas set the previous record of 43.20 in 1985.

Scott Donie of Southern Methodist, who added Saturday's platform diving title to his one- and three-meter titles, was named outstanding diver of the meet.

Southern Methodist's Craig Jackson was the only non-Longhorn to win a swimming event the entire meet. Jackson earned his second consecutive title in the 200-yard butterfly with a time of 1:46.74.

Two other Texas swimmers successfully defended their titles. Andy Gill, who earlier won the 100-yard backstroke, won the 200-yard backstroke with a time of 1:47.70, and Kirk Stackle won the 200-yard breaststroke with a time of 1:59.92.

Middlebury skier wins NCAA slalom

JACKSON, Wyo. (AP) — Rob MacLeod of Middlebury College stormed back in the second race to claim his first ever NCAA slalom championship in the third day of racing Saturday at the NCAA National Skiing Championships in Jackson.

MacLeod came back for the win after placing third after the first race.

"The second race was the kind I like. I was a little warmer," MacLeod said. "I knew that after the first run, if I had a great second run and didn't make any mistakes, I would have a shot. But it was better than I expected."

He attributed his victory in part to his experience with NCAA racing, saying he is more relaxed after competing for four years.

Ian Witter of the University of Colorado stayed in the same place after the first race, eventually bagging the second spot 44 tenths of a second behind MacLeod. Dave Brule of Williams College surprised the strong west skiers by sneaking into third place, while Henrick Smith-Meyer of Utah claimed the fourth spot. David Kincaid of the University of Wyoming placed in the fifth position.

"We definitely had to get three to finish for sure," Kincaid said. "If we moved up, then it was a bonus. For me, I felt I skied as well as I had all year."

Kincaid was followed by Vermont's Dean Keller in sixth and Fredrik Zimmer of Colorado came in seventh. Mark McVey gave Wyoming an eighth place spot, followed by Grant Richardson of the University of Alaska-Anchorage in ninth and Devin O'Neil from Middlebury in tenth.

For the women, Gella Hamburg of Vermont repeated her NCAA championship in the slalom and Kjersti Nilssen of Utah came in second — the same place she finished in the 1988 National Championships.

"This is the easiest snow, the easiest hill and the easiest course I've skiied all year," Hamburg said. "I ski against myself and try to ski the best that I can."

OU 103, Nebraska 76

NORMAN, Okla. — Mookie Blaylock scored 19 of his 22 points in the second half as fourth-ranked Oklahoma, 26-4, 12-2, beat Nebraska, 16-14, 4-10, in a Big Eight Conference game. Oklahoma will play last-place Colorado in the first round of the Big Eight tournament Friday.

Nebraska got 17 points from Beau Reid.

Blaylock made only one of nine field goals in the first half when he shot primarily from outside. By taking the ball inside more in the second half, Blaylock had more success as the Sooners won their 30th straight at home.

Stacey King scored 19 for Oklahoma, 11 of those in the final 4½ minutes. Tyron Jones added 18, and Bell and Skeeter Henry had 16 apiece.

Cardinals 88, Irish 77

SOUTH BEND, Ind. — Kenny Payne scored 27 points and LaBradford Smith added 19 to lead No. 14 Louisville, 20-8, victory over Notre Dame, 18-7.

Louisville, which had lost five of its previous eight games before playing the Irish, will enter the Metro Conference Tournament Friday.

Keith Robinson led the Irish with 18 points and 16 rebounds.

St. Mary's 86, Portland 48

Al Lewis sparked a game-opening 21-2 run as St. Mary's posted the most lopsided victory in West Coast Athletic Conference tournament history.

St. Mary's improved to 25-3, while Portland finished its season at 2-26.

Lewis, who finished with 20 points in only 17 minutes of action, scored eight points during St. Mary's opening run. The Gaels extended their lead to 31-8 with 9:24 left in the first half.

BOGGS—

Cerone also recalled the elevator incident that occurred in Los Angeles during the World Series that year. Again it involved Steinbrenner, and this time he supposedly fought off two assailants in an elevator late at night in the Yankees' hotel.

"You hope you'd have pleasant thoughts of being in the World Series," Cerone said, "but these things tend to outweigh the other things."

Graf overcomes winds , Hana

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Steffi Graf overcame frigid winds and a strong challenge from Hana Mandlikova for a 7-6 (7-4), 6-3 victory Saturday in the semifinals of the U.S. Women's Hardcourt Tennis Championships.

Ann Henricksson defeated Katrina Adams 6-3, 4-6, 6-3 in Saturday's other semifinal.

Freezing temperatures and winds that made it feel like zero degrees hampered play at the McFarlin Tennis Center.

"I have never played in such terrible weather," said Graf. "You have to have luck. You have no rhythm at all. I'm happy that it's over."

Graf appeared on the verge of losing her first set of the year in the opening set. Down 5-4, she fought off two set points and rallied to even the set at 5-5.

"I missed an easy forehand volley. The whole match would have been totally different, obviously," Mandlikova said. "With her big swings, it's harder for her to play in this weather. But she came up with good points when she needed it."

Henricksson defeated Adams in a match between unseeded players. She will meet Graf for the first time in Sunday's final.

Graf said she hopes the final will be postponed if weather conditions don't improve. The National Weather Service said snow is possible in the area beginning late Saturday and continuing into Sunday.

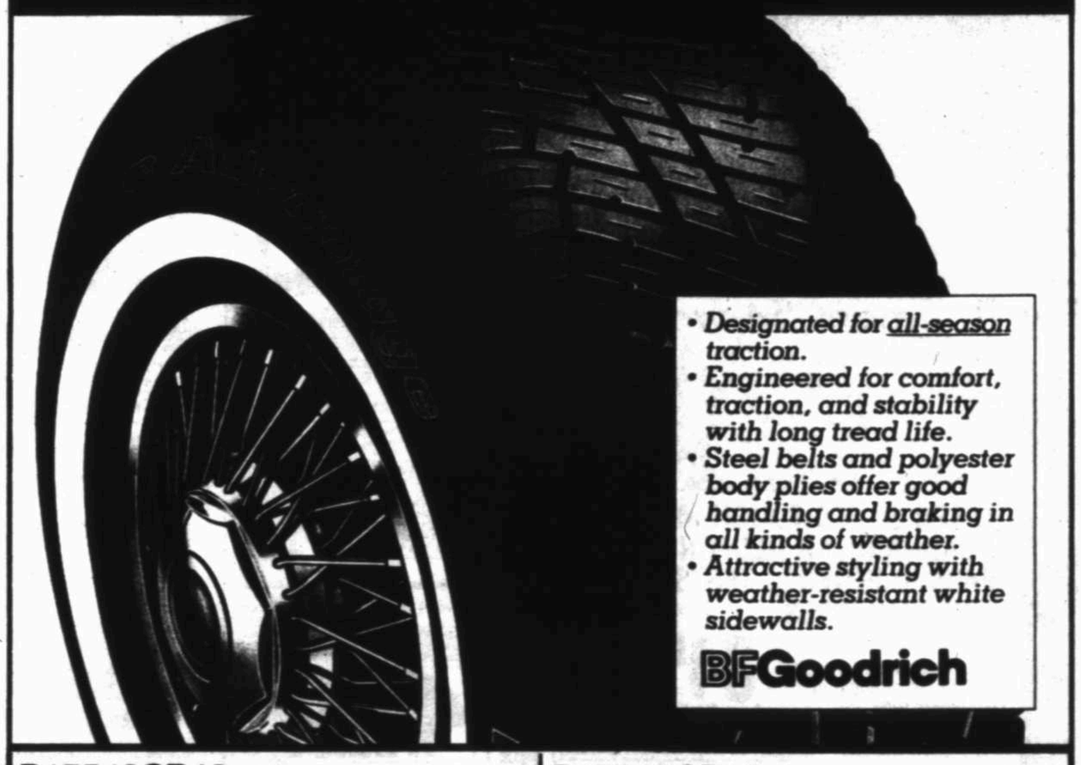

Saturday's two doubles matches were postponed when weather conditions did not improve. They were tentatively rescheduled for 11 a.m. Sunday.

The singles final is scheduled for 2 p.m.

The winner in the $200,000 tournament collects $40,000.

BOWLING BEAT

Velasco's 253-743 sets pin pace

BY RANDY ISENBERG

Isenberg

Mike Velasco had his game as fine-tuned as a Naval instrument Thursday evening while bowling in the Civic Commercial men's league at Dellwood Lanes. After opening with a 235, Mike battled Donnie Rains to a tough match-point victory, 278-256, and then finished with a 230 for a season-leading 743 series.

Loretta Faseler returned to top bowling form last week in the City Classic ladies' league, scorching the maple pines for a 234 game en-route to a 627 series.

Mike Pool, a smooth lefty, converted the most difficult spare of all — the 7-10 split — by bouncing the seven off the curtain and into the 10 while bowling in the Commerical league. While the few who do make that spare never see the result, Pool turned around to see the seven take the 10 out after he had turned around.

Bob Hull has really been improving his game lately, rolling his first 200 while bowling in the Civic Commercial league a couple of weeks ago. Bobby rolled his first 600 series ever — a 638 — while bowling in the His 'n Hers Mixed league. Bobby rolled a 242 in the process and was 149 pins over his series average, just one pin shy of winning an American Bowling Congress award.

Kevin Davidson rolled his second big series in as many weeks while bowling in the LeftOvers men's league at Dellwood. Kevin rolled a 276 game, 649 series.

Other top scores reported: Fred Holmes, 243-644; Jeff Stoll, 644; Paul Cox, 238-652; David Inman, 258; Dave Freeman, 243.

Top four-game scores: Leo Rodriguez, 246-885; Mike Reid, 245-856; J.J. Jaeger, 243-848.

Sandy Black and Carolyn Kirkes just missed 600; Sandy had a 597 series, and Carolyn a 591 set.

Lucy Ausmus rolled a 241 game, 714 four-game series.

Roy Peterson won the world class singles event by defeating Gary Wessels. Wessels and Frank Nix took first place in doubles while Chris and Javier Tan took 2nd in doubles.

Over-the-fence with Mighty Joe

His 72 homers a record

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

(Part of a Series)

I called up Joe Bauman the night before I left going to Roswell, N.M., to cover a basketball gameand told him I'd like to talk to him about his record 72-home run season.

It was a great idea. I'm not sure whose fault it was that it went wrong, but we'd hardly finished shaking hands when Joe dropped the line about playing baseball in the Navy during the war in Oklahoma.

I had to go an ask where?

"I played four years for the Naval base at Norman." which seemed harmless enough.

It turned out we were in the same barracks or would have been if Bauman hadn't had permission to billet off station.

The name swapping resembled a couple flyweights going non-stop, which may be the first time Bauman has been mentioned in the same sentence with flyweight...same paragraph?....same page?....more likely, same chapter.

Bennie Warren, Charley Gelbert, Al Benton, George Halas, Tex Beneke.....

"Remember when John Wayne, Keenan Wynn, Martha Scott and Spike Jones put on a show at the base?"

"Tex got a lot of those entertainers to come to the Norman," Bauman supplied.

. But it was mostly the old ball players we remembered.

"Rip Radcliff was there and he helped me a lot with my hitting. He was a good instructor, a .300 hitter with 10 years in the majors."

Also a Norman teammate was Johnny Rizzo, Pirates, Dodgers, Phils....

"GEORGE BURPO, the lefthander for whom the Reds had such high hopes, bunked right next to me. After the war I expected big things from him, but I lost track of him," I told Joe.

Burpo could fire a ball through a brick wall, after first penetrating the concrete wall, but once the season started, he always got homesick for Borneo.

"He could throw hard, but had a hard time harnessing it. After the war he developed arm trouble and could never lick it," Bauman updated.

So instead of George Burpo to follow in the tradition of Paul Derringer, Johnny Vander Meer and Bucky Walters, the Reds wound up with an Elwell Blackwell, a Whip who made Whelps of batters.

Daisy Mae's, the lickety-split interurban between Norman and Oklahoma City. In the middle was a dusty one street, red clay at that, town called Moore.

"That used to be a beer stop," said Joe said. Now Moore has lost it's individuality, gobbled up by the Oklahoma City to Norman metromass. And don't they wish they had the Interurban today?

BOB FENIMORE, Jim Lookabaugh, Gerald Tucker, Ellis Jones, Bob Brumley, Taft Stadium, where OU and A&M played night football games because of the wartime travel restrictions....

Joe went to school with Jim Reynolds, Allie's younger brother, "and he just might have been a better all-around athlete than Allie,"

"Lookabaugh was my high school coach at Capitol Hill before he went to Oklahoma A&M as coach. I remember the base team beat that A&M basketball team that had Bob Kurland and they beat Oklahoma, too, in football and basketball." Joe added, "they had good athletes in every sport..

"Each Naval district loaded up with athletes, but they weren't permitted to play outside the district. They tried to line up a baseball game with Great Lakes for charity, but it wasn't allowed."

But there was no lack of quality opposition, The Army was loaded, too, and one of the great rivalries was between Norman Navy and Fort Riley, where Birdie Tebbetts had a major league studded Army team that included Pete Reiser, before he left his Hall of Fame credentials on concrete outfield walls, and Ken Heintzelman, the old Philly, Pirates and whatever pitcher. And there were plenty of others.

The 72 home run season? Oh yea, that's what this was all about.

(Ed Note: Charles Gelbert guided St. Louis' Cardinals to a pennant; Ellis Jones was a one-armed guard for Tulsa University and was on the team that beat OU, 20-7, a defeat which ruptured the series until the 1970s; Bob Fenimore, Oklahoma A&M All-America cager; Gerald Tucker, National Anthem singing Sooner cager; George Halas, Chicago Bears coach; Johnny Rizzo, Bennie Warren, Al Benton, Ken Heintzelman, Rip Radcliff former major leaguers; Jim Lookabaugh, football coach at Oklahoma A&M.)

For Bauman, 54 was magic year

It happened it 1954 when Bauman was winding down his checkered pro baseball career. Playing for Roswell, N.M., in the Class C Longhorn League, one always wondered how many Joe might have hit if he had used a real bat instead of that toothpick.

At 6-4, 240 pounds, Joe was completely out of proportion to the willow he employed to terrorize pitchers that year, well, really, any year.

In those days, the baseball structure below the majors went Class AA, A, A-1, B, C, and D. Although the Longhorn League, encompassing Roswell, Artesia, Big Spring, Midland, Odessa, Carlsbad and San Angelo, was not your ordinary Class C level league.

The majors branded it "outlaw" because of under-the-table payments and to a lesser extent "screen green".

"Each classification had a salary cap," Bauman recalled. "Salaries could not exceed a fixed amount, but it didn't mean anything. They got around that by paying you a bonus before the season."

As a result, the Longhorn League was one of grizzled veterans, who could have been playing at a higher level, but couldn't afford it.

After hitting 53 homers at Artesia in 1953, Bauman found the Roswell offer too tempting to refuse. It was so lucrative that he was able to buy his own Texaco station. What it amounted to was investing in what was proved to be his future.

He owned two filling stations in Roswell for 16 years after an injury forced him to give up baseball in 1956 and then he became a beer distributor for "15 or 16 years" before retiring five years ago.

PAT STASEY and then Stubby Greer, dirty names in Midland when post-war baseball fever was at its height, managed Roswell in 1954.

Following his 72 homers, "San Francisco (Pacific Coast League) at that time, wanted me to come to spring training, but I had too many ties here, plus the business."

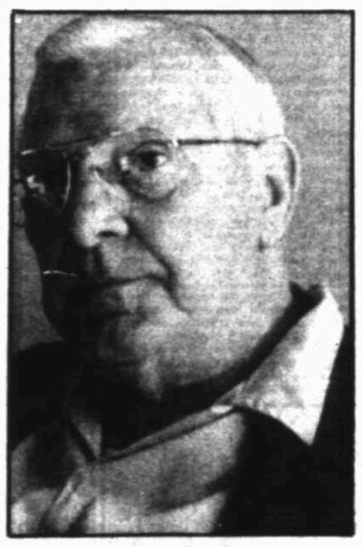

Seventy-two homers in one season and 53 the year before. How come the big powerful firstbaseman didn't get a call from above long before he was 32?

BAUMAN wandered a strange baseball path after graduating from Oklahoma City's Capitol Hill in 1941, a three-sport athlete...football, basketball and baseball.

"I skipped football my senior year on the advice of baseball scouts after suffering an ankle injury." relates Bauman. "I didn't mind that much since baseball was my sport." It also was the only major sport, in those days, that offered a future.

Little Rock, an independent club in the A-1 Southern Association, signed Joe out of high school. "In those days independents made their money by developing and selling ball players."

That was right out of the baseball career textbook, but four years of service ball and three years oil-boom, high-paying semipro ball at Elk City, Okla., after the war, took the place of the normal and tedious climb up Organized Baseball's development ladder and in effect aborted a career.

AFTER the war, Little Rock sent me to Amarillo (Class C West Texas-New Mexico League). There were 150 players in camp, but I loved it. In 1947, Little Rock wanted to send me to Jackson, Miss. I told them "Hell no,' but said I'd go to Amarillo if I went any where.

"In 1948 I was sold to the Boston Braves and assigned to Milwaukee (AA American Association), but they had Heinz Becker, who had played for the Chicago Cubs when they won the pennant in 1945 and won the American Association batting title the year before.

"I was sent to Hartford, Conn., of the Eastern League. In 1949, they wanted to cut my contract. I could have made more money selling shoestrings, so I laid out."

ELK CITY was in the midst of an oil boom at the time and Joe was recruited for its semipro baseball team, a regular in the Wichita tournament.

"They recruited college and minor league players and paid more than the minors. I bought a filling station and stayed three years when the boom turned to bust."

A doctor from Artesia, N.M., on his way through Elk City asked if he wanted to play in the Longhorn League. The hitch was that Boston still owned Joe's contract.

So the doctor bought it and Bauman came to the Staked Plains and his date with destiny. In a few years, he would become the all-time Organized Baseball single season home run leader, hitting an amazing 72 in 1954.

Aggies jolt Horns, 106-89

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Lynn Suber came off the bench to score 23 of his 27 points in the second half to lead Texas A&M to a 106-89 Southwest Conference victory Saturday over Texas.

The loss drops the Longhorns a half game behind Arkansas, which closes against Houston Sunday.

The Aggies finish the regular season 15-13 on the season and 8-8 in SWC play, while the Longhorns drop to 22-7 overall and 12-4 in league play.

Donald Thompson, who set out nine minutes of the second half with four fouls, had 22 points for the Aggies, while Tony Milton scored 18 points.

Travis Mays scored 18 of his 21 points in the second half to lead Texas, while Lance Blanks had 16 points and Andrew Fowler scored 15.

A&M went 1-7 in the first part of SWC play and finished 7-1 for the second.

Texas Christian 62, Southern Meth. 57

FORT WORTH, Texas — Danny Hughes scored 14 points to lead Texas Christian to a SWC victory over Southern Methodist.

The victory clinched the No. 3 seed in next week's SWC tournament for the Horned Frogs, 16-12 overall and 9-7 in the conference. TCU will meet Texas Tech in the first round.

SMU dropped to 12-15, 7-9 and will meet second-seeded Texas in the first round.

John Colborne led SMU with 16 points and Longino added 14.

Reggie Smith added 13 for the Horned Frogs.

Texas Tech 85, Baylor 67
Bears 85-67

LUBBOCK, Texas — Reserve Jerry Mason scored 24 points to lead Texas Tech, 13-14, 8-8, over Baylor, 5-22, 1-15, 85-67, Saturday in the SWC finale for both.

Todd Duncan and Steve Miles added a career-high 16 for the Red Raiders, while J.D. Sanders had 11.

Julius Denton paced the Bears with 18, while Kelvin Chalmers had 12. Michael Hobbs scored 11 and Bert Brown added 10.

Tech then ran off 10 straight points to lead 24-19 with 5:26 left in the half.

A charging foul by Tech's Tyrone Thurman resulted in a technical against him and two on the Red Raider bench. Ivan Jones and Julius Denton combined to hit all seven free throws to put Baylor ahead 26-24 with 4:26 remaining.

Tech regained the lead on a jump shot by Mason with 3:21 to play in the half.

Duncanville wins over Victoria

AUSTIN (AP) — Cinietra Henderson's turnaround jumper in the lane with 43 seconds left lifted defending champ Duncanville to a 42-38 come-from-behind victory over Victoria Saturday for the Class 5A state girls' basketball championship.

Henderson had 26 points and 12 rebounds, while Paula Jasek led Victoria with 14.

The Pantherettes, who played in the first girls' tournament in 1951, have reached the semifinals a tournament-record 13 times. Their first state championship came in 1976 when they defeated Victoria 70-69.

Victoria has been to the tournament 12 times, winning six championships.

Victoria, 34-5, surprised Duncanville by jumping to a 17-7 lead early in the first quarter. Duncanville scored eight consecutive points, but the Stingarettes' lead twice ballooned to 13, the last time at 28-15.

Duncanville's 42 points represents the lowest total for a winning Class 5A team in the history of the tournament.

It is also the least number of points the Pantherettes have scored all season. They came in averaging almost 76 points a game.

Grapeland 54, Abernathy 47

AUSTIN — Trinia Tillis scored 25 points and grabbed 18 rebounds to lead Grapeland past Abernathy 54-47 Saturday for the Class 2A state girls basketball championship.

Tillis, considered one of the top recruits in the nation, helped the Sandiettes avenge a loss to Godley in last year's finals.

Tillis had 33 points and 14 rebounds Friday in the Sandiettes' semifinal victory over China Spring.

Abernathy, 25-10, has made it to the finals in all seven of its trips to the final four, and on Saturday lost in the title game for only the second time.

" We knew we couldn't shut down Tillis," said Abernathy Coach Pat Mouser. "We wanted to control her some, but we knew we couldn't stop her."

Jennifer Thomas led Abernathy with 16 points.

Grapeland, 34-5, packed in a zone defense, forcing the Lady Lopes to shoot from the outside. Abernathy responded by hitting only 38 percent from the field.

Levelland 45, West Orange-Stark 24

AUSTIN — Levelland won its fourth consecutive Class 4A state girls basketball championship Saturday with a 45-24 victory over West Orange-Stark.

The Loboettes, 34-1, have reached the state semifinals seven times since 1982 and have won five titles during that span.

Grapeland won 2A with a 54-47 win over Abernathy.

The functional kitchen is designed around a brick work island with a Jenn-air cooktop. Shades of Wedgwood blue and mauve compliment the ash wood cabinets.

Kitchen Class

Many homes which have been built during the 1980s for busy, active families feature spacious kitchens and breakfast rooms that are as stylish as the formal living room. These rooms are well-designed and have become more than a place to prepare and eat meals.

In the afternoons, children can be found at the kitchen table enjoying an afternoon snack as they finish their class assignments. Televisions are also found in today's kitchens as much as microwave ovens. In addition to appliances that clean themselves and cook foods faster, many kitchens have built-in desks so mothers can have a convenient space to work or arrange children's schedules.

If the description of this type of kitchen sounds almost too good to be true, then viewing the kitchen and breakfast room of this week's featured home is a must. Not only will these rooms fits an active family's lifestyle, the entire five bedroom and six bath home offers a place for each family member to entertain or play with friends, in addition to rooms where parents and children can retreat for privacy.

THIS TRINITY Estates home was truly customized by the current homeowners who designed and decorated this approximately 5,700 square foot home less than two years ago.

Carved ash wood front doors with leaded glass open into a brick entry that has a neutral colored grass cloth wallcovering. The entry steps down into the formal living room that focuses on a carved mantle, above a dual fireplace. The mantle was designed to match the upper portion which is dated circa 1860. This room also has beige walls, 12 foot ceilings, a corner wet bar, ash crown moulding and hardwood oak floors.

A private study is adjacent to the formal living room and French doors with leaded glass open to reveal a cozy interior with a vaulted copper ceiling. This room also has an antique mantle, circa 1880, that the homeowners discovered at an estate sale in Dallas. The other amenities of the study include raised ash paneling, three walls of bookcases and cabinets, an oak and ash rolling library ladder and arched plantation shuttered windows provide a view of the front yard.

THE FORMAL dining room is situated to the left end of the living room. Shades of mauve highlight this sunny room which has an elegantly draped window which overlooks the well-landscaped front yard. A floral wallcovering compliments the exquisite area rug, as well as the mauve embossed wallpaper. The wallpapers are separated by an extra wide white trim which is about three feet from the floor.

Angled doors from the dining room lead into the gourmet kitchen. Shades of mauve and Wedgwood blue decorate the country kitchen and breakfast room.

The kitchen is designed around a central brick work island that has a Jenn-air cooktop and storage cabinets.

A unique feature of the breakfast room is a fireplace which makes this room very inviting.

The other kitchen appliances include a Whirlpool self-cleaning oven, a Sharp microwave. a Magic Chef trash compactor and a Whirlpool dishwasher.

The kitchen also has an oak floor, lots of storage cabinets, a breakfast bar and a built-in desk. Wedgwood blue counter tops and a small mauve tile splash backs help to provide a beautiful contrast to the blue, peach, teal, mauve and tan wallcovering which continues into the breakfast room.

ALTHOUGH THIS home is very cozy and warm, the breakfast room may very well be the most inviting room in this home. At the far end of the room, a brick fireplace is situated, with room for a small sitting area on one side. French doors lead outside to a private courtyard which would be ideal for enjoying a morning cup of coffee outdoors when the weather allows. It is also a great area for small children to enjoy their favorite ride toy.

Access from the wet bar is also made from the breakfast room. The wet bar which opens into the formal living room has a marble sink and a pass-through into the family room.

A hall with a blue and tan checked flooring, steps down and leads into a spacious utility room. This room has a sink and space for a freezer, as well as space for hanging, folding and storing clothes.

ACROSS FROM the utility room, a guest bath is located conveniently to the kitchen area and the family room. The bath has a marble vanity and a wallpaper which compliments the paper found in the kitchen and breakfast room.

The guest bedroom is found at the end of the hall. This room has French doors which opens into the backyard and also provides a private entrance. Shades of peach and blue decorate the bath which has a marble vanity and a built-in shower.

Also situated in this wing of the home is a rear entry garage which features an automatic door opener, a half-bath and a storage area.

Two sets of French doors on both sides of the fireplace provide access to the sunken family room from the formal living area. An opening along the left wall leads into the kitchen and breakfast room.

The family room is decorated with smoke colored grass cloth wallpaper above an ash wainscoting. It also features a fireplace and a pan ceiling made of ash that vaults into a stained glass window. Another walls has a built-in entertainment cabinet for a large screen television, VCR and stereo equipment.

A wall of doors which are covered with plantation shutters lead onto the 20 X 100 foot back patio which has a rough cedar walls. The extra large backyard is shaded by growing trees and is lined with beautifully landscaped flower beds.

The sequestered master bedroom is situated next to the family room and formal living room. French doors open into the sunken master suite which is decorated with Wedgwood blue walls and taupe colored carpeting. A built-in cabinet along one wall is ideal for a television and displaying family photographs. An angled wall has doors which open onto the back patio.

The master bath has two separate spacious marble vanities. The ladies side has a make-up area and a marble tub. The bath also has a built-in shower and two walk-in closets with built-in dressing areas.

Adjacent to the master bedroom is an exercise room that opens onto the backyard. This room has a tile floor and an addition of a hot tub would be ideal.

The children's wing of the home is situated to the right of the front entry. The first bedroom has pink walls with a bright teal trim that is accented by white trim and moulding. A window seat separates a built-in desk and a cabinet with bookshelves.

The second bedroom has pale mauve walls and two windows allow for lots of sunshine. This room has one wall of built-in that include two desks — just perfect for two children.

