Replacing

Sometimes a patient needs only one component for a blood transfusion and it may take up to nine donors to gather enough. But with a new machine, one donor can give blood to produce enough of the component and have the unused blood returned to his body.

Regenerating

Growing up in Ketchum, Idaho — where being a Hemingway is no big deal — has a lot to do with Mariel Hemingway's new "grown-up" (or is is "growing up"?) attitude. The earthy, athletic, 20-year-old actress is featured in this week's West Texas Sunday magazine.

Wholesale prices make small gain

WASHINGTON (AP) — Wholesale prices reversed two months of declines and rose at a tiny annual rate of 0.9 percent in April, the government said today.

Rising prices for food largely offset record declines in energy costs in the Labor Department's Producer Price Index for finished goods — the formal name for the wholesale price index.

With the overall gain in April, inflation at the wholesale level was running at an annual rate of 0.4 percent for the first four months of 1982. For all of 1981, the index rose 7 percent.

The minuscule rise in the index so far this year lends further support to economists' predictions that wholesale inflation for all of 1982 will be well under last year's pace.

Many have lowered their predictions for this year to as little as 4.5 percent, down from the 6 percent to 7 percent forecast earlier.

The lingering recession and the worldwide oil glut have been held largely responsible for the lowered inflation rate. As the economy pulls out of the recession, however, economists are expecting prices to rise moderately.

At the White House, presidential spokesman Larry Speakes said today's report indicates a "continued moderation of inflation pressures, a development that continues to bring relief to every American worker and saver."

In other economic news today, the Federal Reserve Board said production by the nation's factories and mines fell 0.6 percent in April, continuing a slide that has seen output decline in eight of the last nine months.

The board reported markedly increased production of consumer durable goods — including cars and home goods — but said there were large reductions in the output of business equipment, construction supplies and durable goods materials.

The 0.6 percent overall drop in production was not quite as steep as March's 0.8 percent decline and was not nearly as bad as declines of well over 1 percent per month during the winter.

In its new wholesale price report, the Labor Department said the index rose a seasonally adjusted 0.1 percent in April. That was up from February and March, when the index had fallen 0.1 percent each month. The last time the measure had dropped two months in a row was in January and February, 1976.

Inflation at the wholesale level had risen 0.4 percent in January.

If prices rose for 12 straight months at April's rate, the yearly rise would be 0.9 percent after seasonal adjustment. The annual rate reported by the Labor Department is based on a more precise calculation of monthly changes than the figure the department makes public.

The new report said that over the last year, from April 1981 to April 1982, prices at the wholesale level rose 3.1 percent — the lowest gain for a 12-month period since the 2.9 percent in the year ending in October 1976.

Specifically, the department said in its report of April wholesale price activity:

—Energy costs declined 5.2 percent, the fourth straight monthly drop. The decline was the biggest monthly decrease since the government began calculating energy prices in 1974 and broke the 2.9 percent record fall of January 1976.

For April, gasoline prices fell 7.2 percent and home heating oil costs were off 8.8 percent. Both declines were even sharper than those posted in the preceeding month.

Natural gas prices were up 2.2 percent, about the same as in February and March.

—Food prices shot up 1.6 percent after falling 0.2 percent in March and rising 0.5 percent in February. April's gain was the biggest since the 2.6 percent of August 1980. Pork prices skyrocketed 13.5 percent after edging downward in March.

Prices were also up for fresh fruits, eggs, beef and veal. Fresh and dried vegetable prices were down, as were the costs of coffee and processed fruits and vegetables. Prices for dairy products were down but the costs of processed poultry and fish rose.

—Prices were down 1.3 percent for passenger cars but up 0.1 percent for light trucks. Prices for both categories of vehicles had risen in March after big February declines pegged to automakers' price rebate programs.

—Capital equipment costs rose 0.4 percent, about the same as in March. Those costs are for machinery and transportation equipment used by business.

Goodbye, Braniff

Guarding the empty space left behind at Midland Regional Airport with the closing of Braniff International is Sgt. Frances Allen, a Pinkerton agent. Meanwhile, farther up the line passengers flock to other airlines' ticket counters. Braniff announced late Wednesday afternoon it was closing up shop worldwide and filing for bankruptcy. By Thursday, only an empty counter remained at Midland's airport.

Braniff lands with air of finality

By The Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

DALLAS — The end of Braniff International airline came in a desperate midnight race by the company's top executives to the Fort Worth home of a federal bankruptcy judge.

Braniff's cash register was empty. More than half the seats on its flights were empty. Paychecks were about to bounce. The airline owed bills it could not pay for food, maintenance and landing rights.

The airline's chief assets — its fleet of brightly colored planes — were scattered around Braniff's far flung routes and the only way to prevent creditors from seizing the planes and liquidating the company was to seek the court's protection in a federal bankruptcy proceeding, Chairman Howard Putnam said Thursday.

Philip Guthrie, Braniff's chief financial officer, told him on Tuesday that the airline could not make it through this week, Putnam said. Putnam ordered the fleet grounded Wednesday night and then outran the creditors to the shelter of bankruptcy court.

At 12:01 a.m. Thursday Judge John Flowers signed Braniff's request putting the airline under Chapter XI of the Bankruptcy Act. Its planes are now protected from attachment by Braniff's creditors and may fly again at some time in the future if Braniff can produce an acceptable plan for future operations.

Related stories, Page 11C

For now, however, there is an air of finality about Braniff's demise. The "flying colors fleet" of blue, brown and green planes, parked wingtip to wingtip in gay profusion under the rain-sodden sky at the Dallas Fort Worth airport, are the only cheerful touch in a picture of unrelieved bleakness.

In Braniff's wing of the terminal, escalators are motionless, lights are out, parking lots are nearly empty. Signboards on approach roads still list scheduled arrivals and departures, but the only movement through the terminal Thursday was that of a few "Pronto Packages" left undelivered when Braniff suddenly brought its planes home Wednesday night.

All but 225 of Braniff's more than 8,000 employees are gone, as if they had never worked here. Thursday they flooded their credit union with anxious calls about their savings and lined up at field offices of the Texas State Employment Commission to file for jobless benefits that won't start flowing for about three weeks.

"What we had to do to the employees was very difficult, very painful," a subdued Putnam told a crowded news conference. "But there was more at stake here than just their dollars."

To continue operating as losses mounted, he said, would have opened the way for creditors to force Braniff into involuntary bankruptcy and end any possibility that it could be revived to fly again. To have notified workers and passengers before the grounding of the fleet, Putnam said, would have touched off the very thing we were trying to avoid — a bankruptcy petition by creditors.

Reagan renews call for arms talks

WASHINGTON (AP) — Pressing the Soviet Union for a response, President Reagan has renewed his call for a new treaty to reverse the growth of "frightening" long-range nuclear missiles.

"Once launched, that's it, they're on their way and there's no preventing, or stopping them," Reagan said Thursday night in a news conference.

Calling land-based missiles with multiple warheads "most frightening to most people," Reagan urged Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev to agree to open negotiations by late June.

As an inducement, Reagan offered to put all nuclear weapons on the bargaining table. "Nothing is excluded," he said.

But he emphasized that the first cuts under the treaty would be in warheads on land and sea-based missiles.

"You start with first things first," Reagan said. "You can't bite it all off in one bite."

The proposed one-third reduction in nuclear warheads could trim the lead U.S. strategists claim the Soviets are acquiring in silo-busting missiles.

However, Reagan's offer could eventually neutralize the edge the United States now has in strategic bombers and low-flying cruise missiles.

He did not refer to these weapons when he first outlined the proposed treaty Sunday at Eureka College in Illinois.

Brezhnev has not replied directly to Reagan's initiative, but the Soviet press has accused the United States of "attempts to secure for itself unilateral military advantage."

Turning to the economic situation at home, Reagan said unless high interest rates drop there will not be "any real improvement for anyone" in the foreseeable future.

At the same time, he acknowledged the economic recovery he had predicted for later in the year could be jeopardized by the high cost of credit.

In this vein, Reagan urged Congress to approve spending cuts and tax increases in the Senate Republican budget compromise he adopted last week.

Muse Air gets flight clearance

Lamar Muse, chairman of Muse Air, said Friday morning his company will begin serving the Midland-Odessa area Sunday afternoon with regularly scheduled flights.

"We're not going to do a full day Sunday," Muse said. The first flight to to Midland from Houston and Dallas will arrive at 3:15 p.m. and depart at 3:25 p.m. for Dallas Love Field and Houston Hobby airports.

Muse Air originally planned to begin serving the Midland-Odessa area May 10. However, the Federal Aviation Administration, enforcing rules established as a result of last summer's air traffic controller strike, would not permit the flights.

In response, Muse launched a campaign to win public support for its efforts.

Braniff Airline's declaration of bankruptcy Thursday and its cessation of operations apparently caused the FAA to change its mind and permit Muse to begin service.

"Apparently those guys (the FAA) never gave five minutes thought to the fact that some carrier was going to go belly up," Muse said. "They told us yesterday, 'Go on and do what ever you want to do.'"

Muse said the FAA has given his company temporary authority to use Braniff's "slots" for seven days. Muse Air flights could be canceled after the time.

"If we start flying one day, we're in there for good," Muse said confidently.

"Once you get your nose under the tent — I'm not going to worry about it anymore."

Muse said when he called the control tower to schedule flights he found "everyone of our flights were already in their computer. Which just shows you the left hand doesn't know what the right hand is doing."

Muse said that as a result of the change he was feeling much better Friday than he did a week ago when he was in Midland. He had come to the Tall City then to celebrate the begining of Muse Air service to the region, but instead had to announce the FAA had shot down his plans.

Muse will be serving Midland with six flights daily. Flight 807 will depart at 8:05 a.m.; flight 811 at 10:25 a.m.; flight 815 at 1 p.m.; flight 819 at 3:25 p.m.; flight 823 at 5:45 p.m.; and flight 827 at 8:15 p.m.

'Next two days' could decide viability of U.N. peace plan

By The Associated Press

U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar said today the next two days will decide the outcome of his efforts to bring peace in the Falkland Islands conflict between Britain and Argentina.

"There is always a risk of a breakdown," he said, but the warring nations also "are much closer than when I started my exercise."

"These next days will be decisive," he told reporters on arriving for the eighth day of talks at his New York offices. "As I never had in mind endless negotiations with the parties ... I hope that today or tomorrow I will have a final answer from the parties."

In the South Atlantic war zone a military lull persisted for more than 24 hours. But Britain's foreign secretary said Thursday unless a cease-fire agreement is reached, "military incidents may occur with increasing frequency."

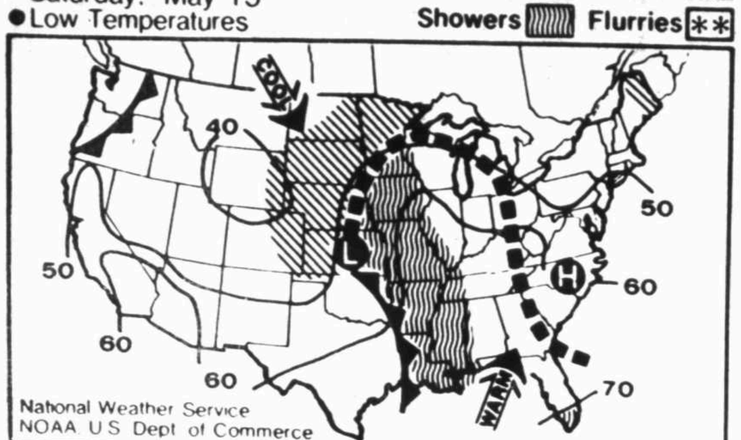

Earlier, Perez de Cuellar said negotiations at U.N. headquarters for such an agreement have moved into a crucial stage but that representatives of both sides were repeatedly seeking more instructions from their governments.

A British source who requested anonymity said the talks were "not producing visible results" and the chances of success were about 50-50. The source said Argentina budged somewhat, but "the gap remains very wide."

Man gets maximum punishment for manslaughter

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Jeff Thomas, a 22-year-old Waco man who thought the jury did him an injustice in convicting him of voluntary manslaughter in a gun-knife brawl in the Pizza Man last Feb. 9, was handed another setback Thursday when the six-man, six-woman jury in 238th State District Court awarded him the maximum 20-year punishment for the offense.

Thomas, who had been charged with murder, was convicted of shooting Rick Jackson, 31, three times with a snub-nosed .22-caliber handgun during a scuffle in the pizza restaurant. Thomas claimed self-defense; he said that Thomas initially had attacked him with an 8-inch slicing knife in a fight which was fueled by ill-feelings between the two men.

"I told them (police) that I didn't mean to do it," Thomas said of the shooting. He testified that he had gotten the handgun from a pawnshop and carried it in his boot.

Testimony indicated that Thomas, Jackson and others had been drinking beer and whiskey at the Pizza Man on the night of the fatal scuffle.

In deliberating a verdict, the jurors were considering murder, which carries a penalty ranging from five years to 99 years or life in prison; involuntary manslaughter, two years to 20 years in prison; and aggravated assault, two years to 10 years in prison.

Prosecutor Marian Bentley had argued that a 20-year sentence would befit the offense and the defendant, who, she said, was unskilled, undisciplined, homeless and without a high school diploma.

"You have no job, no place to live, and nobody to help you?" Ms. Bentley asked the slight defendant, whose once long hair had been shortened to a conservative look for the trial.

"That's fair to say," said Thomas.

Ms. Bentley told the jurors of the benefits awaiting Thomas at the Texas Department of Corrections. She said that his confinement there likewise would be a service to the community.

"Our community needs some protections," the prosecutor said. "You (jurors) are the only 12 people who can do something about this man and people like him."

"Judge (Vann) Culp can't do anything about this man," she said. "If you don't do it, it won't get done."

The prosecutor cautioned the jurors not to "fall for the sympathy that society put this man here (on trial for murder); he put himself here."

She said that the defendant was not prepared to be a productive member of society.

"He has no discipline, no steady job like you and I do."

Ms. Bentley said that probation for Thomas was not tenable. "Probation in this case is a joke."

In recommending prison time for the defendant, Ms. Bentley listed advantages of Thomas being committed: availability of college courses, learning skills, being under daily supervision and associating with men of his age group.

"I don't know nothing about the TDC," the defendant said.

Ms. Bentley asked the defendant if he were aware that he could gain marketable skills should he be sent to prison.

"The last I heard," Thomas responded, "they weren't taking anybody there (at the TDC until over-crowdedness has been eliminated).

"Do you know," Ms. Bentley incisively asked Thomas, "that they will give you daily" supervision and attention in prison?

"I imagine," Thomas said.

Defense attorney Leonard Howell asked the jury to award his client probation and to give him another chance, since life had dealt him a "bad start." Howell reasoned that any sentence would "not (be) nearly so bad as that (conviction) mark."

Howell said the mere conviction would limit Thomas' career possibilities. "He'll probably, more than likely, remain in the construction business for the rest of his life."

The defense attorney reminded the jurors that Thomas had professed to be a Christian. "You say, 'He must have been a hypocrite or he wouldn't have done that (slain Jackson).'"

"We all," Howell said, "fall short of what we are supposed to do. It's not only us; it's the environment around us."

City releases details about officer's suspension

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

In response to a state attorney general's ruling earlier this week, the city has now released details on the suspension of a police officer last fall.

The officer, Franklin E. "Lin" Rice, was suspended without pay for three days after a motorist complained that Rice had struck him in the face during a traffic stop on the far east side Nov. 14, 1981.

In official parlance, Rice was suspended for "conduct subversive to the proper order, discipline and morale of the Municipal Service."

The incident occurred about 9:45 p.m. on Fairgrounds Road near Hogan Park. The pertinent excerpts of a Nov. 15 statement Rice gave Chief of Police Wayne Gideon are as follows:

"This officer stopped a black male subject in a white Chevrolet low-rider. I asked if I could see his driver's license and the subject advised that he had left his ---- driver's license in his other pants.

"He asked 'What in the ---- did you stop me for?' I advised him that I had stopped him because he was driving on the wrong side of the road. He advised that he was trying to miss the ---- bumps in the road.

"I advised the subject that he needed to calm down and not talk at the top of his lungs and quit hopping around and moving his arms around. The subject was really violent-acting when he got out of his car.

"The subject kept on talking loud after I had asked him not to because the K-9 dog that was in the back of my (squad car) would come out and bite him before I could stop him. The dog was barking and about to tear the back of my car up and almost came out the window.

"The black male subject kept on talking loudly and jumping around and I contacted this subject in the nose with the back of my hand.

"The subject did calm down and I advised the subject that I was going to let him go and that I was going to follow him to see if he was able to drive the vehicle. The subject's nose did bleed a little, but there was no sign of any broken skin.

Rice followed the motorist for a time, then responded to a call he received over the radio.

In concluding his statement to Gideon, Rice said: "I did contact the subject in the nose with the back of my hand, and realized later that this wasn't the thing to do."

Gideon apparently agreed and gave Rice a three-day suspension. Gideon and city officials, however, declined to confirm reports that an officer had been suspended until Attorney General Mark White issued an opinion Tuesday that such information is indeed public information.

The opinion had been sought by the city on grounds that divulging the information "would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of privacy."

Helping city recreation director Em Carnett set up equipment for the summer day camps to be sponsored by the Midland Parks and Recreation Department are, from left, Fermin Sanchez, Jarrod Davis, Amy Green and Susan Dunn. Registration for the summer schedule of activities, ranging from swimming and tennis classes to the new summer day camp will be held from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Saturday at the Parks and Recreation Building, 300 Baldwin St. A second registration is scheduled for 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. May 22 at Midland Park Mall.

Democrats, Republicans convene this weekend

Wayne Thorburn

Midland Democrats and Republicans from throughout the county will gather in their separate camps Saturday to hear special speakers exhort the ideals of each group, thus setting the mood for the remainder of the meeting.

Democrats will settle in at Alamo Junior High School auditorium, 3800 W. Storey Ave., at 10 a.m. after registering at 9:30 a.m. County Chairman Darrell Smith said Bill Sims, Democratic candidate for state senator of the 25th District, will be special speaker. He will oppose Midland Republican Ernest Angelo Jr. in the November general election.

Republicans will come together at 9 a.m. at San Jacinto Junior High on North N Street. After registration, the session will be started by County Chairman Bill Shaner.

Speaking to the GOP group will be Wayne J. Thorburn, executive director of the Republican Party since January 1978. In this position he is responsible for the day-to-day activities of the state party organization and heads a staff of 18 in Austin.

Prior to this position, Thorburn was an assistant professor of political science at Arkansas State University where he specialized in political parties and election laws.

He received a B.A. degree from Tufts University, an M.A. from Penn State University and his Ph.D. from the University of Maryland.

Expected to be elected permanent chairman at this convention is Bob Monaghan, a member of the State Republican Executive Committee.

Angelo, who has served in that capacity in past years, will be keynote speaker at Republican county conventions in San Angelo and Kerrville.

Both political groups will compile a list of resolutions that will be forwarded to the state committees reflecting their feelings on various issues.

Austin flooded

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Heavy rains that pounded Austin on Thursday hit hardest in a business area rebuilt after last year's Memorial Day flood.

Storekeepers in the Lamar Boulevard area near the Capital said the latest flood might cause them to give up on the area.

"We're going to move for sure. There's no doubt about it," said Robert Strait, owner of a music store in the area.

"It's pretty clear that this is going to happen every five years or so. The month of May is definitely not our month," he said.

Last May, 13 people died in the Memorial Day flood caused by heavy rains that swelled local creeks. No deaths or serious injuries were reported Thursday, and a bright sun helped dry the soggy city in the afternoon.

Parks and Recreation Department offers children's summer programs

Heating up and cooling off. Both goals can be reached with summer programs offered by the Midland Parks and Recreation Department.

Signup for all summer programs will be held from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Saturday at the Parks and Recreation Building, 300 Baldwin St. A second registration is scheduled for 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. May 22 at Midland Park Mall.

The summer recreation programs for children ages 6 through 12 have been restructured under the name of summer fun day camp. It is divided into four sessions that run throughout the summer. Cost is $20 per child per session and includes transportation for two field trips and a cookout.

This day camp runs from 8:30 a.m. to noon on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday and 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. on Wednesday. Meeting place is at the city gymnasium, 300 Baldwin St.

Children will be separated into three age groups. MidTran will provide transportation and has planned five pickup locations with the cost being 75 cents for a round trip.