These two bedrooms, both of which have walk-in closets with built-ins, are connected by an L-shaped bathroom which has a bathtub in front of a window that has mini-blinds for privacy and a built-in shower. A mauve and white wallcovering adorn the bathroom walls.

The third bedroom is situated across the hall from the first bedroom and has a bathroom that opens onto a hall next to the master bedroom. The bath could also be used by guests when entertaining. Shades of blue in a fashionable wallpaper decorate this bath that also has a built-in shower. Currently being used as a playroom, the walk-in closet has built-in cabinets for storage of children's toys.

The other amenities of this wonderful family home are an alarm system, a sprinkler system and custom stereo throughout the house, garage and patio.

Langston Realtors is offering this home for $448,500.

Transferee feels people in Midland make up for West Texas landscape

By JILL HANCOCK
Advertising Feature Writer

After accompanying her husband Rick on six transfers in last 11 years, Elaine Barrett has mixed feeling when she arrived in Midland in December. Being transferred was not new to the Barrett family, which also includes Kevin, 14 and Alan, 11, but coming to West Texas was. Friends had explained to Elaine that the horizon would flat and contained very few trees. Since her arrival here, Elaine has decided that what the landscape lacks, the people definitely make up for.

"I had very mixed feeling when Rick told me we were come to Midland. We had lived in Bartersville, Okla. for six years and had built our home there," explained Elaine. "I had poured a lot of myself into that house and hated leaving it and our friend. Yet, I was ready for a change."

Rick joined Phillips Petroleum in 1979 and is currently the materials manager for the Permian Basin. He had been to West Texas before on business and was looking forward to a new adventure that this transfer would bring.

"We found out before Thanksgiving that we were being transferred. Phillips' relocation service, Merrill Lynch, put us in touch with the Carriage Company, Realtors in Midland. Before we came to Midland to preview homes, Wilda Wolfenbarger-Morris send us a packet of information on Midland that was the most professional package we had ever seen," stated Rick.

"The packet helped us better acquaint ourselves with the community. I was familiar with many of the streets and we knew which subdivisions we wanted to look in," said Elaine. "I also knew about the schools, bus routes and shopping areas, as well as having a complete list of phone numbers for utility companies.

After arriving in Midland the first part of December, the Barretts looked at homes for two days. By the second day, they made an offer on a home in Polo Park.

"This had to be one of the smoothest transfers that I have had in my 25 years as a Realtor. This family was so organized. In order to save time, we made out a loan application before we even found a house," explained Wilda.

The Barretts had plans to take a skiing vacation before Christmas and since they would be out of touch with Wilda wanted to make sure everything would be ready to move in January.

"The information packet also helped us to have everything — the utilities, phone and cable — ready for us when we moved in," said Rick. "In addition to that packet, Wilda also assisted us with her knowledge of where to obtain financing and of the title companies."

Elaine added, "She also knew the good places to eat!"

Wilda felt that since the Barretts had always lived in a new home that they should look at newer homes. The home they chose was six months old and had a previous owner. A third living area, a spacious kitchen and a huge walk-in closet were some of the amenities that appealed to the Barretts.

Although Kevin and Alan had requested a two-story home, the family seems to be very at home in their new surroundings. According to Elaine, Kevin enjoys eating nachoes everyday for lunch and they are looking forward to warmer weather when the entire family can enjoy the private pool and tennis courts offered to Polo Park residents.

"The people in this community were one of the reasons I decided to accept this job. The daily drive to Odessa is much easier due to the access of Loop 250 to 191. There are also five other Phillips' families living in our neighborhood," added Rick.

With the assistance from Wilda of the Carriage Company Realtors, the Barretts seems to be enjoying their new home and learning more each day about their new community. Not only has Wilda shown them the best restaurants around, she also accompanied Elaine on a shopping spree last week. No wonder Elaine feels that the people make up for the lack of trees.

Elaine and Rick Barrett were referred to Wilda Wolfenbarger-Morris, right, of The Carriage Company, Realtors by Merrill Lynch's relocation service. This was the sixth transfer for the Barretts and their sons, Kevin, left, and Alan, center.

ASK ABOUT REAL ESTATE

Purchase options, investments, home ownership after bankruptcy discussed

By DON G. CAMPBELL

"Whatever it takes" is the catch phrase. Depending on circumstances, it means hang the expense, or hand the loss, or hang the trouble involved.

Campbell

DEAR MR. CAMPBELL: I am considering placing our condominium up for lease with an option to buy. Are there any guidelines in use to establish how much of the monthly lease applies to the purchase option? Are there any hidden danger in such an arrangement? Do you have a sample contract you could send or advise where I can find some, other than through a lawyer? Mr. A.G.D., Oklahoma City, Okla.

ANSWER: Like acupuncture as a cure for headaches, the use of the lease-option to sell hard-to-move residential property has both vehement supporters and vehement detractors. Property used, though, the lease-option can be a valuable tool for both buyer and seller.

For the buyer, commonly, the device lets him "lock in" a unit that he wants to buy while he gets his finances in shape. And the seller is generating a cash flow - usually above the rent the unit would normally draw on the open market - from a tenant who has a real incentive for keeping the place in good shape. There are some potential pitfalls (as there are in virtually any real estate transaction) and you should probably get some advice from a real estate broker who has had some experience with lease-options. And on a flat-fee basis.

The one tricky aspect of the lease-option is that it has to be two contracts in one. The first part of it resembles a standard lease in all respects - setting up who is responsible for what, in other words. The second part is where it can be a little troublesome because it has to spell out in specific detail EXACTLY how the sale will proceed if and when the lessee exercises his option. That means the exact price, the down payment, the amount of the rental payments applicable to the down payment, and how much, if any, the seller will carry back.

This business of projecting what your condo will be worth on the market one or two years down the road (lease-options extending beyond that, most practitioners feel, leave too many loose ends to be 100 percent practical) can be knotty, Commonly, the seller will peg the price of his house about five percent to ten percent above the price it would command in TODAY'S market and will allocate about half the first year's rent toward the down payment.

But a lease-option has the advantage of being extremely flexible in such matters. You'll really need a little guidance in writing both the lease portion of the contract AND the purchase portion and , for this reason, a real estate adviser is a better bet than a lawyer.

DEAR MR. CAMPBELL: My wife and I are retired and close to 70 years old. We own a house that has a $35,000 mortgage and in today's "hot" real estate market we could easily sell it for $140,000 or $150,000. We have adequate savings, some stocks and no debt other than the use payment of $256 a month plus $100 a month for taxes. Our total yearly income through Social Security and pension is $23,000, on which we are able to live comfortably.

We have been wondering if perhaps we would be better off in selling our home and investing the $100,000. We would realize enough interest to rent a home for $750-$800 a month and the entire $23,000 income would be totally available to live even more comfortably. Does this sound reasonable? Mr. J.J.G., Sacramento, Calif.

ANSWER: I can't really shoot any gaping holes in your idea although your investment-income estimate may be a little high. As I figure it (taking, conservatively, the lower market figure of $140,000), you should net about $97,650 after paying off the mortgage and the broke's commission. Unless you've already used your $125,000, once-in-a-lifetime exclusion on the tax on your gain, you should have no tax liability at all. And this, invested (again conservatively) at, say, 8 percent would net you about $651 a month which wouldn't quite offset the $750-$800 a month rent you foresee.

But, if home ownership isn't a big thrill for you and if you know, for sure, you can get good housing at the rent projected and if that pension also provides adequately for your wife if you - as we say so delicately - predecease her, then I can't really see any problem with your idea.

Dear Mr. Campbell: Is there life after bankruptcy? My husband's business failed and we had to file Chapter 13. We lost everything. Now he has an excellent job the monthly take home pay is $3,000, with the prospect of bonuses. And, of course, we have no debts.

How can we get back into home ownership? We must have some acreage as I breed dogs. We came up with two plans: one, save like crazy and buy a lot. Move onto it with a mobile home and use the land as collateral for a loan to build a house. Or, tow: lease with an option to buy. Which? Mrs. J.B., Ft. Collins, Colo.

Answer: There's really nothing to be ashamed of in going into bankruptcy as a result of a failed dream. That's what this country is all about: the right to succeed or, alas, fail.

There's nothing wrong with either of your plans except that the idea of buying the lot and moving onto it in a mobile home sounds a little convoluted. There's going to be a credit check on you for BOTH the purchase of the lot and for the mobile home. I think your best bet is to make a direct deal with a seller and to level with him completely about the bankruptcy and about your current situation.

Either approach should work: your idea of a lease-option or, perhaps, a land contract (under which the seller retains title to the property until you have satisfied the down payment requirements). The two are very similar in many respects.

Sure, there's life after bankruptcy and saving "like crazy" should be a part of the remedial process, too.

The Best Just Got Better.

The 1989 Charade.

How do you improve on perfection?

Well, when it comes to fine automobiles, you do two things. First, you make it more affordable, and second, you add a 3 year/36,000 mile bumper-to-bumper warranty with no deductibles. That's what Daihatsu did for the 1989 model Charade.

But even before this new warranty, the Daihatsu Charade was being referred to as:

"The most trouble free car in its class" J. D. Power & Associates
"Feels as if it were engineered by Mercedes" Car & Driver
"The Class of its Class" San Jose Mercury News

So, if you are looking for a dependable, efficient and affordable car that you will truly be proud to own — the 1989 Charade, by Daihatsu, is the answer... Because the best just got better.

Daihatsu Charade. "The biggest small car in the world."™

Why Johnny Can't Write

Taking TASP to Task

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the final article of the three-part series "Why Johnny Can't Write," which focuses on new concepts in teaching writing.

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO
Lifestyle Writer

Students entering public colleges and universities this fall will have to take a competency test. Although the test is not an entrance exam, and will not be used to keep students from taking courses, it will identify their weaknesses in basic skills, and require them to take remedial courses to get their skills up to college freshman level.

The competency test, The Texas Academic Skills Program (TASP), was designed in response to growing evidence that many college students and graduates lack basic skills. TASP will weed out the poor writers, readers and mathematicians before they are put into classrooms which are too difficult for them.

TASP is just one of the reforms being initiated into the the American education system. Some public school systems, including the Midland Independent School District (see related story, Page 3E) are revamping their language arts programs to emphasize reading and writing skills. In fact, some schools have begun teaching writing in kindergarten, before students develop fears of coping with spelling and composition.

BUT FOR students who are now high school age, these measures are too late to help them survive college freshman English courses.

"Students will probably be hardest hit in the areas of reading," said Dr. Pamela Howell, instructor of English for Midland College. "I see so many students in my classes who are reading two to six levels below where they should be." Howell said TASP will serve as a diagnostic tool designed to aid, not blame, students. "It is a good instrument, and is not meant to point the finger at students, but it will make them accountable for their weaknesses."

The Legislature also mandated that institutions develop and implement appropriate remedial and advisory support activities, which means colleges will have to offer students who fail the test a means to learn the material in order to pass the test at a later date.

The test is designed to be taken in four hours, however, up to five hours will be provided if students need more time. During the additional time, students may work on any of the three sections of the test.

Students who do not pass all three parts of the test will be required to enter into a remedial program. Those students will not be allowed to enroll in any upper-division courses. They may, however, enroll in lower level courses and begin remedial courses.

STUDENTS NEED only retake the section or sections of the test failed, instead of retaking the entire test.

According to the 1989 TASP Test Registration Bulletin, TASP test scores cannot be used to deny a freshman-level student admission to a Texas public college or university.

However, students required to take the TASP test may not graduate from a certificate program that has nine or more semester credit hours of general education courses, an associate degree program, or a baccalaureate degree program until they have passed all three sections of the test.

Because of this requirement, the February issue of "Texas Monthly" magazine billed TASP as a "No pass, no graduate" test.

But TASP wasn't designed to keep students from graduating. According to Dr. Jack Schneider, chairman of communications studies at Midland College and a member of the content committee of the National Evaluations System, TASP was designed "simply to identify students with weak backgrounds in critical areas." Once identified, the students will be helped to bolster their weaknesses so that they may succeed in college, Schneider said.

THOSE CRITICAL of TASP "don't understand the spirit or intent of TASP," Schneider said. "If students aren't helped upon entering college, they become potential dropouts. Then, what chance do they have?"

Schneider explained, "We (educators) are the experts, and we are taking responsibility with the state to see that students are getting the education they need."

The department chairman is quick to acknowledge that the TASP endeavor is a "shared" responsibility. "We are sharing responsibility with public schools. They are not to blame for students' weaknesses," he said. Schneider cited problems such as overcrowded classrooms and teachers who are inundated with massive amounts of paperwork as contributors to the lack of time teachers are able to spend with students.

"TASP is just one more step in the evolution of reforms designed to make the Texas education system more efficient," Schneider said. He cited other competency tests, a much touted feature of the 1984 reforms — which include TECAT, the teacher competency test — and TEAMS, a competency test for public-school students.

Although Paul Burka, in the February issue of "Texas Monthly," complained that previous competency tests have been too easy (99 percent of teachers passed TECAT), he said that if TASP is designed with the proper level of difficulty there would be "carnage on campus." Burka's reasoning is that it is estimated that 30 percent of college students need remedial work (which indicates that some measures to remedy the situation are needed).

DESPITE BURKA'S fears, TASP is designed to be a "program, not a test," Howell said. "It is designed to identify, not penalize students," she said.

TASP also was designed to be "as broad based as possible," Schneider said. "Teachers who worked on TASP committees were selected from every constituency to be fair," he said. "The coordinating board was very careful and conscientious about selecting teachers representative of every district in Texas."

Rebecca Watson, instructor of English at MC, who also worked with a TASP committee, agreed. "I don't think I've ever worked with anything in education as efficient and top-notch as the TASP committee. The committee really operated in a professional manner." Ms. Watson said other states have preceded Texas in instigating this type of competency test.

"New Jersey and Florida have particularly prominent, similar programs," Schneider said.

Ms. Watson said TASP will be successful if "the Legislature funds it and the standards are adequate."

"It may take a couple of years to straighten all the kinks out," Ms. Watson said, "but it will be beneficial in the long run."

Although taking remedial courses may be distasteful to some students, they are needed to insure their success in future college courses, Schneider said. "We already offer remedial courses in English and math. Some students may also need to take a second remedial course in the same field."

The Higher Education Coordinating Board decided how strictly TASP will be graded. The test standards and adequate funding to carry out the necessary remedial teaching can guarantee the test's success, according to several MC educators.

"It's a grand experiment," Schneider said. "But it needs to work, for the students'.. and for society's sake."

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

For her loyalty and dedication to Midland High School, Leona McCormick Bryant Smith has been chosen as the honoree of MHS Showcase '89 to be held on May 18.

A 1917 graduate of Midland High, Leona won the statewide UIL Girls' Senior Declamation Contest the previous year.

Leona graduated from Baylor Female College at Belton, Texas, with a major in expression after attending the original Midland College, Dr. Curry's School of Expression in Boston, Mass., and Trinity University in Waxahachie. Through the years, she continued her allegiance to Mary Hardin-Baylor University (formerly Baylor Female College), and last spring, the honorary doctor of humanities degree was conferred upon Leona at commencement ceremonies.

A native of Midland, Leona has led an interesting life. As a young lady, she participated in barrel racing at rodeos, and during World War I, entertained in army camps with a group called the "Gloom Chasers." She taught public speaking for 22 years in Coolidge, Odessa and Midland.

She was married to rancher-oilman Bill Bryant, who died in 1960. In 1971, she married Col. Walter B. Smith, a lawyer from Georgetown, Ky., whose death occurred in 1983.

Leona has demonstrated her loyalty to her community with her time, talent and resources. Because of her strong belief in young people, she has established scholarships at Midland High School, Midland College and Mary Hardin-Baylor. The McCormick Gallery in the Allison Fine Arts Building at Midland College is named in her honor. She was instrumental in starting a Little Theater in Midland, and for years, conducted a story hour at the public library. She also instituted the Midland Library for the Blind in 1930.

She is a lifelong member of the Methodist Church and has taken an active part in many other local organizations and projects.

SHELLY SLYKER, daughter of Carol and John Slyker, has pledged Theta Chi Lambda social club at McMurry College in Abilene. A freshman, she also is a member of McMurry's tennis team.

DALLAS ACTRESS Gloria Hocking captivated her audience with her one-woman show at the Midland Country Club Ladies Association's recent luncheon meeting.

She presented a review of Olive Ann Burns' book, "Cold Sassy Tree," a portrait of small-town Southern life that is both funny and touching.

Mrs. Hocking is well-known to audiences in Midland, where she has performed on numerous occasions. Her career includes stage, television and one-woman presentations.

Prior to a luncheon featuring Teriyaki Flank Steak, Oriental noodles and Peach Melba, the members and guests enjoyed a social hour in the club's Fireplace Room. The hostesses were Elma Jean (Mrs. Richard) Henderson, Jean (Mrs. George) Donnelly and Kathryn (Mrs. Bill) Gesell.

Joy (Mrs. Bill) Seltzer won the head table centerpiece. There also was a winner of a floral arrangement at each individual table.

Among those enjoying the event were Helen (Mrs. Alan) Spinks, Lois (Mrs. Ellis) Mills, Hallie (Mrs. Woodford) Sale, Ann (Mrs. Jim) Walton, Mary (Mrs. Kingdon) Hughes, Betty (Mrs. Bill) Gilmore, and former Midlander Charlotte Peay (Mrs. George) Richards of Houston, who was seen chatting with an old schoolmate, Linda (Mrs. Rodney) Satterwhite.

ANGEL WEIS of Midland and Chuck Sprague of Reading, Pa., who were married Saturday in Austin, have been honored at several events.

Irene and Alois Munzer and the bride's parents, Kathleen and Franz Weis, co-hosted a dinner party at La Bodega Restaurant's Garden Room. Guests included members of Chuck's Penske Racing Team from Pennsylvania, as well as their driver, Danny Sullivan, Oscar and Gary Rubio of Smithtown, N.Y., members of the bride's family from Midland and her co-workers at VDS Racing.

A personal and miscellaneous shower was given for Angel in the home of her aunt, Maria (Mrs. Karlheinz) Schmid. Cohostesses were Angel's maid of honor, Janelle Thummel of Wichita, Kan., and her mother, Mary (Mrs. Ned) Truex of Odessa.

The rehearsal dinner was hosted Friday evening at Hudson's on the Bend in Austin by the groom's parents, Mary and Ed Sprague of Brandenburg, Ky. After the wedding ceremony at Lakeway Church in Austin, a reception was held at Lakeway Lodge. Guests were treated to a lavish buffet and entertained by the Laura Benedict Band of Austin.

After their honeymoon trip, Angel and Chuck will continue their work in auto racing out of their home base in Pennsylvania.

Special guests visiting in Midland and present for the wedding in Austin include Angel's aunt and uncle, Charlotte and Gerhard Wertz of Leonberg, West Germany, and their daughters, Sandra and Nicole Wertz, who were two of the bridesmaids; Peter Kosch, uncle of the bride; his wife, Ilia, and son, Christian from Sao Paula, Brazil; Catherine and Mario Illien and Liz and Paul Morgan of Northampton, England, and Franz Koseh, cousin of the bride, and his wife, Ludmilla, of Gerlingen, West Germany.

Tales take children treasure hunting

By JUDITH WITTY
Copley News Service

Fantasizing is a child's escape from schoolwork and social squabbles. At 8 or 9, visions dance in their heads of finding buried treasure or sudden riches on the sidewalk.

A child dreams of how he could impress peers and parents by discovering gold. At that age the child loves mystery and intrigue and still believes there can be a free lunch. He is smart enough to figure out clues and hidden codes, and he may reinvent pig Latin for secret conversations with his buddies.

Alvin Schwartz, in writing non-fiction, knows just how to appeal to the young Walter Mitty. He has researched secret languages and illusive trickeries for his past books; now he has out a lively volume about "Gold and Silver, Silver and Gold — Tales of Hidden Treasure." Anyone over 8 will dig it (Farrar, Straus & Giroux; 128 pages; $12.95).

Schwartz's thoroughly documented narrative tells of organized searches for Spanish galleons and about kids digging up $16,000 in a vacant lot. He relates the real (and surprising) story of the "pirate" Capt. Kidd and alludes to fiction's most famous treasure maps in Robert Louis Stevenson's "Treasure Island" and Edgar Allan Poe's "The Gold Bug."

Fascinating is Mel Fisher's dogged pursuit of the Spanish ship Atocha, sunk in 1622. His two decades of research and deep-sea diving finally paid off. The treasure was discovered in 1985, at an estimated worth of $400 million.

Equally interesting is the account of $16 million in treasure supposedly still buried in Buford County, Va. A Beale Cypher Association has formed around breaking the codes of three messages leading to the cache. Only one of these has been solved: The cryptogram was based on numbering the 1,322 words of the Declaration of Independence.

CNS Graphic

Schwartz writes with wit and a knack for suspense and includes surmised dialogue among treasure seekers. David Christiana has illustrated the volume with ghostly pen sketches of shipwrecks, pirate maps and chests of gold. Adults will find the authentic tales amazing, and the kids may be moved to dig up the yard.

Gail Gibbons is another author who packs an amazing amount of fact into her gaily illustrated picture books and she, too, has tackled the subject of "Sunken Treasure" (Thomas Y. Crowell; 32 pages, $12.89; ages 6-9).

A primer of deep-sea diving, the book focuses on the foundering of the Atocha and the 20-year search for its gold and jewels to explain the sophisticated science of salvage operations.

In fact, her version of the story takes the underwater treasure hunt several steps beyond Schwartz's, into the meticulous cataloging of the ship and its contents by archaeologists and restoring the corroded silver in chemical baths.

Gibbons' brightly colored drawings clarify her brief written descriptions of the equipment and techniques. In the final pages she capsules four more famous undersea expeditions, including the Titanic's. It would be an unusually well-informed adult who didn't learn something from her simple picture books.

"Treasures of the Barrier Reef" is a loftier look at treasure hunting. An analogy would be the Sierra Club taking over the prospecting camps in the gold rush (Price Stern Sloan; 62 pages; $9.95; ages 6-9). Geoffrey T. Williams is so enthusiastic in writing about the exotic creatures of the deep that the reader doesn't feel overly cheated in discovering giant gold vent worms rather than spendable gold sovereigns.

Williams uses fictional techniques to propel his fact-finding expedition. Indeed, young Jon, accompanying his mother, the marine biologist, to the coral reef at Moratonga, fully expects to stumble upon a shipwreck filled with spilling treasure while snorkeling.

Instead, from the underwater research vehicle diving two miles deep, he comes upon wonders seen by few treasure hunters. Pierr Morgan boldly paints lurid but accurate scenes of plants and invertebrates that look more like a Halloween laser show, while Williams passes along fascinating facts about lobsters tasting with their feet and sharks growing 3,000 teeth.

Although the underlying story is somewhat coy and condescending, the information is intriguing and the artwork alluring. For additional atmosphere (and $4 more), one can hear the singing of the humpback whales and squeals of dolphins on an accompanying cassette.

Course teaches successful failing

Copley News Service

When is failing considered to be a blessing in disguise? When it's failing at a University of Michigan class called Innovative Entrepreneurship.

Students affectionately call the class "Failure 101" Taught by visiting Professor Jack Matson, the idea is to initiate a business project and fail at it so you can learn by your mistakes, and, subsequently, not be afraid to take risks.

Matson even wears a combat helmet to class to show that the business world is a war zone.

Schools receive daily news complete with commercials

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — When Whittle Communications, of Knoxville, Tenn., announced a pilot program that would beam a 10-minute daily news report to six schools around the nation, each school to be outfitted with $50,000 worth of electronic hardware at no charge, the project was immediately welcomed by some educators and professionals in the communications industry.

Peggy Charren, on the other hand, wanted to know what the catch was, and the catch was that the school program, called "Channel 1," will also carry two minutes of advertising each day.

When Ms. Charren found out about the commercials, she began making telephone calls.

She is the head of Action for Children's Television, a Boston-based group that was a chief advocate of the Children's Television Act of 1988; the bill would have limited commercials on children's television, if former President Ronald Reagan hadn't vetoed it last fall after it had passed both houses of Congress.

Ms. Charren said she was all for news programs intended for students. But the classroom, she argued, is no place for commercials.

"If this really happens," she said the other day, "it's something we're never going to be able to get rid of."

Ms. Charren compared the "Channel 1" pilot to barter programming, in which toy makers provide television stations with free shows based on their toys, in exchange for commercial time.

"Students are exposed to advertising throughout the entire day, on their scoreboards, on uniforms," Chris Whittle of Whittle Communications said.

"We're saying," he continued, " 'Let's use sponsorship to do something important.' "

He added that the appropriateness of advertising is something that should not be decided by his company.

"We're saying, 'Here's the news program; it's your decision,' " he said. "They'll weigh the benefits. I would say the result will be four to five will say yes to every one that will say no."

Whittle sent two executives to Boston to speak with Ms. Charren. After listening to her objections, she said, they invited her to join an advisory group that would monitor the content of the news programs. They weren't getting the point.

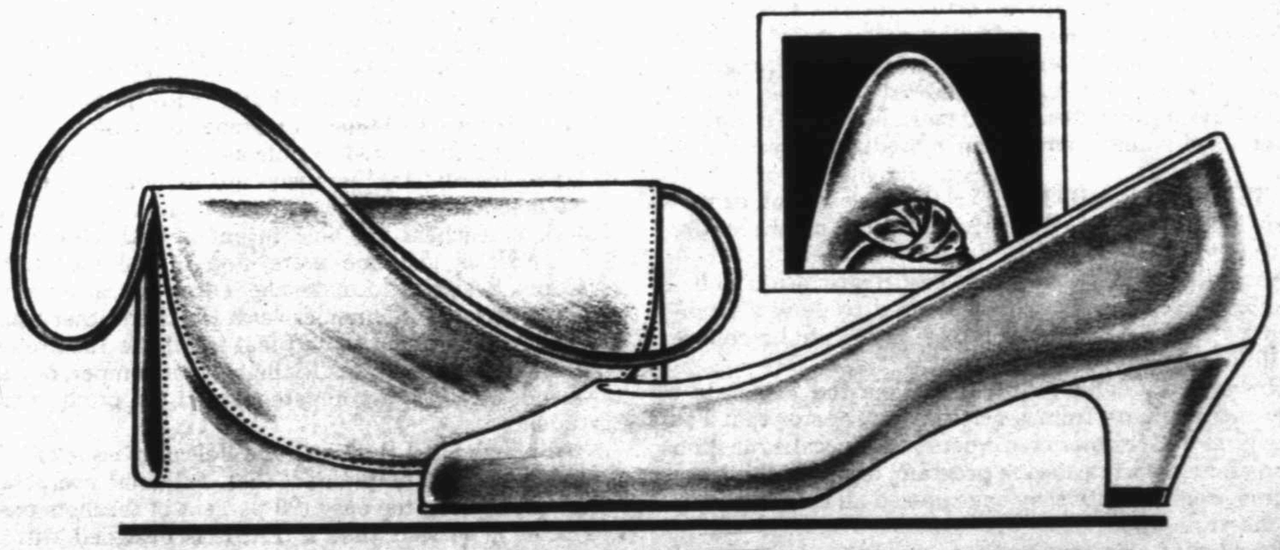

"They were all smiles," she said. "I'm not sure we're going to win this battle."

MISD initiating 'child-centered' writing program

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO
Lifestyle Writer

Students entering college this fall will be required to take a competency test, the Texas Academic Skills Program (TASP), in order to ensure that they have mastered the basic skills they need to understand freshman college courses.

TASP was designed in response to growing evidence that some students entering institutions of higher education lack basic skills in mathematics, reading and writing.

Students who fail the test will be required to take remedial courses in order to take upper level courses or to procure any kind of college degree.

Although higher education educators aren't pointing fingers at the public school system, the fact remains that students are arriving at college without the necessary skills needed to get them through college freshman courses.

College teachers predict that students will have the most difficulty with the reading and writing segments of TASP, because many students entering college are reading below high school levels. Research done on a national level reveals that writing has been all but squeezed out of the average English class in the elementary and secondary schools. But there has been a national movement to reinstate writing into the classroom during the last 10 years.

By adding writing to the classroom curriculum, students will become better readers as well as writers, according to Lucinda Windsor, language arts coordinator for Midland Independent School District.

An educator for 25 years, Ms. Windsor said she realized there was a need to build "a better sequenced language arts program."

"We need a definite program, ascribed to by all language arts teachers in kindergarten through 12th grade. The same ideas need to be reinforced each year," she said.

IN ORDER TO meet this need, Ms. Windsor is organizing an intensive three-week writing seminar which will be attended by 60 teachers from MISD (two from each campus) and two professors from the University of Texas of the Permian Basin. The seminar will be offered the last two weeks of July and the first week of August.

The program will be taught by instructors from the New Jersey Writing Project, which originated at Rutgers University, and has been validated by the National Diffusion Network. "Being accepted by the National Diffusion Network means the program has been evaluated very carefully by the Network, and government funding will be provided for the program," Ms. Windsor said.

The program teaches writing in "a positive risk-free climate," the language arts coordinator said. "But before the students can succeed at writing, their teachers need to be successful at writing."

Ms. Windsor said some teachers are intimidated by writing, and haven't had positive experiences with writing themselves.

"The Writing Project ascribes to the idea that teachers should be writers themselves," Ms. Windsor said.

She said the concept even encourages teachers to write with their students. "This allows the students to see how sloppy a rough draft can be."

ALTHOUGH WRITING hasn't been emphasized as a discipline, Ms. Windsor said she doesn't blame the teachers or the system for the lack of emphasis. "How can teachers be expected to teach what they haven't learned?" she asked.

Ms. Windsor said the Writing Project seminar will offer teachers instruction on prewriting, the writing process, editing, teaching and publishing. It will take teachers through the writing process which they will be teaching. "The teachers will publish all of their work twice, once in an anthology, and a second time by sending things out for publication."

Publishing their work encourages writers and reinforces their desire to write, according to Ms. Windsor. "For this reason I would like to start a column in MISD's newsletter which will be written by students."

Teachers participating in the seminar will learn prewriting strategies and revision techniques. "Prewriting, which includes brainstorming, should take up 75 percent of the writer's time," she said. "Revision is also critical," Ms. Windsor said. "It is not the same as editing. The revision stage allows the student to look at what he has written to determine if the content contains all that he intended. Then the student may delete words, which is a difficult step for the little ones."

After deleting text, the second stage is adding or elaborating on text, the third stage is moving text around, and the fourth stage involves editing the mechanics of writing — grammar, spelling and punctuation.

The program also encourages peer editing, instead of limiting the writer's audience to the teacher. "Students can learn from editing each other's work," Ms. Windsor said.

THE WRITING PROJECT also will instruct teachers on how to integrate new concepts on writing with the standard curriculum which needs to be taught to prepare students for the TEAMS test.

"In the October 1990 TEAMS, the writing section of the test will be the only section which will indicate more than minimum skills," Ms. Windsor said. "The scoring is from zero-four points, with a score of two being passing, three indicating elaboration and four indicating the writing is clearly outstanding."

The majority of MISD students have been receiving two's, passing scores. Ms. Windsor expects the new writing philosophy taught in future MISD classrooms will result in higher writing scores on TEAMS.

"Writing also involves a thinking process, which will help students in other subjects." Ms. Windsor said finding the main idea in a story, has been "a nemesis" for MISD students taking the TEAMS test.

"To find the main idea, students need to know essential details. Then they need to know how to arrange the details and organize them. This process takes them through the gamut of critical thinking," she said, "that is the power of writing."

Ms. Windsor's long-term goal is to teach writing across the curriculum. "The teachers taught at the seminar will be the cadre of the program. They will be able to offer in-service instruction to other teachers."

The Writing Project is being offered to language arts teachers, then reading teachers. "Eventually, we will be able to involve teachers of other disciplines," Ms. Windsor said. "Even scientists must find entertaining ways to relay complex subjects."

Ms. Windsor said MISD, "believes firmly in staff development. We have a number of pockets of good writing in the schools and good writing teachers. But, we need to pull together in one direction and give teachers a sense of control in the classroom (by having them really understand what they are teaching). The Writing Project can do this.

"Instead of teachers taking possession of a student's paper and bleeding 'awkward' and 'fragment' all over it, the Writing Project offers a child-centered and humane way to learn writing," she said.

Stanton couple celebrates 50th anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. Delbert Franklin of Stanton will celebrate their 50th wedding anniversary today at Cap Rock Auditorium. Hosts at the gathering will be their children.

The couple were married March 5, 1939, in Duncan, Okla. They moved to Stanton in 1950, where Franklin established Franklin and Son Inc. in 1961. The couple has been retired for four years.

They are members of First Baptist Church, where Franklin is a deacon.

Most attactive age growing older

Copley News Service

If you're a 32-year-old man or a 29-year-old woman, start preening. Because you're going to get a ton of attention. According to a survey of 18- to 65-year-old Americans, those are the "most attractive" ages to be right now. Five years ago the most attractive age was 25 for a woman and 28 for a man. So why has the most attractive age of men and women become older?

A New York demographic company called Cadwell Davis Partners says it's because baby-boomers are aging. In fact, folks in the 40- to 59-year-old bracket says a man is most attractive at 38 and a woman at 31.

However, the ultimate attractive age won't continue rising so dramatically as baby-boomers reach their 60s and 70s. But company spokesfolks say it will be more comfortable to be older than it has in the past.

Bachelor's life not bad

Copley News Service

New Guinea tribesmen have faced a severe shortage of women since the 1960s, but the bachelors aren't complaining. They've formed a brotherhood and are making the best of it.

In fact, in western New Guinea, a bachelor's life ain't half bad. Bachelors are allowed to hunt for food together — a taboo for married men.

The bachelors share a communal hut, but are responsible only for themselves. Married tribesmen live with their wives and kids and are to defend and care for them.

What about sex? Well, New Guinea bachelors make out OK in that area as well, because adultery isn't considered a big deal. In fact, if a baby is born out of an adulterous affair, the married man is expected to assume responsibility. So the bachelor is off the hook.

Bridal gown accounts for big wedding cost

By LESLIE WATTS
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — In keeping with today's larger, more traditional weddings are larger price tags. One of the biggest costs is the wedding gown.

Gowns range from a few hundred dollars to many thousands, says Alice Small, a free-lance bridal consultant. And, she says, "There are many variations on the traditional theme."

Today's bride doesn't fit neatly into a size 8, 21-year-old format. There are gowns created especially for older brides, plus-sized brides and brides who have been married before.

In one departure from tradition, earlier marriages no longer preclude an elaborate wedding with all the trimmings. Some repeat brides indulge in long gowns in bridal white or ecru, but cathedral trains and "blush" veils are usually omitted.

Even the most simple formal wedding gowns are expensive, says Small. Price is determined by the quality and amount of fabric, finishing, beadwork and special touches.

Sometimes a lucky bride-to-be can pick up the gown of her dreams on sale. Other cost-cutting options include calling on talented seamstress friends or relatives or hiring a dressmaker to make a less expensive copy of a favorite design.

Some brides carry tradition a step further and wear a dress worn by a mother or grandmother, but this usually does not cut cost.

"You don't save any money by recycling a wedding dress," says Santos Cavazos, who has designed and created hundreds of original gowns for Houston brides since starting his business in 1969.

Touching the slightly yellowed lace of a 1958 bridal gown that he is remaking for a 1989 bride, he adds, "This is her mother's dress. We will use as much of the original lace from the skirt as possible, but the top will have to be reworked entirely." Estimated price? $1,100.

His original designs range from $200 for bridesmaids' dresses and $800 for wedding gowns, with most of the bridal gowns running between $1,200 and $1,800. The most expensive dress he ever made was $8,500.

Brides shopping at Storybook Weddings here favor Alencon lace and silk taffeta or satin in long, full traditional styles, according to owner Lisa Ennis. Other popular looks for spring and summer weddings include wide-cut necklines that often end in a tiny cap or puffed short sleeves. Full tulle dresses appear in several collections, and give a light, airy look.

"Although the sheath was real big last year, girls come in to look at it, but they don't buy it much," says Ennis. "The bridal industry also has tried to bring back print fabrics for bridesmaids and empire-waist styles brides, but I don't think these are going to go over very well. They're so limiting. Prints are basically for daytime outdoor weddings, and you have to have just the right figure for the empire."

Halter and strapless styles can also pose problems, as many churches don't allow them, but some designers work around this problem by adding a bolero or short jacket.

How should a bride begin her search for that perfect dress?

"She should try on a lot of gowns," Ennis says. "I really emphasize that. She should try five or six different styles that day with different neck lines, waistlines and sleeves."

Ennis recommends the bride start shopping for her gown at least 6 months in advance.

Divorces cost more than just money

ORADELL, N.J. (AP) — The cost of divorce in terms of emotional trauma and physical illness is enormous, according to RN Magazine. "Divorce grief" may appear as alcohol abuse, attempted suicide, anorexia, bulimia, automobile accidents or heart attacks, it says. Divorced persons often need constructive advice from a lawyer, support organization or therapist to discuss their feelings, listen and offer advice. There's also the need for consolation.

New chewing gum 'doubles pleasure'

Copley News Service

In the past, to double your pleasure while chewing gum, you had to add another stick to your mouth.

But not anymore. A California company called Advanced Polymer Systems has designed a gum that keeps its flavor twice as long as regular gum.

The secret lies in the development of what scientists call "microsponges."

The microsponges feel like talcum powder but are made of the same plasticlike material that is found in soft contact lenses.

The technology already is being used in an after-shave lotion and two facial powders that absorb moisture.

Microsponges also will be used in the next generation of Retin-A anti-wrinkle cream and an anti-diaper rash product.

They could even be used in salad oils and spaghetti sauces.

American children masters at 'selective deafness'

By AMANDA GRIFFIN
New York Times News Service

Children across America are losing their hearing. If you doubt it, just ask any parent. This isn't a dramatic hearing loss associated with certain diseases, but a gradual immunity to the sounds children hear most — the voices of their parents.

You only have to visit any public place frequented by children and their parents to know this is true.

I overheard it again just the other day. A mother and her young daughter were in the restroom of one of America's most popular fastfood chain restaurants at the same time I was there with my daughters. Things were proceeding according to protocol when from the adjoining booth, I heard this mother raise her voice and ask, "Did you hear what I said?"

Obviously the young girl had a hearing problem. We could debate whether the problem was actually in the ear, or between the ears, but that's for another time.

And, the funny part is, parents get really frustrated when they aren't heard. Their blood pressure rises along with their voice as they repeat the directive in no uncertain terms.

You've seen parents do it. The mom or dad gets three millimeters from his child's nose and holds on to his elbow for extra emphasis. While the parent's jugular veins stand out, his lips repeat the message in exaggerated style, sort of like George Bush with his "read my lips" act.

The effectiveness of this rhetoric is also debatable.

Another famous question from parents is, "Did you understand what I said?" This query implies that the child heard, but that a loose wire prevented him from doing what was asked, like turning off the water in the sink, which is harboring a flotilla of army boats.

Let's face it, the underlying problem is probably not one of hearing or comprehension. Kids just don't like to be told what to do.

Junior may hear and understand that he should eat his squash, but, he just doesn't want to.

But, until children reach the age of 30 or so and decide it's time to start listening, parents will continue to develop hypertension and their offspring will continue to dawdle in uncomprehending silence over their squash or sink full of army boats.

What's a parent to do? Read my lips, "I'm getting a bull whip."

No-spill coffee mugs: New American icon

New York Times News Service

The peripetetic nature of American society has spawned all sorts of strange creations, among them billboards, Winnebagos, Walkman radios and car telephones.

But the most unheralded product of Americans on-the-run may be the plastic sloshproof wonder known as the travel coffee mug or the commuter mug.

"They have become a dashboard icon," said Pat Ganahl, the editor of Rod & Custom magazine in Los Angeles, "a symbol of hearth and home on the road."

The mugs, which come with holders that adhere to car dashboards with pressure-sensitive tape and have fixed lids to prevent sloshing, are sold mostly at convenience stores and fast food restaurants, and come with nicknames like "Trip Sip" and "Zip Sip" (the Diamond Shamrock gas stations advertise theirs as "traffic cups" that let commuters "Sip Through Traffic").

They are identifiable by their "custom graphics" — featuring turnpike favorites like "New Jersey and You" and the Pep Boys' Manny, Mo and Jack — and by a sloping lid with a small hole in the lid that allows the sipper to sip hot coffee or tea. And they may be the only mugs that come with their own installation instructions (for the dashboard).

"These mugs are a godsend," said Bruce Kirkpatrick, an actor who commutes daily from Philadelphia to New York. "They allow me to drink coffee and still drive safely" — although how safely one drives under the influence of 20 ounces of coffee from a jumbo-sized travel mug (in contrast to the standard six) may be open to debate.

LAURIE J. SCOTT, an assistant account executive at Grey Advertising, and Suzanne P. Loss, an accountant at Price Waterhouse, were recently spotted on the train from White Plains to New York downing hot coffee from their orange-and-white commemorative Hee-Haw mugs.

Michael J. Bernstein, a Chicago retail advertising and marketing salesman who logs an annual 45,000 to 50,000 miles on the road, recalls buying his first mug at a Movin' convenience food store in Crescent City, Ky.

When he reached his eventual destination, mug in hand, the potential client smiled conspiratorially and said, "Hey, I have one of those."

The proliferation of plastic travel mugs, which dates from the early 1960s, is largely the result of "coffee club" promotions by local convenience stores.

When a customer buys a mug (generally for 99c to $1.79 for an 8 or 12 ouncer) at a Dunkin' Donuts, a Circle K, a Cumberland Farms, a Wa Wa, an A Plus Mini Market or a participating franchise among the nation's 67,500 convenience stores, he or she becomes a member of the coffee club and is thus entitled to purchase refills there at a discount.

"A coffee club member is anybody who's got a travel mug and goes back for a refill," said Bob Sokolski, president of Whirley Industries Inc. of Warren, Pa., which is generally credited within the convenience store industry with having initiated the mass-marketing of plastic mugs for the Tom Thumb chain in 1978.

THERE ARE no statistics on the impact travel mugs have had on coffee sales, according to George Boecklin, president of the National Coffee Association.

But at convenience stores, the mugs and attendant promotion have become "a fact of life," said Wayne Pierce, the publisher of Convenience Store Management, a trade publication.

The problem of how to drink coffee while in motion has long plagued car designers and commuters.

In the 1950s, for instance, cars featured glove compartment doors that included a special place to put a cup, though the design was only satisfactory when the car was at a standstill.

Since that time, auto supply stores have done a brisk business in accessories like plastic cup holders and lap trays, while the recreational vehicle industry has perfected the art of designing consoles that hold cups.

Ad hoc attempts by consumers to rip holes in the plastic lids on styrofoam coffee cups, sometimes by hand, sometimes with teeth, predated the introduction of plastic lids with premade tabs.

In 1978, Joseph F. Corey, a Whittier, Calif., real-estate developer, received a patent for an open-ended non-drip coffee mug with baffles on it that, in his words, "kept the slosh down."

High-tech telephone not made for 'phone illiterate'

By DAVID GRIMES
New York Times News Service

My office phone is unusually quiet today.

That's because, once again, I've somehow managed to wrap my foot around the wire that runs under my desk and pull the little plastic phone thingy out of the wall.

There is a good and bad side to this. The bad side is that no one can call me up and tell me they would like to share their lottery winnings with me because I seem like such a nice guy.

The good side is that I won't have to reveal to anyone that I'm a phone illiterate.

We've got high-tech phones in our office, the kind of phones that, in the proper hands, are probably capable of making homemade pasta while setting up conference calls with people on the planet Neptune.

Unfortunately, all this versatility is lost on me; I'm still trying to figure out how to put someone on "hold."

I don't know how other people do it, but when I want to place a caller on hold, I cradle the receiver in my neck and start waving my arms frantically over my head.

This alerts Linda, the incredibly patient woman who sits in the cubicle next to me, that she should drop whatever she's doing and come push some buttons on my telephone.

Still, I sometimes wish that I could work my phone better because it looks like it could be a lot of fun.

For example, I could "Trunk Camp-On" or "Station Camp-On." This apparently is some sort of outdoor excursion offered by our phone system, the difference being that one allows you to take more luggage than the other.

Then there is another, even more intriguing feature that I'd probably have to pass on: "Group Pick-Up." I like a party as much as the next guy, but this is the '80s and you can't be too careful.

If I was phone literate, I could also "Call Park" or, for a really good time, "Park Answer." Who or what is this park and why is it so important that we call him-it?

Does Park really have the answers to this screwy phone system or is it just a come-on so he can try to sell me some time-share property in North Carolina?

It doesn't really matter, of course, because I'll never be able to get through.

IT'S YOUR LIFE

Social Security affected by recent changes

By STEVE EDWARDS

Edwards

Although Social Security is a major source of retirement income in the United States, it pays more than retirement benefits. About half of the $327 billion in benefits to be paid out in 1989 will be to disabled workers; to the families of workers who have retired or become disabled; and for medical expenses under Medicare.

New Social Security rules in 1989 are the result of automatic annual changes and major legislation enacted in 1988 involving Medicare. Significant changes affecting Social Security include:

■ Maximum taxable earnings increase from $45,000 to $48,000. Employee maximum annual tax increase to $3,604.80, with employer and employee tax rate set at 7.51 percent. This will increase to 7.65 percent in 1990. No decision has been made as to the ceiling in 1990 on maximum earnings to be taxed annually.

■ Cost-of-living increase in benefits payable in January 1989 is 4 percent.

■ Earnings limitation for beneficiaries under 65 increases from $6,120 to $6,480; and from $8,400 to $8,800 for beneficiaries 65-69.

If you continue to work after your Social Security benefits start, your benefits may be reduced until you reach age 70.

If you continue to work after your benefits start, you can earn up to a certain amount without affecting your benefits; but if you earn more than the earnings limitation, Social Security will reduce your and your family members' benefits, based on your work record. If a family member earns more than the earnings limitation, only that person's benefit is reduced.

Benefits are reduced by $1 for every $2 you earned over the earnings limitation during the year. In 1990, the reduction will change to $1 for every $3 of excess earnings for those 65 to 69.

In the calendar year when your benefits begin, a special rule is used if it gives you better results. During that first year, you can recieve your benefit for any month that your wages are less than one-twelfth of the earnings limitation and you do not do substantial self-employment.

Only earnings from work, not investment or retirement income, count toward earnings limitation.

■ Medicare Hospital Insurance deductible increases from the first $540 per hospitalization in 1988, to the first $560 of total hospital charges for 1989. In addition to the basic benefits for inpatient hospital eare, Hospital Insurance provides benefits for skilled nursing facility care and home health services. You must, in most cases, pay part of the costs of covered services. Medicare covers only services that are medically necessary and charges that are considered reasonable.

■ People eligible for hospital insurance must pay a new supplemental premium based on their federal income tax liability. This premium, $22.50 for each $150 of income tax liability for 1989, up to $800 per person, is used to finance new insurance against the costs of catastrophic illness enacted in 1988.

■ Medicare Supplementary Medical Insurance monthly premiums increase from $24.80 to $31.90. When you become elibigle for Part A of Medicare, you also become eligible for Part B, unless you tell the Social Security Administraion that you don't want it. The monthly premiums increase each January.

For more information concerning new Social Security changes, contact the Social Security office.

Jumping rope, chanting rhymes is universal ritual of childhood

STORRS, Conn. (AP) — Those who hear the rhyme should also know there's reason behind the child's game of skipping rope, according a University of Connecticut English professor.

"I think maybe that if I've found out anything, it's that all around the world, children skip," says Francelia M. Butler, author of "Skipping Around the World: The Ritual Nature of Folk Rhymes" (Library Professional Publications, $18.50 paperback, $29.50 hardcover).

The book is a collection of skip rope rhymes and chants that Butler collected from 57 countries during more than 40 years of travels.

Butler, who teachers children's literature, says no matter what the country, when she hands a child a rope, the skipping begins.

Chants are universal in themes — protest, loneliness, love, nonsense and the future, such as the rhyme: "Who will I marry? Doctor, lawyer, merchant, chief."

"That 'who will I marry' rhyme is in every country," Butler says.

Butler maintains that saying rhymes while skipping is more than childish rambling; it's a ritual.

"There's magic connected with it," she says.

"If a child skips and he stumbles, he doesn't just go on chanting. He stops and begins at the beginning again ... he feels that in the invisible world of the whirling rope, if he stumbles, he's let bad influences in or evil in. So he has to start the ritual over again."

While there are some general themes, the collection also includes a chapter of rhymes that Butler says "will make your hair stand on end." She was referring to a group of rhymes collected from urban playgrounds.

"Some adults are surprised, even shocked," she says, "to learn that many children's rhymes, including those for skipping, have an unmistakably sexual, even bawdy, element.

While many of the skip-rope rhymes change little over the years, Butler says some new ones do crop up and reflect current events and times, such as a popular rhyme during the administration of President Jimmy Carter: "Peanut shells, Carter smells, Amy got suspended."

But for the most part, Butler says, the rhymes remain very traditional and are very much like folk tales in that "nobody really knows the history of them or how old they are."

The art of skipping rope itself is timeless, she says, adding that there is evidence that ropes were used by people in ancient Scandinavia and ancient Greece, but it's not known if they had rhymes and chants.

"The oldest ones I have found," she says, "have been from the 17th century on."

Not all homework problems in books

By Dr. LAWRENCE KUTNER
New York Times News Service

CNS Graphic

Although the fourth-grade homework assignment didn't seem too difficult, Lee Canter noticed that his son was having a lot of trouble completing it.

When the boy asked for help Canter, an educational consultant in Santa Monica, Calif., looked at his son's textbook and found that all the answers were in one chapter.

He pointed this out to the boy, who replied: "The teacher said to answer the questions. She didn't say we had to read the chapter too!"

To many children, homework is regarded as something to be avoided, rushed through, forgotten or put off.

Book reports are mentioned for the first time the evening before they are due.

Math problems compete with the television or radio for a child's attention.

Homework and studying are among the most common causes of arguments between parents and their children.

"One national survey found that most high school seniors spend more time per night watching television than they spend per week doing homework," said Dr. Timothy Z. Keith, a school psychologist at Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University who has been studying the effects of homework on how well children do in school.

But the problems start well before the final year of high school.

Teachers report that they don't give much homework because it simply doesn't get done.

Also, children are receiving their first major homework assignments later than they did 20 years ago.

That trend appears to be reversing, however, as educators respond to reports published over the last few years that were highly critical of public education.

"Today most public schools give almost no homework until fifth or sixth grade, and no serious homework until junior high school," said Dr. Jane C. Conoley, a professor of psychology at the University of Nebraska and president of the Division of School Psychology of the American Psychological Association.

"There's pretty good research showing that that's a mistake," she continued. "Children who get homework earlier tend to do better in school."

Children who receive their first significant homework assignments in junior high are often overwhelmed by the amount of organization they need to accomplish the task.

Instead of waiting that long, some educational consultants recommend that the amount of time children study every weekday should be no less than 10 minutes times their grade level.

"That means that a first grader should spend 10 minutes per day and a twelfth grader should spend at least two hours per day," said Dr. Sam Redding, the executive director of the Academic Development Institute, a non-profit organization in Chicago that teaches parents how to help their children succeed in school.

"Children should spend that time studying each day, even if they don't have any homework," he said.

With children under 10 years old that often means having a great deal of parental involvement in the mechanics of studying: reminding them of their study time, checking their assignments and sometimes even sitting with them to make sure they get started.

With slightly older children, especially those already in the habit of doing homework, you may simply have to check whether they've done the work and be available to answer questions.

Should you ever do your children's homework for them?

"When parents tell me they do that, I ask them if they really need to repeat the third grade or relearn how to write a book report," Canter said.

"If you keep doing their work, your children learn that they cannot do it on their own. If the child really cannot do the work you need to contact the teacher immediately."

Parents' encouragement strengthens study habits

New York Times News Service

There are times when the standard advice issued to parents about homework — find a quiet, well-lighted place for your child to study, and establish a time to start the work — simply isn't enough.

What do you do if your child still rushes through, avoids, forgets or refuses to do homework?

"First, stop whatever you're doing, no matter whether your own parents did it or the people next door do it," advised Dr. Jane C. Conoley, president of the division of school psychology of the American Psychological Association.

"That usually means that parents have to stop criticizing their children and warning them about future dire consequences."

Often, getting children to do homework requires the parents to take an autocratic position.

"Tell your kids that you're open to discussing how late they stay out or what they eat for dinner, but doing homework is not negotiable," said Lee Canter, an educational consultant and author of "Homework Without Tears" (Harper & Row, 1988).

"It lets them know that homework is a top priority in your family."

Remove the children's incentive for racing through homework in order to watch television or play, by insisting that they spend the remaining time allocated for homework sitting at their desks studying or reading.

"A lot of families who become 'TV-free' on Mondays through Thursdays are reporting that their children are doing much better in school," Canter said. "They don't have the constant battles."

Provide a lot of reinforcement for your children's studying, especially in the beginning.

Be sure to reward their behavior instead of their grades.

"Too often homework time starts with the parents yelling at the kid to do it," said Dr. Sam Redding of the Academic Development Institute in Chicago. "Then the child is exiled to his room and deprived of human contact."

Redding recommends dropping by your children's rooms several times during a study session.

"Pat them on the back," he said. "Bring them some popcorn or something to drink. After all, that's what we do when we're watching TV."

Finding right private school requires homework

Associated Press

Does your child need new academic challenges? Or less pressure? Would he or she be happier with a different educational approach? If so, perhaps your should start looking for a private school for your child next year.

Tuition at a private, nonreligious day school next year will cost close to $7,000 in many cities. A boarding school can set you back more than $15,000 a year when you add in transportation and living expenses.

To narrow your choices, Changing Times magazine suggests you first meet with your child's current teachers. Discuss areas in which your child may be having trouble and why. When problems have to do more with the school than with your child, ask what sorts of opportunities would make the most of your child's abilities.

Your choices will begin to narrow dramatically once you and your child start considering specific schools and their locations. Do you prefer a school that's coed or single-sex, boarding or day, large or small, straitlaced or liberal, independent or religiously-affiliated?

Contact the admissions office when you're ready to visit, and plan to bring your child along. Plan to spend at least three hours there. When you visit a boarding school, have your child spend the night in the dorms.

You'll want a school that is challenging but still allows your child to be successful. Some schools offer an innovative curriculum, like the Athenian School in Danville, Calif., which emphasizes physical fitness, the arts and social responsibility. Courses are broad and interdisciplinary, and each student must complete a four-week wilderness course.

ACADEMIC RIGOR is the hallmark of Phillips Exeter Academy in Exeter, N.H. A quarter of the faculty members have PhDs, and the selection of 290 courses includes classical archeology, logic and multivariable calculus.

A girls' school can provide a nurturing environment for a student who tends to let others dominate classroom activities and who needs a boost in confidence. A boys' school can suit a student who needs few distractions.

Probably no campus today is totally free of drugs and alcohol so ask school administrators how they handle such problems.