Activities include daily hour swim at Ulmer Pool, special crafts and art projects, leadup games for organized sports such as softball, tennis, soccer, basketball, toppleball, badminton and volleyball; contests including hoppy taw, Frisbee, hula hoop, checkers, marbles and croquet, table games, folk dance, parachute play, jump rope and skateboard.

Special activities include an all-day field trip to Hogan Park Nature Center and Picnic Area, an all-day trip to Cole Park with olympic games and cookout, hike to Museum of the Southwest, visit to the School of Gymnastics, a visit to a hospital and a carnival day.

Pre-school fun time for children 4 through 6 years will be held during the same four sessions from 9 to 11:30 a.m. at the city gym. Fee is $4 per child per session.

In addition, the city department is adding a recreation center at the Cerebral Palsy Center from 9 to 11:30 a.m. daily. It will run from June 7 through July 30. Fee is $4 per person and registration will be held at the center.

Swimming lessons are divided according to the registrant's ability. Available are Tots and Parents, beginner, advanced beginner, intermediate, swimmer, basic water safety and rescue course, instructor aide, advanced lifesaving, adult evening swimming lessons and adult evening fitness swim.

Tennis lessons for children ages 8 through 14 and adults are slated. Children are scheduled for 9 to 10 a.m. while adults have a choice of 8 a.m. and 7 p.m. for beginners and 8 p.m. for advanced.

A gymnastics course will run June 7-11 from 9 to 10 a.m. for students 6 years and older. Fee is $7.

Free golf lessons will be given from June 7-11 with all equipment furnished. Students from 12 to 17 years old are scheduled to start at 9 a.m. while adults will take their turn starting at 10:15 a.m.

One session of baton lessons is slated for students 5 years and older. Fee is $7 and the course will be held from 5:20 to 6:10 p.m. June 7-18 at the city gym.

The four sessions for most of the summer programs are as follows: Session 1, June 7-18; Session 2, June 21-July 2; Session 3, July 5-16; Session 4, July 19-30.

Two men injured in traffic accident

Two men, one of whom was transferred to a Galveston hospital, were injured when the car they were in went out of control and rolled over near the Kent Service Station on East Florida Avenue shortly before 10 p.m. Thursday.

In stable condition this morning at John Sealy Hospital in Galveston was Daniel Fox, 30, of 1505 E. Highway 80. He suffered back injuries when, according to police, an eastbound 1970 Opel driven by 30-year-old Thomas E. Klein jumped the curb at a high rate of speed in the 800 block of Florida, struck a metal pole, rolled over and burst into flames.

Klein, who also suffered back injuries, was in serious condition at Midland Memorial Hospital. He was cited for driving while intoxicated.

Midlanders can expect nice weekend

With beautiful weather in store for the next few days, Midlanders may look forward to a pleasant weekend.

According to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, it will be fair and cool tonight with the mercury dropping into the lower 50s. Saturday should bring sunny skies and warm temperatures, which are expected to climb into the middle 80s.

Winds will be variable at 5-10 mph tonight, shifting southerly at 5-10 mph Saturday.

Thursday's high of 78 was 24 degrees cooler than the record high of 102, set for that date in 1960. The overnight low of 50 was nine degrees warmer than the record low of 41, set in 1953.

Black pledges to be individualist on appeals court

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Judge Bill Black, who was in Midland Thursday to build up his voting bloc in the June 5 run-off elections, said justice can be meted out fairly even without a "perfect trial."

Judge Bill Black

Black, 54, who was attacking some frivolous court reversals based on minor technicalities in court cases, has tried more than 20,000 civil and criminal cases in his 17 years on the bench.

"This kind of experience is necessary if you are going to understand the issues involved in an appeal."

Black, judge of the 146th State District Court in Bell County, is campaigning for the Democratic Party's nomination for Place 2 on the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals. He will be challenging Dallas County Court-at-Law Judge Chuck Miller, 38, for the nomination. Winner of that race will oppose the Republican Party's nominee, Ray Moses, in the Nov. 2 general election.

Like most judges seeking another term or a higher bench, Black pledged to be "fair and impartial," to be free of hostility and prejudice, and to be an individualist on the appeals court, which he said is the Supreme Court on criminal matters.

He proposed:

—Not being so lenient in reversing cases due to minor technicalities which virtually have nothing to do with the substance of a case and its issues. "The case should not be reversed because of one minor flaw." The substance of the case is what's important, he said. "This (reversals on minor technicalities) defeats and thwarts the judicial process; society cannot afford the expense and the delay." The courts' primary concern is to ensure that "every person's" rights are protected. "You can have a fair trial without having a perfect trial."

—Astuteness. "I can readily detect when a person has been deprived of his constitutional rights."

—Carrying on the death penalty. Black said the death penalty, now on the statutes, should be put into effect and, quickly carried out, would be a deterrent to more crimes of violence.

—Being severe on drug dealers, pushers and drug promoters: "I think they (wheeler-dealers in the drug market) ought to be put in (prison) for life." "I believe marijuana ought to be a felony offense."

—Throw convicted perpetrators of violent crimes and drug offenses in prison. But, Black recommended community work programs for others and rehabilitation centers and halfway houses for offenders who suffer from alcoholism and drug abuse. "I'm a great believer of diversion" in punishments and rehabilitation. Those alternatives to prison confinement are far less expensive to society; the taxpayers' cost of building just one, single-person cell is $60,000.

—Cutting back on the "big bitch." Black said he favors judges' seeking dismissals of prior convictions in instances wherein three-time losers on forgery or similar non-violent crimes would get automatic life sentences on their third felony conviction.

—Favors election of judges over appointments. "I'm afraid of the appointment system (due to) political patronage."

Artist captures British fighting forces on canvas

By ANDREW WARSHAW

LONDON (AP) — Following in the footsteps of Henry Moore, Graham Sutherland and other official British war artists, Linda Kitson, a little-known teacher with a horror of war, has set off on the Queen Elizabeth II to cover the battle of the Falklands.

Miss Kitson, 37, who wears her hair spiked, punk-style, and favors jerseys and baggy trousers, said she hopes her work will help stop the fighting.

A Royal College of Art lecturer specializing in capturing people in everyday settings, Miss Kitson was named by London's Imperial War Museum as "official artist and observer" of the Falklands crisis.

Because neither Britain nor Argentina has declared war, Miss Kitson is not technically a war artist and is not commissioned by the government. Nonetheless, she will be the first person to fulfill the role of war artist since the end of World War II.

A day before boarding the QEII with 3,000 troops from Britain's 5th Infantry Brigade leaving for the Falklands, Miss Kitson talked with British reporters about her assignment.

"War horrifies me," she told London's Daily Express. "I would like to think I could bring back drawings that would make people think we should not fight ever again.

"I shall be absolutely terrified," the artist said. "I've had second, third and fourth thoughts about it, but I still want to go. I will shovel my hair into a hat, wear camouflage clothes and draw, draw, draw."

THE IMPERIAL WAR Museum contains state-commissioned artists' impressions of both world wars this century, including Henry Moore's "Shelter Drawings" from London's subway tunnels during the Nazi blitz and Graham Sutherland's portraits of the 1940-45 home front.

No official war artists have been commissioned since 1946, when the Ministry of Information, which operates only during wartime and appointed all Miss Kitson's predecessors, closed.

Jonathan Chadwick, secretary of the museum, said Miss Kitson was chosen from among a dozen candidates approached simultaneously by the museum's Board of Trustees and that of the Fleet Air Arm Museum at Yeoviltown in southwest England.

Of the potential candidates available for the job, Chadwick, said Miss Kitson "was the most suitable. She's a prolific artist and is quick to respond to situations."

He said that since 1972 the museum has commissioned two or three artists a year to depict the day to day life of the British forces.

"This year, we had been planning to feature Women's Nursing Services," he said, "but when the Falklands situation blew up we decided to try and combine the two by sending someone to one of the hospital ships.

"Unfortunately, the Ministry of Defense said the rules of war did not permit this but they allowed us instead an open-ended brief so Linda is going out there to draw what she can of life on board a troop ship and anything else she comes across."

CHADWICK said the fact that Miss Kitson was unmarried also played a role in her selection. "She feels she lacks any emotional commitments and this obviously added to her suitability in case of injury or death," he said.

Miss Kitson's initial commission with the British task force is four weeks, during which time she will be expected to draw "at least 30 sketches," said Chadwick.

"But because of communications and travel difficulties, we don't yet know how or exactly when we'll get her back," he added.

Miss Kitson, who lives in a cluttered ground floor apartment in the fashionable London suburb of Chelsea, is the first British woman to be commissioned to cover military hostilities overseas.

Previously, women war artists were only appointed on the home front, although two were commissioned to Germany after the Nazi surrender in 1945.

Until now, Miss Kitson has concentrated on sketches of everything from ballet dancers to people walking in the street. When the Times of London was threatened with closure earlier this year, Miss Kitson was asked by the newspaper to portray the reaction of its staff.

Three British war artists — Eric Ravilious, Albert Richards, and Thomas Hennell — lost their lives covering World War II action.

MISS KITSON said she fears injury more than death "because when you come back you are a nuisance to people or maybe can't draw any more."

"I see my job as capturing the result of war rather than the bangs and clashes and immediacy of it."

Chadwick no decision has been made on whether Miss Kitson's Falklands drawings will be exhibited.

The first war artist, according to Imperial War Museum records, was Sir Muirhead Bone, commissioned in 1916 by the old Ministry of Propoganda to cover hostilities in northern France.

Others in addition to Moore, best known as a sculptor, and Sutherland include Paul Nash, William Roberts, and Eric Kennington and Percy Wyndham-Lewis.

Work camps alternative to fine, jail sentence

The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — New York City has decided to set up "work camps" to imprison graffiti artists, vandals, small-time drug dealers, abusive landlords and other minor criminals who are now usually set free by the overburdened court system, Mayor Edward I. Koch announced Wednesday.

Koch said he has included $3 million for the plan in his proposed budget this year, and expects two camps with a combined capacity of almost 9,000 short-term inmates per year to be under construction by July.

"Small time drug dealers, graffiti writers, three-card monte operators, joyriders, vandals, shoplifters and landlords who harass tenants have a very negative effect on the quality of life," the mayor said. "But even if they are apprehended, they rarely serve jail terms because our criminal justice system is overburdened with more violent criminals."

David R. LeMaster

Midland man to receive degree

David R. LeMaster, a petroleum landman for Gulf Oil Corporation, was to receive his doctorate degree tonight in graduation ceremonies at Texas Tech University in Lubbock.

LeMaster, a former Midland educator who already holds three college degrees, maintained a 3.9 grade point average. His major was education administration and supervision with a minor in the foundations of psychology, statistics and sociology.

The doctoral dissertation was a computerized statistical analysis of Texas public school transportation. It established a state level mathematical formula for the prediction of costs through factor analysis and multiple regression.

At Louisville, it's 'kingdom come' for a horse

By HUGH A MULLIGAN
AP Special Correspondent

LOUSIVILLE, KY. (AP) — More fervent prayers are whispered, indeed shouted, under the twin steeples of Churchill Downs on Derby Day than in all the great Gothic cathedrals of Europe.

"Lord," the ancient plea rises to heaven over the tote board, "let me break even. I need the money."

The octagonal pagoda looming above the winner's circle adds an air of Oriental mysticism to Louisville's hallowed hippodrome, which on the first Saturday in May is the mecca for a curious cult intent on divining the fiscal future in the blood lines and performance charts of a lower order of animal species.

THEIR BIBLE is the Racing Form, writ in curious hieroglyphics, although sundry prophets pass among them urging belief in certain four-legged deities.

Most end the day up to their hocks in hock, but with their faith in the Derby's promise of instant Nirvana undiluted.

"Till you go to Kentucky and with your own eyes behold the Derby," preached Irvin S. Cobb, a home-bred prophet who brought considerable honor to this part of the country, "you ain't never been nowheres and you ain't seen nothing."

Well, at long last, I've been somewhere and I've seen something.

I visited this "lodging for bats and spiders," as Jimmy Cannon called Churchill Downs, and I saw the Derby, all two minutes and thereabouts of it. Two minutes of hoof pounding hysteria, preceded by two hours of traffic jams, four hours of partying and 25 minutes on line for the men's room.

THE DAY and my first Derby had many wonders to behold.

As the big button in my lapel proclaims, "Mine Eyes Have Seen the Glory of Cassaleria," the one-eyed wonder horse, who finished 13th. He wasn't the only one at the track that day with a hole in his head. Those of us caught up in the cult of the vacant left eye socket invested $332,236 in the miracle that never happened.

Long ago my father spoke a parable that should have curbed my gaming greed. He told of a man who bought a horse down in Mexico and angrily returned to the dealer with the complaint, "Hey, you didn't tell me this horse was blind."

"Sure I did, senor," drawled the seller. "I said this was a good horse even if he don't look so good."

Now why didn't I think of that when an airplane passed low over Churchill Downs at post time pulling a trailer: "Our hearts are with Cassaleria"?

The problem is on Derby Day they all look good and steal your heart, prancing around the tulip-lined paddock all curried and combed with bright ribbons in their manes and tails bobbed and braided. Despite what the tote board read, the odds on any 3-year-old winning this year's derby were 43.497 to 1, which is the total crop of fillies and colts foaled in the late winter and spring of '79.

No wonder folks break into tears when the band plays "My Old Kentucky Home," especially at the line:

"By'n by, hard times comes a knocking at the door."

Then my old Kentucky Home good night."

THE BLIZZARD of discarded mutuel tickets on the track apron after the race tells you hard times just about busted down that door. This time, 141,009 spectators bet $5,011,575 on the Derby or something like $355 apiece. The total handle for mint juleps, by the way, at $3.50 a glass, was $280,000. It would have been more, but they ran out of mint for the first time in history. In some sections of the grandstand, the run for roses is the run for red noses.

The track really doesn't expect you to lose all our money on Derby Day, but they make you pay for parking in advance just in case. And the bars around town stay open until 6 a.m., to accommodate late finishing horses. Louisville in Derby Week has been described as a place where they clean everything but the ashtrays. The ambiance is a mellow mash of blue grass, bourbon and burgoo, which is a kind of chicken served under sloppy track conditions. Red Smith said this is the only city in the world where the bellhops hand out tips instead of the other way around.

"The Derby is a happening," said trainer Wayne Lukas, who ought to know because his highly regarded colt Muttering happened to finish fifth.

Churchill Downs on Derby Day is a zoo where they cage up the college kids in the infield and let the animals run free. With good reason too: Bombay Duck got belted with a beer bottle from the violent ward a few semesters back.

IN DERBY WEEK anyone around here below the rank of colonel is an oppressed minority. Kentucky chic is affecting a white planters suit, black string bow tie and pointy goatee as though you made a killing in fried fast foods.

"Millionaire row" in the clubhouse on Derby Day outglitters nearby Fort Knox.

"It's strictly a one-day grab," Jimmy Cannon wrote. "The joint is operated as if the owners were going to pack their keisters and take the next train out of town ... The waitress who doesn't short change you would be canonized as Kentucky's first saint."

Yet the faithful flock in pilgrimage each spring to this shrine of undying hope. Allan Lacombe, an old friend from New Orleans, used to bunk down on Derby eve in the workroom below a Lousiville funeral parlor. One Derby morn he awoke to find two extra guests who weren't going to the races or anywhere on earth anymore. This year he rented "more lively quarters" — in a home for the aged.

Meriwether Lewis Clark Jr., a grandson of the Clark who explored the Louisana Territory, got things started in 1875 by leasing a couple of cowpastures from his uncles, John and Henry Churchill, and staging a race for 3-year-olds that was won by Aristides when Chesapeake was supposed to.

Local suit before state high court

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas Supreme Court has agreed to hear a dispute from Midland County over whether a contractor charged usurious interest on services rendered.

The Supreme Court has set oral arguments for 9 a.m. June 2 in a suit between C.L. Tyra and Bob Carroll Construction Co.

Carroll performed services for Tyra in April, May and June of 1978, and charged Tyra $1,747.

When Tyra did not pay, Carroll filed suit seeking payment of the account, 1.5 percent interest per month from August 1978 and $582 in attorneys' fees.

Tyra filed a counterclaim contending that the interest charge was usurious.

A Midland County trial court ruled that no usurious interest had been charged, that Carroll was entitled to recovery of the account and attorneys' fees.

That ruling came after officials of the construction company testified that they never charged any interest on any of their accounts. The attorney who filed the suit also testified that he was not told to include interest charges in the damages sought and that part of the pleadings was a mistake.

Man streaks through Jerusalem

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

JERUSALEM (DPA) - "Streaking" came to Jerusalem when a sword-wielding American torist ripped off his clothes and dashed through the old walled city, police said Wednesday.

The naked adventure started when the tourist entered one of the old market's oriental shops Tuesday and enquired about the price of an antique sword.

When the shopkeeper named his price of $800, the American pulled off his clothes, grabbed the sword the dumbstruck salesman and ran off through the walled city's crowded, narrow streets.

His escapade ended in the Moslem cemetery outside the city walls, where he mounted a tombstone and pointed the sword against his chest.

He was arrested by police and led away, his loins wrapped in a traditional Arab headress donated by an obliging passer-by.

Playing cupid gets father expelled from party

By WILLIAM SEXTON
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

PEKING — She was 27, beautiful and amorous. He was middle-aged, married and rich. It seems they developed a meaningful relationship, and now all of China's official press is engrossed in the outcome.

For Geng Hong, the siren in this story, was a member of the Communist Youth League and the daughter of a revolutionary hero. Her given name, Hong, actually means "Red."

Red's lover, Zhang, turned out to be a capitalist from Hong Kong. They eventually ran away together and now, according to press accounts, Red is Zhang's No. 3 wife in Hong Kong. Zhang already had one spouse and one concubine there.

Chinese newspapers have played the story on the front page, though not because of any fondness for happy endings. It was all bad news. The official press announced that Red's father, Cheng Zhanbiao, probably about 70, had been expelled from the Communist Party for aiding the romance and abetting her flight. He also lost his important job as deputy chief of the advisers' office of the provincial government in Yunnan, southwest China.

That could be stunning news for the 39 million members of the Chinese Communist Party. The meager biographical data published on Cheng strongly suggests he was one of the late Mao Tse-tung's companions on the Long March of 1934-1935. The handful of survivors of that 6,000-mile retreat from near defeat to eventual victory are China's most honored, revered heroes.

IF CHENG in fact fought alongside Mao on the Long March, the likely message is that no communist will escape scrutiny in the party purge long promised by Deng Xiaoping and now apparently getting under way. That would account for the unusual prominence given in China's media to an otherwise minor chronicle of bedroom intrigue and petty corruption. It may also indicate an important victory by Vice Chairman Deng over the traditionalists in the party. In the last several weeks, he has already had his way in a deep reshuffle of the separate government apparatus.

"The mass of facts that have recently been brought to light," said People's Daily, the National Party organ, in an editorial accompanying the Cheng story, "shows that there are indeed some party members — including some veteran party members and leaders — who have failed the test and who, working hand in glove with the criminals in our society, have collapsed politically and engaged in serious crimes of smuggling, corruption, accepting bribes, speculating, graft and embezzlement of public property....

"Party organs at all levels must be resolved to carry out a firm struggle against such acts of corruption and degeneration and liquidate all the serious criminals and degenerates," People's Daily said.

In a month-long buildup for the party housekeeping, newspapers have published almost daily revelations of official corruption. The police chief at China's premier beach resort was fired for harboring a murderer. A high official of the imperial palace in Peking, one of the world's great treasure houses, was arrested for selling historic relics. One scam involving the fraudulent sale of 758 government-owned automobiles, 72 mopeds and 29 tractors eventually implicated "more than 130 departments and factories in 15 provinces and municipalities and 95 government officials and 78 party members."

But none of these exposes reached as deeply into the party's inner sanctum as the Cheng case. Communist Party stature is based on seniority and Cheng had been a member for 49 years.

A JOINT investigative report by China's two largest newspapers, People's Daily and Workers' Daily, said Cheng "joined the revolutionary ranks in 1933 and became a party member the same year." It added, somewhat cryptically, "He once did something good for the party and the people."

The Long March, which was not directly mentioned in the press account, began in 1934 after Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek's Nationalist forces encircled the Communists in East China. In 1934, the Red Army passed through Yunnan and Sichuan provinces, where Cheng is known to have served, enroute to the final redoubt in Yanan, West China. From there, Mao directed the eventual defeat of the Japanese occupation forces and then Chiang's Nationalists.