Changing Times advises you to sit down with school administrators after you've taken a school tour to get answers to these nuts-and-bolts questions:

- Do teachers work together in planning the curriculum? Do they attend professional workshops?
- What textbooks are used and why? Textbooks and teachers should allow for individual differences in learning style. What is the school's policy when a student isn't doing well academically?
- What is the school's philosophy of parent involvement?
- Are parents expected to be involved in fund-raising activities at a day school? How much are parents expected to pay for books, activities, special programs or trips and financial contributions to the school?
- What is the state of the school's financial health? Ask to see the financial statement and check the endowment and teachers' salaries.

SOME SCHOOLS have their own admissions test or require an IQ test. Kids entering grades 6 through 11 may also be required to take the Secondary School Admission Test, offered about eight times a year at various school centers throughout the country. For information, write to SSAT, Educational Testing Service, P.O. Box 6450, Princeton, N.J., 08541.

Apply as soon as possible, if you need financial aid, because the money dwindles by spring. Schools base nearly all their awards on need but most have too little scholarship money for the number of qualified applicants. Many schools give some priority to minorities and to kids with top academic credentials, special talent in the arts or athletic prowess.

For a free directory of 240 boarding schools, write to Boarding Schools, 18 Tremont St., Boston, Mass., 02108. A good reference for identifying the independent boarding and day schools in any particular city or region is "The Handbook of Private Schools" (Porter Sargent Publishers; $50). You get longer descriptions and a state-by-state listing in "Peterson's Guide To Independent Secondary Schools" ($18.95), and "The Bunting & Lyon Blue Book: Private Independent Schools" ($65). These books are generally available in libraries.

Educational programs teach skills but don't lead to college degree

Associated Press

Certificate programs appeal to adults who want to learn specific job skills but don't need a degree. Program participants take a series of short noncredit courses leading to a certificate, such as the certificate in management.

According to Better Homes and Gardens magazine, most programs are geared for working adults who attend class at night or on weekends.

Depending on the school, an entire program can range from $200 for a professional secretary program to $2,900 for a legal assistant certificate. Financial aid is available; employers sometimes will subsidize a course.

Here's why adults like the courses:

- Admission is a snap. Some programs have no entry requirements. Others require only a college degree. Many courses also downplay tests, grades and assignments, so pressure is minimal. That makes it easier.
- Practical emphasis. Certificate courses skim over theory and go directly to practice.

"You study things that happen every day at work," says Philadelphia's Deborah Stanek, who completed a certification course at Villanova University's management program. "In my writing course, we edited memos we were preparing on the job," she says.

- A chance to test out the waters. Some students use the programs to see if they can handle college classes. Raul Heredia's paralegal program at Chicago's Roosevelt University let him try out a new career without spending years preparing for it.
- Quick results. In some programs, students take only the courses needed to pass a certifying exam. Individual courses may last only six weeks, and entire programs, a year or less.
- A chance to update old skills. When Joyce Brock of Des Moines, Iowa, started a professional secretaries' program, she'd been a secretary for 31 years. Now, her experience, certificate and training give her an edge.

Despite their benefits, certificate programs aren't for everyone. Disadvantages include:

- Unknown quantity. Some employers who value a master's degree in business administration aren't familiar with certificate programs.
- Limited application. If one changes jobs, a certificate that counts for promotion in one company may not be recognized by another.

Teacher has fun with language

Tollefson's memos compiled into 'Grammer Grams'

By LYNN LUDLOW
Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Alfred Hitchcok's thriller "Psycho" as a basis for grammar lessons? Why not, says Stephen K. Tollefson, a teacher at the University of California in Berkeley.

Hundreds of grammarians over the years have composed solemn rulebooks for what has become the deadliest of classroom subjects. Tollefson takes a different approach.

He has fun.

Tollefson prefers irreverence, common sense and dead-pan humor in the one-page memos that he sends to University of California workers with practical questions about the living language.

He calls the memos Grammar Grams, which are now collected into a supplementary workbook published by Harper & Row "as a way to deal with problems people actually have in writing."

No. 5, Vol. 5, for example, is headed "Attack of the Killer Apostrophes." He quotes a student's definition of apostrophes as "those little commas that go above the word."

He writes: "On American mailboxes misused apostrophes cling like swarms of killer bees, their little stingers hanging down ready to attack. 'The Normans'." "The Hitchcocks'." "The Leigh's."

PEOPLE ARE possessive, perhaps, but Tollefson says mailbox names are meant instead to be plurals: "The Normans." "The Hitchcocks." "The Leighs."

He finds it amusing to draw examples from Alfred Hitchcock's popular 1960 movie with Janet Leigh as the victim of Tony Perkins in the role of motel madman Norman Bates.

"Its" is possessive: "Each cabin at the motel has its own shower."

"It's" is a contraction of "it is" or "it has:" "It's hard to take a shower after seeing 'Psycho.'"

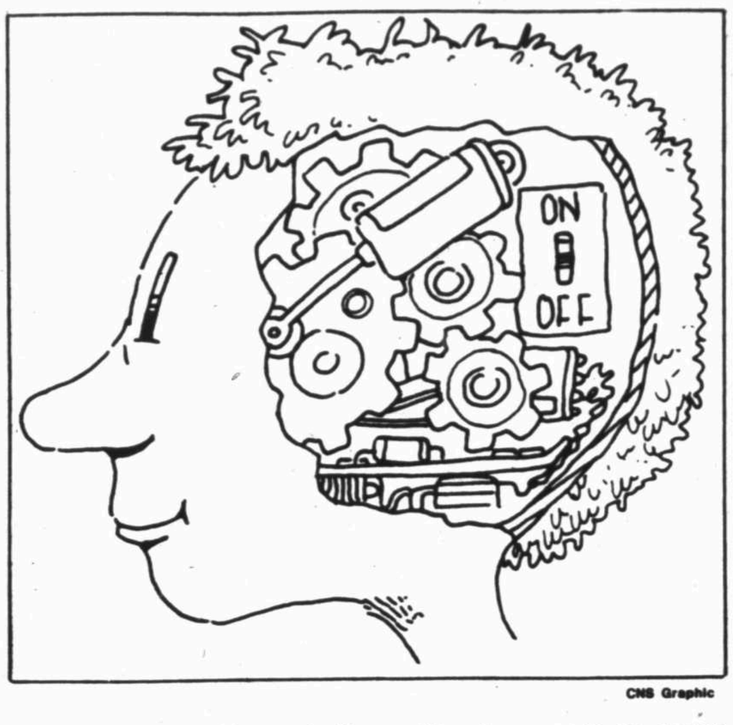

To show the possessive: "This is Norman's knife." Or a contraction: 'It's curtains, Janet."

If proper names that end in "s" are used as possessives, those of one syllable get an apostrophe and an extra "s": "The Bates's only motel." Those with two syllables need only an apostrophe: "This is Anthony Perkins' only house."

Here's where common sense marries grammar.

"If you insist," says Tollefson, "you can add another 's' here. However, this is usually too hard to pronounce (try saying Perkins's out loud), so the Grammar Gram suggests that you don't bother."

Tollefson, 39, has spent 15 years teaching classes for students who have flunked the English achievement test. In writing his Grammar Grams to staff workers, however, he says he confronts belligerent opposition from scientists with a semi-religious faith in half-remembered rules.

CNS Graphic

HE MENTIONED one entomologist who says it's a capital offense to use a preposition to end a sentence with.

In Grammar Grams, he writes: "Over-reliance on rules just because you learned them in the sixth grade and don't really understand why they exist is not the basis of good writing.

"I never understood any of it when I was in junior high or high school," says Tollefson, who grew up in Billings, Mont. "I loved to read. To write. I went to Stanford and got my master's at Berkeley. I was offered a lectureship, teaching grammar and I needed a job. But after a couple of terms I discovered how interesting it is. "

A small change in sentence construction, he says, can make a big change in meaning and emphasis.

"We never did institute such a policy," for example, isn't the same as, "We never instituted such a policy."

He takes a relaxed view toward some current bugaboos, such as remarks that begin with "hopefully," as in, "Hopefully, we can straighten this one out."

"Even daily newspapers print stories about how those of us who use this word are worse than toads," he says.

He says grammarians object because "hopefully," as an adverb, is supposed to modify a verb.

"Harrumph! Although strictly speaking these people are correct, theirs is a losing battle and perhaps a silly one. At the beginning of a sentence, 'hopefully' conveys a clear meaning to most people and is becoming so common in speech that it's useless to fight against it."

UNFORTUNATELY, AS in this sentence, critics are silent about similar terms known as "sentence adverbs."

Tollefson is considerably less tolerant when he urges everybody to get their (oops) pronouns squared away.

We tend to think of "everybody" as plural since we clearly are referring to more than one person," he says. "...But look at the word: everybody, meaning each individual. It's logical, then (at least to the Grammar Gram) that it should be singular and should have a singular verb and singular pronouns attached to it."

A past winner of the campus Distinguished Teaching Award, he has served as writing and speech coordinator for the campus Office of Educational Development. He is now an assistant to Patrick Hayashi, associate vice chancellor for admissions and records.

Many people feel bad about grammar because, in their anxiety to avoid reproach, they will substitute the wrong word because it sounds more correct. Like "badly" for "bad."

Tollefson comments, "Unless your sense of touch is out of whack, you would not, repeat, not, say, 'I feel badly about the death of your gerbil.' "

Spread child's art around

Copley News Service

Proud parents are pleased to post their children's artwork around the house — on the refrigerator, in their bedroom or in the family room.

How about showing off their drawings in a unique way? Turn artwork into appliques and fashion a bedspread with the designs.

Consider ways to adapt their drawings — use a number of different sketches to enlarge and position around the edges of a pre-quilted spread that you purchase. Or make your own quilt with a selection of sketches, alternating blocks of print fabrics for a checkerboard effect.

If you have a drawing you especially want to preserve, make multiples of this applique and use it as a repeat pattern on a pre-quilted spread or on a self-made one.

To transform artwork into appliques, trace the various elements of the sketch onto tissue or tracing paper. Cut out the shapes and use these as patterns to cut corresponding pieces of fabric and fusible interfacing.

Drawings that are too small to be effective can be enlarged using one of several methods. Place an opaque 1-inch grid over the drawing, then transfer the drawing, one square at a time, onto a 2-inch grid.

Another method is to trace the sketch onto opaque paper and project it onto the wall, enlarging it in the process. Trace this enlarged shape onto plain paper or newspaper you tape on the wall.

Also, many copy machines can enlarge images. Just make a copy of the original drawing and enlarge it on to the desired size.

Once you have the shapes cut out, make quilt blocks by ironing each fabric piece and its corresponding interfacing onto muslin blocks. Gently press the iron flat onto the fabric, rather than running it back and forth. The muslin should have a ¼-inch seam allowance on all sides.

Machine applique around the edges of the fabric shapes then trim the fabric as needed. After you construct the rest of your quilt top, quilt around the shapes of the drawing to highlight their images.

If you are using a pre-quilted bedspread for this project, simply applique your designs around the edges or across the foot of the bedspread. This is an excellent use for plain, solid-colored bedspreads often found at white sales.

Coordinating pillows are a snap to make. Make an extra quilt block cut ½-inch larger all around than a pillow form and cut a backing piece of fabric that coordinates with your applique fabrics.

Sew the quilt block and backing fabric together, right sides facing, leaving one side open for turning. After turning, insert the pillow form and hand-stitch closed.

Happy face created for radio promotion

New York Times News Service

By many accounts, the first happy face was deployed in the spirit of competition, not brotherhood, as part of a pitched marketing battle between two New York rock stations.

Charlie Alzamora, program director for WMCA, said the logo was created in 1962 as part of a promotion for the AM station. WMCA's main rival, WABC-AM, had begun calling its disk jockeys "the all-American guys," Alzamora said. So WMCA promoted the virtue of its own deejays with the slogan "the WMCA good guys." The phrase was printed on thousands of mustard-yellow sweatshirts, with a happy face drawn in black, its smile slightly askew.

"People would walk down the street, see the sweatshirt on someone and yell, 'Hey, good guy!'" Alzamora said.

In 1970 a similar logo — but with an anatomically correct smile — became a national fad and reached its zenith a year later, Alzamora said. He said he did not know who had started the fad, but suspected that it began in California. The logo, he said, "was reserved for the Brady Bunch crowd: a symbol for the silent majority."

In 1971, WMCA changed to a news and talk format. That meant the end of its smile logo. The station offered the logo with the skewed smile on sweatshirts in 1983, hoping that it would win listeners to a different format. But that time, the face flopped.

Music lures visitors to explore New Orleans

By PATRICK McMANAMON
New York Times News Service

NEW ORLEANS — From out of the columns of the Presbytere or Cabildo next to the 18th-century St. Louis Cathedral in Jackson Square come the soothing sounds of a single musical instrument.

More often than not, it's a saxophone's warming, soulful melody. The music invites you to sit and rest, lean back, and breathe it all in. Like the Sirens wooing Odysseus, the sounds of New Orleans invite visitors to enjoy its pleasures.

The music is everywhere — from the saloons and nightspots of Bourbon Street to the corners of Jackson Square to the banks of the Mississippi. Music, food and drink define New Orleans — in an order particular only to the individual's mood.

Appreciating this city without sampling the diversity of its music would be pure folly. The show literally never ends — there is no last call at many places as long as people want refreshment or entertainment.

Jazz, sing-alongs, rock, show tunes, cabarets, Cajun, single pianists, Motown, blues, ethnic music and modern jazz all can be found in the 78-square-block French Quarter.

One of the many joys of the Vieux Carre — "Old Square," the original name for the French Quarter — is that visitors don't have to go inside to enjoy the music. Open windows and doors send the sounds out of bars, where passers-by may sample the variety.

BOURBON STREET and its musical mixture are the revelry's lifeline. Jazz, blues, rock and cabarets are doors apart. (Mixed in are the seedier strip joints, a throwback, one supposes, to the days when brothels were a common element of New Orleans life. They're best if ignored.)

Typical stops for visitors include Preservation Hall, on Peter Street just off Bourbon. The worn-down building hosts local musicians and whatever more famous musicians happen to be in town. No frills, no seats, no drinks, just toe-tapping jazz. A tip: Arrive early — lines formed on a weeknight at 7:15 p.m. for the 8 p.m. show.

Other well-known spots are just off Bourbon Street. At Pat O'Brien's, 718 Peter St., women playing pianos belt out just about any tune you name. Try a Hurricane while listening; it's sure to jump-start your evening.

Around the corner and down the street on Bourbon sits the Old Absinthe House, home to Brian Lee, Miss Maggie and the Jump Street Five. The Old A Bar, as locals call it, is the oldest on Bourbon Street. Imagine, as you sit and sip on a beverage, Andrew Jackson or Jean Lafitte sitting at the same bar discussing current events. The bar is that old.

Lee, a blind guitarist, brings you into the present with his solid repertoire of blues and progressive jazz sung with a hearty mixture of soul and emotion. When his voice tires, Miss Maggie belts out tunes.

The Famous Door and Maison Bourbon host several New Orleans jazz bands. The Dukes of Dixieland call Lulu White's Mahogany Hall home. All are on Bourbon Street.

A key to enjoying New Orleans, though, is to sample everything. Bourbon Street receives the publicity, and much of it is deserved. But the French Quarter is full of halls and bars with all kinds of music.

Among the most enjoyable spots are those off the beaten path that don't receive a lot of publicity.

ONE EXAMPLE is the 711 Club, which is on Bourbon Street, but removed from the major hustle and bustle. Al Broussard holds court there on the piano.

Broussard, 80, is a holdover from the days when Louis Armstrong and "Jelly Roll" Morton ruled the town. Between songs, Broussard tells tales of those days, tales that bring the past to life. He also has perfected the "human trumpet," which sounds uncannily like a real trumpet.

Go late and you might be lucky enough to be the only ones present to hear him. It is not unlike a private concert. And you might able witness the tricks of the bartender-magician.

A word of warning courtesy of the 711 bartender: Don't look in Broussard's eyes. His sparkling baby blues would charm the hardest of hearts.

Several more out-of-the-way places are waiting to be found. The Storyville Jazz Hall at 1104 Decatur Street, on the fringe of the French Quarter, swings every night. The Esplanade Lounge in the Royal Orleans on St. Louis St. is home to one of the town's classies piano bars.

Tipitina's, 501 Napoleon Ave., was featured in the movie The Big Easy, but locals in New Orleans have known of it for a long time. Tipitina's serves good Cajun food and musicians such as the Neville Brothers and Bo Diddly have played there.

Explore. Be brave. New Orleans locals enjoy talking to people who don't just go to Pat O'Brien's.

A word of warning about the French Quarter: Musical establishments on Bourbon Street seem to take great joy in charging as much as possible for a drink.

"No cover," nightspots proudly advertise. Technically, that's true. Most places do not charge for entry; instead they charge a one-drink minimum per set. That sounds reasonable, but when an 8-ounce glass of beer costs $4, it borders on cruel and unusual punishment.

That warning's a good reason to try off-Bourbon spots. Although nothing in New Orleans comes inexpensively, off-Bourbon prices can be a little more reasonable.

New Orleans also cannot avoid big-city problems of dirt and drifters. Visitors just have to enjoy the positives, which are so many it would be folly to complain too long about anything.

And if anything ever does seem too much, just head toward Jackson Square or the banks of the Mississippi.

CNS Photo

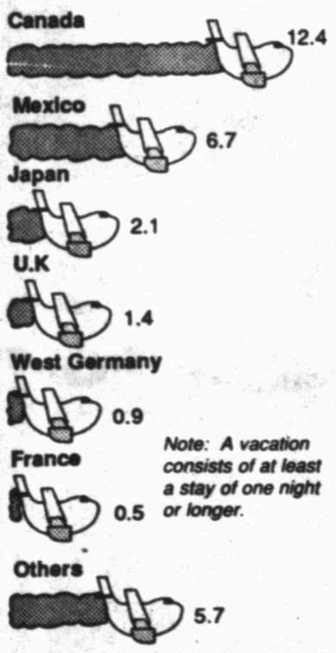

A gentle daytime ambience of yesterday pervades New Orleans' French Quater, with lacy balconies framing 17th century buildings. The original name for the French Quarter was the Vieux Carre, or "Old Square." In this area of New Orleans, visitors don't have to go inside the saloons and bars to hear the music. Open windows and doors send the sounds out of bars, where passers-by may sample the variety during the day or night.

Visitors to the U.S.

About 30 million foreign tourists came to the U.S. in 1987, a 16 percent increase over 1986. Foreign vacationers – primarily Canadians – spent a total of $19.4 billion on travel and other costs in the U.S.

DEAR ABBY

'Golden years' more than phrase

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: You blew it! "Christine in Albuquerque" voiced the thoughts I've held for a long time. The discounts given to senior citizens by parks, theaters, public transportation and restaurants are largely unjustified.

I, too, was under the misconception that today's seniors are a poor and hungry lot until I researched the subject. Imagine my surprise to learn that there are more poor people in my own age group (24 to 35) than there are in the senior citizen group!

Get with it, Abby. — CHRISTINE IN CLEVELAND

DEAR CHRISTINE: Believe me, I'm with it now. Did I get mail? Flog me with a Forbes! My desk is piled high with articles from The Wall Street Journal, Barron's, Time, Fortune and Money, plus various "studies" including figures, facts, graphs and charts.

Read on for a peek at my mail:

DEAR ABBY: We've reached the point where senior citizens are getting a disproportionate amount of help from the government. Thanks to AARP, with a membership of 38 million, theirs is one of the most powerful lobbies in Washington.

The working poor are the ones who could use some help. They frequently have no medical insurance and struggle to make ends meet from paycheck to paycheck. — COLUMBIA, MO.

DEAR ABBY: You owe Christine an apology. According to Time magazine, Feb. 22, 1988, during the Reagan administration, payments to the elderly have risen 35 percent. Now, more than 25 percent of all government spending goes to the 12 percent of the population who are 65 years old and older. Meanwhile, Aid to Dependent Children was cut 19 percent, and school meal programs were cut by 41 percent during the same period. Also noted in this article, the percentage of the elderly living below the poverty level was reduced from 20 percent in 1970 to 12 percent in 1984. — SENIOR, WILMINGTON, DEL.

DEAR ABBY: Of course there are some poor among the elderly in this country, but collectively, they are the wealthiest group of people in the United States. They have no house payments to pay, they're not educating children, they get Social Security and pensions, and spend their golden years on cruises and travel. No names, please. I'm one of them in ... FORT LAUDERDALE, FLA.

DEAR ABBY: Don't cry for the elderly. Senior citizens' per capita income is now higher than the average American's, and their median income has doubled since 1960. They hold title to about 50 percent of all household net worth, and 40 percent of all financial assets. — J.W. IN S.F.

DEAR READERS: Enough already! So next time I see an elderly bag lady, instead of offering her a few bucks for a meal, I may hit her up for a loan.

AT WIT'S END

Bedrooms becoming boardrooms

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

How's this for a seduction scene? You slip into something satiny with a spaghetti strap that falls from the shoulder. As you approach the bed (with the perfumed sheets), your foot becomes entangled in a mound of paper being spewed out by a fax machine, causing you to bump into the filing cabinet and send the keyboard to the word processor crashing to the floor. If that doesn't take the fire out of your desire, it'll at least slow you down.

I didn't know bedrooms had "gone corporate" until I complained in a column about the exercise bicycle at the bottom of my bed. The mail that followed enlightened me.

According to one writer, her bedroom is so full of business machines, people ask, "Who's your decorator? Shearson Lehman Hutton?" Another one who complained of romance between the sheets (fax, that is) said she considered draping herself in all that paper and becoming a Turkish belly dancer.

One disenchanted wife said she and her husband don't have exercise equipment, but they are part of a new trend that brings a microwave oven and a small refrigerator to their bedroom for those late snacks of popcorn and pizza while they're watching television. Another woman offered to trade me my exercise bicycle for the large German shepherd dog draped over the foot of her bed every night like a "snoring quilt."

It has become apparent that the sexy mirrored bedroom that television depicts as the last stop before ecstasy isn't a parking lot for sex at all, but a gym — an office — a kitchen — or a kennel.

Here's a challenge for you. Go to your bedroom and take a look. Is this a room that sets a tone for intimacy, passion and adventure? Or is it decorated in the following decor?

■ Early Cloth World: A dress form, sewing machine and swatches of material dominate the room. The shag rug on the floor contains some decorating surprises — straight pins that go straight through a bare foot.

■ Neo-Laundry: My personal favorite is a bedroom where the bed is dramatically underplayed. It is buried under a mountain of clothes to be folded. Every night the clothes are taken off the bed and dumped on chairs. Every morning, the clothes are returned to the bed.

■ Collectible Primitives: Many bedrooms have "carport looks." They hold items destined to become antiques. These rooms are stacked with the bird cage of the bird that died, plants that need repotting, a carton containing toilet tissue purchased on sale, stacks of old decorating magazines, canceled checks, bicycles for storing, etc.

One woman said her and her husband's bedroom held a huge TV screen and a wall of videotapes of football games past. I'll bet even Alexis on "Dynasty" never made love with the Notre Dame fight song playing in the background!

System screens callers

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The Nynex Corp. said it will offer customers a caller identification system that will display the number from which an incoming call is originating before the call is answered.

The system and several other new services will become available early next year through Nynex's subsidiaries — New York Telephone and New England Telephone.

New Jersey Bell became the first phone company to offer caller identification systems to all its customers last December. The Pacific Telesis Group will introduce the service later this year, and other phone companies are testing it.

Along with caller identification, Nynex will offer call automatic redial, which keeps dialing a number that rings busy for up to half an hour; call trace, which initiates a trace of the telephone number of an obscene or unwanted call, and call return, which calls back the last person who called, whether the call was answered or not.

The features will be made available first in Poughkeepsie, N.Y., and Burlington, Vt., during the fourth quarter of 1989.

Nynex also plans to offer call block, which blocks calls from as many as six telephone numbers, a service already available in New Jersey.

The new services are possible because of computerized switching equipment that lets the phone company transmit information about the call separately from the actual voice signal. Nynex is spending more than $1 billion on the new technology.

These services, which are intended to give people and businesses more information about callers and more control over their telephone lines, also have the potential to permit discrimination and violations of privacy — problems that regulators have not yet addressed.

"With this new technology the public telephone network is becoming a lot less public because it will be more difficult for people to talk with each other," said Eli Noam, a member of the New York State Public Service Commission.

"This could result in discrimination if someone decides not to receive telephone calls from an entire exchange or if it results in an invasion of privacy for people who have unlisted numbers. These are questions and issues that we are only beginning to think about."

The new services are expected to have a significant impact on the way people use their phones.

Gene Kimmelman, a telecommunications specialist with the Consumer Federation of America, said people would be likely to think twice before calling certain businesses or services that might obtain their telephone numbers and distribute them to telecommunications marketing concerns.

Gary Marx, a professor of sociology at the Massachussetts Institute of Technology, said the new services could change social behavior.

"If you invite me to a party tonight and I say I can't make it because I'm working at home, you would be less likely to call my home tonight and check on me," Marx said. "With these new services, if you did call I would know you didn't believe me."

In New Jersey, subscribers to the caller identification service pay about $6.50 a month extra.

They must purchase an electronic recording device that displays the caller's telephone number.

Greenspan will not force recession on nation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan insists that the Fed's anti-inflation moves have been proper despite criticism that its tight-money policy could topple the country into a recession.

Greenspan told the House Budget Committee this week that he did not believe forcing the country into a recession was a proper way to fight inflation and he said that was not the Fed's intention.

But he said if the central bank had not been pursuing a policy of gradually pushing up interest rates since March of last year, inflationary pressures would be much more severe at the current time.

If inflation gets out of control, the Fed is forced to squeeze credit much tighter, driving interest rates even higher and making any economic downturn much more severe.

That is what occurred in 1981-82, when the country suffered through the most drastic recession since the Great Depression, as then-Fed Chairman Paul Volcker drove interest rates higher and higher to combat the worst bout of inflation since the Civil War.

Greenspan indicated that the Fed's current course was aimed at making sure that the next recession will not have to be as severe.

"I do believe that the business cycle has not been repealed," Greenspan said. "We will at some point get a recession, but I hope that we have correct policies in place so the recession will be mild."

Committee Chairman Leon Panetta, D-Calif., noted that there was a difference of opinion on the Fed's credit-tightening moves, which included a decision last Friday to boost to 7 percent the discount rate, the interest the central bank charges to make loans to financial institutions.

"Opinion seems divided whether this move was 'too little, too late' or 'too much, too soon,' " Panetta said.

Panetta said that regardless of whether the higher interest rates end up pushing the country into a recession, the credit tightening will have many adverse consequences, including a bigger budget deficit, more troubles for the savings and loan industry, higher debt payments by Third World countries and higher costs to consumers who borrow to purchase homes and autos.

But Greenspan said the central bank remained convinced that the dangers of doing nothing outweighed risks to specific sectors of the economy from higher interest rates.

David Diaz, center, flanked by brothers Rudy and Ray in their Bike Master store in Midland. The trio and a Taiwanese partner will build a maquiladora factory at Piedras Negras, Mexico to build juvenile bicycles for the U.S. market. The move may attract more assembly work to the border.

Midlanders to launch maquila

Will build bicycles at Piedras Negras

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

A maquiladora project being initiated by a Midland retailer will be watched closely overseas and could be a catalyst to bring more assembly operations from Taiwan to Mexican towns on the Texas border.

David Diaz, who owns a Western Auto Store in Midland and Bike Masters, a retail bicycle shop at Midland Park Mall, says he has received final approval from the Mexican government to build an 11,500 square-foot plant in Piedra Niegras. Located across the border from Eagle Pass, the plant will be the initial stage of a maquiladora plant to supply juvenile bicycles to the U.S. market.

Most of the parts for the assembly operation will come from Taiwan, which currently manufactures a majority of bicycle parts in the world and accounts for 75 percent of the bicycles imported into the U.S. "Even some of the big American names use Taiwan parts and assemble them here on American frames," Diaz noted.

If the Piedras Negras maquiladora is successful, Diaz, 33, says it could serve to attract more Taiwanese bicycle manufacturing and other assembly business to Mexican border towns.

"There has been a negative impression in Taiwan about Mexico and Mexicans," said Diaz. "They basically

Supercomputers head for desktop

SANTA CLARA, Calif. (AP) — A "supercomputer on a chip" hailed by engineers as a technological marvel because it can be used as the basis for a new generation of high-speed computers was formally unveiled this week by Intel Corp.

The i860 chip was touted at the company's headquarters as the first 64-bit microprocessor capable of performing operations typically associated only with supercomputing systems and three-dimensional graphics workstations.

The chip is crammed with more than a million transistors, nearly four times the number found on current microprocessors.

"The level of integration and performance (the i860) provides puts supercomputing power in the hands of virtually anyone who can afford a desktop computer," said David L. House, Intel senior vice president and general manager of its microcomputer components group.

International Business Machines Corp. and Ing. Olivetti are among 50 companies that have made commitments to use the i860, said Claude Leglise, marketing manager for Intel's microprocessor division.

The chip performs up to 80 million calculations per second and is priced at $750. It operates on instructions that are as long as those used in mainframe computers and supercomputers.

Intel last month said it would make the i860, which it initially called the N-10, available as a helper chip as well as making it available to other companies as a central processor for engineering and graphics workstations and multi-user computers.

As a helper chip, the i860 could handle the "grunt work" of high-speed, repetitive calculations while a computer's main processor handles more complex tasks.

That's a bold decision because it pits the chip against established chips made by competititors such as Sun Microsystems Inc., Mips Computers Systems Inc. and Motorola Inc.

Intel said the chip will be available by the third quarter of 1989.

The i860 is built with so-called RISC technology, for reduced instruction set computing. That means it cannot be used as a plug-in replacement for the microprocessors used in industry-standard personal computers.

"Getting IBM as a user is an important feather in their cap," said Daniel Klesken, an analyst with Montgomery Securities in San Francisco. "The RISC battle is heating up."

RISC is important because it represents leading-edge semiconductor technology, which is used in computer workstations, the fastest growing segment of the computer business.

IBM will use the i860 in an add-on board for its latest personal computer line, called Micro Channel, while Olivetti plans to make the chip the centerpiece of a new line of minicomputers.

Intel said the i860 is ideal for computation-intensive applications and those requiring the interactive display of three-dimensional images, such as fluid dynamics, molecular modeling, structural analysis and econometric modeling. The company said general business applications also will benefit because of the incomparable performance.

"Until today, users basically had three choices if they wanted to perform these applications efficiently: They could share time on a multi-million-dollar supercomputer, if they could gain access to one; they could share time on a $500,000 mini-supercomputer; or they could use a less powerful, but more interactive $100,000 graphics supercomputer," House said in a statement.

Futures pits have foreign flair

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant Business/Oil Editor

Foreign players raised their stake in trading on the New York Mercantile Exchange during the last half of 1988, the market reports.

NYMEX, whose trading price for crude oil futures is a prime driver of world oil prices, said its semi-annual survey of traders revealed that foreign firms represented almost a third of the major participants on the exchange.

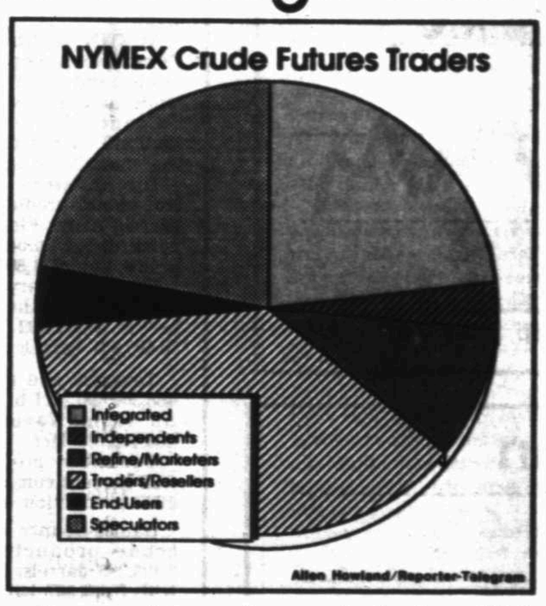

Increased involvement in the market by foreigners "gives credence to the idea of a growing linkage of WTI (West Texas Intermediate) with international crudes such as Brent blend in the North Sea and Dubai from the Middle East," said Peter Wishart, marketing manager for energy futures at NYMEX.

"It reflects that offshore people see WTI transactions at Cushing, Okla., or Midland in the same light as one between a trader in Rotterdam and a producer in the North Sea," he added during a telephone interview from New York late Friday.

As a result, the correlation among world prices is getting tighter and the industry is moving closer to a "global price" for oil.

The same study showed that nearly two-thirds of the market's energy futures traders have commercial oil interests, with the remainder pure speculators.

Please see NYMEX, Page 4F

Pure speculators make up only about one third of the crude oil market, fewer than many suspect.

Gas futures contract still several months off

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant Business/Oil Editor

The New York Mercantile Exchange is still working toward adding natural gas to its portfolio of futures commodities. After more than four years of planning, NYMEX officials are still waiting for the regulatory approvals necessary to initiate gas trading.

The Commodities Futures Trading Commission has already examined NYMEX's gas proposal with a generally favorable response pending establishment of a satisfactory delivery mechanism.

The mechanism exchange officials devised, called the Katy interchange — an extensive pipeline interconnection complex in the Houston suburb — requires Federal Energy Regulatory Commission approval to exempt futures delivery transactions from individual transportation tariffs.

If approved, gas could be transferred between any of the pipelines in the interchange area for a flat rate — proposed at 3.18 cents per 10,000 MMBtu (million British thermal units) contract.

FERC Commissioner Jerry Langdon said Friday in a telephone interview from his Washington office that he expects the commission "to address the NYMEX proposal fairly soon."

The former Midlander said that the agency's staff still has work to do before the proposal is ready for consideration by the five commissioners.

Cowboy sale emphasizes sport of business

Pitts

Amid the fan hysteria and loyalty, player idolatry, popcorn, cheerleaders and press hoopla, it's easy to forget that football is just another business. But when the Cowboys were sold last week, that cruel reality came home like an ice-cold bucket of Gatorade in the face.

Forget the shabby treatment of Tom Landry. Every columnist in Texas has covered that ground and the concensus is unanimous: You just don't treat at Texas institution and legend like trash without reaping a public relations nightmare. It will be a generation before anyone forgets the chicken squat dealings of Jerral W. Jones and Bum Bright.

But that's football, a realist should not have expected much more. Sports writers keep trying to perpetuate the myth that it's a game. In reality, football's a business of hard, cold cash with little room for sensitivity. Players are bought, sold and traded like cattle. Coaches and their familes are routinely sent packing in the middle of the night, and owners sit back hoping to build an asset and capital gain with a sale someday.

Bum Bright got his capital gain (a small one) when the Cowboys were sold last week for a rumored $140-$150 million. And we all learned what a big, insensitive business professional sports is. It was a sale so big that it just may be the end of an era for such transactions.

Current NFL rules prohibit corporations from owning football teams. They also prohibit public offerings of stock in NFL teams, and forbid ownership of other sports franchises by NFL owners. That leaves just one class of individuals as a potential NFL owners — the very, very rich, able to lay out a hundred million or so in cash or borrow very large sums of money.

In the case of Jerral Jones of Little Rock, Ark., who heads the Cowboy buyers, it was necessary to solicit the services of financial services of Solomon Brothers to put the deal together.

Some teams have been valued much higher. For instance the New York Yankees are thought to be worth about $250 million, according to the New York Times and the Los Angeles Laker might fetch $175 million.

But, the sale of the Cowboys at the rumored price of over $130 million is the highest price ever paid for a professional team. The highest price previously was $97 million paid last year for the Seattle Seahawks.

With such high prices it is not likely that future sales will be made by word-of-mouth on the rich-old-boy network. Chances are we will see Wall Street becoming more involved in the sale of teams, putting together the terms, financing and buyers group. And, if the prices continue to get higher, there is a strong chance the NFL will come off its strict buyers' requirement, Thomas Hayes wrote for the New York Times.

Still, there is another condition that may affect future sales, and that is the high risk and uncertainity associated with the professional sports business.

When one buys a manufacturing company, he knows from market demographics how many people might be expected to buy his product, and for how much. He also knows the cost of producing the product and how long it will take him to retire his debt.

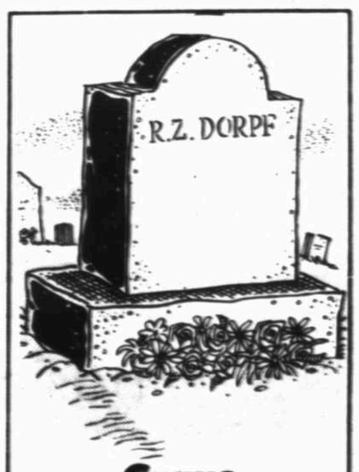

Not so in sports, where the variables are so unpredictable. A great quarterback can put the team in the winning column and fill the stands. A wrong move on a Sunday afternoon can put a good quarterback in the hospital, the team in the losing column and cause fans to stay away in droves.

People don't buy football ticket out of need like they buy an automobile or microwave. It is an emotional decision, and most emotional and fickle people in the world are sports fans.

Ticket sales at Irving Stadium have been dismal since the Cowboys launched their 3-13 losing streak. Of the 118 new luxury suites built by Bum Bright on the high rim of Irving Stadium only seven are leased according to new accounts, and one of the old coveted mid-stadium suites failed to fetch even the $30,000 minimum bid at at recent bankruptcy auction.

If football is "just a game," it is only so for fans. For everyone else in the game, it is a "bottom line."

Basin rig count rises 13

From Staff Reports

Both the U.S. and Permian Basin rig counts continued their fluctuating pace this week.

According to Baker Hughes Inc., the U.S. tally fell nine to stand at 757. The count had risen 20 the previous week.

After dropping nine last week, the Permian Basin count rose 13 to stand at 99.

Lea County, N.M. was the most active county in the Basin with 12 rigs at work. Andrews County was second with 11.

Concho, Runnels and Glasscock counties saw new activity this week while Crockett, Menard, Cottle and Dawson counties were left with none.

Among major oil producing states, Texas saw the biggest decline with 14; followed by Louisiana and New Mexico, five each; Ohio and Pennsylvania, three each; Kansas, two; and California, Colorado, Michigan and Oklahoma, one each.

Wyoming and North Dakota saw the only increases with rises of four and three, respectively.

Texas wells produce less oil, more gas

From Staff Reports

AUSTIN — The Texas Railroad Commission reports that Texas crude production fell in December while natural gas production rose.

Crude production averaged 1,837,819 barrels daily in December, the commission announced.

This compares with preliminary November production of 1,849,698 barrels daily. Final production reports for November indicate average production of 1,866,53 barrels daily.

The preliminary Texas oil production figure for the month of December is 56,972,402 barrels, up from 55,490,931 barrels in November.

Texas oil and gas wells produced 488,364,490 Mcf of gas in December, up from November's total of 468,402,739 Mcf.

December production decreased 0.22 percent compared to December 1987 production of 489,465,827.

Gaines County was the state's top crude producing county with 3,493,295 barrels, followed by Ector with 3,351,587 barrels.

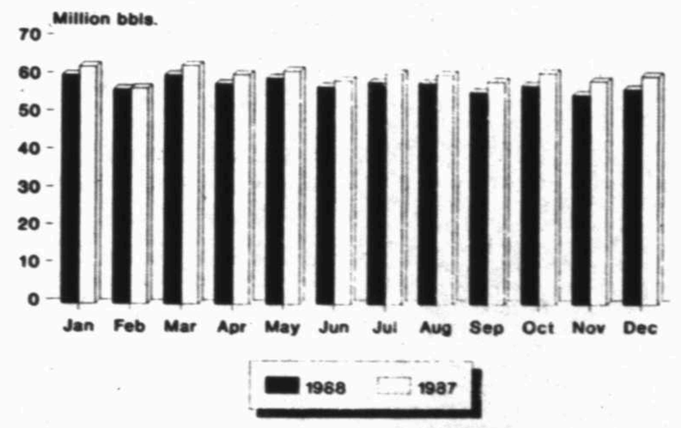

Pecos County was the top gas producing county with 27,769,117 Mcf; Zapata County was second with 24,719,887 Mcf.

Texas crude production for 1988 totaled 698,224,360 barrels, a 3 percent decrease from the 1987 total of 725,029,241 barrels.

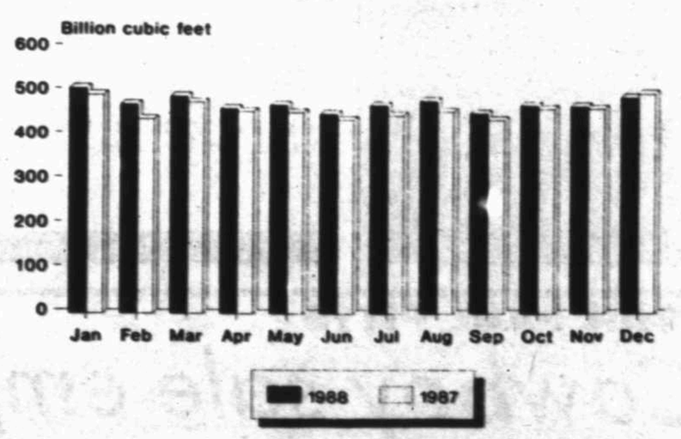

Gas production for 1988 totaled 5,645,341,394 Mcf, a 2 percent increase over the 1987 total of 5,516,224,229 Mcf.

Texas oil and gas production came from 191,279 oil wells and 45,599 gas wells.

Highland Pump purchases Ruthco Inc.

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

Highland Pump Co. has announced the acquisition of Ruthco Inc., a Permian Basin manufacturer of concrete bases for oilfield pumping unit.

Ruthco, a pioneer in the field of manufactured pumping unit bases and pumping unit setting, will continue to operate under its existing name as a separate division of Highland Pump Co.

The purchase is the fifth acquisistion for Highland in three years. The company purchased Red Arrow Tools of Odessa in 1988, after acquiring Leamco Inc. of Midland and Hamer Gear Works and Larson Supply of Oklahoma City in 1986.

According to Warren Bradshaw, vice president of sales for Highland, the addition of Ruthco will add another important ingredient in the company's plan to become a total service, repair and manufacturing company in the artifical lift sector.

"Now, with the acquisition of Rutho, I can't think of anything an operator would want to do with a pumping unit that Highland could not handle," said Bradshaw.

In a related statement Highland Pump President Tim Maroney, announced the purchase of a 65,000 square foot facility to at Grandview and I-20 to house the pump company's expanding operations. The former OPI manufacturing facility will house warehousing, distribution and executive offices of Highland Pump.

The facility will also house the manufacturing for the company's tubing anchor, packer, sucker rod couplings and Hamer Gear operations.

"We are the only national pump company headquartered in the Permian Basin," said Maroney. "This is our home and we will continue to consolidate our operations here."

Highland Pump has 36 company-owned sales and service stores in the western United States and employees 385 people.

Emerald Airlines wants Royale routes

SHREVEPORT, La. (AP) — Despite having financial problems of its own, Emerald Airlines hopes to serve cities on the routes of the defunct Royale Airlines into the future, the company's president says.

"(Emerald) has every intention of continuing to serve Shreveport, Baton Rouge, New Orleans and Oklahoma City," Wally Graner, president of the Texas-based company, said.

Emerald has received authority to operate Royale's schedule and to use both airlines' names for 30 days. U.S. Bankruptcy Court Judge Stephen Callaway converted Royale's status to Chapter 7 liquidation.

At the same time, Emerald will be trying to rewrite and file a plan for reorganization under Chapter 11 of federal bankruptcy laws.

Records in U.S. Bankruptcy Court in Austin, Texas, show Emerald has operated under Chapter 11 protection from creditors since Aug. 21, 1984. None of the three reorganization plans the company has filed has been approved by the court.

Graner said Emerald has hired Royale's 50 employees in Shreveport, Baton Rouge, New Orleans and Oklahoma City.

Shreveport-based Royale had operated under Chapter 11 protection from its creditors since September 1987.

Last-minute claims against Hunts flow in

DALLAS (AP) — Attorneys compiled a list of 18,000 potential plaintiffs and sent out filing forms.

The results was a flood of last-minute claims by silver futures investors against Nelson Bunker Hunt, William Herbert Hunt and their wives.

The plaintiffs are charging they suffered losses resulting from the Texas family's alleged manipulation of the silver market in 1979 and 1980.

An estimated 5,000 documents have created a backlog of about a week for filing the claims in bankruptcy court, records show.

In papers processed, about 200 investors want their share of $60 million in claims against the brothers.

Although the claims average more than $220,000, many investors' losses were between $20,000 and $50,000.

Judges have already awarded a $134.6 million judgment in a related case.

Herbert Deutsch, a New York attorney who filed a suit on silver investors' behalf in 1982, told the Dallas Times Herald he expected 10,000 individuals had filed when the deadline passed.

The family members have been accused of causing millions in losses for silver investors when the cost on futures soared to $52 an ounce in January 1980, then bottomed at $10 just three months later.

A state-owned Peruvian mine, Minpeco S.A., won the $134 million civil case that contended the brothers had manipulated the world market.

High Premiums, Low Benefits Are System's 'Bottom Line'

Q. So who is really bearing the brunt of the inadequacies of the system, employers or their workers?

A. Truthfully, there's plenty of hardship to go around. Premiums for employers have more than doubled in the last three years.

In 1987, Texas ranked fifth among 46 surveyed states, with costs equal to 134 percent of the national average. Texas costs averaged $2.42 per $100 of payroll, compared to a national average of $1.81.

That survey compares expenses for employers in all industries, but the cost impact on many of the oil field businesses with traditionally high rate and claim histories has been even more dramatic.

"Numerous features of the system conspire to create great inequities among claimants," the Legislative Select Committee concluded.

Among the features cited by the committee are:

— Serious long-term disability benefits among the very lowest in the nation;

— High wage earners receive benefits which are low by national standards as well;

— The subjectivity of benefit criteria;

— The low weekly maximum benefit in relation to average weekly wage ($410 in Texas). Totally disabled workers in the state receive only 56 percent of their pre-injury earnings, while their counterparts in at least 28 other states receive at least two-thirds of the usual paycheck; and — Elective coverage provisions.

Q. If coverage is elective, why don't employers just get out of the system?

A. By doing so, they open themselves up to unlimited liability in a civil suit in the event of an injury.

Even with comprehensive medical insurance to cover a workers' health care costs, the employee could have a cause of action against his boss for lost wages and other damages.

In addition, self-insurance by private employers (setting aside funds to cover Workers' Comp risks) is not a legal option in Texas. In fact, only two other states in the union are like Texas in disallowing self-insurance.

Likewise there are only three states where coverage is not mandatory.

Even the Professional Insurance Agents of Texas, who would be in direct competition with self-insurers, support efforts to make self-insurance an option for large employers, provided they are subject to the same benefit, solvency and other obligations as traditional insurers.

Q. What about the other inequities in the system?

A. One of the most glaring inadequacies is in the maximum duration of temporary (300 weeks) and permanent (401 weeks) total disabilities. This, combined with the 56 percent of average weekly wages, results in benefits among the nation's lowest.

WORKERS' COMPENSATION

IT'S YOUR BUSINESS, TOO

Most states make lifetime benefits available to those workers who are truly totally and permanently disabled, without the 401-week cap.

The reformers must keep in mind, however, that Texas' current system allows total disability status to workers who have returned to full employment. If that interpretation persists, inflation-protected lifetime benefits could bankrupt the system.

Q. In the final analysis, is getting worked up and recommending change going to be enough?

A. It's hard to say. A report to the governor declared the Workers Comp system "cannot but be a genuine source of embarrassment to the informed citizenry of the state."

However, that report is 50 years old. Recommendations made to Gov. Allred in 1938 called for such things as an improved benefit structure, mandatory coverage, self-insurance, improved safety and elimination of the trial de novo system.

Sound familiar?

Q. So, what am I supposed to do about it?

A. The way to ensure that changes get made this time around is to contact the state senators and representatives to make your voice heard on this crucial issue.

Hearings on the reform bill are ongoing before the House Business & Commerce Committee in Austin. Pending their action, the full legislature will be considering sweeping changes in the entire Workers Comp system.

Let them know how you feel.

NYMEX

Included in the oil-interest figure are "traders" who deal in paper barrels but who can trade physical product as well.

Wishart noted that speculator involvement grew marginally in the second half of 1988, adding that while constituting a slightly smaller share of the total market, oil-related companies still make up the majority in a rapidly expanding market.

Energy futures trading as a whole, which average 130,000 contracts a day last year increased by about one-third in volume over 1987. Crude oil contracts alone increased 29 percent during the period.

Harry Spannaus, executive vice president of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association said interest in hedging against future price moves is growing among West Texas producers.

During Energy Appreciation Week in late April, the PBPA will sponsor a free seminar open to the public on futures hedging.

However, he said, most forms of speculative trading on the NYMEX are "far too risky for the average independent producer; above the risk he is already taking in drilling a well.

"We see it (NYMEX trading) as very high-risk and complicated. It takes a dedicated staff to monitor the market as close as needed, and most small producers don't have the money or manpower necessary," Spannaus said.

Whether foreign or domestic traders are involved, Spannaus sees futures trading as a destabilizing factor in oil prices.

Permian Corp. Chairman Bill Kleine calls NYMEX trading an "unrealistic element, but a definite factor" in oil pricing. He doesn't see that role changing any time soon.

GAS

One issue that FERC is hoping may be resolved before the Katy application comes to a vote is wellhead price decontrol, Langdon said.

He added there is a positive feeling toward decontrol in the capital, including "senate-side support which hasn't been there" and "general agreement that now is a good time for decontrol to have the least effect on consumers' gas prices."

Peter Wishart, marketing manager for NYMEX energy futures, said that barring complication at the CFTC, the exchange could begin trading in gas contracts within a few months of FERC's approval.

Once the pipeline regulatory agency has signed off on the project, the only issue that remains is to gain the CFTC's blessing. The commodities trading regulators have a 90-day period in which to act, but "it's always possible they could stop the clock."

The only other obstacle to the opening of trading is space on the pit floor, an issue which will be resolved by a reorganization of the trading areas which will be complete by mid-April, Wishart said.

The futures contract has been proposed as 10,000 MMBtus, which would move in 1/10-cent increments up to a limit of a dime a day per contract.

House wins agains

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — A Las Vegas casino resort has received a $57,103 rebate award for the replacement of incandescent light bulbs with compact fluorescents as part of the Nevada Power Co.'s High Efficiency Lighting Program (HELP) to save energy.

According to Energy User News, the rebate was the result of the resort's reducing its kilowatt demand by installing new, energy-efficient lamps. A total of nearly 10,000 light bulbs were replaced by the resort in public rooms, hallways, stairwells, restaurants, rest rooms and elevators.

CALLS

The devices, about the size of a desk radio, cost between $40 and $80, depending on the model. They plug into a telephone jack. After the first ring, the device flashes the caller's telephone number on the screen for 30 seconds.

The device also records the caller's number and the date and time of the call. It can store 20 to 50 calls.

To address privacy concerns, Pacific Telesis, which serves most of the West Coast, plans to introduce a blocking feature when it introduces the new services later this year.

The feature will allow callers to block their telephone numbers by dialing a special code before they place the call. At the receiving end, a message that says "private call" will appear on the caller identification screen.

"We are providing the same rights to both caller and receiver," said Ethan Thorman, Pacific Telesis' product manager for the new services.

"It's the same as someone knocking on your door and putting their finger over the peep hole. You don't have to open the door."

Nynex predicted that at least 20 percent of its residential customers would subscribe to the new calling services.

New Jersey Bell said that about 5,000 residential customers had signed up for the caller identification service since its initial offering last December. The phone company expects the number to reach 20,000 by the end of 1989.

Phone companies expect the systems to be even more popular with business customers, especially those that make heavy use of customer records.

The system could be linked to a computerized filing system that would automatically retrieve a customer's record based on his or her telephone number.

For example, a stockbroker could retrieve the name and portfolio record of a caller before the call is answered.

The service would allow take-out restaurants to foil crank calls. Restaurants that subscribe to the service would know the true telephone number of each caller and could easily confirm telephoned orders.

In addition, the service would enhance the ability of emergency services like the police, fire department and ambulance services to respond to crisis situations.

If a caller is unable to provide the location of an incident, the emergency service can at least obtain the telephone number of the caller and thus trace the address.

Many consumer advocates warn that in its present form the caller identification system could pose an invasion of privacy because it discloses an unpublished telephone number without the caller's consent.

The advocates have asked telephone companies to allow callers who want to keep their phone numbers confidential to block the caller identification service.

The advocates say that callers who cannot block their numbers will be less likely to use confidential telephone services like hotlines for AIDS, child abuse or suicide that require the disclosure of sensitive information.

Many callers might avoid such services for fear that their telephone numbers, and thus their identities, would be revealed, according to the advocates.

"If someone uses one of these anonymous phone services and later learns that the call can be logged or traced back to them, there would be a serious breach of confidentiality," said Janelori Goldman, a lawyer for the American Civil Liberties Union. "Callers should have the right to block out their telephone numbers for whatever reason."

William Kwasnicki, director of a suicide hotline in New York, said the hotline would not subscribe to the caller identification service. He said it might discourage some people from using the suicide counseling service.

However, Kwasnicki said he expected the caller identification system to discourage crank callers who might fear that their numbers would be identified.

Christine Todd Whitman, president of the New Jersey Board of Public Utilities, said she voted against the introduction of the caller identification service in New Jersey because she is concerned that consumers would be afraid to use confidential telephone help services like the AIDS hotline if their numbers are disclosed.

She also said the system is too expensive for lower-income customers. The service, including the attachment, costs $128 for the first year.

"This assumes that low-income families get fewer crank calls than people of higher incomes, and that's just not the case," Whitman said.

Cliff Radziewicz, director of implementation for caller management services at New Jersey Bell, said the company had conducted field tests in Atlantic City and Hudson County, where there are many unlisted telephone numbers. He said the company received few complaints from consumers about the new system.

Nynex does not plan to offer the blocking function.

But some New Jersey people with unlisted numbers have complained.

"I have had an unlisted number for a very important reason — I don't want to be bothered," said Lee Aiges, a management consultant in Fort Lee, N.J. "Now it seems that I don't have a choice."

Radziewicz said New Jersey Bell had considered adding a special feature to the caller identification system that would warn callers that they had reached a party that subscribes to the service. This would give callers a chance to hang up if they did not want their telephone numbers revealed.

Radziewicz said New Jersey Bell did not put the warning function into effect because a study showed it would cost several million dollars to construct.

FED

On another matter, Greenspan said he still supported increasing the federal gasoline tax but only as a conservation measure, not as a way of boosting federal revenues.

Greenspan also said that boosting taxes on alcoholic beverages and cigarettes would not harm the economy, but he said simply increasing federal tax revenues was not the answer the government's imbalance between spending and revenues.