"There were...people who thought that Cheng was a veteran Red Army man, an old cadre official and therefore should be treated leniently by giving him a punishment of one year's probation within the party," the investigative reporters said. "But the Central Commission for the Inspection of Party Discipline looked into the matter and ruled that Cheng had become corrupt and degenerate and that expulsion from the party was called for."

The investigative reporters related that Cheng "was blinded by greed, sought the decadent way of bourgeois life, used contemptible means to deceive the party organization, and connived with his daughter to cohabit with a Hong Kong merchant and become his concubine. He tried his best to help his daughter get to Hong Kong...Cheng Zhanbiao fabricated lies in the name of the Advisers Office of the Yunnan provincial people's government and made a false certificate..." He also allegedly accepted gifts from Zhang including a color TV, cassette recorders, tailoring material and Hong Kong dollars.

As for Red, reporters Qu Zugeng and Xi Ping said she was married at the time she met Zhang but "behaved badly" anyway, "and openly stayed at the Shanghai Hotel with the merchant Zhang." Eventually she obtained a divorce and Cheng "put on airs like a father-in-law." Then "with Cheng's assistance and help from some other unspecified sources, Geng Hong finally obtained permission to go to Hong Kong in March 1981. Little else was revealed about Red. However, it's safe to assume she's an extremely attractive young woman to catch a Hong Kong businessman's eye. The city is renowned for its own beauties.

SHORTLY thereafter Father Cheng's luck turned sour. A party member attending the Peking Industrial Engineering Institute, a long way from Hong Kong or Yunnan, "learned about the ugly dealings of the Chengs from a Hong Kong person quite by chance and...was the first to stand up and denounce Cheng."

Art to be created in space

GULFPORT, Miss. (AP) — An artist from Gulfport has signed an agreement that will permit him to create artificial auroras to be seen from Earth during a space shuttle mission, probably next year.

Joe Davis said inert gases would be discharged into space from a cannister carried aboard the space shuttle. He has paid the first installment of $1,000 to the National Aeronautics and Space Administration for a reservation in the cargo section.

Davis's cannister is among more than 300 rented by scientific and industrial concerns for future shuttle trips. It isn't known yet which flight the project will be on.

Davis said the gas, intended to form the brilliant designs to be viewed from Earth, will be examined by NASA officials before the launch. He said the aurora would consist of a combination of gases stretching for miles, each of which will glow a different color — blue-violet, bright yellow, red and possibly other hues.

His plans call for remote control of the disbursement of colors from ground control at the Johnson Space Flight Center in Houston. The buttons would activate the emission of an electronic beam aboard the shuttle that would cause the gases to glow.

Reagan gets himself off hook in Europe

By BERNARD D. KAPLAN
Hearst Feature Service

PARIS — Ronald Reagan has succeeded in disarming his European critics on two major fronts within a single week.

While at it, he also seems to have out-maneuvered Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev.

Curiously, there is a likelihood it will go virtually unnoticed. The world is accustomed to picking holes in the words and deeds of American presidents — especially the present one — as clumsy, ill-timed or unconsciously designed to give comfort to Soviet propaganda. When the reverse happens, Western observers — especially the media — find it so hard to credit, they tend to pass over it in silence.

But, within a few weeks of his first official visit to Europe, Reagan has skillfully moved to ensure himself a better reception than was thinkable even a short time ago. He may have averted the previously all-but-inevitable prospect of being greeted by anti-American demonstrations in the streets and coolness at the conference table.

His latest nuclear arms reduction offer to the Soviets to cut ballistic missiles ceilings by at least one-third, however coldly received in Moscow and by domestic opponents like Edmund Muskie, has been welcomed where it may count most in political terms: in the capitals of NATO Europe.

According to Dr. Peter Courtelier, a Social Democrat member of the West German parliament and close associate of Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, "President Reagan's recent actions have given the lie to his image as an inflexible hardliner. He also has shown himself willing to learn from experience. This is very welcome to us."

So it might be since Schmidt's defense of NATO's nuclear policies, which had become inextricably tied up in the mind of left-wing West German opinion with Reagan's image as a neo-cold warrior, has threatened to bring down his government.

In terms of Western Europe's receptivity, Reagan's proposal was done substantial service by Brezhnev's response: a skeptical dismissal. That was only to be expected. What gave Reagan's position a surprise boost was Brezhnev's indication that Soviet policy has undergone an abrupt change. From stressing his supposed desire for arms reduction, the Russian leader suddenly switched to an open acknowledgement that Soviet military power is to be built up still more.

What this will do to the peace and anti-nuclear arms campaign in Western Europe — and, for that matter, in the U.S. — it is too soon to say.

For reasons that remain obscure, Moscow seems to have downgraded the high priority it has been giving the peace movement. Seen from here, this looks like it may have gotten President Reagan off an increasingly bothersome hook.

Reagan has also acted to appease the Europeans over what has become the hobgoblin of Western economic cooperation, high U.S. interest rates. Treasury Secretary Donald Regan unequivocably told an international meeting here that lowering rates has now become administration policy.

A vandal's bullet early Wednesday shattered one of the 360 gold-encrusted glass windows in the Sunsphere, the 1982 World's Fair theme structure. In this photo, the broken window is taken out just to the left of center. A new window was in place a half-hour after the fair opened at 10 a.m. The window, coated with 24-karat gold dust, was valued at $2,000.

Senators on lookout for Soviet spies on Capitol Hill

By GEORGE E. CONDON JR.
Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — The meeting of the Senate Subcommittee on Security and Terrorism had been going for almost an hour Wednesday when Rep. Don Ritter, R-Pa., decided to dramatically demonstrate to the audience his belief that Capitol Hill has become infested with Soviet operatives.

Departing from his text, Ritter looked at Sen. Jeremiah Denton, the Alabama Republican who was the only senator to attend the two-hour hearing on bills the two men have introduced on the topic of Capitol Hill espionage, and said:

"I would be interested in knowing if any Soviet embassy person or intelligence operative is at this hearing today."

The hearing froze for an instant as committee aides, reporters and onlookers quickly scanned the room, searching for telltale signs of communist before a subdued outbreak of nervous laughter unfroze the moment.

"I wouldn't be surprised," said Denton, adding he would not ask any spies to voluntarily stand.

But Denton and Ritter made clear that they believe Capitol Hill is being overrun by communist operatives who are taking advantage of the free flow of unclassified information and the loose dispersal of classified data to give the Soviet Union a big advantage over U.S. intelligence agencies.

Denton pledged to press on with legislation attacking the problem despite administration opposition to the bills expressed Wednesday by both the Justice and the State departments.

Denton's two bills, as well as one offered by Ritter in the House, would prohibit any citizen of a communist country from attending any session of Congress, any Congressional hearing or any function sponsored by a member of Congress without first registering with the Attorney General and citing the reason for wanting to attend the meeting or session.

Failure to file the proper explanation would result in deportation.

Denton and Ritter recited several examples they said proved the ease with which communist agents can gather information on Capitol Hill.

Denton said much of the information gathered by Soviet intelligence operatives is unclassified and "seemingly innocuous."

But, he said, "This information often goes to complete a mosaic which consists of both classified and non-classified information."

Denton, citing FBI figures, contended "30 to 40 percent of the approximately 600 Soviet-bloc diplomats, correspondents and trade officials here have responsibilities for gathering intelligence."

In his prepared remarks, Denton compared the Soviet agents to rats, saying, "If a farmer sees a rat, he is well-advised to assume that there may be eight to 10 that have escaped notice. If he sees eight to 10, then there are probably hundreds undetected."

Ritter added that congressional staffers at times can be "pliable in the knowing hands of a professional intelligence operative such as the KGB."

"Why should we continue to roll over and play dead and allow them to strip us of important information and do it without any complaint or effort to control it or reciprocity?" he asked.

James E. Nolan Jr., deputy assistant director of the FBI's Intelligence Division, testified that Capitol Hill is "an obvious target" for foreign spies, but declined to specify how big the problem is.

Policemen killed in attempt to arrest robber

By LORRAINE BENNETT and
JACK JONES
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

RIVERSIDE, Calif. — Two plainclothes Riverside police officers were shot to death here Thursday while trying to arrest a crippled bank robber who had failed to surrender to begin a 13-year-prison term.

Police were searching for Jackson Chambers Daniels Jr., 44, who had been confined to a wheelchair after being shot by police during a Riverside bank robbery 16 months ago, but who was believed to have escaped Thursday's bloody scene by driving away.

The dead officers were identified as Dennis Doty, 35, and Philip Trust, 36, both 11-year veterans working in the felony warrant service.

Police said Doty and Trust arrived at a small rental house in the city's La Sierra section to arrest Daniels, who had been convicted in the robbery but remained free pending his appeal. An arrest warrant had been issued for Daniels when his appeal failed and he did not appear to begin his prison term.

First reports indicated that two other suspects were being sought in the double slaying. Police were looking for two automobiles, including Daniels' 1964 Chevrolet with Virginia license plates.

The renters of the house, James Chornish, 32, and Barbara Chornish, 30, turned up shortly after the shooting. Police learned that they had been at work and were not involved.

Their son, Jamari, 4, was in the home at the time of the shooting, waiting for his babysitter, who could not get through because officers had the area cordoned off. He was not hurt.

Neighbors heard gunshots, screams and sounds of breaking glass from the house about 9 a.m.

Two youngsters walking to school saw someone smashing out a window and shooting at the ground from inside the house, calling out to them, "Help! Call the police."

That, police said later, was one of the two officers.

Police were called and rushed to the scene, where they found the bodies of Doty and Trust.

Once the bodies were discovered, police sealed off the neighborhood and brought in search dogs and a SWAT team.

It was unclear whether Daniels is still confined to a wheelchair, but police said he used one and there were wheelchair ramps at the home.

According to the Riverside County district attorney's office, Daniels had shot it out with police officers during a holdup at the First Trust Bank of Riverside in January, 1980. He reportedly was struck by as many as nine bullets.

One of them hit his spinal cord, crippling him.

Daniels subsequently pleaded guilty to three counts of robbery, two counts of assault with a deadly weapon on police officers and one count of being a felon in possession of a firearm.

He was sentenced to 13 years in prison, the maximum term, and given time by a Riverside County Superior Court judge to complete therapy at Loma Linda Medical Center.

When he did not appear in May, 1981, to begin his prison term, he was arrested and sent to the California Institution for Men at Chino. He filed an appeal and, while that was being considered, was released on $50,000 appeal bond.

A Riverside, Calif., policeman carries a small boy to safety as others check the house where two Riverside officers were shot to death early Thursday, following an apparent attempt to serve a warrant in the La Sierra section of the city.

von Bulow free while appealing conviction

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — An attorney for Claus von Bulow posted $50,000 and a list of assets valued at $1 million Thursday to secure the socialite's freedom while he appeals his convictions for trying to murder his heiress wife, a court official said.

The action came one day before the deadline for von Bulow to post $1 million bail or go to prison to start a 30-year sentence for trying twice to kill Martha "Sunny" von Bulow with insulin injections.

Newport Superior Court Clerk John J. McGann said attorney John F. Sheehan filed a certificate of deposit for $50,000 with the court. Combined with the $50,000 von Bulow had filed on previous bail of $500,000, the money met the requirement of posting 10 percent cash to secure the bond.

McGann said Sheehan also gave Judge Thomas H. Needham and prosecutor Stephen R. Famiglietti a list of von Bulow's assets valued at $1 million. The list was under review by the court and had not been filed officially, McGann said.

However, in a closed conference, Needham gave Famiglietti a week to verify that the assets are enough to secure his freedom while appealing the conviction to the state Supreme Court, a spokesman for the attorney general said.

"This is a unique situation and Mr. Famiglietti is reviewing the best method to determine if Mr. von Bulow in fact owns these things and determine if the value they are reputed to have is their actual value," the spokesman, Daniel Hackett, said.

Sheehan said von Bulow, 55, would return to Newport Superior Court on May 21 for a hearing on whether the assets meet bail requirements and to get a certificate of recognizance signed.

After increasing the bail last week, Needham said he feared von Bulow might be tempted to flee rather than go to prison.

Sheehan has said he would ask the list of assets be sealed by the court. Making it public would be "an open invitation to theft" of valuable artworks among von Bulow's holdings, Sheehan said.

McGann said he did not know if the list would be sealed. Telephone calls to Sheehan and Needham were not immediately returned.

After nine weeks of trial and 36 hours of deliberations, a jury found von Bulow, 55, guilty on two counts of assault with intent to murder his wife with insulin injections during Christmas visits to their Newport mansion in 1979 and 1980.

Mrs. von Bulow, 50, has been in a coma since she was discovered on the floor of her bathroom Dec. 21, 1980, and is not expected to recover. She recovered from a Dec. 27, 1979, coma.

Wallace says he's forgiven Bremer for assassination try

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Former Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace says he has forgiven Arthur Bremer, the man convicted of the assassination attempt 10 years ago that left Wallace a paraplegic.

Bremer

Bremer, of Milwaukee, now serving a 53-year prison sentence at the Maryland Correctional Institution, was 21 years old when Wallace was shot 10 years ago Saturday while campaigning for president at a shopping center in Laurel, Md.

"I have forgiven him and I have no ill feeling toward Arthur Bremer," Wallace said Wednesday in a telephone interview from his office in Montgomery, Ala. "I have none toward his family and I wish them the best."

Wallace

Wallace, director of rehabilitation services for the University of Alabama, is considering seeking another term as governor.

Bremer's mother, Sylvia Bremer, 67, of Milwaukee, said she has never been able to answer the question of why the shooting occurred.

"People ask us that all the time," she said. "We don't like the question. Two of Artie's brothers changed their last names because they don't like the question. It's not that we won't answer the question. We don't know the answer."

Mrs. Bremer said she wished the best for Wallace.

"Tell her that I appreciate her attitude and I know in my heart that her family prayed for me," Wallace said.

He added, "I am not bitter...I feel fortunate to be alive and I know the Bremers are glad I am alive."

CARSON CITY, Nev. (AP) — John Quincy Adams, direct descendant of two U.S. presidents, has canceled his first bid for public office.

Adams, 32, who works at a pharmacy here, had sought a seat in the state Assembly. He said Wednesday he was offered the pharmacy manager's job starting in July, and it was "an advancement I couldn't turn down."

Adams said he couldn't leave the job while the Legislature is in session — about five months every other year — so "I have no alternative but to withdraw."

He had filed in February as a Republican advocating states' rights — a far cry from the federalist views held by his ancestors, John Adams, the nation's second president, and John Quincy Adams, the sixth president.

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Robert Shor had been planning for four years to see his brother, Samuel, become a doctor. He won't make it, because he'll be adding M.D. to his own name a scant 2½ hours later in a different city.

But his parents and other family members will watch both commencements. They're laying out $350 to charter an airplane to whisk them from Charleston to Columbia between ceremonies.

Samuel Shor is graduating from the Medical University of South Carolina in commencement exercises that end at 1 p.m. Friday. Robert Shor's University of South Carolina Medical School honors convocation begins at 3:30 p.m.

The Charleston exercises were to have been Thursday, but a schedule conflict at the city's Municipal Auditorium forced the change.

And the Shors aren't the only family with graduation problems Friday.

Betty McFadden will be at the USC convocation while her brother, Earl McFadden Jr., will be graduating at MUSC.

Their mother hates airplanes, so the elder McFaddens plan to drive the 110 miles to catch the second event.

Miss Arkansas' new title excites hometown folk

BILOXI, Miss. (AP) — Terri Utley of Arkansas has been crowned Miss USA, causing a stir in her hometown where the school board meeting was interrupted and the switchboard jangled at the seven-officer police department.

"It hasn't even set in yet that I was Miss Arkansas," the 20-year-old brunette said after Thursday night's nationally televised pageant finale. She had held the state title only a month.

Miss Utley will represent the United States in the Miss Universe contest July 26 in Lima, Peru.

She is the second Arkansas woman to win a national beauty title in nine months. Elizabeth Ward of Russellville was named Miss America last September. The two pageants are not affiliated.

In Cabot, Ark., a town of 4,000 people, Almeda Elliott, the wife of the school superintendent said she interrupted the school board meeting to tell everyone that Miss Utley had won.

"I think it's fantastic," she said. "I'm just so proud of her. She's a sweet girl. She deserved it."

The telephones at the police station lit up with calls from townspeople who wanted to know if Miss Utley really was the winner, said dispatcher Tony Simmons.

Cone Magie, publisher of the Cabot Star Herald, said he was already making plans to go to Peru for the Miss Universe pagaent.

"After all, how many small towns have a Miss USA?" he asked.

Miss Utley, who dropped out of the University of Central Arkansas to sell condominium shares in Hot Springs, said she hopes the title will further a modeling career. She said she's looking forward to living in New York City, where she will share an apartment with a chaperone during her reign.

Life there is bound to be different from Cabot, she said, where summertime fun consists of driving to the hamburger stand, where friends sit on the tailgates of old pickups, play banjos, "drink a little beer and have a good time."

The runners up in descending order were Miss Texas, LuAnn Caughey of Abilene; Miss Utah, Susan Gasser of Salt Lake City; Miss Ohio, Kim Weeda of Dayton; and Miss Kentucky, Kristina Chapman of Owensboro.

The other semi-finalists were Miss Hawaii, Vanessa DuBois of Honolulu; Miss Maryland, Angie Boyer of Dunkirk; Miss Massachuetts, Janet Flaherty of Wilmington; Miss Michigan, Diane Marie Arabia of Warren; Miss Tennessee, Nise' Levy of Nashville; Miss Vermont, Georgia Davis of Bennington; and Miss Virginia, Sondra Jones of Richmond.

Odessan named to board

AUSTIN — Gov. Bill Clements Tuesday named Mrs. Johnnie Davis of Odessa to the State Board of Podiatry Examiners. Mrs. Davis was appointed as a public member of the board, a newly created position. She will serve a six-year term extending to July 10, 1987.

Rugs offer glimpse of life among Morocco's Berbers

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Staff Writer

Most tourists who travel to Morocco see Casablanca and Marrakech. They generally don't venture into the Middle and High Atlas Mountains and the home of the Berbers — the nomadic tribes who inhabited these mountains hundreds of years before the rural Arab tribes of North Africa claimed the area during the 8th century.

Alf Taylor did.

On his first trip, his two assets were his blue eyes and his quick smile. Both helped him make friends with and buy rugs from tribesmen who were unaccustomed to seeing a stranger in their village. Most had never before seen a Caucasian person.

That was less than 10 years ago.

Today, after countless trips to the Atlas Mountains, Taylor has worked to make the Berbers' craft known in the U.S. His efforts have met with success.

Opening to the public today at the Hanging Tree Gallery in San Miguel Square is a show and sale of new and antique Moroccan rugs, ranging in price from $500 to $7,000. The show will hang through May.

Taylor will be in Midland through next week, talking about the tribes, their way of life and the works they create.

Polish stowaways recall journey

BALTIMORE (AP) — Two Solidarity Union members who broke out of a machine crate shipped from Warsaw said they were fleeing police when they stowed away on a freighter.

The men spoke Thursday about their 18-day voyage in the small container aboard the Polish freighter, but refused to give their names for fear that relatives still in Poland would be harmed.

One of them said he was in hiding for one week before fleeing his native country.

The man, a 25-year-old welder at the Gdynia shipyard, said he went into hiding April 17 after a neighbor stopped him on the street and told him he had visitors at his house.

"I wasn't expecting any company," the welder said.

He said he knew it was the police and he thought they might find the mimeograph machine he kept in his cellar to duplicate literature for the banned Solidarity trade union.

For the next week, he went underground, occasionally contacting his wife and 3-year-old son. Then on the night of April 24, he and a stevedore also sought by police boarded the container ship Kazimierz Pulaski at Gdynia for their long voyage inside the 6-by-10-by-30-foot wooden crate.

The welder and the 26-year-old stevedore met with reporters at the Polish Home Club. Neither spoke any English and their comments were translated by the home's director, Joseph Borzymowski.

The men arrived penniless and wearing the same clothes they left Poland in, according to Borzymowski.

Both said they lost about 15 pounds on the journey.

They lived on a daily ration of one cracker, four squares of chocolates, vitamins and three cups of water from supplies they brought with them.

Mount Everest summit attempt expected soon

TACOMA, Wash. — An American climbing expedition has established advance base camp at the 25,000-ft. level on 29,028-ft. Mount Everest, the world's highest peak, and a summit attempt is expected this week.