Echoing a position taken by President Bush and former President Reagan, Greenspan said that higher federal revenues were much more likely to end up funding new programs rather than being used to reduce the budget deficit.

"There is a tendency in Congress, when revenues are available, to increase government programs," Greenspan said.

Greenspan said he would prefer across-the-board spending cuts to tax increases if Congress and the administration fail to agree on a plan to reduce the 1990 budget deficit to $100 billion.

Greenspan repeated warnings that he has made in earlier congressional appearances that it is crucial that Congress and the new administration reach agreement on a credible, multi-year plan to reduce the budget deficit.

He said there was "no question" that such a deficit-reduction program would encourage financial investors and allow long-term interest rates to fall substantially.

JOBLESS BENEFITS

From Staff Reports

The U.S. Department of Labor has begun approving petitions from oil and gas-related companies applying for expanded employment benefits under the Trade Adjustment Assistance section of the 1974 Trade Act.

Certification allows all company workers laid off due to a lack of work to apply for enhanced unemployment assistance including: weekly trade adjustment allowances, job placement; employment counseling; vocational training; and financial assistance for retraining, job search and job relocation.

According to the Texas Employment Commission, petitions have been approved for workers separated from the following companies during the specified period:

- Nordrill Inc., petition No. 21654; since Oct. 1, 1985.
- Buckeye Inc., pettition No. 22210; since Oct. 1, 1985.

thought Mexicans were lazy and slow workers, but we have had discussions with Taiwanese and have brought some of them to Mexico to examine sewing operations here. They have been impressed at the speed with which workers in maquiladora plants are able to work."

Diaz said his plant would be watched closely by his partner and others in Taiwan and he is hopeful he can demonstrate that Mexican workers can assemble bicycles as fast and cheaper than workers from Taiwan.

Explained Diaz: "With the high influx of high-tech assembly to Taiwan, that manufacturing nation has now become more Americanized in wages and benefits, because of higher skill demand."

He calculates maquiladora wages in Mexico with benefits at about one dollar an hour, and notes that bicycles can be made in Mexico for about 20 percent of what it would cost to assemble them in the U.S.

Most of the parts for the bicycle assembly plant will come from Taiwan and Mexico, but Diaz says there is a possibility the frames will be made in Midland-Odessa, where there are a large number of welding shops.

The maquiladora project will be a joint venture between Diaz and his brothers, twins Ray and Rudy, and Jia Chun Chern, 46, a Dallas businessman and citizen of Taiwan.

Diaz had been buying bicycles from Chern, who represents Taiwan manufacturers, and over a period of four years the pair formed a friendship and decided to launch their own manufacturing venture.

"Initially," says Diaz, "we will be selling stuffed animals and using the cash flow from that operation to build a bicycle assembly plant on the same site. We have contracts to supply all the stuffed animals we can produce, but we don't have enough volume yet to launch the bicycle assembly operation." But he predicts the Mexican-made bicycles will be rolling off the assembly line by the end of the year.

He could not predict initial volume, but said a small factory with only 20 people can produce up to 1,000 bicycles every three days.

To get sufficient sales, Diaz has targeted volume accounts such as J.C. Penney, Western Auto and True Value.

He said he selected Piedras Negras over other border sites in Juarez, Cuidad Acuna and Matamoras because the town was very receptive to the plant; it is a town of 200,000 with a booming economy; it is near Lake Amistad; and can be reached by flying to San Antonio and driving.

FDIC auction show plays the Big Apple

NEW YORK (AP) — The government agency that safeguards bank deposits is in the hotel and restaurant business. It's the phantom landlord of several office towers, shopping centers, polo grounds, a sewage plant and a 78-acre thoroughbred horse farm.

What does the Federal Deposit Insurance Co. know about changing bedsheets, flipping hotcakes, treating sludge or saddling horses? Nothing.

The FDIC inherited these properties after rescuing a spate of insolvent banks over the years, and it's now auctioning them off en masse to investors worldwide.

Banking experts say the agency could be involved in many more of these auctions in the not-so-distant future if President Bush's plan for solving the nation's savings and loan crisis proceeds as planned.

Bush proposes to restructure the thrift regulatory system by giving the FDIC the added responsibility of insuring S&Ls, currently the job of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. The change would pass on to the FDIC the authority of handling repossessed thrift assets, including real estate.

The Federal Asset Disposition Association, a subsidiary of FSLIC, says it alone manages 2,400 FSLIC property assets in 33 states with an appraised value of $3.8 billion — most the result of bad loans made by hundreds of failed thrifts over the years, half of which were in the Southwest. Among the properties: a 497-acre safari park in Branson, Mo.

For now, though, the FDIC has its own white-elephant properties to contend with.

About $84 million worth, or 20 percent of the FDIC's current real estate portfolio, will be sold this Thursday in a venture with the auctioneer Christie's and the real estate firm Cushman & Wakefield.

The event marks the first large-scale real estate auction for the FDIC and only the second real estate auction for Christie's, which is better known for pitching multimillion dollar art collections and rare jewels, not empty motels.

Arthur F. Lorentzen Jr., assistant director of the FDIC's Division of Liquidations, said the agency previously had disposed of real estate holdings through smaller regional auctions or sealed bids sales. He said the Christie's auction exposes the select properties to a wider range of potential investors.

On the block are 25 of the FDIC's largest properties, located in Alaska, Florida, New Mexico, California, Tennessee and Texas, where bank failures have been increasing.

The auction targets range in value from a Houston apartment complex worth around $650,000 to a 23-story office tower in Knoxville, Tenn., worth around $24 million.

A few had been owned directly by the problem banks while others were turned over to them as a result of loan defaults, Lorentzen said.

When banks fail, the FDIC steps in to protect the deposits, then tries to sell some or all of the assets to a healthy institution. Sometimes it ends up with properties it doesn't want.

A record 217 banks failed in 1988, up from 184 the previous year, with many of them victims of depressed economies in the agricultural and sunbelt regions. Some of the properties inherited by the FDIC remain shut down, such as the 172-room Skyway Motel in St. Petersburg, Fla., which the FDIC received after local Park Bank failed on Feb. 14, 1986.

Others remain open for business, like the 192-room Howard Johnson's motel and restaurant in Knoxville, Tenn., once the responsibility of City & County Bank, which failed May 27, 1983.

"We don't run them ourselves," Lorentzen said. "We hire people to do that.

"Anything we have it's our goal to put it back in the private sector. Our main function is to insure deposits."

The upcoming auction list includes about a dozen land parcels, three motels, two shopping centers, 10 apartment complexes and five office buildings. Earl Reiss, executive vice president for Cushman & Wakefield, said that domestic response has been good so far but interest from foreign investors hasn't been as strong.

Custom crypt builder buries competition

By KAREN MILLS

COLD SPRING, Minn. (AP) — One man ordered a custom-built granite mausoleum with two crypts included for the family's German shepherd dogs.

Another family asked for a specially designed walk-in above-ground burial building with space for a son's favorite car.

A third family had a mausoleum designed to include a favorite chair from their sitting room for relatives to use when they come to meditate the past.

They're part of a growing market for pre-assembled or custom-built solid mausoleums that inspired Cold Spring Granite Co., a leading granite supplier with revenues of about $150 million in 1988, to establish a Private Estates division to focus on what had been a small part of company business.

"There's a trend of people wanting to be buried above ground and it's increasing every year," said Wally Pattock, vice president of memorialization. "It's not something we developed, it's demand by the people."

Of the approximately 2.3 million people who die in the United States each year, nearly 10 percent have arranged for mausoleum entombment, according to Cold Spring Granite, which has corporate offices in St. Cloud, Minn., and two of its fabrication plants in the nearby Cold Spring area.

People have several reasons for choosing above-ground burial, said Teresa R. Bohnen, whose title is market manager-memorialization for Private Estates.

"The people most interested in private estates are those who were nearly famous, who had major accomplishments but perhaps didn't get the recognition they feel they should have," Bohnen said.

The mausoleums "are intended for the person who is looking for a more exclusive form of immortality," said James Terhaar, general manager of the Private Estates division.

The growth of the private mausoleum industry, he said, is a carryover from the increase in burials in large community mausoleums around the country.

Mausoleums have been popular in the southern United States, where the water table or sandy soil makes in-ground burial impossible in many areas, the company officials said.

"I always hear the words, 'It's clean, it's dry above ground,'" Terhaar said.

Cold Spring Granite sold between 200 and 300 pre-assembled mausoleum units in 1988. The units contain from two to six crypts and range in estimated retail price from $12,000 to $40,000, Bohnen said. There is no upper limit on the cost of custom units, which have been sold for as much as $1.5 million.

Stone sculptor Joseph Theis puts the finishing touches on a template used in the etching process at the Cold Spring Granite Co. The Minnesota company sold between 200 and 300 pre-assembled mausoleum units last year, ranging in price from $12,000 to $40,000.

Except for highly specialized custom work, all sales of Private Estates mausoleums are through cemeteries or monument retailers.

The wealthy aren't the only ones who buy mausoleums, Terhaar said.

"In our (local) cemetery, we have a guy who worked in the plant, crating products," he said. "It goes all the way up. It's not so much the ability to pay, it's more a desire for above-ground entombment.

"Certainly in number we sell, more at the low end. That is within the means of many, many more people," said Terhaar, who estimated that the Private Estates division represents 2 percent to 3 percent of Cold Spring Granite's total sales.

"We're trying to double that this year," he said.

While there are several other companies in the country that make mausoleums, Cold Spring Granite offers special service in helping retailers sell the products and sending crews to cemeteries to erect the buildings, said Terry Carlson, president of St. Charles Memorial Works in St. Charles, Ill., a retail business that has bought mausoleums from Cold Spring Granite.

"It's not a very common sale," said Carlson, who has sold nine mausoleums ranging in price from $12,000 to $750,000 in 25 years of business. "I would say the largest percentage of monument shops, like I am, never even sell one during their time in business."

Customers who buy the larger, walk-in mausoleums normally are affluent families, he said in a telephone interview.

"It continues their lifestyle, their honored place in society, in death as well as in life. I really feel it's a prestigious type of purchase," said Carlson.

Hearst Corp. purchases movie group

From Staff Reports

NEW YORK — The Hearst Corp. has acquired the Phoenix Entertainment Group, a leading producer of network television movies and miniseries, it was announced this week by Frank A. Bennack Jr., president and chief executive officer of the Hearst Corp., and Gerald I. Isenberg and Gerald W. Abrams, co-chairmen of Phoenix.

"The acquisition of Phoenix represents another major step by the Hearst Corp. toward full participation in the entertainment industry," Bennack said. "With Hearst now involved in so many different forms of television broadcasting, distribution and exhibition, we thought it important to add a production entity run by experienced, respected professionals. Phoenix is a perfect fit with our long-term strategic plans."

The production company, located in Los Angeles, will be renamed King Phoenix Entertainment Inc. and become a subdivision of King Features Entertainment, a producer and distributor of TV films and home video programs.

In recent years, Hearst has substantially increased its broadcasting and video activities. The corporation has acquired three major market television stations since 1981 and become a founding partner in the Lifetime and Arts & Entertainment cable program networks.

Phoenix Entertainment Group Inc., founded three years ago, has grown rapidly and is a major supplier of television movies to all three major networks.

AUTO REPORT

Out of this world?

Three years in the making, Pontiac is ready to introduce its Trans Sport multipurpose passenger vehicle in the mini-van market for the 1990 model year.

Chevrolet raises truck rebates

New York Times News Service

DETROIT — The General Motors Corp. this week raised its cash rebate on some of its Chevrolet S-10 pickup trucks to $750, from $500, and extended the division's other incentives, which were to have expired March 1, until May 2.

A similar extension was announced earlier by the Oldsmobile division.

Automotive analysts have been predicting that General Motors would begin another big wave of buyer incentives to clear excessive inventories from its dealers' lots.

The company's car stocks are estimated to have risen substantially above the 95-day supply posted at the end of January, compared with 85 days for the industry as a whole.

Keep resale value in mind

Copley News Service

With the 1989 model year in full swing and a spate of auto shows sweeping the country, it's no wonder that people everywhere are thinking about buying a new car.

Those gleaming hunks of steel displayed under lights and on turntables at the car shows certainly look attractive. But buying the wrong car, no matter how nice it looks, can cost you dollars at trade-in time.

The fact is, some cars hold their resale value better than others. So buying a $20,000 car often makes better sense than spending $12,000 on a less-expensive model. The reason for this is depreciation.

As a rule, cars become less valuable the more miles they accumulate and the older they get. Just driving a new car off the lot will bring its value down about 10 percent.

In other words, a $20,000 car will only be worth about $18,000 after only one week of ownership. And by the end of the first year, you can expect the vehicle to lose another 10 percent (20 percent total).

At the end of the second year, the vehicle's total depreciation averages about 30 percent for a car in tiptop condition. And at the five-year mark, you should expect your vehicle to depreciate between 50 percent and 55 percent.

Yes, it is depressing to think that your new car will be losing value even as it is parked in the driveway, but that's the nature of automobiles.

All new production cars depreciate some. The trick is to minimize the amount of the depreciation so that you put more money in your pocket when you go to trade or sell the vehicle.

One way to limit the amount of depreciation you take is to keep your vehicle in superb condition. A used car's value is primarily determined by its overall physical and mechanical condition. Keep your vehicle clean, waxed and in good repair. Frequent oil changes, regular preventive maintenance and indoor parking also help.

Keeping your car long also helps to limit the amount of depreciation you take. Keeping a car for 10 year or 100,000 miles will cost you less than trading it in every few years. Cars depreciate most when they are under 5 years old. After that the depreciation is less and vehicles 10 years or older often start to appreciate in value.

Today's cars are virtually trouble free for the first 40,000 miles or so, and just about any car that's properly maintained should reach the 100,000-mile mark without a major mechanical failure.

Off-the-wall comedy

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Midland Community Theatre has crated its actors for an off-the-wall comedy via Mabee Theatre II.

Shel Silverstein's "The Crate" which opened Friday at Theatre Midland, examines some strange and bizarre options actors have with a simple prop — a box.

"I think there is an inherent power connected with minimalistic things, whether it is theater, painting or sculpture," says Mike Kase, director for this production and MCT education director.

"I think there's an aesthetic connection between minimalism and power, and I think this particular script demonstrates that fully. The only set piece we have is the crate. Costumes are pretty minimal, we start people out in basic outfits and add to or subtract from that."

For this comedy, Kase says, "Less is more."

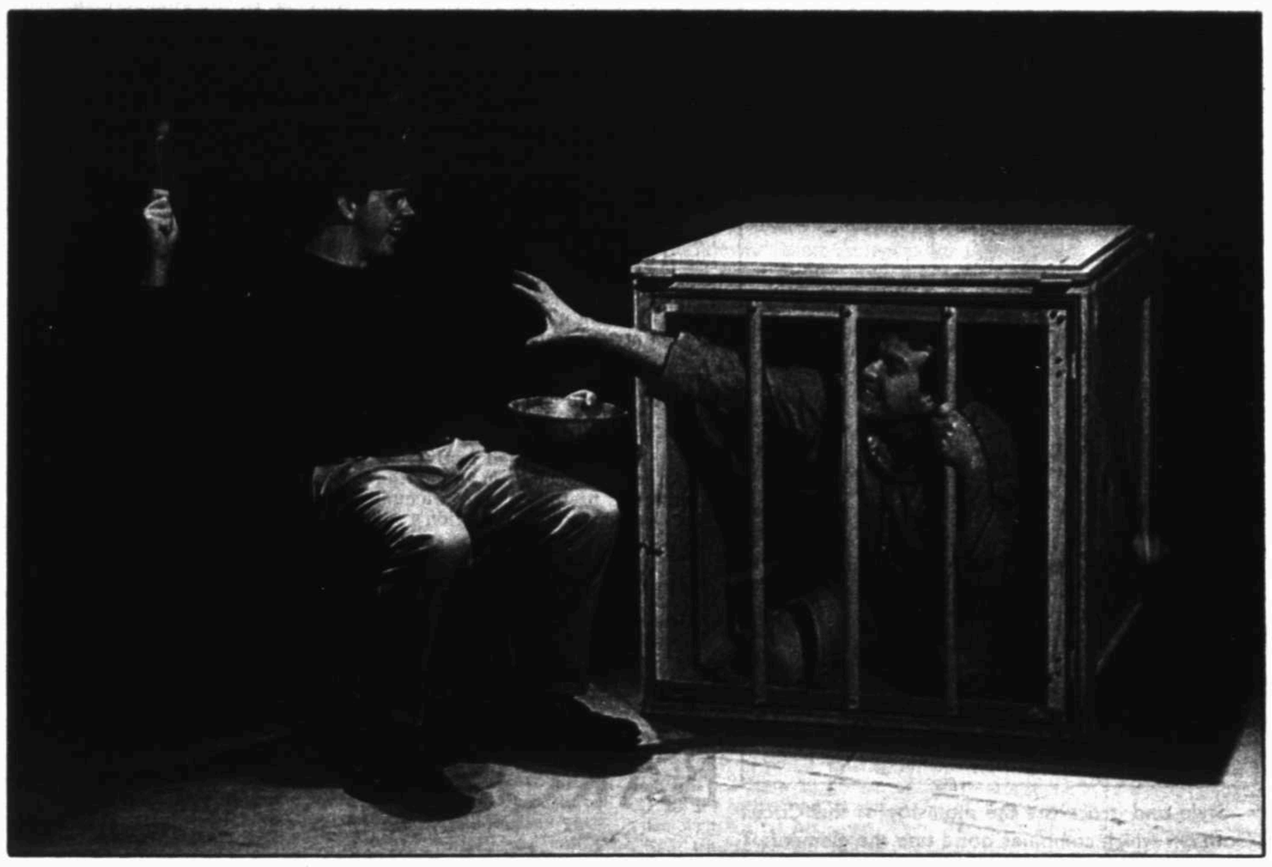

The comedy's humor is in the "The Saturday Night Live" vein, Kase says. "I think the author tries to get us to examine relationships by exaggerating the situations he puts the characters in."

Kase cites the scene "Best Daddy" as an example of Silverstein's use of exaggeration and dark humor.

The scene, which deals with the potential impact parents can have on their children, begins when Daddy brings his daughter out to show her her birthday pony.

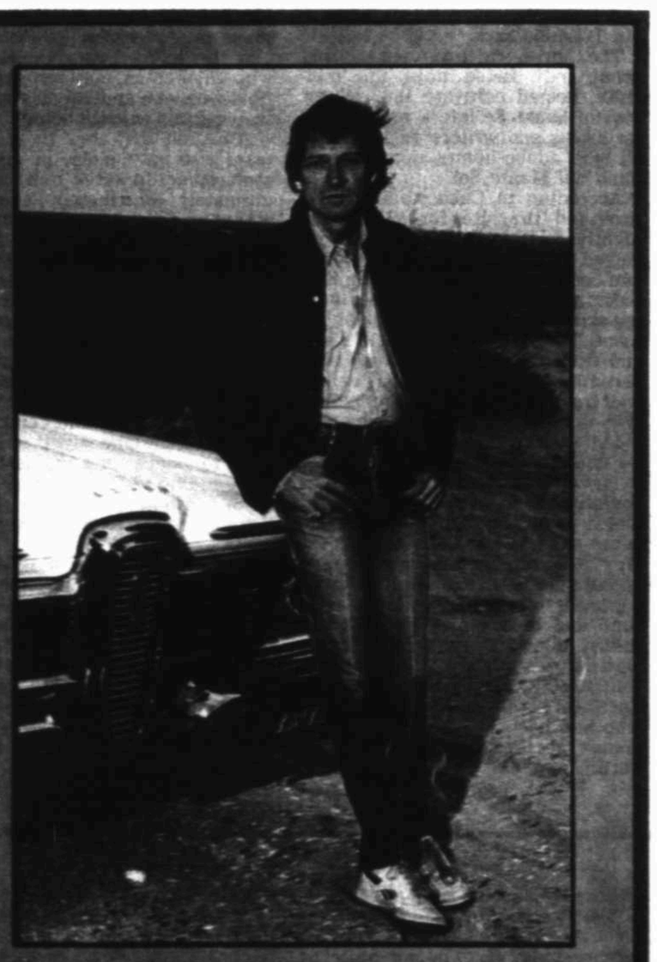

"Through a series of questions and answers, he first tells her the pony is dead, then he tells her he shot her birthday pony, then he says it's her sister under the blanket so she thinks she has her dead sister's body under the blanket. Finally, it comes the full circle, and she gets a reasonable gift for her birthday."

Billy Joe Royal

Second time around

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Billy Joe Royal's life has been a rose garden, complete with thorns. However, since the rain ended for the second time in his professional career, the future looks sunny for this '60s pop idol turned '80s country performer.

"It sound silly, but my whole life is music," Royal says. "When I was a kid, I had a paper route. But I've never had an adult job other than singing."

Royal comes to the Permian Basin Saturday, March 18, to perform, along with George Strait and Baillie and the Boys, at Ector County Coliseum. Showtime is 7:30 p.m. Tickets may be purchased at Endless Horizons and, depending upon availability, at the coliseum the day of the show.

In 1985, Royal was invited to perform at the "Old Faces Show" in Nashville. The show, which featured artists from the '50s and '60s reprising their original hits, was held the night before the "New Faces Show," which featured up and coming talent.

In 1986, Royal was invited to perform again. This time, the promoters of the "New Faces Show" were offering the invitation.

Modernistic art of Jozef Bakos

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Perhaps Jozef Bakos best captured his life and his work when he said, "Painting is a little like flirting — you never know how it's going to turn out."

A founding member of Los Cinco Pintores, Santa Fe's first modernist art group, and a charter member of The New Mexico Painters, Bakos, like so many painters before and after him, was a transplant to New Mexico soil.

Bakos was born in Buffalo in 1891 to Polish immigrants Martin and Antonina Dzikowska Bakos, who had arrived individually from Poland in the 1880s. In the fall of 1912, Bakos began four years of attending night classes at what was then the Art School of the Albright Art Gallery, where he received the Joseph Albright Medal.

"In addition to providing artistic instruction, the Albright Art School played an equally important function as an alternative socialization center for the promising children of local immigrant families," writes art historian Stanley L. Cuba, author of an upcoming biography on Bakos and contributor of the essay, "The Art of Jozef Bakos," which is included in the exhibition's catalog and from which his quotes are taken.

Among these immigrant children were Walter Mruk, Augustine Korda and Peter Jablonski, all Bakos' boyhood friends from the Polish community in East Buffalo who joined him at various times in Colorado and New Mexico during and after World War I.

Bakos couldn't afford to study in Europe, thus he received his most important formative introduction to European art from Buffalo-born artist John E. Thompson.

In August 1918, Bakos and Mruk left Buffalo to join Thompson in Denver, Colo. The next April, Bakos, Mruk, Korda and Thompson participated in the 25th annual exhibition of the Denver Art Association.

Denver museum-goers were shocked by several of the artists' work, including those by Bakos.

"The people of Denver love pictures — real pictures — and the great majority have reached a plane of intelligence where they can distinguish between real pictures and frauds," wrote one viewer.

"At least half of this library exhibit is an insult to the people's intelligence." The viewer then referred to Bakos' allegorical work "Man Arising from Chaos" as perhaps suitable to find a "permanent place on the walls of a mad house."

Today's viewers have a different reaction to Bakos' work.

"The response has been interesting," says Ann Greer, educator at the Museum of the Southwest. "People think that the exhibit is by a number of artists because Bakos was a very versatile artist, and his paintings show the influences of so many European post-impressionistic artists and movements."

Ms. Greer cites as examples of the influences that can be seen in Bakos' work, "Cezanne and cubism" as well as "expressionism, the distortion of color and form to display emotion.

"Bakos' work represents the Americanization of European post-impressionistic painting. Post-impressionism represents such a break in the tradition of pictorial representation that is is not surprising that these paintings shocked Denver audiences in 1919."

The exhibition "Jozef Bakos: An Early Modernist," on display through March 18 at the Museum of the Southwest, also will be displayed at the Roswell Museum and Art Center, Roswell, N.M., April 15 through May 21.

Please see BAKOS, Page 2G

Included in the 40-piece exhibition "Jozef Bakos: An Early Modernist," is this oil titled "The Springtime Rainbow." Painted in 1923, Bakos donated the work in 1974 to the Museum of Fine Arts in New Mexico, in honor of his wife, Teresa. The Bakos exhibit is on display through March 18 at the Museum of the Southwest.

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

Navajos focus of video show

Video Tuesday's at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., continues Tuesday with videos which tell the story of the Navajo and the Hopi peoples.

"Navajo" tells of Navajo family life cast against the events of their history and of the role of women in religious, social, and cultural life.

"Hopi" is about the families living in ancient villages atop Arizona mesas, their work, rituals, and the passing on of the values and skills of their communal life.

Contemporary Navajo artist R.C. Gorman is the subject for the March 14 video. This video is about work — Gorman working with his models in his studio, with his lithographer, in his ceramics studio.

"Return to Glory: Restoration of the Sistine Chapel," scheduled for March 21, recounts the work on the restoration of Michelangelo's frescoes in the Vatican's Sistine Chapel. It is the record of the first phase of the 12 year project of removing the accumulation of centuries of soot, smoke, and dirt and the discovery of the bright beauty underneath.

The videos are shown, free of charge, at noon, 2 and 4 p.m. For more information call the museum, 683-2882.

The museum is open, free of charge, Tuesday through Saturday 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday from 2 to 5 p.m.

Equine artists work on display

EL PASO — The Sunland Park "Sport of Kings Art Show and Auction" will be held in the Turf Club at the track Friday evening, March 17.

Some two dozen well known equine artists will show their talents in various mediums.

Hal Sutherland, who won an Oscar for animation in the movie "Star Wars," will be one of four artists on hand for a "quick-draw." In the "quick-draw" portion of the show, the artists will take a subject and do a complete rendering in about one half hour's time.

Joining Sutherland will be Bill Herring of Clint, and Montana residents Mark Ogle and Shirley Arrants.

The $25 admission cost includes a banquet dinner, a bid number and the show catalog. The show will begin with cocktails at 7 p.m. followed by dinner at 7:35 p.m. The "Quick-draw" portion of the evening's events will take place from 8:30 to 9 p.m. with the auction slated to begin at 9 p.m.

The show is being put together by Bill and Ramona Holt. For more information call the race park, 1-505-589-1131.

Thouvenel quartet to perform

ODESSA — The Thouvenel String Quartet presents its fourth 1988-89 Chamber Music Series concert at 3 p.m. today in the Founder's Building at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

Dr. and Mrs. Rex H. Reynolds and Dr. and Mrs. Joe C. Zuerker are sponsoring the Odessa performance.

The program will include portions of Haydn's profoundly moving "The Seven Last Words of Christ," and Mendelssohn's String Quartet No. 1 in D Major, Op. 44.

Tickets will be available at the door, or may be charged by calling the Symphony Concert Line, 563-5269. Tickets are $5 for general admission and $3 for students.

Members of the Quartet are Eugene Purdue, violin; Janet Chisholm, violin; Sally Chisholm, viola; and Rebecca Seiver, cello.

'Madhatter's Art Party' planned

The Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., is hosting a "Madhatter's Art Party" Saturday for children ages 3 to 12.

"This funday activity will involved the youngsters in designing and making whacky, fanciful, magnificant caps and hats," says a release from the museum.

Terry Gaddy will involved the 3 to 5 year olds in activities from 10:30 to 11:30 a.m. Mrs. Gaddy, a first grade teacher in the Midland public schools, also has taught in museum school at the Museum of the Southwest. She ahs training in education and developmental skills.