"They're doing the summit any day now," said a spokesperson at Tacoma's Rainier Mountaineering, a guide service co-owned by expedition leader Lou Whittaker of Ashford, Wash. "All are in good health and there's been no trouble so far."

A spokesman for a public relations firm headed by Dan McConnell in Seattle, Wash., meanwhile, noted that because reports from Nepal are always several days late, "probably they're on the mountain or have failed by now."

Whittaker and 15 other climbers are seeking to become the first persons to scale Cho-o-Lungo, as the pinnacle is known in Chinese, by the previously untouched north face on a route from Tibet.

Whittaker, who lectured in Midland last year, is attempting at age 53 to become the oldest person to stand at the apex of the Himalaya.

Armed Forces Day observance to be staged at shopping mall

The Brotherhood of Vietnam Veterans, along with other civilian and military organizations will hold a patriotic celebration in honor of Armed Forces Day starting at 10 a.m. Saturday at the Dellwood Mall, Illinois and Midkiff.

Armed Forces Day honors all branches of the armed forces of the U.S. It is celebrated on the third Saturday of May with military exercises on land.

Saturday's celebration will include displays by the Department of Public Safety, Midland Police Department, American Legion, the Royal Rangers and the National Guard.

At 2 p.m., Roger Stinson, president of the Midland Brotherhood chapter, will announce the winner of a patriotic art contest in which 40 high school students participated.

Negotiating peace

There hasn't been much reason in recent years to cheer about the United Nations. The world organization has proven ineffective in its attempts to accomplish its two main goals: the promotion of peace and human dignity.

If the U.N. is successful in its current effort to mediate a solution to the Falkland Islands' crisis, it will redeem some of the prestige it has lost in recent years. The Falklands' crisis is just the type of international conflict for which the world body was organized.

In past years, the United Nations' glory has been fleeting. All too often the world body seems consumed by bickering and infighting that prevents any real progress in negotiations. A good example is the fact that the United Nations has mounted only one major military operation against an aggressor. That was in 1950 when the U.N. joined forces with the United States against the North Korean invaders of South Korea.

But that action was only possible because the Soviet Union was boycotting the Security Council and could not exercise its veto which would have prevented the action. The Soviets have not made that mistake in the 32 years since and during that period the United Nations has been effectively prevented from doing anything about major conflicts in Vietnam, Ethiopian-Somali fighting for the Ogaden, the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan and the Iranian-Iraqi war.

Earlier efforts by the United States to mediate a solution to the Falklands' crisis failed and in the meantime the fighting has intensified. In recent days, news reports have indicated "some progress" has been made in talks at the United Nations aimed at settling the Falklands' crisis.

It is good to see the world body performing the job for which it was organized and it should be the hope of all civilized people that an acceptable solution to that conflict can be found. But even if a solution is mediated to this conflict the United Nations' problems will not be over. There still are too many inherent roadblocks in the organization's structure to facilitate future successes.

Regaining its prestige may put a feather in the United Nations' cap, but what is really needed is a long, hard look at the possibility of restructuring the world body so that it can be an effective agency for settling differences between nations, and can, thus, fulfill its goals of promoting peace and human dignity.

Supporting government?

It's not easy being the head of a large federal agency. To succeed, one needs a skilled and sensitive staff, capable of helping the executive fulfill his vital role in the daily demands of government service.

Take Charles Z. Wick, director of the U.S. International Communication Agency, for example. His agency has 7,717 employees who operate the information machine that explains U.S. policy to 80 million people around the world. The task, of course, is not simple. That's why Mr. Wick has made it clear to his assistants exactly how they should aid him in his official duties. The information is contained in a six-page internal memorandum that includes the following advice: "Do not think of him merely as the director of ICA ... He wants you to know, and others ... that he is the close personal friend of the president...

"Do not have security personnel at embassies or elsewhere ask him to identify himself. He expects that ... the right people know who he is... Long, uninteresting conversations turn the director off, so keep things lively ... Sharp, catchy phrases that grasp the point are what he likes to hear, and he will quote you if he likes them."

Mr. Wick, a former Cleveland band leader who raised $15 million for the 1980 campaign for his friend Ronald Reagan before going into public service, takes his job seriously. Twice he has had to fly on the Concorde to Europe at ICA expense (and contrary to government guidelines) because of tightly-scheduled meetings.

"Nobody can tell me I can't fly the Concorde," he told the Washington Post. "I'm a director of this agency."

Without such support services, Mr. Wick would be unable to direct the ICA in its endeavors, which included earlier this year the television program "Let Poland be Poland," an extravaganza widely regarded as a political embarrassment. Mr. Wick's previous experience in production was the film he co-produced, "Snow White and the Three Stooges."

During Mr. Wick's tenure at the ICA, morale there has dropped and many employees have left, protesting among other things a directive that the Voice of America, the broadcasting arm of ICA, should become a "propaganda agency" portraying the Soviet Union as "the last great predatory empire on earth." Those that remain, however, have no doubt about how Mr. Wick wants them to attend to the business of government. Two other notations on the list circulated to aides: "Do not argue." And "Good Luck."

Another View:

Wanting it both ways

Surprise! A recent report from the National Governors' Association cited opinion surveys in three states showing that citizens wanted both lower taxes and more governmental services. So what else is new?

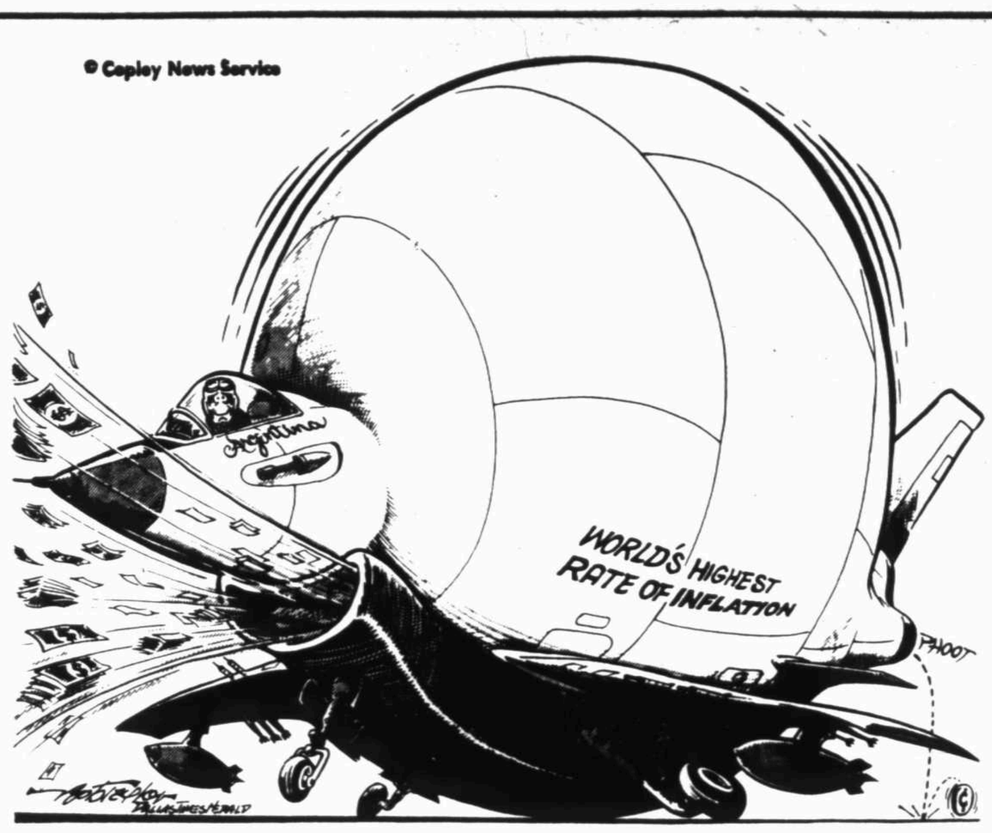

This "fundamental fiscal dilemma," as the association's Center for Policy Research termed it, showed up in separate studies in California, New Jersey and Maryland. The report concluded: "People do not appear readily to reconcile their desires for lower taxes and more services. And that is precisely what makes a modern governor's job so difficult."

Another significant result emerged in the California study. Despite 1978 voter enactment of Proposition 13, which drastically slashed the state's property taxes, and despite an easing of the income-tax bite since then, more Californians (78 percent) believe their taxes are too high today than felt that way (70 percent) in 1977. Only the chief target of their wrath has shifted, from the property tax to the income tax.

What's the message in all this? It seems to be that elected officials need to recognize that they are unlikely ever to keep taxpayers happy for long. So, public policy should be based on what is right rather than what may be popular or unpopular at the moment. There will always be a "most unpopular" tax, however often tax reform is enacted. Thus, reforms should be based on objective consideration of such factors as equity and revenue needs, rather than chiefly on the inevitable public dislike of taxation.

But as a practical political matter, how could elected officials proceed so rationally and still survive in office? Perhaps they could not survive, but they might have a better chance if they worked harder at explaining the essential link between valuable government services and the taxes necessary to pay for them.

CHARLEY REESE

U.S. foreign policy puzzles Americans

One of the most confusing questions bothering many Americans is how to construct a foreign policy. Should it be based on moral principles? Or should it be based strictly on our self-interest as a nation?

Charley Reese

What makes the matter so confusing is that nearly all governments, including our own, always phrase their policy decisions in terms of morality even when, in fact, they are based on naked self-interests.

Former President Jimmy Carter confused the issue even more when he proclaimed a foreign policy based on human rights. Carter's deception was that his was a peculiar definition of human rights and was applied on a highly selective basis. Rather than a moral principle it became merely a political tool with which to manipulate public opinion. Human rights were dragged out of the closet and applied to governments the Carterites didn't like (Chile and Nicaragua, for example) but were conveniently forgotten when it came to governments they wanted to appease or do business with (Nigeria and Panama, for example).

It is unreasonable to construct a human rights formula that is based on our Anglo-Saxon traditions of self-government. The democracies which really share our value system are those, with few exceptions, which are former British colonies or mandates. In many cultures and countries, individual freedom as we know and love it is not valued. There are no Moslem democracies, for example, and so far as I know, no great urge in the masses of Moslems to achieve one. They simply value other qualities more than self-government.

Even in Japan, where we tried to graft our Anglo-Saxon model on an ancient people, they have modified it greatly. Japan, despite its democratic trappings, remains a corporate state in which obedience, cooperation and loyalty are higher values than individualism.

To judge others on the basis of our own unique culture is to end up either hypocritical or lonely. A marriage in which one partner tries to change the character and personality of the other will fail. The key to a successful marriage is to focus on the relationship of the two individuals. In foreign policy, morality has to be. They are civilizations in the last stages of decay, having poisoned themselves with collectivism.

The future lies in the Western Hemisphere and in Asia. The next new world power will be Brazil. Argentina may not be far behind. For all of this century, thanks to the pro-British power structure in this country, we have ignored our own hemisphere to cater to the British and European financial interests.

Now, President Reagan has once more alienated those who should be our closest allies to support Britain's feeble efforts to hang on to the ghost of its colonial past. By the way, when the Panama Canal Treaty was being debated, the British lectured us about our "colony" in Panama.

Furthermore, we are allies of Argentina, as signers of the Treaty of Rio. Technically, Argentina is the aggressor, but the occupation came only after the British had thwarted Argentina's efforts to negotiate the matter for the last 20 years. Furthermore, the British acquired the islands by an act of aggression in the 19th Century.

As for the morality of the Argentine government, just remember that when you hear American leftists talk about its human rights record, the Argentines were fighting an all-out assault by communists terrorists who were attempting with murders, kidnappings, robberies and bombings to bring the government down.

Remember, too, that the Argentines were given orders to avoid if at all possible taking of British lives and did not during the occupation. This concern for human life has not been reciprocated by the British.

By siding with Britian, we have enabled it to start a war, but it's a war Britain cannot, in the long run, win, even though it may drive the Argentines off the islands for the immediate future. A nation which could not even afford to attack without our logistical support, certainly cannot maintain enough forces 8,000 miles from home to prevent the Argentines from re-taking the islands sometime in the near future.

A lot of people will pay, including us, for this stupid blunder. Reagan has handed the Soviet Union a bonanza of opportunities.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

GOP replacement reminiscent of Marston

WASHINGTON — David Marston was a United States attorney, with Republican credentials, who was fired by Jimmy Carter in 1978 for making things too hot for Pennsylvania Democrats. The case became a mini-scandal of the Carter era.

Jack Anderson

Now a reverse Marston case is developing in Iowa. A Democratic prosecutor is getting the boot, apparently because he has been too vigorous in his investigation of a Republican senator.

The federal prosecutor being kicked out is James Reynolds, one of the nation's senior U.S. attorneys. He has been relentlessly pursuing an investigation of Sen. Roger Jepsen, R-Iowa, for allegedly accepting illegal campaign contributions from the South African government.

What makes the situation particularly troubling is that serious questions of ethics and competence have been raised about Reynolds' chosen successor, Evan Hultman. A Republican, Hultman has the enthusiastic support of Jepsen and Sen. Charles Grassley, R-Iowa.

But legislators from both sides of the political fence have accused Hultman of botching a grand jury investigation of official corruption during an earlier term as federal prosecutor. In addition, Senate investigators have heard evidence that Hultman knowingly falsified his military medical records and then lied about it.

Both Hultman and Jepsen vehemently deny the charges against them. Meanwhile, the Justice Department has shown no enthusiasm for investigating the two Republicans. The halting progress of the probe has drawn bipartisan protests from Senators Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, and Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz. — both members of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

The FBI has obviously given the case something less than high priority. In all these months, the G-men have yet to interview the principal witness against Hultman about his medical records. Sources have told my associates John Dillon and Jack Mitchell that the witness is a professional Army investigator who reportedly has amassed a strong case against the U.S. attorney-designate.

With this background of uncertainty about the nominee, his consideration by the Senate Judiciary Committee might have been expected to be long and acrimonious. Instead, it was short and sweet.

Under the no-nonsense guidance of Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., the committee took just five minutes to vote on Hultman's nomination. The process would have taken even less time, but for the insistence of Sen. Hatch that there be a roll-call vote.

Strangely, two Democratic members of the committee, Edward Kennedy of Massachusetts and Patrick Leahy of Vermont, passed up a chance to raise objections to Hultman — even though the hearing room was packed with media people there to record other matters.

The two Democrats not only waived their opportunity to embarrass the Republicans in front of the TV cameras; they didn't even vote against Hultman's nomination. With Kennedy and Leahy voting "present," Hultman won approval on a 6-to-3 vote.

Jepsen appears to be well on the way toward his goal of replacing the bothersome Democratic prosecutor with an old Republican crony. But the senator might want to remember the aftermath of the Marston case four years ago. One of the most vociferous of Marston's opponents, then-Rep. Joshua Eilberg, D-Pa., later pleaded guilty to illegal acceptance of money for political favors. Getting rid of the prosecutor doesn't necessarily get rid of his prosecutions.

Footnote: Both Leahy and Kennedy said that they had been uncertain of the seriousness of the allegations against Hultman, but that they would take a closer look at the controversial nominee before the final vote on the Senate floor.

• • •

UNDER THE DOME: There's some quiet but persistent grumbling in the Senate Intelligence Committee these days. Some members are worried about the departure of deputy CIA director Bobby Inman, the questionable quality of information given to the committee and what they see as the increasing politicalization of the CIA.

Though Inman's successor, John McMahon, is a respected professional, there is still some fear that he doesn't have the stature to stand up to CIA Director William Casey. The crusty, old intelligence chief is still deeply mistrusted.

One problem seems to be the committee chairman, Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz. He has never been one for inquiring too closely into CIA business, now 73, Goldwater may not have the energy or the inclination to keep the agency in line. Recently, for example, he flatly denied a request from Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., for a full public hearing on the CIA's frequently unsubstantiated claims of communist aggression in Central America.

WATCH ON WASTE: Diseases that are brought to this country by Southeast Asian refugees pose a serious health threat — and cost the U.S. government more than $200 million a year for treatment. The maladies include tuberculosis, malaria, hepatitis, parasites and leprosy. Hoping that an ounce of prevention will cut down on the cure costs, Congress is considering a $3 million increase in the $2 million budget for screening refugees before they leave Southeast Asia for the United States.

— The Pentagon dishes out $700 million a year in bonuses to military recruits, and millions more on advertising. But it has overlooked a potential low-cost way to get more men and women into the armed services. Auditors found that of 61,000 applicants rejected on medical grounds, many suffered only from temporary or easily correctible disabilities — like overweight or underweight, or unhealed bone fractures. Providing help to correct these impairments would be a fairly cheap way to get these people into uniform, the auditors suggested.

INSIDE REPORT:

Regan contributing to Reagan transformation

WASHINGTON — Donald T. Regan's failure to make the May 10 cover of U.S. News & World Report is directly connected to Ronald Reagan's reluctant endorsement of a $95 billion blank check for Congress to increase taxes.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

The secretary of the Treasury was not on the cover because (to his own astonishment) he finished out of the top 10 in the magazine's ninth annual "Who Runs America" survey. It was no surprise to administration officials who have watched the former titan of Wall Street eclipsed by faceless White House aides in the shaping of the president.

Sanitized from outside contacts, President Reagan embraced the budget plan of Senate Republicans that confirmed the GOP's well-deserved reputation as the not-so-bright party: slicing Social Security and raising taxes in an election-year recession. Don Regan, the presumed counterweight to that conventional wisdom, was out of the play at the end.

Advice to Regan from Treasury staff experts that raising taxes is no answer to high interest rates was not even passed on, much less presented to the president with passion. The supply-siders enlisted by the Treasury 16 months ago have been supressed and might soon be gone. The Treasury has ceased to function inside the administration as an effective proponent of Reaganism.

That the president must rely on his own instincts and a few outside supply-siders to fight for his program is an irony. When budget director David Stockman's flaming meteor seemed to burn out in the Atlantic Monthly interview last November, Regan privately predicted a different future: Stockman would still crunch numbers, but Regan would make policy.

Since then, however, Regan has become the neutralized man in the Treasury. He has given way to White House chief of staff James Baker, who in turn has embraced Stockman's determination to cut defense spending and raise taxes.

Furthermore, Treasury officials have been lectured by the White House — without protective intervention from the secretary — that it is disloyal to tell the truth about the government's current cash flow. Admission of the fact that the deficit for the current fiscal year is running $13.5 billion below expectations would undercut the Stockman austerity campaign based on dolorous economic assumptions.

When the time came May 5 for Senate Budget Committee chairman Pete Domenici to get White House endorsement for his $95 billion tax increase, Baker and Stockman were on Capitol Hill to give the green light. The secretary of the Treasury was not present.

Nor was he in evidence in the preceding days when the president was convinced that the remedy for the economy was the tax-increasing prescription that had failed for presidents from Herbert Hoover to Jimmy Carter. According to White House insiders, the principal player was no Reaganite and no economic expert: shadowy, powerful Richard Darman, Baker's deputy and controller of the paper flow to the president.

Darman's clear field with the president was partially traceable to Stockman, who played a major role in keeping Rep. Jack Kemp (Stockman's sponsor for the budget post) out of the Oval Office while Reagan was being pressured. That substantiated U.S. News in rating the supposedly discredited Stockman ninth in national influence, to Regan's 12th.

When Regan last year seemed the stalwart champion of a forward-thrusting economic policy, he said he was merely carrying out the president's wishes. To be a great Treasury secretary such as Andrew Mellon, a constructive one like Douglas Dillon, or even an influential one like John B. Connally, requires shaping, not just acquiesing in, a president's policy. Instead, Don Regan's passive role has contributed to Ronald Reagan's exotic transformation into a tax-increaser.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Friday, May 14, the 134th day of 1982. There are 231 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history — on May 14, 1981 — Italian authorities charged a 23-year-old Turk, Mehmet Ali Agca, with trying to murder Pope John Paul II, who was shot and seriously wounded May 13, 1981, at St. Peter's Square in Rome.

Swallowing cocaine can result in death

Dear Dr. Solomon: I saw on television where a drug smuggler swallowed some cocaine when he saw he was going to be caught by the police. Do people who use cocaine ever swallow it? — Denny, Richmond, Va.

Dear Denny: Swallowing large amounts of cocaine can result in death. It has been reported that cocaine smugglers sometimes carry a few ounces of the drug in condoms; if capture by the police seems imminent, they swallow the condom and its contents.