Local artist Cynthia Wolfe will lead the 6 to 8 year old group from 1 to 2 p.m. and the 9 to 12 year olds from 2:30 to 4 p.m. Ms. Wolfe, a native Midlander, has taught in Midland public schools and in the museum's school. Her art work has won awards and has been on exhibit in Texas and other states.

Registration for the classes must be made by Wednesday. Fee is $3.50 per child.

For more information call Marilyn Bassinger or Ann Greer, 683-2882.

The Lettermen will give concert

The Opportunity Center auxiliary is presenting The Lettermen in "An Opportunity to Remember" at 7 p.m. Friday, April 14, at Midland Center, Wall Avenue and Main Street.

The evening includes hors d'oeuvres, cocktails, dinner and a silent auction, in addition to a performance by The Lettermen — Tony Butala, Mark Preston and Donovan Scott Tea — whose first hit was the 1961 release "The Way You Look Tonight."

Proceeds from the event will assist MARC in constructing Opportunity Park, a recreational area in Midland designed for the handicapped.

For more information or to receive an invitation call Sheri Brockett, 694-4452, or Ann Bates, 699-5868.

Style and grace are the mainstay of this Circus Gatti act which combines poise and the element of danger with every move. The act includes Kristal climbing a 12-foot ladder while balancing the sword tip to tip. The circus comes to Midland's Chaparral Center for two performances — 4:30 and 8 p.m. — March 13. Tickets go on sale at the center's box office an hour before showtime. For more information call Chaparral Center.

'Angelic' show to be staged

Janet Garrison performs "A New Song" at Christian Church of Midland, 2608 Neely Ave., at 7 p.m. today.

Formerly a Hollywood actress, Mrs. Garrison is now a Christian drama and concert artist. Her husband, George, handles light and sound for her show.

"A New Song," an original drama by Mrs. Garrison, tells the story of an angel who has arrived in Heaven and her experiences searching for the heavenly choir.

No admission is charged. The public is invited to attend.

Quartet to play at Lenten concert

The Lunch Hour Music for Lent concerts will continue Wednesday at First Presbyterian Church, A Street ar Texas Avenue, with the Devonian String Quartet.

The programs, which begin at 12:05 p.m., are free and last one half hour. Lunch is available for a minimal cost one half hour before and after each performance in the church's fellowship hall.

The Devonian String Quartet will present a program of music which will include: Mary Anne Fairlee, violin; Dorothy Knowles, violin; Katherine Hohstadt, viol; and Denae Chance, violocello. All four musicians are members of the Midland-Odessa Symphony Orchestra.

CRATE

The audience members examine their relationships, Kase says, "through this sort of series of dark humorous episodes."

Before Silverstein became "famous" for writing children's books, he wrote a series of articles during the 1960s for Playboy magazine under the pseudonym of Uncle Shelby.

"Uncle Shelby, the character, pokes fun at parents and children relationships," Kase says. "I think there's a direct tie between his work in the mid- to late 60s and this piece originally performed in New York in '85."

Kase feels audiences will respond "very favorably" to the play.

"I was connected with a production in upstate New York, and it was a huge success," he says.

Kase had the opportunity to get an advance reading on this production of "The Crate" when MCT's cast performed a one-act cutting for the regional Festival of American Community Theatres, held at Odessa's Permian Playhouse Feb. 24-25.

Participating in Odessa were four community theaters.

The production was, Kase says, "extremely well-received. While we were in a non-competitive entry form, the adjudicator had some very, very positive comments."

Each regional or quad festival selects a cast to honor from among the productions presented, and Michael Trost was named to this region's All Star Cast.

The production is being co-produced by MCT and Midland College, and the cast reflects that division.

"The casting splits right down the middle," Kase says, adding that the split occurred without any "preplanning."

The approach Kase and his assistant director, Rene Brister Chambers, used was to cast the company first and then decide on what roles each ensemble member would play.

"We cast people that we felt would work well together, that would respond well to the type of working methods we wanted to employ in this particular production," Kase says.

"Nobody knew what roles they were playing. It wasn't until about the first week to week and a half of rehearsals that we finally decided who was playing what part, and even that has switched around from time to time."

In addition to being part of the ensemble, the average actor has at least three major scenes.

Members of the company are Teresa Wood, Christine Driggs, Scott Lunsford, John St. Germain, Trost, Charles Taylor, Charlotte Larson and Steve Myers.

Myers is stage manager. Assistant stage managers are Norris Coleman, Linda Faucette and Robert Ray.

Ross A. Wilmeth, is in charge of lighting; David Layman, is the set designer; Coleen Fowler is in charge of props; Jim Koonce II and Karlis Gruzins are on the light board; and Liz Pauley is paint chairman.

Despite the fact that Silverstein wrote such children's books as "The Giving Tree" and "Where the Sidewalk Ends" and the children's song "I'm Being Eaten by a Boa Constrictor," "The Crate" contains adult subject matter and language.

"If this play were a movie, it would probably be rated PG 13," Kase says. "There's by no stretch of the imagination any nudity.

"I would not recommend it to young children at all. For parents of junior high and high school age, it's up to their own discretion. There are some language considerations that parents might want to take into consideration.

"It's a fun show; it's written for a mature audience and deals with adults themes and adult subject matter."

Quite recently MCT received a grant from the Abell-Hanger Foundation for a program called "Reach Out," designed to let people who are disadvantaged or disabled come to the shows.

"It's a really special program," says Linda Bond, MCT director of development and marketing. "But, it's not designed for the person who, if they didn't buy an extra magazine that month, would be able to come to the show. It's designed for those who can't afford to come or are unable to get transportation to the theater on their own.

"For instance, the elderly, the handicapped and the economically disadvantaged. In order to make it easier for people to get transportation to the theater, the grant makes it possible for the person who brings these people to be admitted free."

A Sunday matinee of each membership show has been set aside as "Reach Out" Sunday.

The program goes into effect today for "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat," MCT's 1989 season opening musical onstage in Davis Theatre I, and for "The Crate."

For more information on today's performances call Theatre Midland's box office, 682-4111, after 1:45 p.m. Showtime is 2:30 p.m.

MCT is handicapped-accessible and curb-ramped. A new Infra-red Listening System can be reserved for the hearing-impaired. The theater has, due to a gift from the Midland Jaycees, 24 cordless headsets which can be rented for 50 cents each.

BAKOS

The exhibit previously has been displayed at Santa Fe's Museum of Fine Arts, Museum of New Mexico; Houston's Museum of Art of the American West; and at the Palm Springs Desert Museum in California.

Regardless of the reaction to his work in the Denver show, Bakos obtained a position for the academic year as an art instructor at the University of Colorado in Denver.

In the early 1920s, paintings by Bakos and Thompson were included in various shows of New Mexico artists at the New Mexico Museum of Fine Arts in Santa Fe.

In the spring of 1920, Bakos briefly visited Mruk, who was living in Santa Fe. That summer Bakos moved there permanently.

Later, he recalled, "Everything about Santa Fe and the surrounding country surpassed my wildest romantic dreams. Its eye-dazzling light of different color tones...every new second was a delight to my artist's soul."

In 1921, Bakos, along with Mruk, Willard Nash, Will Shuster and Fremont Ellis, founded Los Cinco Pintores, a group which constituted the avant-garde in Santa Fe. All were under 30 and had received their training in the United States.

"Seeking subject matter which was 'quintessentially American,' they produced works depicting the New Mexico landscape and the local adobe architecture, the Hispanic population and the exotic Native American Indians with their colorful ceremonial dances," says Sandra D'Emilio, curator of painting at the New Mexico Museum of Fine Arts, Santa Fe.

"Cuba aptly places Bakos in American art when he writes, 'He represents the transplantation onto American soil and subsequent transferal to the Southwest of the Cezannesque and expressionistic currents in art,'" Ms. D'Emilio says.

The Cincos, which as an exhibiting group only lasted until the mid-1920s, helped cultivate the eastern part of Santa Fe into a mini-colony for artists and writers. In 1921 they all built adobe homes along the Camino del Monte Sol.

According to Cuba, their homes provided the site for "Hilarious nightly parties, which generally involved escapades with bootleg liquor and beer during the Prohibition Era. Bakos was known for his beer-making skills and always had a batch on hand. The Cincos' raucous lifestyle and external irreverence were tempered by a genuine concern for the welfare of others. This was an extension of the mutual support they provided for each other as artists."

Cuba cites as examples, their lobbying efforts "against the Bursum Indian Bill in Washington, D.C., which unsuccessfully sought to disperse the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico" and the contribution of "their paintings to auction sales in Santa Fe to benefit the Indian milk fund and to buy feed for starving Indian livestock during the harsh New Mexico winters."

In 1929, Bakos married Teresa Di Locci Di Lanti, an Italian countess who had been trained as a concert pianist at the Royal Academy in Berlin.

"Teresa gave Bakos great self confidence as an artist, despite his proletarian origins and lack of formal art study in Europe," Cuba writes.

"Teresa's background also served to attract prominent artists, writers, musicians and other accomplished individuals to the Bakos home on the Camino in Santa Fe."

"Jo and Teresa Bakos established a congenial married life that lasted some four decades," Cuba writes. "To the many Santa Fe residents who knew them, they just seemed to flow with one another in the things they did and enjoyed being together.

"One felt that they truly were a team and very much in love with each other. In large measure, this ultimately contributed to Jo's success as an artist, because Teresa took great pride in his creativity. And for Jo, Teresa, with her continental background, represented the pinnacle of achievement in a wife."

Although Bakos painted still-lifes and portraits, his preference was landscapes. For him, the aim of art was, "to arrest, for the space of a breath, the hands busy about the work of the earth, and compel men entranced by the sight of distant goals to glance for a moment at the surrounding vision of form and color, of sunshine and shadow; to make them pause of a look, for a sigh, for a smile."

A penciled a note in Bakos' student sketchbook, Cuba writes, became the artist's golden mean: "There is no negation when it comes to life."

"This outlook is evident in his sensitive yet emotionally charged work," writes Cuba. "It bespeaks his intimacy with nature, love of people and boundless enthusiasm for life itself."

ROYAL

Since then, he has gone on to convince country fans he's here to stay with such hits as "Old Bridges Burn Slow," "I'll Pin a Note on Your Pillow" and "Out of Sight and On My Mind."

"All I wanted to do was get back recording," Royal says. "I didn't want to be on top of the mountain. I just wanted to be on the mountain somewhere. And at least I got that chance."

Perhaps best remembered from his pop days for the international hit "Down in the Boondocks," Royal recalls cutting the Joe South tune in the summer of 1965.

"We cut it in a schoolhouse, with a three-track machine in real primitive conditions."

Primitive conditions included a septic tank for an echo chamber.

"How it ever sounded like a record is a miracle. Every once in a while I hear it, and it still stands up. Back then, every take you had to take it from the top again, and I think that gave those records an energy that came through the radio."

Royal also recorded the original version of two additional South compositions which would go on to become major hits for other artists — the hard rock band Deep Purple's "Hush" and country singer Lynn Anderson's "I Never Promised You a Rose Garden."

He considers South "the best writer who ever came down the pike." Certainly, "Down in the Boondocks" hit big for Royal and made his rise to fame appear to be an overnight success story.

Actually, Royal grew up in a musical family and made his debut public appearance in first grade performing for his hometown PTA in Valdosta, Ga. At 11, he began performing in his uncle's radio show in Valdosta.

By the time his family moved to Atlanta, he had worked hard enough to land a regular spot on the Georgia Jubilee radio show, a training ground for some of country music's luminaries, including Ray Stevens, Jerry Reed, Freddy Waller and South.

Royal recorded his first song when he was 16. After several disappointing years, he moved to Cincinnati to pursue acting. Then, South called and asked him to record "Down in the Boondocks."

The same man is responsible for both big breaks in Royal's life — Atlanta-based publisher Bill Lowery.

Lowery took the demo of "Down in the Boondocks" to Columbia Records in 1965. Columbia signed the 19-year-old Royal, the song became a top 10 hit, and Royal found himself touring with "Dick Clark's Cavalcade of Stars."

Royal sees pros and cons to experiencing success at the age of 19 and again when he is in his 40s. For him, "it is hard to say" whether early success was a handicap or an advantage.

"Personally, I'm glad I've been through it before," he says. The difference today is, "I'm not quite as naive. Back then, I thought I'd last forever. You don't think about your future. Hopefully, I've learned something over the years."

When his popularity waned, Royal played the Las Vegas/Lake Tahoe circuit.

"I was still in the business, but nobody knew it" he says.

Then, Royal returned home and, along with producer Nelson Larkin, cut a tune called "Burn Like a Rocket." No major Nashville record label was interested in the song, but Lowery was. He released the song on his own Southern Tracks label.

"Burn Like a Rocket" began climbing the charts, and Atlantic America Records signed Royal. Since then his popularity has been expanding.

"It's hell to be 25 years old and you're a has been," Royal says. "Thank goodness I stuck by what I believed in. I was asked a lot to do oldies-but-goodies type things — and there's nothing wrong with that — but I just felt if I did that, I'd never get a chance again. You're kind of branded.

"I felt I had something to say, and all I needed was the door cracked a little. All I wanted was a chance. It sounds hokey, but I'm just grateful for a second chance."

West Texas not all empty streets, purposelessness

Temple

I was shocked and saddened as I read Gregory Curtis' article "Behind the Lines" in the February issue of Texas Monthly.

It reminded me a division line exists in Texas and only West Texans — transplanted or native — understand West Texas.

The following line, aimed at "Midland or any of the other oil towns in West Texas" — "The empty buildings, the empty streets, and the sense of purposelessness among the few people on the sidewalks are only the most visible signs of the region's deprivation" — is the one which stopped me short.

What really dug deep was purposelessness and few people on the street. I remember watching some national news program — I think Ted Koppel's Nightline — which showed tumble weeds against deserted buildings and deserted downtown streets in Midland. I suspected the footage was taken on a Sunday and not at the noon hour when church lets out.

I figured the national news personnel were pretty lost out here, went for a mood and captured it wherever they found it. I hoped others from here who saw the program would realize how slanted some supposed straight news coverage actually is.

But I always liked to hope a Texas publication had more sense. I'm grateful to Curtis and Texas Monthly for showing me the same holds true regionally. I will certainly read the publication with a more critical eye and ear in the future — when I read it that is.

I can't help but wish that some of these writers who want to dwell in the abyss and rant on and on about deserted, nothing to do and purposelessness would follow me around for a couple of weeks, that is if they could maintain the pace. I doubt they could.

Since our bust, my job has increased. It's a fact. I know. I'm the one walking the path to all the events. Yes, some weeks are slow. However, others past so fast I can't remember by Friday where I was Tuesday night. And folks, I don't drink alcohol or consume any mind altering drugs.

And I'm grateful to Curtis for the following. The article is about the superconducting supercollider and the choice of its location. Curtis says Midlander Thane Akins was appalled to discover that the Garden City site was actually passed over because of its location.

"They were nice about it," Akins says in Curtis' article. "They'd say things like it didn't seem like we had enough population to absorb all these scientists or things like that. But really they were saying, 'Who would want to live in Midland?' without ever being here or knowing about it. We have many people here who could afford to live anywhere in the world, but they choose to live in Midland."

Then, in Curtis' article, Peter McIntyre, the physicist whose magnets had brought attention to the Garden City site in the beginning, defends the geology of the Ellis County site and the location of the superconducting supercollider closer to a large city.

McIntyre says in Curtis' article, "Creative people need to be where they have the best opportunity for stimulation."

McIntyre may have a point. It takes pioneer spirit, creative energy and dedication to a quality of life which values neighbors and human endeavor to live in West Texas. Perhaps the scientists of the 1980s that McIntyre refers to don't have those qualities.

Webster's defines create as "to bring into existence." Creativity, as I understand it, thrives on challenge.

What I actually hear McIntyre saying, and I could be wrong, is that the people associated with this project want to be able to find stimulation, but not necessarily to be a part of the stimulus which sets the creation in motion. In that case, they might not find Midland a suitable community in which to live.

Most people who live here for any length of time become involved in the community. Because we are the size we are, an individual's contribution has the potential of making an impact which can be felt in this community of pioneers.

I can't speak for any other Midland resident, but I can speak for myself. I live here by choice.

For example, as much as I enjoy California and the beach, I wouldn't want to live there permanently. It's too crowded, the pace is too frantic, and the people aren't aware as West Texans are of the value of the individual.

I've found this job challenging and rewarding during the nine years I've worked in this capacity.

And, I wouldn't trade the associations, friends and wonderful memories I've found here for any amount of money in a big marketplace, at least, not on a permanent basis.

I know. I moved here from the Dallas-Fort Worth marketplace.

REVIEWS

'Dangerous Liaisons' ironic, witty

"If the adventures here portrayed have any basis whatsoever in truth, I feel sure that they can can only have occurred in some other place and at some other time."
— Choderlos de Laclos, 1741-1803

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO

Saicedo

"Dangerous Liaisons," the movie based on the epistolary novel published in 1782 by Choderlos de Laclos, translates well to the modern screen. The story surrounds a world of decadent pleasures enacted by pre-Revolutionary aristocrats, and the artfully done film, which received eight Academy Award nominations, has Best Picture written all over it.

The web of corruption and conquests begins when former lovers, the Marquise de Merteuil (Glenn Close) and the Vicomte de Valmont (John Malkovich) agree on a cruel wager involving an innocent girl (Uma Thurman) and a virtuous wife (Michelle Pfeiffer).

The Marquise devises the sexual gamesmanship for reasons of revenge, while the Vicomte sees conquering women as a challenge he must undertake in the pursuit of his own pleasure. Upon meeting the virginal girl, the Marquise sums up her own conniving philosophy with, "Well, we must see what we can devise for your amusement."

When the Vicomte's arrival is announced, the innocent girl's mother (Swoosie Kurtz) is visably upset. The Marquise asks, "Why do you receive him?" The answer: "Everyone receives him." (It soon becomes apparent that he is "received" in the bedroom as well as the parlor.) The scene sets into motion a web of wicked deceptions and seductions spun by the Marquise.

Surprisingly, the script is unhindered by the time period, the 1700s, which lends itself to stilted dialogue and foppishness. Instead, "Liaisons" is wonderfully accessible to the 20th century audience. And Close gives new meaning to the word "wicked." Unlike her villainess in "Fatal Attraction," where Close portrayed a woman out of control, her character in "Liaisons" is one who exhibits an icy will, which she uses to force others to do her bidding.

Close is marvelously directed by Stephen Frears, whose films — "My Beautiful Laundrette," "Prick Up Your Ears," and "Sammy and Rosie Get Laid" — have never played Midland. (The films are, however, available on video.) And the consistently underated Malkovich, is completely believable as a treacherous seducer of a 15-year-old. When he goes after the virtuous wife, he says "I want her to believe in God, in virtue and the sanctity of marriage...and still not be able to stop herself."

Frears describes Malkovich's role best: "He's romantic when you expect him to be sinister, and then in casual moments he'll look just like Dracula."

The script displays wonderful irony and wit, executed well by the leading and supporting actors. "If there's one thing I can't abide, it's deceit," the incredibly deceptive Vicomte says. The knowing glances and smirks which pass between Close and Malkovich when another victim approaches are incredibly done. When young Chevalier (Keanu Reeves, last seen as one of the dudes in "Bill & Ted's Excellent Adventure") walks in, the scheming duo react like vipers lusting after an innocent church mouse. It's a classic movie moment.

The actors are costumed lavishly in satins and brocades of the 18th century by designer James Acheson. And the set, with candles, gilt adornments and furnishings also adds to the languid mood of the idle rich.

An example of the attention to detail was given in the January issue of "Premiere" magazine. In an interview, Frears said that the man who was originally cast as Cupid in the opera scene died in a motorcycle accident just before shooting began. A female crew member was whisked in to learn the part. "Cupid was supposed to be flown in on wires," Frears said, "but the harness didn't fit her; we've restaged it. We've built sets, hired singers and an orchestra, even an opera stage director, and all for a minute and a half of action."

The film is visually arresting and the actors a delight to watch. Close executes the most perfectly timed haughty yawn in history, but she earns her Oscar nomination with her alternate bouts of seething rage and false sincerity. "Liaisons" expounds on modern-day themes — sex, power, money — in a beautifully wrought period setting.

Like the words the Marquise utters to her vengeful partner, "Liaisons" is "an heroic enterprise" by all accounts. Don't miss it.

"Dangerous Liaisons" rates 3½ rigs.

'Her Alibi' step down for Selleck

All right, Tom Selleck is a handsome man, but that doesn't make him a good comedic actor. Selleck, who stars as Phil Blackwood, a mystery novelist with writer's block, is easy on the eyes in "Her Alibi." So is his leading lady, Paulina Porizkova, as Nina, a sleek Romanian beauty suspected of murder.

Phil befriends Nina when he is struck by her cover-girl looks in a courtroom. The writer is there to garner ideas for a new novel, and Nina is being tried for stabbing a man in the heart with a pair of nine-inch scissors. It's love at first sight for Phil, which compels him to offer Nina a trumped-up alibi.

In no time at all, Phil whisks Nina away to his glorious house. She brings "life" to his novels by nearly running him down with his car, smashing him with the garage door, hurling knives at him, and shooting him in the buttocks with an arrow. What more could a man ask for? Not much, if he's a lamebrain like Phil.

Despite the good looks of the leading actors, the comic scenes are singularly inept as written by Charlie Peters and directed by Bruce Beresford ("Tender Mercies"), who should know better.

Ms. Porizkova, who made her debut in "Anna" and is the official model for Estee Lauder cosmetics, is as wooden as Selleck. It's a step down for Selleck after he managed to be so charming in "Three Men and a Baby." Maybe he needs to stick with playing alongside pint-sized actresses. Even worse than the comic scenes are the dreary love scenes. The romantic leads, renowned for their heavenly bodies, fail to ignite any sparks.

"Her Alibi" does have its moments, but they all belong to lines in the script during Walter Mittyesque meanderings by Phil. He constantly thinks of what the daredevil hero of his novels would do in his situations. In one scene Phil lies in his bed, frustrated and depressed. He writes that his hero "does 200 extra one-arm push-ups, but nothing calms him."

But instead of saving the film, the script sometimes seems self-actualizing, especially when it labels Phil's novels "predictable" (like the script) and Phil describes himself as "an emotional nomad" (which is exactly what his acting suggests).

"Her Alibi" has some good ideas, they just are too slow in developing, and the actors don't have enough spunk to enliven any of the scenes. It is a weak comedy and a weaker romance, which goes to show — looks aren't everything.

The supporting cast includes Tess Harper, James Farentino, William Daniels, Hurd Hatfield and Joan Copeland.

"Her Alibi" rates 2 rigs.

In 'Her Alibi' Selleck almost 'sissy'

By CHARLES FLEMING
Hearst News Service

Tom Selleck and Paulina Porizkova in a scene from "Her Alibi."

LOS ANGELES — Tom Selleck, absent from theaters since the runaway success of "Three Men and a Baby," finally has returned with Paulina Porizkova, in "Her Alibi."

His alibi? Ask him.

Ignore the famous, well-marketed twinkle in his eye. Ignore the broad smile that, long before fame struck, used to advertise Close-Up toothpaste. Ignore the signature "Magnum" moustache, and the brushed-back, wavy hair.

Just ask him. His alibi?

"It was an accident," he'll say. "I was playing basketball for USC. I was going to be an athlete. Acting was just an accident."

Some accident. He was a junior at USC, studying business administration — "not very hard," he says — and playing ball. He was a healthy boy, "I've always been big," he says, and good-looking, but shy. A friend put him up to "The Dating Game."

He wasn't Bachelor Number Winner. Twice, he was a loser. He took his consolation prize and his humiliation and went home. And got a call from 20th Century Fox, and became one of the last-ever studio contract players.

And became famous? Not yet. He made commercials. His alibi?

"I had a standard," he says. "I didn't do the really dumb ones. I just did the dumb ones."

He made more than 50, appearing in some that were host to other future stars. A Safeguard soap spot featured him opposite Teri Garr and Penny Marshall. Did fame find him then?

Not yet. He did some soap operas. He did small parts in films like "Midway" and "Coma." He did two "Rockford Files." They led to a contract with Universal and his own series.

Fame? Not yet. He starred in seven unsold TV pilots before something in the hearts and minds of America clicked.

His alibi? "I was 24 or so," he says. "But I looked 32. People wanted me to play the older parts, but I didn't have the life experience for them."

Then that something clicked. It clicked to "Magnum, P.I.," and it kept clicking for eight seasons. Selleck took home an Emmy and a Golden Globe Award for Best Actor.

He took home fame. And, more, he beat the odds. He went into movies. None of those clicked at all, and then he, Ted Danson and Steve Guttenberg made "Three Men and a Baby." He took home critical success and a ticket back to leading-man status. And, tabloids shouted, he took home anybody he wanted to.

Ignore that, too. He's a husband now, married to actress Jillie Mack, 31, and a father to infant Hannah, and, in "Her Alibi," playing a guy so decent that he's practically a...dare one say it?...a sissy.

"I was attracted to the part just because of that," Selleck says. "I always hated bullies and tough guys. On 'Magnum,' even when he did these brave, gallant things, I always wanted him to be afraid first, then be brave. For 'Her Alibi,' I worked hard on getting high up on the neurosis scale."

He had to work less hard on being enamored, on-screen only, of co-star Paulina Porizkova.

"(Director) Bruce (Beresford) wanted her," he recalls. "The studio wanted her. Now, I have no problem finding her drop-dead gorgeous. Didn't then, don't now. But I had questions: I said, 'Do you think there's a lech factor here?' I mean, I'm 44."

And she's younger. She was born in 1965; he was a junior at USC. That makes her about 20 years younger. Selleck says it was not a problem.

"She is young," he says. "But she's mature and very intelligent for her age. And I find her attractive. I would've had a terrible time with the part if I hadn't."

Selleck also insists that "those stories" about the two of them fighting are "not only greatly exaggerated but also untrue."

He calls them "the work of some paid informant," and reasons that "people get disappointed if they don't hear that you're sleeping with each other."

They weren't. "I'm a married man," Selleck says. "I don't ever want to go back."

But he could imagine, under certain conditions, going back to "Magnum." That's a surprise. Most actors who survive a long-running TV series and then make successful movies never go back.

Not Tom Selleck.

"I used to think that it would be difficult to have a long career after 'Magnum,'" he says. "I worried that after eight years on the show nobody would want me to work.

"That didn't happen, and in a lot of ways, 'Magnum' was the best job — and maybe the best character — that I'll ever have. I miss it, and that would make me go back. But I'd hate to do another one and not be fair to that character. I owe audiences more than that."

Meantime, he's producing his first non-Selleck-starring series, "B.L. Stryker." It stars Burt Reynolds, and run Monday nights on ABC.

And he's preparing to do director Peter Yates' "Hard Rain," which he'll only say will be "a real tough drama" that will include a lot of action.

His alibi?

"It's great to be able to be in great danger," he says, with that trademark twinkle, "and still be able to go home at night."

Violinist exchanges concert hall for dining room

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — When the governor of Kentucky invited him to play at a private reception, Kurt Siegert had to decline because his contract wouldn't permit it.

"I get lots of requests like that," says Siegert, whose 1760 violin has taken him to concert halls across Europe and the United States. "I've performed alongside some of the most famous names in the musical world."

He still recalls road trips with the Berlin Symphony, the Boston Pops and Arthur Fiedler, and with Mantovani. "Those were wonderful, exhaustive times and I miss them. But if you're given a chance to settle down, you seize it."

Siegert's opportunity came in May 1963 when he received a telephone call from the management of Executive Inn, then preparing to open a hotel in Louisville. He was offered a six-week contract to entertain patrons in the dining room.

"They must have liked what they heard because, after 25 years, I'm still here."

He plays six nights a week with the six other members of the Singing Strings.

"We have three violinists, including my wife Barbara, and recently added a guitar to obtain a different kind of sound..."

The Siegerts met and married while she was a member of the Norfolk, Va., Symphony. Both have roots in Berlin, where Barbara's mother was a noted opera singer.

Siegert was born there in 1923 and reared in a family of "fiddle players. My father, grandfather and uncle did pretty well on it, but I was the only one who turned professional. It was difficult to study and acquire an education during World War II, but I managed somehow."

He played with the Berlin Symphony until immigrating to this country in 1948.

Siegert says that in working with Fiedler, he found him to be "a marvelous conductor and a taskmaster who could chill you with one glance."

Icelanders finally able to imbibe

REYKJAVIK, Iceland (AP) — Beer flowed freely in Iceland for the first time in 74 years last week as the final vestiges of prohibition came to an end.

Lines formed outside some of the nation's 17 state liquor stores. Waiting patrons applauded when the Snorra Braut liquor store in central Reykjavik opened for business at 9 a.m.

Icelanders voted for prohibition in a 1908 referendum. The law didn't take effect until 1915, when it was assumed the last alcoholic beverage on the island had been drunk.

The ban was repealed in 1933, but through a legal quirk beer with alcoholic content above 2.25 percent remained under prohibition. A powerful temperance lobby kept it that way until May when Parliament voted 13-8 to lift the ban effective March 1.

"This is a truly historic moment in my life and the life of this nation," said Pall Sverrisson, a cab driver. "This is what we have been fighting for, and this is what we have been dreaming of for so long."

Many restaurants and bars reported their tables had been booked weeks in advance by customers planning to celebrate.

The luxury doesn't come cheap.

With the government levying a hefty tax, liquor stores are charging up to $57.60 for a 24-can case of imported beer. A glass of beer in a bar costs $3.90 to $4.80.

Education Minister Svavar Gestsson, who campaigned against lifting the ban, accused the media of hyping the occasion and said efforts to educate people on the dangers of drink "have proved in vain against this terrible flood."

Reykjavik Police Chief Boedvar Bragason said his force was on heightened alert for drunken drivers.

Victoria Principal beat out Al Capone, Maxwell Smart

NEW YORK (AP) — Even Al Capone and Maxwell Smart were no match for Victoria Principal in a TV movie called "Naked Lie," whose strong performance helped CBS remain out of last place for the fourth time in five weeks.

"The 31st Annual Grammy Awards" also helped CBS take second place last week. NBC has won every week except for one tie with CBS. Never mind that the Grammys had its lowest rating ever, 16.0, and ranked 26th. It still did better than CBS usually does on Wednesday nights.

Another strong performer for CBS was a special two-hour "Dallas" that wound up with the highest-rated episode of the durable night-time soap so far this season. It had a 17.9 and was ranked 17th.

Principal's thriller "Naked Lie" vanquished NBC's "The Revenge of Al Capone" and ABC's reunion movie "Get Smart, Again!" to win Sunday night and finish ninth in the weekly A.C. Nielsen Co. ratings.

Otherwise, the usual suspects rounded up the top 10: "The Cosby Show," NBC; "A Different World," NBC; "Roseanne," ABC; "60 Minutes," CBS; "Cheers," NBC; "Murder, She Wrote," CBS; "Golden Girls," NBC; "Who's the Boss?" ABC. NBC's "Dear John" finished 10th, behind "Naked Lie."

NBC, which at 36 straight weeks is creeping up on CBS' record 40-week victory streak from 1962-63, won the week that ended Sunday with an average, prime-time rating of 16.2. CBS had a 14.6. ABC had 11.7.

Each rating point represents 904,000 households with televisions. The share is a percentage of sets in use.

Taking the three network news anchors to Japan for Emperor Hirohito's funeral didn't seem to produce extra ratings. The "CBS Evening News" had a rating of 11.7 and a 20 share. "ABC World News Tonight" had an 11.5 and 20 share. "NBC Nightly News" had an 11.0 and 20 share.

ABC's 'Dynasty' may be in its last season

By ANN HODGES
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — If "Dynasty" dies at the end of this season, it won't go out with a whimper. It may go out with an open house for viewers at Southfork, the Dynasty mansion.

ABC's "Dynasty" is one show that's expected to feel the executioner's ax this spring. There's been no announcement yet, but after nine years of watching the filthy rich Carringtons reach new heights of sex, sin and dirty dealing, even the show's producers indicate that the time has come.

Esther Shapiro, who created "Dynasty," said as much when she was in Houston for the National Association of Television Program Executives. Aaron Spelling, whose production company has mined gold from "Dynasty," hinted the same in Hollywood.

"It's all we're talking about," he said. "If it does end, we have to decide how to end it. And if this is the last season, I promise we will not end with a cliffhanger.

"We're thinking now we might like to do some thing like break the fourth wall, maybe invite the viewers into the 'Dynasty' house or something. I can't tell you exactly how, because we just don't know how, or even if it can be done. But I think we owe people something, after 218 episodes."

"It's a big decision," Spelling said. "We've never been faced with anything like it before."

Even if "Dynasty" does die, Spelling has plenty of other projects to ease the pain.

He has two other shows running now – "Heartbeat" and "Nightingales," and he has five more series still to be delivered to ABC.

Globe's Shakespeare Festival will open with comedy 'As You Like It'

ODESSA — The Globe's 1989 Shakespeare Festival begins with the presentation of Shakespeare's comedy "As You Like It" Thursday and Friday at the Globe Theatre.

A woodland paradise is the setting for Shakespeare's enchanting comedy "As You Like It," being presented by the National Skakespeare Company's 12-member acting ensemble. The Forest of Arden is populated with musicians, clowns, shepherds, a melancholy philosopher and an exiled Duke. Into these woods add two charming heroines and all the elements fro a delightful brew of Shakespearean wit and romance come together.

"As You Like It" as directed by Anthony Naylor, an alumni of the Royal Shakespeare Company, is set in the late 19th century. Sets by Richard A. Kendrick and costumes by Renee Sykes mirror a Renoir painting.

Also coming up is the National Shakespeare Company's presentation of "Twelth Night" at 8 p.m. Saturday.

"Twelth Night" is packed with all the ingredients of the perfect Shakespearean situation comedy — a woman disguised as a man, a shipwrecked twin brother, a melancholy countess, a live-sick duke and a host of bawdy and foppish characters who manipulate the story to greater confusion and hilarity.

Tickets for both productions may be purchased at the Globe Box Office or by calling 1-332-1586.

In addition, a unique photographic exhibition which celebrates the life and world of William Shakespeare will be on display Monday through March 18 in the Anne Hathaway Cottage gallery room at the Globe Theatre as part of the 1989 Odessa Shakespeare Festival and Renaissance Fair.

Developed by the Texas Humanities Resource Center under a grant from the National Endowment for Humanities, "Shakespeare: The Globe and the World" is based on the great Folger Library multi-media exhibition. Special help from the Folger Shakespeare Library helped create the exhibit at the Globe.

The 10 panels of photographs illustrate major aspects of the Renaissance world and Shakespeare's world of theater.

Of special interest is a panel of of photographs and lithographs showing how the balcony scene in Romeo and Juliet has been staged in productions dating from 1750 to 1970. Other panels highlight the religious turmoil of the age, including the publication of the King James Version of the Bible; the Elizabethan notion of America; and fashions and costumes of the day.

"This traveling exhibition gives us a Shakespeare who was an actual person living in a very real world," says Josephine Sewell, festival chairman.

Complications arise when the countess falls in love with what she thinks is a young messenger boy — actually a girl in disguise — in the National Shakespeare Company's production of "Twelth Night," onstage Saturday at Odessa's Globe Theatre.

Tours are by reservation except during the two day Renaissance Fair March 11 and 12 when the Anne Hathaway Cottage will be open daily for tours and the exhibit.

Wine, cheese reception to preceed UTPB exhibition

ODESSA — A wine and cheese reception will open Nicholas Wood's "Sculpture and Drawings" exhibition from 7 to 9 p.m. Tuesday in the Third Floor Art Gallery of The University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

Wood has exhibited throughout Texas and has been published in various magazines and newspapers including ARTnews, ARTWEEK, Ceramics Monthly, Dallas Morning News, Fort Worth Star Telegram, Texas Art Revue, Texas Designer/Craftsman and Texas Homes.

The exhibition will be on display through April 14.

Sponsored by the university's Student Programs, the reception is free and open to the public. For more information call 1-367-2136.

Women's art work exhibited at MCT shows

Works by Leslie D'Allesandro Hill, Mavis Murphy and Cynthia Wolfe are on display at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave., through March 18 and the run of Midland Community Theatre's production of "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat."

Ms. Hill has been creating artwork professionally since 1976 and attended Tyler School of Art, Temple University.

Ms. Murphy was born in Yorkshire in the north of England and studied at Bradford College of Art. A resident of Midland since 1972, she studied painting and photography at Midland College.

Ms. Wolfe is a native Midlander with a bachelor of fine arts from Texas Tech University.

Onstage in Davis Theatre I at Theatre Midland is MCT's major musical of the 1989 season — "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat."

In Mabee Theatre II the Shel Silverstein comedy "The Crate" is being staged.

For reservations to either call the box office at 682-4111. Season memberships are still available.

Headsets for the Infrared Listening System donated by the Midland Jaycees may be reserved by calling the box office. There will be a fifty cents charge to cover maintenance costs.

Pam Price's art to be displayed in Austin

Pam Price, art professor at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin, received an invitation to display two of her works in the "Texas Print-making '89" exhibition, on display through March 31 at the Mexic-Arte Art Museum, Austin.

The show, part of the Southern Graphics Council meeting at the University of Texas at Austin, includes works by 33 invited artists from across the Southwest.

Ms. Price is exhibiting two new computer prints that contain images of dogs, angels and creatures created in layers of color.

Author says he's through writing about murder cases

By KAY BARTLETT

NEW YORK (AP) — Joe McGinniss says his new book, "Blind Faith," is the last one he will write about a murder case. He's running out of empathy.

"I think my capacity for empathy is over. There is nothing worse than a writer not feeling as sorry as he should for the people who are hurting," says McGinniss, author of the best-selling "Fatal Vision," about Jeffrey MacDonald, a Green Beret officer convicted of killing his pregnant wife and two small children.

"Blind Faith" examines the case of a Toms River, N.J., insurance salesman, Robert O. Marshall, deeply in debt from gambling losses and enamored of the town Jezebel.

So Marshall decides to hire a hit man to kill his wife, "the beautiful Maria" as he always called her, collect the $1.5 million in life insurance he had bought for her, then convince his three teen-age sons that they, too, could learn to love their new "mother."

The book, already bought as a miniseries, is a compelling yarn that involves hints of corruption in New Jersey, two imported hit men from Louisiana, forged insurance policies and a town that within 24 hours after the murder turns its back on a pillar of the community, a leader in the country club set, chairman of United Way.

"It was just the opposite of the MacDonald case," McGinniss says. "All of MacDonald's friends rallied around, convinced he was innocent."

The MacDonald case proved a legal nightmare for McGinniss. MacDonald sued and the trial ended in a hung jury. However, the publisher's insurance company agreed to pay MacDonald $325,000 in an out-of-court settlement, rather than go through the legal expense of a new trial. But that settlement was also contested by the parents of the victim, and following complicated litigation, MacDonald collected only $50,000 for himself, plus $92,000 in legal fees. A judge ordered that some of the money should go to the mother of his murdered wife as well as MacDonald's mother.

McGinniss maintains that he, too, believed the Green Beret innocent until he started to examine the evidence. He then concluded, and let his book reflect, that MacDonald indeed killed his family.

Except for the principals, McGinniss uses pseudonyms in "Blind Faith" for the other characters, although they are part of the public record.

Considered an ideal couple with three blond sons, the Marshalls were teasingly called Ken and Barbie by their friends.

McGinniss says he sort of stumbled onto the book when a Toms River woman wrote him a long letter shortly after the murder.

"She had about 90 percent of it right two months after the murder," he says.

McGinniss says he doesn't know why he even read the letter. After "Fatal Vision" went on the air in 1984 as a two-part miniseries, he was deluged with letters from people asking him to write a book about some murder or the other.

"I got hundreds of letters from people whose second cousin was murdered or from someone who was beaten up in a barroom brawl and they wanted me to write a book about it," he says.

"What first interested me about the Marshall case was what kind of a place was this where a guy who had lived there 20 years, this pillar of the community, was automatically presumed guilty by his friends within 24 hours of the murder.

"I was also interested in doing something about the social mores of a town in the '80s, particularly a town that didn't have any kind of distinctive identity. It seemed to be a town transformed by materialism.

Joe McGinnis, right, and Roby Marshall

"It was also a book about these three boys and how they coped when they learned their mother, truly beloved by them, was dead and then they heard their father is a suspect and then they see him convicted."

McGinniss' first book, "The Selling of the President," became a best seller 20 years ago when he was 26. The book chronicled how Richard Nixon defeated Hubert H. Humphrey.

"The difference between illusion and reality has always been a theme of mine," McGinniss says. "Here the illusion was Good Housekeeping come to life. Maria bought that whole ideal, that she was an ornament attached to the husband, that her job was to give them a happy home. For that, she paid with her life."

For the children — 13, 16 and 17 at the time of the murder — it was a fairy-tale life of Mustangs and Jeeps, swim meets and country club lunches with Mom and Dad.

"This is not a story about their father," McGinniss says. "I'm not interested in exploring the recesses of his mind like I was with MacDonald. I'm interested in the story of how these kids grappled with the worst sort of shock. There was a monster under their bed and it was their father. And they had to look him in the eye and not blink. It stripped them of every illusion they ever had."

The youngest boy, John, still does not believe his father is guilty.

"When I talked to them John was still desperately clinging like a little boy lost at sea to the only thing he had left," McGinniss says.

The other two, Chris and Roby, believe their father had their mother killed, a mother who put notes in their lunches, always kissed them goodbye, and fixed them pancakes for breakfast. She was Super Mom. They will not answer their father's letters nor speak to him.

"They feel their father is already dead," says McGinniss.

The father is on death row in Trenton, N.J., awaiting the outcome of appeals. He still proclaims his innocence, clinging to a story that he pulled into a secluded rest stop on the Jersey State Parkway to check on a leaking tire and someone hit him over the head and then shot Maria, leaving two bullet holes so close you could cover them with a 50-cent coin. Marshall claims he was robbed of his Atlantic City winnings and he had to stagger to get help.

The tire, which was slashed after it was parked, showed no evidence of a slow leak and there were brightly lit places within a few miles he could have stopped.

Then there was the mistress he planned to marry. He had bought yet another life insurance policy, this one for $100,000, that very day. Maria's signature had been forged on various documents to raise cash.

Prosecutors presented evidence linking him to the Louisiana hired guns. One of them was granted immunity to testify. The other, accused of being the actual shooter, was acquitted by the jury that found Marshall guilty. Another man, who acted as go-between during the negotiations, received a life sentence for conspiracy to commit murder.

"What is unique is the situation these three kids find themselves in. Their love has kept them very close even though they all viewed the case differently at first."

Chris was the first to feel his father was guilty. Roby was next, spurred on by a jail house call in which his father asked him to lie the next day on the witness stand. Roby would not do it.

The children received some of the insurance money, as the heirs, and will receive more. Roby is moving to California to help with the miniseries based on the book.

"The town of Toms River was sort of a metaphor for the blind faith we all have in the American dream," McGinnis says. "But how thin is that veneer? How much of what passes for social intercourse in America is sheer hypocrisy? Toms River is a good example of this superficialty of cocktail and dinner parties and country clubs where everybody finds it necessary to stay on top. I didn't feel like I was repeating myself."

McGinniss says his next book will be about Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, the man. He has been negotiating with Kennedy, but does not yet know whether Kennedy will cooperate with him.

"I want to do this because I have no sense of what it must be like to have had this extraordinary life, of being the little brother and having everything handed to you and then become the family spokesman," McGinniss says. "This will not be a book about Chappaquiddick. It will be about the man and his life."

After "The Selling of the President," McGinniss tried his hand at a novel, "The Dream Team," not one of his great successes, but he says he will do another novel some day.

He wrote "Heroes" in 1975 and lived in Alaska for one year to write "Going to Extremes," published in 1980. He has also taught fiction and non-fiction writing at Bennington College.

'Cat's Eye' deals with growing up

"Cat's Eye" by Margaret Atwood, author of "The Handmaid's Tale"; Doubleday; 446 pages; $18.95.

Copley News Service

Elaine had a "mean mouth" when she was in high school. When another girl sneered that Elaine was a "brain," Elaine snapped back: "Better a brain than a pin-headed moron like you."

A Review

This is Elaine's assessment of current conditions: "Girls at school learn to look out for my mean mouth and avoid it. I walk the halls surrounded by an aura of potential verbal danger, and am treated with caution, which suits me fine. Strangely enough, my mean behavior doesn't result in fewer friends, but, on the surface, more. The girls are afraid of me but they know where it's safest: beside me, half a step behind."

Elaine grew up and became a painter. Now 50 years old, she returns to her native city for an exhibition — and a penetrating look back at the troubles of childhood with its secrecies, cruelties, fears and obsessions.

A stark, and very real, portrait of growing up.

'YOUNG READER' REVIEW

"Fiddler: From the Land of Barely Three" and "Shadow Chaser: From the Land of Barely Three" are two more delightful stories from Stephen Cosgrove, author of the Serendipity Books from Multnomah Press.

Using a "stone soup" approach, Fiddler entices three selfish bears from their country lairs to share honey, blueberries and biscuits. Lest his young readers miss the always-present moral point of the story, Cosgroves' fiddling bear sings "gift sharing is the way to live...you'll find sharing love is better than money."

In "Shadow Chaser," Gabriel Groundhog won't leave his bedroom because he is "afraid of imaginary creatures that he thought hid in the winter's shadows. He felt the best place to hide from his fears was behind a dream..."

But, when a bunny and his friends make Gabriel laugh by making funny hand shadow picturers on the wall, their caring helps Gabriel conquer his fears.

Both books are amply filled with alliteration and adjectives: "a fireplace filled with golden glowing embers" and "Fiddler plopped himself down beside the table of plain pine planks," making word pictures as effective as the watercolor and ink illustrations by Wendy Edelson.

These will be warm stories for your youngsters' bedtime or for vacation Bible school this summer.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

MONDAY, MARCH 6, 1989

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Your methodical ways are a big plus in business. People instinctively like you, and that bodes well for any political ambitions you might have in the fall. Although you like peace and quiet, they will be in short supply until you get your relationships and finances under better control.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Good financial news gets your week off to a happy start. Trot out your most imaginative ideas. Authority figure makes the right decision. Trust a higher power to help you lick a problem.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your workload increases. Focus your energies on projects that will eventually put more cash in your pocket. You are eager to pursue the object of your affections. Put your best foot forward.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your efforts are beginning to attract the attention of those who count. Lower your expectations, or you could be disappointed. Your feelings could be at odds with your ambition. Set priorities.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A tremendous period of achievement is coming. Put your worries in mothballs for a while and work hard. Romance has a new glow. You think about making major changes in your lifestyle.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Do favors for others — and get those important IOUs for the future. A fact-finding tour gives you the time of your life. Hold your ground on a financial matter. A compromise is unthinkable.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You receive some excellent business or financial advice. Listen carefully. Surprises greet you when you return home. Consult partner before accepting or rejecting an invitation.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): If uncertain about your career, now is the time to sort things out. The conservative corporate look is best for you. A relationship receives a blessing from on high. Invest your earnings wisely.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You will be in an expansive mood this evening. A blind date could open the door to fun and fortune. Concentrate on business earlier in the day. Dot all the I's and cross those T's!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A change of residence or employment could be right around the corner. Find out more about the people making an offer before you commit yourself. Travel proves invigorating.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Although close business advisers may give you poor advice, you can trust outside counsel. Travel is best postponed, especially a visit to another country. The financial picture brightens.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Refuse to go into a tailspin just because you have had a disappointment. It could turn out to be a blessing in disguise! A sibling is in a competitive mood today. Be tolerant.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Rethink an idea that has real possibilities if you can find a practical application. Do not capitulate to opposition until you have exhausted all your options. Seek more authority at place of employment.

Beware of hands that seem to be laydown. Think of the goalie in an ice hockey game who turns away seemingly unstoppable shots, only to have the puck trickle slowly between his pads and have the game slip away.

We like North's decision to raise to three spades. When partner opens with a demand bid, three trumps to an honor and 1 1/2 quick tricks are more than ample for a raise. That led to an excellent small slam reached with a minimum of fuss.

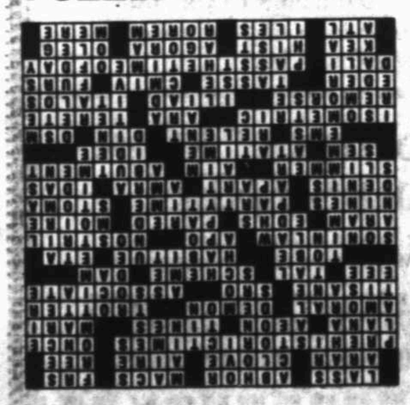

Declarer won the diamond in hand and, bearing in mind the desirability of leading up to honors by first playing toward the short trump hand, led a spade to the jack. When East showed out, declarer had no way to avoid losing two trump tricks to West—down one.

Declarer was guilty of fast fingers—he should have taken time to study the hand before playing to the second trick. If trumps are 3-1, the hand is a virtual claimer; only wild distribution could defeat the slam. Realistically, declarer should have concentrated on a 4-0 break as the most likely threat to his contract.

The spade spots are such that South can handle even that distribution. To the second trick he should lead the king of trumps from hand. If West shows out, declarer can take the marked finesse against East's ten. (If East holds up, declarer continues with a trump to the jack, and can enter dummy with the ace of clubs to take the trump finesse.) If West turns up with all the trumps, declarer continues by finessing the eight, and again the defenders are held to one trump trick.

PUZZLE ANSWER

Strauss' 'Salome' to be broadcast

Richard Strauss' "Salome" will be broadcast live from the stage of the Metropolitan Opera house Saturday at 1:30 p.m. Eastern Time, over the Texaco-Metropolitan Opera Radio Network. It will be heard locally at 12:30 p.m. over radio station KWMJ, Fm 103.

The cast for this season's new production of "Salome" will include soprano Eva Marton in the title role, Helga Dernesch as Herodias, Graham Clark as Herod, Mark Baker as Narraboth and Bernd Weikl will sing the role of the prophet Jochanaan.

Conductor will be Marek Janowski, and the announcer for the broadcast is Peter Allen.

In the first intermission, Metropolitan Opera concertmaster Raymond Gniewek and Met conductor Richard Woitach will discuss and illustrate violin solos in opera.

Panelists for "Texaco's Opera Quiz," which will precede the opera, are Thor Eckert Jr, author and lecturer; Alfred Hubay, box office consultant to the Metropolitan Opera; and Christopher Prudy, who heads his own artists' management agency.

Quizmaster is Edward Downes.

Uelsmann photos displayed at gallery

Gallery 1114 is featuring an exhibition of photographs by Jerry Uelsmann through April 6.

"Uelsmann combines incongrous forms that muraculously appear to belong together," says a release from the gallery.

This creates unreal situations and compelling images: the ceiling of a quiet library floats with clouds, a woman's body becomes part of a rock cliff.

The artist has stated, "Nature is a very subjective concept for me, and I am attracted to images that challenge our sense of reality."

Uelsmann is the author of several books on photography and the subject of several books by other authors. His photographs are in collections worldwide, and he has had one-man shows at the Museum of Modern Art, New York, the Art Institute of Chicago and the American Cultural Center in Paris.

He received his bachelor of fine arts degree from Rochester Institute of technology and his masters from Indiana University. He is a graduate research professor at the University of Florida.

Autographed copies of Uelsmann's book "Process and Perception" will be on sale during the showing.

Gallery 1114 is a contemporary artists' cooperative located at 1114 N. Big Spring and is open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Wednesday through Saturday and 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. on Sunday.

Casa staging arts series for children

From Staff Reports

Casa de Amigos is presenting its second annual Children's Performing Arts Series beginning Saturday with the presentation of an updated version of the classic tale "Jack and the Beanstalk."

" 'Jack and the Beanstalk' has been told in many different ways, and this show offers yet another version," says a spokesman for Penguin Productions, the touring theater company presenting this production.

In Penguin Productions' version, Jack meets a con artist who tricks him into trading his mother's pet hen for a handful of beans. A fairy named twinkle helps Jack retrieve the Goose that lays the golden eggs and the Magic Harp from the bumbling giant.

Then, Mimewock brings its circus parody, "Cirkus Berzerkus," to Midland April 8.

Nobody's Phool, the producer of "Circus Berzerkus," is in its 12 season and has produced over 6,000 performances in 40 states with an array of shows ranging from opening acts for stars to mainstage performances with casts of 20 performers.

Highlights of "Circus Berzerkus" include fire-eaters, a balancing act, a human pincushion, an unusual tap dance, juggling and magic.

The series closes with "Mozart on Fifth" May 13.

"Mozart on Fifth" began playing Mozart on 5th Avenue in New York City. Continuing the serenade the streets of America, "Mozart on Fifth" was discovered during Mardi Gras by Allan Jaffe, founder of Preservation Hall.

The trio — founder Richard Goldfarb, Cash Kelley and Daniel Blocker - sings and performs ragtime, swing, Dixieland, traditional hymns, popular songs, ethnic and classical music on such instruments as clarinet, bassoon, saxophone, flute and banjo.

Lynn Whitt, community relations director at Casa, feels the series is serving a defined purpose.

"The city needs a series of performing arts programs selected and designed especially for children," she says.

The target audience for the series includes, Ms. Whitt says, "Preschool children to adults and their families in the Permian Basin."

All performances, which are about an hour in length, will be held at 1:30 and 4:30 p.m. at the Yucca Theatre, 208 N. Colorado Ave.

Honorary chairmen for the series are Andrea and Richard Catania.

The performances are sponsored by Casa and The Midland Reporter-Telegram and serve as a benefit for Casa. Some Midlanders are purchasing tickets for children who would be unable to attend otherwise.

Tickets for the series are priced at $25 and may be purchased through Casa, 1101 E. Garden Lane. Single performance tickets, priced at $10, will be sold at the door.

Bible class will do Easter show

JUNCTION — The 39th annual presentation of the "Easter Story in Pantomime" will be held Saturday, March 25, a mile south of Junction on the slope of Lover's Leap Mountain.

This event, sponsored by the nonsectarian Men's Bible Class, is 8 p.m. the night before Easter. Dressed in costumes, volunteers of Kimble County — men, women and children — re-enact Jesus Christ's last days on Earth in a picturesque natural amphitheatre.

Admission is free. Good will donations will be accepted. Viewers may watch the program from their cars, RV's or chairs they bring.

For more information call the chamber of commerce, 1-446-3190.

'Terra Nova' auditions set

ODESSA — Auditions for Odessa College's theater department's final production of the year, "Terra Nova," are set for 7 p.m. March 12 and 13 at the Globe Theatre.

The OC production of the contemporary drama by Ted Tally will be performed April 27-30 at the Globe Theatre. Dr. Paula Thompson, OC theater department chairman, is directing the production.

The play has roles for six males and one woman. The play tells the story of five Englishmen who raced five Norwegians to the bottom of the earth in the winter of 1911-1912. Only the five Norwegians returned.

For more information on the auditions, call OC's theater department, 1-335-6616 or 1-335-6618.