In this fashion they hope to accomplish two things: First, to avoid arrest; secondly, to recover the drug later in the stool. The trouble is that the condom frequently breaks and this can lead to sudden death.

Dear Dr. Solomon: You have written about the dangers that premature babies face, but what about babies that are born later than they were supposed to be? Are there any dangers in this? — Faye, Tacoma, Wash.

Dear Faye: Pregnancies that continue past the estimated date of delivery do carry an increased risk of death and birth injury, particularly in women more than 30 years old. According to Dr. John W.C. Johnson Jr., formerly of the Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine, high-risk patients include women who never had a child, older women who have had two or more children, women who have had a previous pregnancy that continued past the scheduled date of delivery, and women with high blood pressure.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I know that women on the average live longer than men, but does that mean they are healthier? Of all the couples I know, it seems to me that the husband is at least as healthy as his wife. — Tom Bryan, Texas

Dear Tom: You make a good point. Dorothy P. Rice, director of the National Center for Health Statistics, notes that life expectancy, which is about eight years longer for women than for men, is only one indicator of health.

Women report illnesses and disabilities more often than men, and visit doctors more often. In addition, they tend to be hospitalized more frequently, even when hospitalization associated with childbirth is excluded. Women are also less likely than men to evaluate their own health as excellent.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.)

Army experiments with new anti-tank strategy

YAKIMA, Wash. (AP) — The Army is experimenting with a new anti-tank strategy that combines Cobra helicopters with quick, go-anywhere ground vehicles carrying deadly firepower.

"It's revolutionary," Capt. Dan Grigson said of the strategy, which uses modified dune buggies made in California and mini-tanks made by Porsche, the sports car manufacturer.

The concept is being demonstrated and evaluated in a series of exercises here this week, involving more than 10,000 soldiers at the Yakima Firing Center.

While the speed of the Army's current fleet of personnel carriers peaks at around 40 mph, the Porsche-made Wiesel cruises at up to 55 mph, Col. Ward Lutz said.

The Wiesel carries three to seven men and deploys anti-tank missiles and a 40mm automatic grenade launcher, he said.

"THOSE THINGS go like the wind across this sagebrush," he said. "They will provide us with a mobility factor double the enemy's."

In another experiment, strategists armed two stock dune buggies made by the Cenowth Corp. of El Cajon, Calif. — one with a guided missile system and one with a 40mm grenade launcher, said Maj. Corneil Terry.

"It goes anywhere, over volcanic ash, up hills, through lava rock," he said. "It has a Volkswagen engine so we can find repair parts almost anywhere in the world."

> "Those things go like the wind across this sagebrush. They will provide us with a mobility factor double the enemy's... It goes anywhere, over volcanic ash, up hills, through lava rockIt has a Volkswagen engine so we can find repair parts almost anywhere in the world."

The war games, dubbed operation Golden Blade, are designed to test how the new strategy would work if the United State were facing an enemy like the Soviet Union, with superior armor firepower in some theaters, Lutz said.

"We are creating the future division of the Army here today," said Lutz, a member of the team evaluating the Fort Lewis-based Ninth Infantry — the outfit designated to become the Army's first High Technology Light Division.

The light division concept is meant to counter the way the Soviets use their tanks and mechanized infantry units, he said.

"You've got to understand the way the Soviets fight," he said. "They echelon their forces. Their whole idea is to keep driving, driving and not stopping. You're dealing with overwhelming numbers."

TO RESPOND, Lutz said, you have "to play rat patrol," attacking the enemy's flanks and rear with speedy Cobra helicopters, anti-tank missiles and mobile personnel carriers, while giving ground and banking on enemy attrition.

Under the new fighting concept, the so-called heavy divisions — those including tanks and mechanized infantry carriers — would be beefed up with an air attack cavalry brigade, adding mobility and sustained firepower.

The traditional armored division consists of three brigades. The High Technology Light Division would consist of four — three on the ground and one in the air, Lutz said.

MHS CHATTER

MHS senior talent show success

MHS senior talent show was held last Thursday night. About 20 acts, lasting for about three hours, entertained the large crowd. Talent varied from impressions done by Todd Weiler to New Wave Music by Adam and the Ants. Braxton Glass and Ben Glenn performed marvelously as masters of ceremony.

Terry Moore, senior class sponsor, organized the event. Success can be attributed to hard work and dedication on her part as well as that of all participants.

Drama has concluded competition for the year. Through a first place rating at area, region and district, the drama department won its way to state competition in Austin. The one-act play, "Wings," received a fourth place at this competition, while Candi Baimbridge was awarded the high honor of best actress and Don Stroud received honorable mention. Good work drama!

Senior picnic was to be today at Cole Park. Johnny's Barbecue will cater the picnic. Only seniors will be allowed to attend. Games and various entertainment will be provided. Tickets may be purchased for $5.

Midland High Choir recently attended a National-International Music Festival in Denver, Colo. Receiving a superior rating in their division, the choir also was named as first runnerup. Music from the choir can be heard on May 21 at the spring concert, which will be held at 7:30 p.m. in Midland High Auditorium. Everyone's attendance will be appreciated and a small admission fee of $1 will be charged to help restore the activity fund.

Congratulations should go out to Pat Lewis for a superior rating in the Industrial Arts Show. Tom Gordon received an Excellent rating on his project and Lynne Wilson earned an Outstanding rating on hers. We are very proud of these students from the art department.

Ending the year with the honor of Junior Rotarian are Perry Taylor and Kathy Kernaghan. Lion for this week is Ling Lee.

Natural sleep factor found in 15-year Harvard studies

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

After 15 years of research, a team of Harvard University scientists has identified a naturally occurring human substance that appears to play a role in initiating deep sleep.

The chemical — called "factor S" by the scientists — has been isolated in extremely small amounts from human urine, but it appears to be an extraordinarily potent substance. The quantities needed to induce sleep in animals are measured in billionths of a gram.

The researchers, John Pappenheimer, Manfred Karnovsky, and James Kruger, have not tested the factor in humans and do not expect to for several years.

But in theory, it could prove to be an effective sedative, particularly because the scientists say that it does not seem to cause rebound wakefulness — a heightened insomnia that some researchers have said follows the use of some commonly used sedatives.

"Factor S" seems to fit the description of a natural, sleep-causing substance first discussed 70 years ago by French physiologist Henry Pieron.

Pieron suggested that sleep may be caused by a buildup of sleep-inducing chemicals in the brain during periods of wakefulness. In relatively crude experiments by modern standards, Pieron claimed to show that the spinal fluid from sleep-deprived dogs caused prolonged periods of sleep in other, rested animals.

His work was largely ignored until the 1930s, when a single group of researchers did similar experiments.

But it is only in recent years that scientists in several countries have been actively trying to identify a natural sleep factor.

"Factor S" is not the only candidate. Researchers in Switzerland and Japan believe they have sleep-inducers of their own.

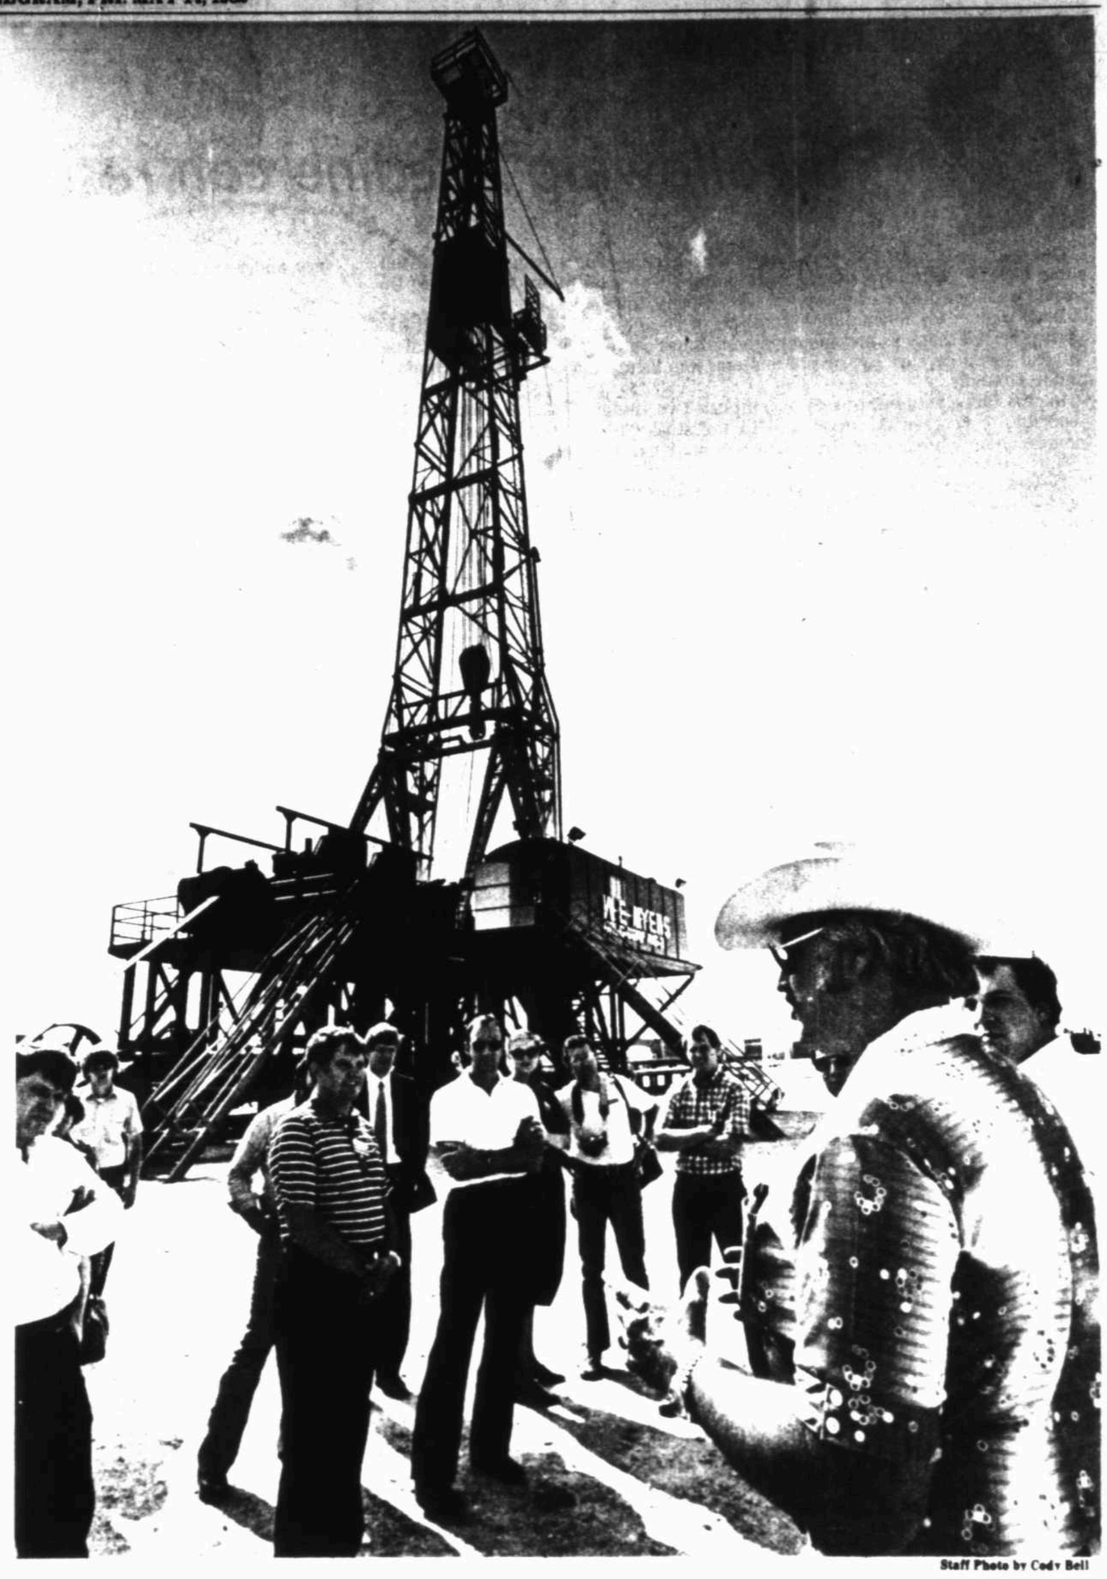

And, Harvard's Karnovskycon cedes that natural sleep may be caused by a number of such factors, perhaps acting in an orderly sequence.

And it is still not entirely settled that "factor S" has any connection to natural sleep.

The researchers reported that "factor S" can extend the sleep of animals such as rabbits, who sleep 40 percent of the time, to as much as 70 percent of the time.

Significantly, the animals then resume their normal sleep patterns, without periods of prolonged wakefulness.

Dr. Christian Gillin, chief of the sleep studies unit at the National Institute of Mental Health cautions, "I don't think we should reach any simple conclusion about a single factor."

Getting an on-site look at the oil industry, members of Leadership Midland listen to an explanation by W.E. Myers while taking a tour of Myers Drilling Yard on West Highway 80. Thursday's session focused on industry, agriculture, energy and the economy. The next session in June will see the group "graduating" from its year-long study of Midland.

DEATHS

J.D. Upham

RANKIN — Services for J.D. Upham, 70, of Rankin, were Thursday at the Northside Church of Christ in Rankin. Graveside services were to be at 2 p.m. today in the Hico Cemetery in Hico, directed by James Dennis Funeral Home in McCamey.

Upham died Tuesday afternoon of an apparent heart attack at his residence.

He was born May 21, 1911, at Graham. He had lived in Rankin for the past 28 years. He was a retired truck driver for an oil field company in Rankin. He married Nell A. Haynes Dec. 21, 1931, at Weatherford. He was a member of the Northside Church of Christ in Rankin.

Survivors include his wife, Nell, of Rankin; a son, Jerry Upham of Midland; a daughter, Alta Mae Petett of Hamilton; two brothers, Clarence Upham of Hamilton and William Lee Upham of Evant, and two grandchildren.

Johns W. Haynes

Services for John W. Haynes, 56, of 2910 W. Michigan, will be at 10 a.m. Saturday at the Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home chapel with Dr. Daniel Vestal, minister of the First Baptist Church, officiating. Graveside services will be at 3:30 p.m. at Oakwood Cemetery in Cisco.

Haynes died Thursday at a Midland hospital.

Honorary pallbearers will be Allan Haynes, Printus Burkhart, Tony Madrid, David Schmelzer, Rod Martin, Wayne Phillips, Dan Gotcher, Mark Haynes and John Haynes.

H.D. Williams

Services for Hermann D. Williams, 87, of 2304 Princeton Ave., were to be at 10 a.m. today at the Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home chapel with the Rev. Steve Edwards, minister of the First Christian Church, officiating. Masonic graveside services were to follow at 3 p.m. at Elmwood Memorial Park in Abilene.

Williams died Tuesday night at a Midland hospital.

Pallbearers will be Dr. H.B. Mills, Marvin Mills, Joe Burrell, Charlie Vertrees, H.K. Thomas and Paul Smith.

E.M. Lookabaugh

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA. — Edwin Maurice "Jim" Lookabaugh, 79, of Oklahoma City, Okla., and father of Edwin Lookabaugh of Midland, died Thursday in an Oklahoma City hospital.

Services will be Monday at 2 p.m. in St. Luke United Methodist Church with entombment in Resthaven Memory Garden, directed by Capitol Hill Funeral Home.

He was born June 16, 1902, in Watonga, Okla., and was a Mason.

Other survivors include two sons, one sister and 10 grandchildren.

Judge Hughes hospitalized

DALLAS (AP) — U.S. District Judge Sarah T. Hughes, who administered the presidential oath of office to Lyndon B. Johnson after the assassination of John F. Kennedy, was in serious condition Thursday in a Dallas Hospital.

Mrs. Hughes, 85, was admitted to the coronary care unit of Presbyterian Hospital May 5, said a hospital spokesman who asked not to be identified.

The spokesman declined to release any more information about the judge's condition.

The late Johnson and his wife, Lady Bird, were personal friends of Judge Hughes, and when Kennedy was assassinated Nov. 22, 1963, Johnson called her to give him the oath of office.

The hastily assembled ceremony took place at Dallas Love Field aboard Air Force One, as Jackie Kennedy stood by in a blood-splattered dress.

Man keeps toy soldier collection

By BOB MIMS
Associated Press Writer

BOUNTIFUL, Utah (AP) — While little Rich Mavin cowered with his mother in bomb shelters as German warplanes blasted their home in Plymouth, England during World War II, he wanted only one thing — toy lead soldiers.

But in its campaign to scavenge every bit of scarce war materiel, the British government had melted down everything — from wrought-iron fences to the molds from which artisans had once poured the tiny lead armies.

Now, 40 years later, Mavin has a collection of toy soldiers that, while not the largest around, includes lead models more serious collectors would envy. It is the realization of a childhood dream.

"Our house was blown up over the top of us," he said. "One of the big things then was playing in bombed-out buildings. I wished that I had some toy soldiers, but only the older boys had them."

Mavin smiles, opening a glass case containing his collection of Britains Ltd. 54mm lead soldiers.

"When the war ended, we came to America," he said. "The first of these soldiers I got was in a large London department store. I was seven years old."

Valued at nearly $3,000, Mavin's 200-piece army includes Swiss papal guards, hussars (horsemen of the Hungarian light cavalry), lancers, grenadiers, Irish pipers and Coldstream Guards, mostly from the British Imperial era. Some date back to pre-World War I and could be worth up to $70 each.

A gold coach, complete with horses and riders, would sell for $400 to a collector today. In 1959, Mavin bought one for $25. His latest acquisition, a set of eight Canadian foot soldiers wearing tropical helmets, cost him $110.

But Mavin says he doesn't buy the hollow-cast lead troops as an investment. The 42-year-old manager of installation and repair for Mountain Bell says that his hobby stretches back to the days when he'd look out his window in dread, knowing a full moon would bring German bombers.

"I guess all men's hobbies go back to childhood," he said. "Through play, my first toy soldiers were destroyed. When I was 10 or 11 years old, I talked my parents into sending to London for a catalog and getting more.

"I remember the first box that arrived in America," he said. "When I opened it, each soldier was tied down with string, and the smell of paint, metal and the cardboard came rushing out at me. You can bet I didn't go to school."

The interest has, not accidentally, found fertile ground in Mavin's children.

"I have a little boy who's very interested," Mavin says. "I'll take them out from time to time to clean them, and he's helped me.

"Since he was three years old, it's been his reward to go down and buy a Britains soldier of his own."

Mavin doesn't think that allowing children to play with toy armies leads to militarism.

"People wonder what it does to a little kid to play with these," he said. "But they're little lead soldiers that fall over and get set up for the next war.

"Kids understand, with direction from parents, the difference between human beings and toy soldiers on the ground," Mavin said.

The childhood fancy, born amid the rubble of war, has become a lifetime pursuit, he readily admits.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Cleaning rubber mats not easy

DEAR HELOISE:
I use rubber mats in my double kitchen sink to protect it from scratches. These mats are rather expensive and I've discarded too many in the past simply because they become stained.

I've tried scouring powder, bleach, ammonia, baking soda, and coffee pot cleaner to remove the stains. None of these worked. There's probably a simple solution. Please help! — Charlene Atz

+ + +

Unfortunately, there isn't a simple solution. Vinegar will help to remove some of the stains, especially any lime buildup, and soaking the mats in a solution of dishwasher compound, liquid chlorine bleach and hot water will also help diminish the stains.

Most times, though, restoring the mats to a new condition is virtually impossible. Even so, the treatments suggested should make the mats usable.

My thinking is that putting up with a few minor stains on the mats isn't as bad as having to live with a scratched sink or going to the expense, somewhere down the line, of having to replace it. — Heloise

OPEN BOTH ENDS

Dear Heloise: I always had a hard time getting tomato paste out of the can. Then one day, I found that if I opened both ends of the can, all I had to do was give the paste a little push with one of the lids and it came sliding out. As easy as that!

Then, too, it was easier to crush the can to save on garbage space. — Cindy Gruden

ICE BUCKET USE

Dear Heloise: How often do you use your ice bucket? The fancy ones are super for cookie storage — just be sure the lid fits tightly.

The cheaper plastic foam ones are great too, and will even keep the cookies or rolls warm for some time if you have just taken them from the oven. — F. Evans

SHADE RE-NEW

Dear Heloise: My fluted living room lamp shades were beginning to look dingy after a couple of years of use. Tried washing them but it didn't help, so I spray-painted them and now they look almost like new.

I used an inexpensive flat white latex paint which covered well.

If you try this, before you begin the project, be sure the shades are thoroughly dusted. — C.C. Tompkins

SAFETY FIRST

Dear Heloise: Approaching my 60th birthday, I had a nasty, painful accident. A vital bone in my foot was broken. The result was that overnight I changed from one who possessed the agility of a mountain goat (not even bothering to look up or down at steps) to one who became uncertain and very insecure on them.

So after tripping and slipping many times, I hit upon a plan that worked, and is still working for me.

I count each step as I descend and each step as I ascend. Each one — 13 steps! It's been ages and ages since I have misjudged a step and slipped! — Ruth Whityard

PANTS HANGING

Dear Heloise: Perhaps I'm the only person who didn't know that the best way to hang pants so that they stay on the hangers, even if you have to have them hanging on a rod in a moving car, is simply to lay the pants down so that the seams are even against each other and the creases sharp.

Take the hanger in one hand, lift up the top pants leg and slip the hanger in, folding pants leg over and down to crotch. Hold hanger up, and fold the other pants leg over.

Presto! Neat job, neater closet and no dumped pants. And, no messy creases in pants. — M.R.

Men! Let's hear your best household hints. Send them to Heloise, P.O. Box 32000, San Antonio, TX 78216. She can't answer your letter personally but she will feature the best ideas you gents submit in the Hints from Him section of her column.

WARDROBES THAT WORK

Clothing for men can be stylish, too

By MARY T. MILLICAN
Fashion Consultant

Mary,

I've been reading your column along with my wife and have decided to write you with my problem as well. I own several two-piece suits. They are all year round fabrics for this area, but since moving here I really have no reason to wear them as my job doesn't require that I dress that way. All of the suits are good, but some of them are outdated either by wide bell-bottoms, thick waistbands or large lapels. Is there any way to salvage all or part of any of these suits? Either I salvage them or give them up. Any help you might offer would be helpful.

You're in luck! Help is what I've got to offer! Let's begin at the bottom and work up. Take a good look at the trousers to each suit individually. If they fit well and the only problem is a wide bell-bottom or waistband, they can probably be altered. Chances are you may have to eliminate some of them, but fear not — they can be replaced by another color.

Now, try on each jacket and decide which ones you like — color, fit and fabric should be your major concerns. After you've made a decision on each piece, top and bottom — separately — put aside the ones you can't use or you don't want altered. As for the jackets there are several places in town that will cut down the lapels, and for the trousers, the bells can be narrowed.

Now you're ready to shop! Take the jackets with you and head for your favorite menswear stores. You'll be looking for style as well as color. Decide whether you want flat front, or front pleated slacks. Perhaps a couple of each for variety and for casual wear as well as "office wear." The colors should complement the jackets. For example: khaki, beige, blue pin stripe and off-white will all go with a navy jacket. All the beige family will also go with brown, forest green and burgandy jackets. If any of your jackets are plaid, you should stick to solids as much as possible in your slacks. Your shirts with a light pin stripe or muted plaid, combined with your solids will tie your new coordinated look together. One or two darker shades in a pant will take you full circle into fall. Good luck, and write to my post office box if you need further information or guidelines.

Send your questions, as well as requests for further information on wardrobe consultations to Mary T. Millican, P.O. Box 8878, Midland 79703.

Hospitals, patients join new 'wellness' trend

By BRUCE KEPPEL
Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

After the Christmas rush at his leather goods shop in San Francisco, Larry Fritzlan contemplated taking his usual long weekend in Mexico. Instead, he decided to go to the hospital.

Russell and Dorothy Rahe celebrated their 38th wedding anniversary at the same hospital last year after failing to find vacation lodging in Yosemite National Park.

Neither Fritzlan nor the Rahes had any known illness. Fritzlan just wanted to relax, stop smoking and learn "some new lifestyle things." The Rahes, both 67, just wanted thorough checkups for various aches and pains, and were willing to pay $1,100 for a three-day stay.

Whether they knew it or not, these individuals were part of a trend toward "wellness" care that's directed not only at the health of the patient but also the health of the hospital. Faced with high costs and empty beds, a number of nonprofit and investor-owned hospitals have jumped into a well-care business, to better utilize capacity and personnel. Others have joined the trend for other reasons.

"Those three days really were a revelation in living," marvels Russell Rahe about the couple's stay at the St. Helena Hospital and Health Center in the Napa Valley. He has converted to a non-meat diet and lost 15 pounds, and both he and his wife "feel good," he says.

For a number of years, St. Helena was almost alone in this new and profitable branch of the health business.

"What we're doing is building a fence at the top of the cliff instead of just parking an ambulance at the bottom," says Clyde Mundy, St. Helena's marketing director. "The most costly diseases being treated today are in part 'life style' diseases: hypertension, alcoholism, heart disease."

In recent years, other hospitals have moved into the field of treating "lifestyle diseases" in their pre-crisis states. The Universit of California, Los Angeles, opened its Center for Health Enhancement in 1978, 10 years after St. Helena began its first program, and will break ground this spring on a $1.25 million building to house the programs on an out-patient basis. Other universities — Harvard, Duke, Baylor and Texas among them — have entered the field even more recently.

And, according to health-industry observers, investors-owned hospitals, too, are beginning to follow the lead of these "wellness" pioneers, edging in first with drug-detoxification and alcoholism recovery centers, then broadening into stress management and other preventive medicine approaches.

But while the health goals of the hospitals may be noble, some critics say that the motivations are mainly monetary. A pattern of overbuilding in the last 20 years and tighter restrictions on government reimbursement programs for health care has led to high vacancy rates at many hospitals, leaving owners and administrators searching for ways to fill empty beds.

These critics maintain that alcoholism, obesity and other "lifestyle diseases" could be treated at far lower cost at specialized centers unburdened by the expenses of maintaining intensive care units, surgical blocks and large medical laboratories.

"I foresee a lot of hospitals getting into the chemical-dependency field," says Ron Youngren of the California Hospital Association. This will come about, he suggests, by hospital's "converting" unneeded beds in other medical fields to make better and more profitable use of existing facilities.

Jennifer Flinton, an official with American Medical International, which operates 74 hospitals across the United States and nine abroad from its base in Beverly Hills, Calif., says that her company is seeking to convince corporations that hospitals may be ideal for treating "lifestyle diseases" of employees. American Medical is experimenting with programs at two of its hospitals. Flinton says the facilities are called "health care centers," not hospitals.

Officials admit that the need for some hospitals to diversify stems in part from what California Hospital Assn. spokesman Ted Fourkas calls "the reimbursement crunch." As the federal government seeks to put a lid on soaring medical costs by limiting the amount it will reimburse hospitals for Medicare and Medicaid treatment, many hospitals find public reimbursement to be less than their cost, Fourkas explains.

The Health Insurance Association of America believes that many hospitals make up this shortage by increasing charges on private and insured patients. It estimated this cost shift at more than $4.8 billion in the last year.

The attraction to health programs thus varies according to each institution's needs and orientation. St. Helena, for example, found that health-improvement programs fit nicely into its founding as a rural sanitarium in 1968, says Terrence A. Hansen, director of health programs.

Since 1968, the stop-smoking program has been joined by others — weight management, pulmonary and cardiac rehabilitation, alcoholism recovery, personal health assessments. These programs added 72 health-care beds — in a separate, hotel-like wing away from ill patients-to the hospital's existing 120 acute-care beds.

So far, 4,000 patients have gone through the five-day stop-smoking program (cost $895), and 2,000 each in the more recent weight management and alcoholism-recovery programs ($1,750 for 12 days, and about $4,000 for at least 21 days). Another 180 have taken the two-year-old cardiac rehabilitation program (about $2,000 for nine to 12 days).

"Every dollar that comes into the health program makes another dollar available for the rest of the departments — food service, labs, clinics," Hansen says. "We have an operating budget of about $2 million, and we generate more than $1.5 million for the other departments."

Hansen acknowledges that some controversy exists over the need to hospitalize alcoholic patients rather than treat them at less expensive facilities or as out-patients.

But it is central to St. Helena's approach, Hansen maintains, that a person's living habits must be recast to effect permanent, beneficial change in "lifestyle diseases" and that a residential program, even including the patient's spouse, can be crucial to achieving long-term success. A person hardly leaves "cured" of such diseases, he says, but rather better equipped to achieve a cure. (And, in the case of alcoholism, the patient is also introduced to Alcoholics Anonymous).

Finally, some in the medical profession itself cast a cold eye on "wellness" programs. A spokesman for the Los Angeles County Medical Association observes: "Doctors have been telling people not to smoke, to control their drinking, to lose weight for years. They've been doing preventive medicine in that sense, and some day they're going to get good at it.

"If we could modify behavior," the spokesman adds, "we could cut the national health bill by half."

Mayor declares 'Retired Teachers' Day'

Mayor Thane Akins has issued a proclamation declaring Saturday to be "Retired Teachers' Day" in Midland.

Mayor Akins said, "The Midland Retired Teacher's Association represents the professional men and women who unselfishly dedicated many years of their lives to the education of young people. The members of the Midland Retired Teacher's Association, through their affiliations with state and national associations, continue to work for the improvement of education and the social, professional, and economic status of teachers."

Mayor Akins added that "members of the Midland Retired Teacher's Association, although no longer fully employed, continue to contribute their time and services in the community of Midland by actively participating in many volunteer capacities in our City's organizations, museums, clubs, hospitals and churches."

The mayor asked all citizens of Midland to join in honoring Midland retired teachers on Saturday.

Hints for the home handyman

Q. — I heard that there was a special kind of vinyl tile that never wears out and never shows marks of any kind, yet I have tried everywhere and nobody seems to have heard of it. They all say I don't ever have to worry about solid vinyl tile wearing out, but that nobody can guarantee that tile of any kind will never show marks, because anything can be damaged if certain things are dropped on it or dragged along it. Have you heard of such a tile? A friend of mine says he read it in a magazine about six months ago but doesn't remember which one.

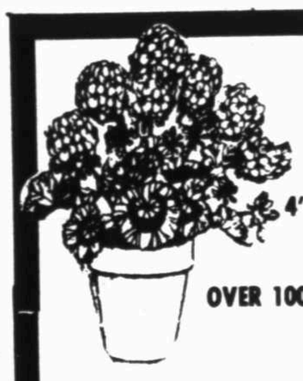

A. — The answers you were given were reasonably accurate. Present-day resilient floor tile of all kinds is more resistant than years ago, both as to wear and marks. This is especially true of solid vinyl and even more especially if the vinyl is embossed or otherwise textured, thus helping to disguise marks.

Q. — Within the next year, we intend to have a house built on property that we have owned for some time. Is it wise to act as my own contractor for the purpose of saving money?

A. — Definitely, no, unless you have had considerable experience in doing so. Even then, it can be a huge headache. The details and complexities are so many and so varied, most people who attempt the sub-contracting regret it sooner or later.

Q. — The terms used in stories about roofs and roofing materials are sometimes confusing. Can you straighten me out on what the various special words mean?

A. — All of them are in the dictionary. However, so that you and other readers will have them in one place, here are some: Coverage — the degree of weather protection by a roofing material; single, double or triple coverage. Deck — the roof surface or platform to which roofing materials are applied. Drip edge — weather-resistant metal edge installed along eaves and rakes to facilitate shedding of water at the edges. Eaves — parts of a roof that project beyond or overhang the face of the wall at the lower edge of the roof. Exposure — specifically, exposure to weather; the distance from the butt edge of one shingle to another. Felt — a building paper of strong, tough base saturated with asphalt. Flashing — strips of metal or roofing material used in making watertight joints on a roof, especially in valleys or where inclined and vertical surfaces intersect. Gable — the end of a wall of a building which comes to a triangular point under a sloping roof; also, a type of roof. Hip — an external angle formed by the meeting of two sloping ends of the roof, from the ridge to the eaves; also, a type of roof. Rake — the inclined edge of a pitched roof over an end wall. Ridge — the apex of the angle formed by a roof, or the peak, where the common rafters meet. Square — the amount of roofing material required to cover 100 square feet of roof surface. Valley — an internal angle or water runway formed by the intersection of two slopes in a roof.

Man 'beats the odds' of doctors' diagnosis

By DON TEWKESBURY
Hearst Feature Service

SEATTLE — Turning 60 years old can be a great feeling — especially for a man who had inoperable cancer and was sent home to die at age 37.

For Joseph W. Mayerle, the celebration of his 60th birthday marked another milestone in the life of a medical marvel.

In April 1959, surgeons at Veterans Administration Hospital here opened Mayerle's chest, removed one rib and took a look at his left lung. Then they stitched him back together and told Mayerle the cancer had gone too far. There was no hope.

Mayerle returned home to his two daughters and his wife, who was expecting another child in a few months. Though he bore up well, "he would get terribly depressed at times," his wife recalled.

Mayerle then read that former U.S. Secretary of State John Foster Dulles, another cancer victim, had died of starvation due to the illness. Mayerle determined that would not happen to him.

"Like most cancer victims, I also had lost my appetite, but I forced myself to eat," Mayerle recalled. He ate everything he liked and tried to eat a lot. Six months later he had gained 51 pounds.

"I don't think I've got cancer any more," he told his wife. I feel too good. I'm going back to those doctors."

Astonished doctors took three X-rays of his left lung before they would believe there was no trace of his "incurable" cancer. They sent him home to the biggest Thanksgiving celebration of his life.

Mayerle not only lived to see the birth of his third child — a son who now is 22 years old — but is watching two grandchildren grow.

The man who "beat the odds" even resumed his questionable habit of smoking a pack and a half of cigarettes per day. "If it didn't kill me then, why should it hurt now?" he said. But he finally did quit smoking "on the spur of the moment" two years ago.

Mayerle is only one of [illegible] about 40 persons in the United States who's [illegible] which are all negative and still talks with me about events leading up to the cure," said Mayerle.

Indian tribe seeks wealth, receives bitterness

By CHARLES P. WALLACE
Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

INDIO, Calif. — For years, in the bitter words of their tribal chairman, Art Welmas, the Cabazon Band of Mission Indians has struggled with a worthless legacy.

"We didn't have nothing," Welmas recalls. "We didn't have spit."

What the Indians had was 1,700 acres set aside as a reservation more than a century ago under President Ulysses S. Grant. But the land — about 25 miles down the road from the desert oasis of Palm Springs — was so barren that even the sharecroppers had moved away decades ago. On a windy day, tumbleweeds still skip over the sandy wastes of Cabazon Reservation like groups of ghostly bison.

When Welmas took over as tribal chairman in 1978, he was determined to change things. The 23 Indians in the Cabazon Band had dreams, a charismatic financial adviser and plans to make money. Big money.

They placed their faith in the reservation, not in its dubious natural wealth, but as an enchanting idea: a sovereign piece of federal territory that, they were told, was beyond the reach of state and local government.

"We were going to be rich, we were going to make $10,000 a week," says Linda Streeter, a member of the band. "We all saw dollar signs."

In less than three years, the Indians have seen their hopes, along with two major business ventures, founder on the rocks of bankruptcy, leaving them more than $1 million in debt. Their resources have been sapped by a dizzying array of lawsuits, and their neighbors in Indio are up in arms over allegations that the Indians have given organized crime a foothold in the town.

"We're in litigation with everybody," Welmas says with irritation.

The failure of the businesses — including a controversial reservation gambling casino — has left the Indians with a residue of bitterness that has split their tiny group into warring factions. The two sides no longer talk, except to trade charges in court.

The feud came to a painful climax last July, when a former tribal official was found murdered, along with two friends, in his ramshackle home. His relatives speak darkly about a Mafia contract kiling, but the murders remain officially unsolved.

The disillusioned Indians blame their troubles on a beefy white man named John Phillip Nichols, an engaging silver-haired expert on government grants, who became the tribe's financial wizard.

As the Indians have skidded deeper into debt, Nichols, whom everyone calls "doctor," his wife and three children have drawn salaries and fees from the Indians that some say have amounted to more than $100,000 a year.

With Nichols' guidance, the Indians started casting around for a way to exploit their land, which had remained stagnant as the town of Indio burgeoned around them. The palm groves that had sheltered the area's renowned date plantations had long since given way to industrial parks, franchise stores and rows of barracks-like condos spilling down such new streets as Greta Garbo Avenue and Abbott and Costello drives.

The reservation remained untouched by the golden wand of development. Isolated from the town by a Southern Pacific freight yard, skirted on its margins by the concrete expanse of Interstate 10, the reservation offered little except an unobstructed view of the Little San Bernardino Mountains, which glisten in the distance like a freshly tiled mosaic.

Only six Indians still live on the reservation, and parts of it have now become a grazing area for horses and a storage place for portable toilets. For most of the Indians, the only way to make money from their land was to sell it.

One of the Indians who still lives there is Joe Benitez, a 47-year-old sprinkler consultant who was the tribal chairman of the Cabazon for 12 years.

Benitez had met Nichols at the Riverside Indian Health Service, when Benitez was a director and Nichols was offering to help the group get government grants. Benitez says he was fired by the organization because of his friendship with Nichols, but he decided to bring Nichols to Indio to discuss future ventures.

Within months, Benitez was ousted as tribal chairman and Art Welmas was installed in the job.

Before Benitez was ousted, Welmas and others accused him of malfeasance as tribal chairman. Benitez denied the charges, except for admitting that he had pocketed about $500 in expense money.

When it came down to a vote, Benitez had almost no support. With the help of the newly enfranchised younger members of the reservation, Welmas was elected chairman with Nichols' blessing.

Nichols had been involved with Indian tribes in the past as a grant seeker with a company known as Pro-Plan International. One former client, the Gila River Indians in Arizona, sent a letter to dozens of tribes in the West warning that they had been duped by him.

An investigation by the U.S. Indian Health Service charged that Nichols' company had been involved in the collapse of health programs at four Indian centers and that Nichols' compnay kept most of the grant money it helped obtain.

With Nichols and Welmas firmly installed, the Indians moved ahead with their first business venture: a tax-free cigarette and liquor business similar to a duty-free shop in an airport. Since they were on federal reservation land, it was argued, Indians could avoid paying state sales tax.

Since the Indians had no money, Nichols formed a corporation with Al Perlman, the head of a Washington, D.C., drug company. Perlman said the cigarette business sounded like a sure-bet money maker, and he invested $175,000. Nichols' son, John Paul, was hired as the "project manager" of the smoke shop.

The cigarette business opened in 1979 and attracted nationwide attention, incluidng publicity in the National Enquirer. Mail orders poured in for the cheap cigarettes.

The Indians, who had started business in a small trailer, built a warehouse and opened a U.S. post office next door. According to Perlman's estimates, the business was earning a $3,000-a-week profit.

"It was a money machine," Perlman recalls. "It was a hell of a business."

Disaster struck after a year when the U.S. Supreme Court ruled in a similar case involving Indians in Washington that the states have a right to collect tax on cigarettes sold to non-Indians on reservation land. California tax men seized a truckload of cigarettes en route to the Cabazon smoke shop and sold them at auction for $16,000.

The Indians shut down the business. When it went under, according to a petition in federal bankruptcy court, the smoke shop had $473,024.55 in debts and assets of only $52,075.94.

Using the same theory of "sovereign immunity" behind the smoke shop business, the Indians decided to exploit another gray area of the law. They opened a gambling casino.

Days after the casino opened its doors, the Indians were raided by Indio city police. To the stern-looking police chief, Curtis R. Cross, and other city fathers, the Indians had gone too far.

In 1970, when the interstate highway came to Indio, the city government decided it needed access to the area beyond the highway. So the city annexed two square miles of land, including a portion of the reservation. The Indian land was part of the city of Indio, city officials said, and Indio did not permit gambling.

But, the Indians won an injunction in federal court against the city. The Cabazon Indian casino reopened.

As the casino continued in business, a small number of the older Indians became concerned about what was happening to the money. The parking lot was full of cars, many from distant states, the gaming tables and the bar seemed busy, but the members of the tribe had not received any money.

In May 1981, federal Judge Laughlin E. Waters ruled against the Indians. But he allowed the casino to remain open pending an appeal. The Indians had argued that they would lose their medical insurance if the casino closed, although court papers noted that the federal government provides free medical care to all Indians.

At about the same time, the tribal vice chairman, Alfred Alvarez, who was the security chief at the casino and had backed Welmas against Benitez, began to have doubts of his own.

According to Benitez and Streeter, Alvarez's sister, Alvarez complained about strange financial deals at the casino. He believed money was being skimmed from the profits, and told a local newspaper that his life was in danger. Alvarez was removed as the tribal vice chairman.

Benitez, Alvarez and another Indian, William Calloway, decided to consult a lawyer about filing suit to open the casino's books.

On July 1, 1981, when Benitez drove to Alvarez's home in Rancho Mirage for the trip to the lawyer's office, he found Alvarez and two other people, neither of them Indians, lying dead in the backyard. The three had been shot in the head with a .38-caliber revolver the night before.

Welmas immediately issued a statement denying tribal involvement in the slayings and suggested there was evidence pointing to outside involvement.

Alvarez's parents and sister told reporters that they believed the killing was an "execution" to stop Alvarez from talking. "There's no reason for a triple murder up there unless somebody was afraid," Streeter said.

The Riverside County Sheriff's Department investigated the triple slaying, but eight months later conceded that they have no suspects and a lot of possible motives.

In November 1981, Welmas wrote a letter firing Rocco Zangari as the casino manager. The tribe later charged that Zangari had brought in people of low moral standing to work in the casino against tribal rules.

In December, the casino company filed for bankruptcy in federal court in San Bernardino, listing debts of $567,000 and assets of $12,000, including the $22,000 in outstanding betting markers at the casino.

The gambling casino set up by the Cabazon Indian Band in the California desert was expected to bring them vast wealth, but it failed and left a residue of bitterness.

Antique or junque?

Send your questions about antiques with picture(s), a detailed description, stamped, self-addressed envelope, and $1 per item to James G. McCollam, P.O. Box 687, Dunedin, Fla. 33528. All questions will be answered but published pictures cannot be returned.

Dear Mr. Mc Collam: This silver tea service was brought from England by my husband's great-grandfather. It is marked on the bottom, "James Dixon — Brittania Metal — Electroplated."

What can you tell me about it? — C.B., Irvine, Calif.

Dear C.B.: James Dixon of Sheffield, England made your tea service. It is silverplate on Brittania metal (an alloy similar to nickel silver). It was made in the late 19th century and would be worth $300 - $500, depending on condition. It is very fine quality silverplate.

Dear Mr. McCollam: This dressing table is solid mahogany combined with mahogany veneer. I bought it at an estate auction for $300; it was described as being over 100 years old.

What can you tell me about it? — P.H.N., Rocky Point, N.C.

Dear P.H.N.: Your dressing table was made in the early 20th century. It is not old enough (100 years) to be an antique, but it is collectible. The value would be from $300 to $500, depending on the market area. Pieces like this are collected for their quality, not their vintage.

BOOK REVIEW: "Kitchens and Gadgets" by Jane Celehar, Wallace-Homestead Book Co., 1912 Grand Ave., Des Moines, Iowa 50305, $12.95 plus 75 cents postage or at your local bookstore.

If collecting 20th century kitchen gadgets is your bag, then this is a book for you. Corers, cutters, choppers, crimpers, cork screws, ad infinitum; they are worth as much as $14

Take this book and hit the flea markets. It's a better risk than playing the stock market.

Shower the bride, but give her an Umbrella Party Sandwich Loaf!

Shower the bride

Shower the busy bride but be sure everything's a surprise! That lends even more excitement to the happy occasion.

Even the food should be a surprise just to make the festivities complete. Two delicious dairy creations for the party can be a Cream of Gazpacho Soup, served chilled, with an Umbrella Party Sandwich Loaf. These foods can come to a luncheon or a light supper, whichever time is selected for the bridal shower. They can be made ahead, a help to the active hostess.

An Umbrella Party Sandwich Loaf is a clever variation on the traditional type because it's made with a round loaf of bread. It contains two layers of filling: one of hard-cooked eggs, Blue Cheese and dairy sour cream; the other layer of chopped ham, shredded Cheddar cheese, chopped celery and olives held together by more sour cream.

To decorate, make the "spokes" of the umbrella with pimiento strips and use halved egg slices for a pretty, scalloped effect.

UMBRELLA PARTY SANDWICH LOAF

14 to 16 servings

1 pound round loaf unsliced white bread
6 tblsp. butter, softened
Egg Filling (Yield 1½ cups)
4 hard-cooked eggs, coarsely chopped
¼ cup (1 oz.) crumbled Blue Cheese
¼ cup chopped pimiento
2 tblsp. dairy sour cream
2 tblsp. chopped parsley
½ tsp. salt
1/8 tsp. cayenne
Ham Filling (Yield 2 cups)
1 cup finely chopped ham
¾ cup (3 oz.) shredded Cheddar cheese
½ cup dairy sour cream
¼ cup finely chopped celery
¼ cup chopped pimiento-stuffed olives
1 tsp. dry mustard
¼ tsp. paprika
Frosting
2 packages (8-oz. each) cream cheese
¼ cup milk
1 tsp. white vinegar
Ham strips
Short pimiento strips
1 hard-cooked egg, sliced
Parsley
Celery stalk

For Egg Filling, blend together eggs, Blue Cheese, pimiento, 2 tablespoons sour cream, parsley, salt and cayenne in a small bowl. Cover and chill. For Ham Filling, blend together ham, Cheddar cheese, ½ cup sour cream, cream, celery, olives, mustard and paprika in a small bowl. Cover and chill. For Sandwich Loaf, remove crusts from bread; slice crosswise into three slices. Butter cut surface of slices. Spread Ham Filling on bottom slice of bread. Cover with second slice of bread. Top with Egg Filling. Top with last slice of bread. Cover with damp towel or protective wrap and chill thoroughly. Cut loaf in half to form top of umbrella and frost about 1 hour before serving. For Frosting, beat cream cheese, milk and vinegar in a small mixing bowl until fluffy. Spread on sides and top of each loaf. Decorate top of one loaf half to resemble an umbrella (can be used for centerpiece). Form 7 spokes with ham strips, place short pimiento strips in between spokes.

Create scalloped effect on the edge using halved egg slices with parsley garnish. Cut a short piece from the celery stalk for the tip of the umbrella; insert a wooden pick into rest of stalk and fasten to loaf for handle. Allow to stand at room temperature shortly before serving. Serve undecorated half first, cutting into wedges.

CREAM OF GAZPACHO SOUP

Yield: Approx. 10 cups

1 can (46 oz.) tomato juice
1 cup finely chopped cucumber
1 cup finely chopped green pepper
2 tsp. Worcestershire sauce
2 tsp. celery salt
1 tsp. onion salt
½ tsp. garlic salt
1/8 tsp. freshly ground pepper
2 cups light cream OR half and half

Combine tomato juice, cucumber, green pepper, Worcestershire sauce, celery, onion and garlic salts and pepper. Chill at least 4 hours. Stir tomato juice mixture into cream. Serve immediately.

She's out to dispel 'over 30' myth

By VINOD CHABARA
Hearst Feature Service

Elizabeth Martin is going all out to dispel the myth of "downhill after 30."

"All this secrecy about age and the feeling that your best years are behind you when you turn 30 or 40 or 50 is nonsense," says Martin. "The main problem is not age — it's the American lifestyle: too much sugar, salt, caffeine, alcohol, meat, foods with chemical preservatives, junk food snacking, lack of exercise, stress. Look around — two out of three Americans are overweight."

At 39, Martin is a head turner and her own best advertisement for her book, "The Over-30 Six Week All-Natural Health and Beauty Plan" (Clarkson N. Potter, $12.95).

Martin traces her success as a model and health instructor to her own decrepit lifestyle. She recalls, "Eighteen years ago I tried to get a modeling job with an agency. The director took one look at me and said, 'You'll never be a model, not unless you get rid of those heavy legs and lose 20 pounds.'

"So, there I was, 21 years old and already totally out of shape. I started exercising and went on a strict but sensible diet. In two months I had lost 25 pounds and had totally reshaped my body." That landed Martin the modeling job.

She then ran her own modeling agency and produced and directed health and beauty shows on radio and TV.

Martin's following grew when her prescribed regimen of exercise, massage and "sensible eating" helped women get rid of cellulite — those ripples of fat that resemble cottage cheese — most frequently in evidence on the thighs, hips and arms of overweight women.

"There is nothing so aging or debilitating as stress. It can produce falling hair, poor skin, premature lines and wrinkles, irritability, insomnia and serious ailments. Because we are constantly bombarded with external stimuli, it is mandatory that we learn to control stress if we are to look and feel our best and function at peak performance."

Martin says her plan is a "step-by-step total approach to implement natural health, beauty and energy into the over-30 woman's busy life."

Action furniture: Is it a new trend?

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

The ability of human beings to come up with new ideas on an old subject was demonstrated at the spring furniture market at High Point, N.C.

Many of the new designs showed that while art is still a major influence in furniture construction, technology is becoming more important. New developments suggest an era of action furniture is about to be launched. It was the rare company that did not show at least a few pieces combining multiple uses and movable parts.

Several firms, for example, introduced a new idea in cabinetry that employs an automatic lift device to raise and lower a shelf or storage compartment. Bernhardt Furniture's television, electronic equipment and record-storage piece is an example.

The cabinet, priced at about $2,400 retail, works on a kind of scissors device, according to a company spokesman. A push of a lever brings the storage compartment into view for use and another sends it out of sight.

Tomlinson Furniture had a similar mechanism in a bar-television cabinet and so did Thayer Coggin. Tomlinson also showed another piece that employed seeming magic — a lighted glass-fronted china cabinet with a touch-sensitive switch on the outside. To light or darken the display cabinet, one simply touches the panel, which is responsive to the heat and moisture of the skin.

Another example of furniture on the move is sleep sofas with inflatable mattresses. Pinnacle Furniture showed the sofas, but a company executive said other firms would probably offer them in the future.

The sofa opens in the conventional manner, but the thin mattress is inflated several inches for greater sleeping comfort. A small electrically-powered hand pump provides the air in about 45 seconds.

Tom Collins, merchandise manager, said comfort was the greatest advantage of what he called an "air flotation system" mattress. But a longer-lasting mattress may be another benefit. Pinnacle is offering the system as a $200 option in all its sofas.

Another development in sleep sofas known as the trifold mechanism makes it possible to build a longer 78-inch bed into a sofa, instead of the usual 72-inch unit. The trifold mechanism is not new. Europeans have been using it for years. But it was improved and widely introduced into the United States only in the past year or two, according to Leonard Eby, an executive with Super Sagless Corp., which offers one version of the unit.

The trifold mechanism makes it possible to fit a folding bed into a low-back or backless piece of furniture, such as a coffee table, ottoman or buffet cabinet.

Both retailers and manufacturers at the market, where new designs are introduced and ordered for resale several months later in retail stores, agreed the new sleep sofas meet an important new consumer need.

Many Americans are using such sofas every night, not simply as an occasional extra bed, according to Collins of Pinnacle.

Another area where technology is affecting furniture is home electronic components.

There is still room for creativity, but, at the least, consumers can expect wall systems, cabinets and armoires to be fitted with swiveling slide-out trays for television or record players, open backs for wires, and in some instances phone jacks installed in bed headboards.

One of the more interesting new wall systems came from a German firm. Planum's wall system, imported by Wernermeier Inc. of New York, features a ceiling-mounted track and several units that can turn a corner.

One corner-turning unit contains a fold-down table. The wall system has many storage options for household equipment, home-entertainment components or office supplies and, thus, can turn a bare room into a highly specialized functional space.

The system will sell for up to about $20,000 in the deluxe solve-any-problem installation.

Other examples of technological improvements to watch for in new furniture include new finishes and extension tables. One firm was showing a highly decorated wood-furniture group with the look of intricate hand-painted Chinese scenes on table tops and cabinet fronts.

Bernardt's Ni Chin wood-furniture group is not made in the traditional way, however. Instead, an etching process creates the raised design in a layer of synthetic material.

New extension tables shown by American of Martinsville owe something to technology and something to history. The tables store their own leaves and extend with a simple mechanical system. Though highly suited to today's small interiors, the tables are based on an antique that dates from 1840, according to Richard Simmons, president.

Kerria takes on a yellow shade

Los Angeles Times - Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — I am kept busy propagating a rather common and unexciting shrub, Kerria japonica, for people who (as the late Margery Fish used to say) are bent on chiseling off a bit.

I say "common and unexciting" because I have had it for years, and gardeners are very like Groucho Marx, if they have it in their garden, it can't be very exotic.

And yet I well recall decades ago when I first saw this bright, canary-yellow creature — golden quarters spangled the length of bright lime-green stems — in a Mississippi garden. I did not cease from whatever negotiations were necessary, and perhaps some chicanery, but that was long ago. I got it.

The kerria, member of the rose family but without thorns, and much given to making an arching shrub 4 to 8 feet tall, comes from China and Japan and was introduced in 1834. The first plants received in Europe were the full double form, like shaggy, small, yellow carnations or chrysanthemums along the stems. This is the old Jew's mallow. It is a festive, showy bush, which everybody used to grow in my boyhood neighborhood, and it was therefore rather despised.

But the one I am talking about now has single flowers, just five petals. It is my impression that it takes more shade than the double, and that it blooms off and on through the year a little more freely.

I grow mine beneath the branches of a pin oak, back of azaleas. The sun rarely strikes it, but the oak branches are high, so there is plenty of light.

The reason the kerria is where it is, against the south or entrance front of the house, is simply that I could not think of many good plants that would survive in dry shade, and besides I wanted the green stems to be there in winter. Indeed, they are just as cheerful on a January day as I expected they would be.

I did think briefly of the Kurume azaleas that clot up in mid-April like a giant's scrambled eggs in pink, white, scarlet and magenta. No fear, I said, since the kerria always bloomed in the old garden with the irises, when the azaleas are past.

Up here, in a different exposure, the kerria does not bloom with the irises, but with the azaleas. From the sidewalk, if you gaze past the seething azaleas and expect to find a soothing sight like a gray shrub, you are surprised to see instead a nice mass of Day-Glo yellow from the kerria. It is a lovely yellow, but it knows nothing of modesty. If you've got it, flaunt it.

It clashes with peculiar vibrancy against scarlet and magenta. One notable year it was assisted by the intense electric-violet flowers of a clematis, "Etoile Violette," which did little to subdue the riot.

This all shows, among other things, that it does no good to recall the precise average flowering dates of shrubs when you move from one garden to another. A slight difference in soil texture, in exposure, in the mini-environment can make a difference of two weeks, and while that does not seem worth bothering about, it can mean that all of a sudden the flaming canary begins to sing with the scrambled eggs, so to speak.

The effect does not strike everybody as awful as it does me, and as I say, a certain number of people line up in April applying for babies. An old kerria usually can be pulled apart, since it suckers a bit, otherwise, cuttings are grown from semi-mature wood. It grows fairly rapidly. A knee-high bush reaches 6 feet or so in a year or two.

If mine had a more favorable site, it would bloom off and on through the summer. In England, in fact, it usually has a few flowers on it at all times, but gardeners are always being fooled by reading such things.

Here, with our far more favorable climate for woody creatures, the stems get ripened hard, and our reward is a massive flowering the second half of April without much happening until the next April.

This is a common pattern with many woody plants we grow. The potentillas and hypericums, for example, bloom with us in one great rush in the spring, and later flowers are quite rare. But in England they bloom steadily through the summer. It can be a disappointment to plant a potentilla with continuous flowering in mind, only to wonder what you did wrong when no flower appears after May.

They have no heat over there. Thank God we do here. Another odd thing, when they grow the big Southern magnolia, M. grandiflora, it blooms over a period of many weeks, sometimes all summer into October. It never does that here.

On the other hand, their magnolias never have so many blooms at once that you can go out and fill washtubs with the blooms from one tree. Things even out.

But back to the kerria. Many gardeners find the five-petaled one handsomer than the double sort, just as some prefer pork chops to sausage. Both kinds are available in the nursery trade, which is not surprising since any fool can grow them, propagate them and (as I sometimes reflect ruefully when mine is in bloom) sell them.

Jawing around

Hearst Feature Service

Everyone in the tooth business, it seems, is talking "TMJ."

Although it sounds like a variant of transcendental meditation, TMJ (Temporal Mandibular Joint) syndrome is the name for a host of jaw and muscle disorders, ranging from an annoying popping in the ears to excruciating pain in the neck. Speakers on the subject are the stars of most dental medicine meetings this year.

Dr. Norman E. Lynn, a Seattle dentist who treats TMJ, says physicians and patients are starting to realize the jawbone's connection to a whole range of complaints.

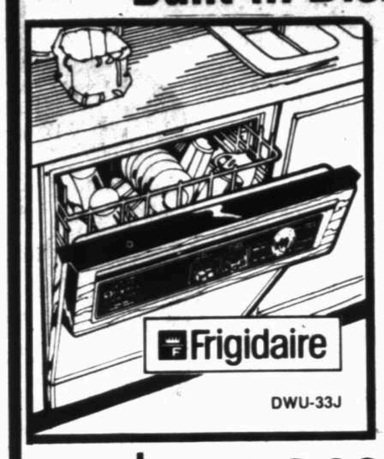

Until recently, Lynn says, TMJ was the least-explored area of dentistry. People suffering from facial pain, jaw clicking and soreness, tension, stiffness in the neck and shoulders, headaches, earaches and other symptoms generally went to physicians – not dentists – for help. And those physicians rarely referred patients to dentists, Lynn says.

Now more medical doctors and informed "medical consumers" are recognizing what is commonly known as "bad bite," he says. Aside from the jaw hinge, TMJ also involves the hammock of muscles that holds and controls the jaw, and are connected to the neck and face.

According to Lynn, TMJ could be congenital – the result of tension, causing you to grind away tooth enamel in your sleep. It could be missing teeth, which make your jaw "torgue" to the side to compensate when you chew. And, although Lynn is reluctant to say it, the cause could even be recent orthodontic work.

Whatever the case, he says, "What we do is try to get the lower jaw into a position that's compatible with a relaxed musculature."

Giving 2-year-old Lee Martin a helping hand are members of the Midland Shrine Club, from left, Gus Hicks and J.H. Beaty. The Shriners will be distributing free tabloids Saturday throughout Midland to inform residents of the organizations hospital facilities for crippled or burned children and to accept donations to support these hospitals. Lee is a Midland youngster who has been aided by the Shriners Crippled Children's Hospital in Houston.

Shriners seek support for special hospitals

To acquaint Midlanders with services provided by 18 hospitals for crippled children and three burn institutes, members of the Midland Shriners will don their fezzes Saturday and pass out tabloid newspapers throughout the city about the facilities. And during these actions, the Shriners will accept donations to ensure the continued support and operation of the hospitals, according to a spokesman.

These newspapers will be passed out by teams of Shriners located at the two Furr's Supermarkets on North Big Spring and North Midkiff Street; the two Safeway stores, one on Wadley and the other on Midland Drive; J.C. Penney, Dillard's and Sakowitz in Midland Park Mall; Walgreen's at Andrews Highway; Gibson's on West Cuthbert Avenue; M System stores on South Big Spring, Northland Shopping Center and North Midland Drive.

Saturday has been declared "Shrine Hospital Benefit Day." The 64,000 Shriners in Texas have provided a way for all citizens of Texas to participate in the "greatest philanthropy in the world" — that of providing continued free medical care for needy crippled and burned children.

Nationally, there are 18 Shrine hospitals for crippled children and three burns institutes. A crippled children's hospital is located in Houston and a burn institute is situated in Galveston.

Further information about the fund-raising paper handout can be obtained by telephoning the Acacia Lodge No. 1414 A.F.&F.M., 694-0704 Friday night or Saturday between the hours of 10 a.m. and 6 p.m.

Herpes possibly spread by toilet seats

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — The herpes simplex virus responsible for an epidemic of venereal disease in this country can survive for long periods of time on toilet seats, towels, clothing and medical equipment, according to a study by University of California researchers.

Dr. Trudy Larson, a research fellow and pediatrician at the Los Angeles campus, said her research appears to provide the first such evidence using herpes virus samples from patients.

The finding challenges the generally accepted wisdom that the genital form of herpes is communicable only through direct sexual contact. It raises the prospect that the disease may be transmitted through non-sexual means, without direct contact with an infected person, she said in an interview.

Larson stressed, however, that such a prospect is "very unlikely," but said, "I think the possibility exists." She added that no proof exists that such transmission is taking place, but urged that herpes victims and others take added hygiene precautions.

Dr. Paul Wiesner, head of venereal disease control for the Centers for Disease Control, questioned the public health significance of the findings, saying, "We don't have evidence that it is transmitted in that fashion."

Wiesner said that new adult genital herpes patients almost always have a history of recent sexual contact. Babies may also get a life-threatening form of the disease during vaginal birth from a mother with active herpes lesions.

Dr. Steven Straus, a National Institutes of Health herpes expert, cautioned that "just because the virus can be recovered from toilet seats doesn't mean it's presented in large enough amounts to be spread to someone else."

Larson agreed, but said that UCLA doctors have encountered genital herpes in children and adults in which no history of direct sexual contact with affected persons was indicated.

Herpes simplex viral disease occurs in two forms, with the best known, type 1, responsible primarily for fever blisters or cold sores in the mouth region. But in recent years another form, type 2, has been transmitted increasingly to the genital region sexually, causing painful, recurring sores.

Although symptomatic relief is available, there is no cure, and more than 300,000 new cases are reported each year in the United States.

The UCLA study was reported this week at a joint meeting here of the American Pediatric Society and the Society for Pediatric Research.

For the study, samples of both forms of herpes were taken from patients' genital lesions and transmitted to various surfaces. For even more realism, one genital herpes patient sat briefly on a toilet seat.

Larson and her colleague, Dr. Yvonne Bryson, collected samples and tried to grow them under laboratory conditions to see if they were still viable.

They found that the virus survived on the toilet seat from 1½ to 4 hours. On a medical instrument commonly used in genital examinations in doctors' offices the survival time increased to 18 hours. On cotton gauze the survival time was as long as 72 hours.

The virus even survived for an hour when transferred from a glove print to a plastic surface.

Because of the long survival period on gauze, Larson said she is most concerned about possible transmission of genital herpes virus on clothing and towels, particularly among roommates or families of individuals with herpes.

To be infectious, the virus would need to enter the body through open cuts on any part of the body or the mucous membranes of the mouth or genital area.

Larson advised herpes victims to pay attention to "good hygiene. They need to be more aware." She suggested using paper covers to provide added protection on toilet seats, and said bleach kills the virus in clothes.

Studies of new heart drug reach diverse conclusions

BOSTON (AP) — Two new studies examine whether a drug called sodium nitroprusside reduces the damage of heart attacks. One found it to be a dramatic lifesaver; the other concludes it doesn't help.

Although there were some differences in the way the two studies were conducted, it was still unclear why they reached opposite conclusions. Both tested the drug on heart attack victims to find out whether it reduced the number of deaths in the weeks following the seizures.

The positive results were obtained in a European study directed by Dr. Joseph D. Durrer of the University Hospital of Amsterdam. He found "a significant reduction in mortality." Only half as many people died during the first month of recovery after the heart attacks when they received the drug.

However, U.S. doctors working independently found the drug had no effect on the death rate after a heart attack. Their work was conducted at 11 Veterans Administration hospitals and directed by Dr. Jay N. Cohn of the University of Minnesota Hospitals.

Both studies were published in today's New England Journal of Medicine.

Nitroprusside has been used for several years as a way to treat extremely high blood pressure. The drug is given through intravenous solution, and it improves the flow of blood to the heart by opening up the arteries.

In an accompanying editorial, Dr. Eugene R. Passamani of the National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute in Bethesda, Md., noted differences in the experiments that might help explain the contrasting results.

In the U.S. study, all the patients had poorly functioning left ventricles, and they received the drug an average of 16 hours after their heart attacks. The European patients were largely free of ventricular failure, and they got the medicine sooner — an average of five hours after their attacks.

"Therefore, the Veterans Administration and European trial tested two different questions," Passamani wrote in an editorial. "Congruent results are not necessarily expected."

Passamani concluded that nitroprusside is unlikely to help if given many hours after the attack to patients with heart failure.

"Nitroprusside may be effective in reducing mortality when given early to patients without failure, but the jury is still out," he wrote.

The Europeans tested the drug on 328 men and women. Mortality a month after the seizures was 6 percent among people who got nitroprusside and 12 percent for those who took inactive substitutes called placebos.

The U.S. team studied 812 patients. After 13 weeks, the death rate was 17 percent among those in the drug group and 19 percent for the patients taking placebos.

Additive may cause 'asthma'

BOSTON (AP) — Two researchers responding to food industry criticism say they have more evidence that monosodium glutamate causes a dangerous breathing disorder they call "Chinese restaurant asthma."

Dr. David H. Allen and Gary J. Baker say they have located six people who suffer from this adverse reaction to the common food additive, which is often used in Chinese food. And they say its severity increases as the doses of MSG get bigger.

The researchers, who work at Royal North Shore Hospital in St. Leonards, Australia, first described the disorder in a letter published last November in the New England Journal of Medicine. In that report, they said two people had suffered "life-threatening" cases of asthma about 12 hours after eating MSG.

In today's issue of the journal, they disclosed the new cases in response to criticism from Dr. A.G. Ebert of the International Glutamate Technical Committee, an MSG trade group.

Scientists making space vehicles healthy place

By JOANN RODGERS
Hearst Feature Service

With the third of four planned test flights of the space shuttle orbiter over, and plans in place to make the Space Transportation System fully operational by late 1983, space travel will not only transport super-specimen jet pilots with years of special training, but workaday scientists and technicians. Later, as the space program expands, larger numbers of people will begin living and working in Earth orbit for weeks or months.

Even if NASA takes care to keep the obviously unhealthy out of space, it is inevitable that someone will need emergency surgery, break a limb, develop a dental abscess or become pregnant outside the atmosphere.

The jokes have already begun. "Is there a doctor in the orbit?" is typical. But NASA has taken serious steps to put earth-style medicine in its space vehicles.

Two approaches have been made. The first is geared to preventing problems peculiar to travel in space and in cramped quarters.

Among them, motion sickness. On Columbia's third mission, Marine Major Jack Lousma, a Skylab veteran, and Air Force Lt. Colonel Charles G. Fullerton succumbed to what has been nicknamed Space Plague. Lousma became sick at least once during the first three days of the eight-day mission. And one-third of America's astronauts have suffered nausea and other symptoms intense enough to reduce work efficiency.

NASA rules require any astronaut making a first flight, or one who has been sick in a simulator or previous flight, to take preventive medication. These include either a pill containing scopolamine and dextroamphetamine, or a medicated, self-adhesive skin patch that delivers scopolamine through the skin to the bloodstream.

THE SKIN patch, placed behind the ear, is now available commercially to earthbound travelers as Transderm-V from Ciba.

Investigators at the Johnson Space Center in Houston and NASA's Ames Research Center in Mountain View, Calif., are also exploring head motion exercises that condition the organs of balance in the inner ear responsible for motion sickness. Others are looking into biofeedback training to lower heart rates and the risk of nausea.

Personal hygiene is also a health concern aboard a space vehicle, and enormous attention has been paid to bathroom needs. Crewmen are supplied standard facilities and the orbiter has systems to process and purify waste material. A personal hygiene kit contains a toothbrush, dental floss, shaving cream, styptic pencil, skin creams, soap, deodorant, towels, washcloths and tissues.

In addition, the astronauts are furnished trash bags, odor absorbers, bacteria-killing detergents, all-purpose wipes and a vacuum cleaner.

The second approach to health maintenance is directed at in-space emergencies. Expert advice will be available by radio or television onboard, but astronauts may need to perform surgery or treat acute illness or injury.

All test shuttle flights have been equipped with SOMS — Shuttle Orbiter Medical System. The nine-pound boxes contain 110 items in neatly packaged envelopes.

Included are 16 injectable drugs, 27 pills and potions, a dozen more topical medications, a hemostat, a stethoscope, urinary catheters, a tourniquet, sterile gloves, forceps, G-tips, finger splints, Chapstick, aspirin, antacids, Robitussin Cough Calmers and Bandaids.

DR. ALONZO Bergman, chief of medical operations at the Johnson Space Center has directed training programs for the astronauts in the use of needles, saline, narcotics, antibiotics and tranquilizers.

In the event of injury, they can numb fingers or eyes with local anesthetics to stop pain, pull teeth, remove splinters, record blood pressure, immobilize fractures and treat everything from diarrhea and constipation to stomach spasms.

"They aren't ready for medical school, but they're good," Bergman has said. They can use oxygen masks, take stitches, wrap ankles in elastic bandages and clear a clogged airway. In the future, when non-astronauts begin flying, defibrillators, respirators and intravenous fluid systems will be included in the medical kit to treat heart attack and shock.

Passengers on flights can take comfort in all this preparation. But as many women have pointed out, NASA hasn't yet come to terms with "women's health care needs."

Now a German scientist may have solved that problem, too. H.G. Mutke of Munich has designed a light, transparent sack that inflates, via a foot-operated pump, into a full-fledged delivery room. Small magnets hold instruments down in zero gravity and elastic bands make an airtight seal around the woman to keep fluids and other materials (including the newborn!) from escaping and floating around the ship.

Navy cancels plans for aircraft carrier

Copley News Servic

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Navy has canceled plans for its newest nuclear-powered aircraft carrier, the Carl Vinson, to visit Brazil later this month, because of the Falkland Islands crisis.

The 95,000-ton Nimitz Class ship, the latest "Queen of the Fleet," was to have made her first overseas port call May 24-29 at Rio de Janeiro. A nuclear guided-missile cruiser was to have accompanied her.

Pentagon sources reported this as President Joao Baptista de Oliveria Figueiredo of Brazil spent his first full day of a three-day state visit to Washington.

The Reagan administration's backing of Great Britain in the battle with Argentina for the South Atlantic islands has alienated large sections of public opinion in Latin America. It was obviously decided that now was not the most propitious time for the United States to send one of the most powerful warships in the world to make a port call in Brazil.

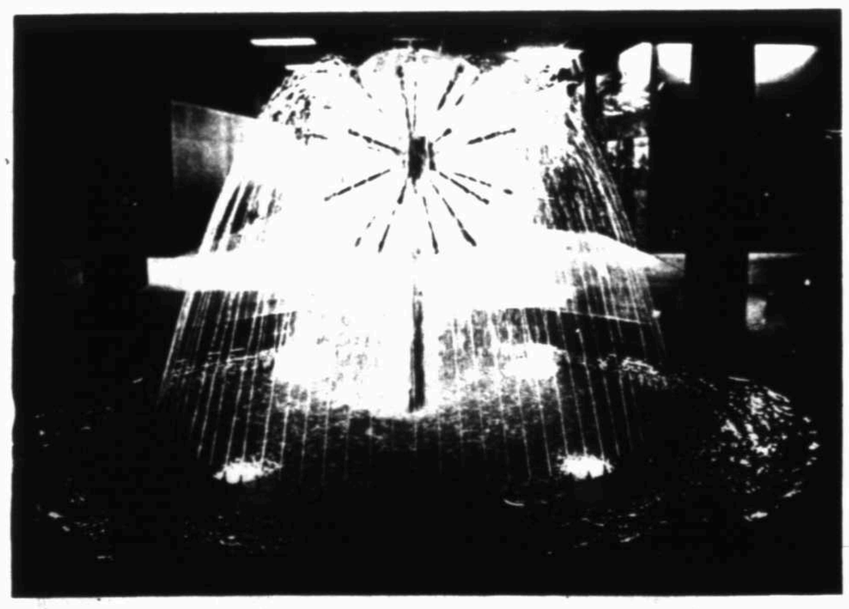

It was learned that Rear Adm. James E. McCardell, Jr., the U.S. defense attache in Brasilia, recommended that the Vinson visit be canceled. He made his recommendation to Adm. Harry Train, commander-in-chief, U.S. Atlantic Fleet, and the latter agreed.

The Vinson, America's fourth nuclear carrier, has been on exercises in the Caribbean and reportedly stopped briefly at the U.S. naval base at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba.

A carrier airwing normally consists of 90 aircraft, including F-14 Tomcat fighter-interceptors, E-2C Hawkeye early warning planes and A-6E and A-7E attack aircraft.

Officers at dead end in Pizza Hut slayings

MOUNT PLEASANT, Texas (AP) — Three people were questioned and cleared of any involvement in the shooting, stabbing and beating deaths of three pizza restaurant employees, authorities said Thursday.

Two men and a woman, who officers declined to identify, were questioned at the Texas Department of Public Safety headquarters here.

"They were among the last customers the night of the killings," said District Attorney Charles Mac Cobb. "They left the restaurant just before closing. They have been very helpful, but they have not been able to give us any more identification of any possible killers at this time."

Earma Brannon, a Mount Pleasant High School student, said the two men helped her with her Spanish homework before leaving the Pizza Hut Monday night. The bodies of the three slain employees were found early Tuesday morning.

"I didn't think it was them," Miss Brannon said. "They were too relaxed, and they had an 11-day-old baby with them."

Cobb said authorities were "following other leads, so we are far from at a dead end."

Conard Co. of Corpus Christi, owner of the restaurant, has offered a $5,000 reward for the arrest and conviction of the killers.

The company also promised to pay for the funerals of the three slain employees — Shirley Obier Thompson, 24, Howard Leroy McClaflin, 25, and George Dwaine Landrum, 42.

Autopsies showed Landrum was shot in the chest and beaten in the head and McClaflin was shot in the chest.

Mrs. Thompson was shot in the chest, stabbed and cut several times with a knife and beaten repeatedly in the head. A claw-hammer still was protruding from her skull, authorities said. Pathologists found no evidence of sexual assault.

Doctor describes Hinckley's 'inner world'

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL

WASHINGTON (AP) — A psychiatrist led a jury on a tour of John W. Hinckley's tormented mind Thursday and described "the inner world" that drove the brooding young loner to stalk former President Jimmy Carter and to shoot President Reagan.

Dr. William T. Carpenter said Hinckley's "mind was filled with thoughts of homicide, suicide, death and the end of the world."

He said Hinckley intended to kill Carter when he was campaigning in the fall of 1980, "but had not been able to psych himself up to do it."

Carpenter said that after the election Hinckley "lost interest in Carter and was now devoting his activities and thinking" to Reagan, then the president-elect.

Hinckley was in Washington on Dec. 8, 1980 when ex-Beatle John Lennon was murdered in New York, an event that Carpenter said "stunned him out of the stalking of President Reagan."

But in March, two months after the inauguration, Hinckley did shoot Reagan and three other men. He is on trial charged with attempting to assassinate the president and assault with intent to kill.

The psychiatrist said after seeing the movie "Taxi Driver" 15 times in 1976, Hinckley increasingly identified with the main character, Travis Bickle, who stalks a presidential candidate after he is rejected by a woman working for that candidate.

IN THE MOVIE, Bickle falls for a teen-age hooker played by Jodie Foster. Hinckley became obsessed with Miss Foster and traveled a number of times in the fall of 1980 to New Haven, where she was attending Yale.

The jury heard a 1981 "New Year's Message to the World" Hinckley recorded.

"I'm sitting here alone like I do every New Year's Eve," he lamented in a flat, expressionless voice.

"Anything that I might do in 1981 would be solely for Jodie Foster's sake. I mean that sincerely. I wanna make some kind of statement or something in her behalf. Just tell the world in some way that I worship and idolize her.

"One of my idols (Lennon) was murdered and now Jodie's the only one left," Hinckley said.

When he went to the Washington Hilton Hotel to shoot Reagan, Hinckley left behind a letter addressed to Miss Foster saying "I'm going ahead with this attempt now...because I just cannot wait any longer to impress you."

But despite his oft-repeated love for the actress, Hinckley also thought of kidnapping her and killing her.

"All I want her to know is that I love her," he said in the New Year's message. "I don't want to hurt her or anything. I, I can't hurt anybody really...It'd have to be some kinda final pact between Jodie and me. I think about that a lot. That's really all I think about."

CARPENTER SAID "On tape we capture what his mental life is about."

The psychiatrist said that Hinckley's life became so intertwined with the fictional Bickle's that he bought an Army fatigue jacket like him, purchased the same number of guns, sought out teen-aged prostitutes in New York — and stalked presidential candidates.

"It's another piece of evidence of how his inner world had gotten concocted," Carpenter said.

"By taking on the attributes of Travis Bickle, he finds himself in an intense pattern of traveling, stalking..."

The psychiatrist said Hinckley did not actually try to assassinate Carter when he stalked him in 1980 to Dayton, Ohio, and Nashville, Tenn.

Carpenter described how Hinckley's assault upon Reagan on March 30, 1981 was preceded by a gradual blurring of "reality and what is a concoction of his own mind."

Carpenter, who interviewed Hinckley 24 times since he shot the president and three other men, described a process of withdrawal that he said began when the defendant was between 7 and 9 years old.

Hinckley, he said:

—Invented a girlfriend that became so real to him that he bought new clothes in order to prepare for her "visit" with him in college.

—"BEGAN reading more and more the literature of bigotry" and formed an organization called The American Front "to bring the country to its senses to realize how minority groups destroy the rights of white Protestants.

—Thought the movie "Taxi Driver," "was speaking to him personally."

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Court of Criminal Appeals Wednesday rejected an appeal by Larry Dale Russell, convicted of three felony offenses in Ector County, that he had been placed in double jeopardy by one of the convictions.

Russell was convicted of aggravated rape, aggravated robbery and possession of a controlled substance. He argued in his appeal that the robbery conviction was obtained "in violation of the carving doctrine because it and the conviction for aggravated rape were obtained on the same evidence of aggravation."

The court's ruling, however, noted that it "abandoned the carving doctrine" in another case decided Wednesday, and said "it is clear that aggravated rape and aggravated robbery are separate and distinct offenses.

"Prosecution and conviction of both offenses, even though they have resulted from a single criminal transaction, do not violate the double jeopardy clauses of the Texas or Federal Constitutions."

The appeals court also upheld the burglary conviction and 10-year sentence assessed Jack Ray Cuzick in Ward County.

Cuzick had contended the trial court erred in failing to grant a new trial because his attorney did not call some witnesses who Cuzick wanted to testify, and because a potential state witness gave a juror a ride to lunch due to rainy weather.

The appeals court noted that the defense attorney had determined the witnesses sought by Cuzick "would not be beneficial, and in fact (would be) damaging" to his client's case. The court further noted that the potential state witness who gave the juror a ride did not wind up testifying and did not know his passenger was a juror.

In another decision, the court also upheld the misdemeanor DWI conviction in Schleicher County of Abelardo G. Fuentes, whose 30-day jail sentence was probated. He also received a $100 fine, which he contested on the grounds that there was insufficient evidence to show he was driving while intoxicated.

The appeals court ruling, however, noted that a Schleicher County deputy sheriff found Fuentes behind the wheel of his car in a vacant lot. The vehicle was in drive gear with its engine running and its headlights on. The car also was resting against a mound of dirt — with tire tracks leading from the road to the car and no footprints around the vehicle.

"The circumstances set forth above," concluded the court, "are sufficient to prove appellant's guilt." In upholding the conviction, the court ordered Fuentes to pay the $100 fine.

Nicaraguan bank leader resigns

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — The head of the Nicaraguan Central Bank, considered one of the key civilians in the Sandinista government and was largely responsible for keeping the country's increasingly desperate economy afloat, has resigned and left Nicaragua in an apparent dispute with its political leadership.

The departure of Alfredo Cesar, a young Stanford graduate who successfully renegotiated $900 million in foreign debt inherited by the revolutionary regime when it came to power in July 1979 is the latest in a series of high-level defections that have shaken the leftist government in Managua.

Cesar's resignation is likely to affect the Sandinistas' already-troubled relationship with the domestic private sector, and may raise questions among foreign bankers whose confidence in Nicaragua was to some degree focused on his personal credibility, according to informed Nicaraguan sources.

A terse official decree issued in Managua Monday said only that Cesar's appointment had been rescinded and he had been replaced as Central Bank head by former Deputy Planning Minister Luis Enrique Figueroa. Newspapers in the capital, subject to censorship under an ongoing government state of emergency, reportedly were instructed to print only the official statement.

The Nicaraguan Embassy in Washington said it had no additional information.

Associates of Cesar and informed sources reached Thursday in Nicaragua and the United States said he left Nicaragua several weeks ago on his honeymoon and later informed the government from outside the country that he did not intend to return. Located Thursday in Miami, Cesar said through intermediaries that he did not yet want to discuss his resignation or the reasons for it publicly. He is believed to have left the United States Thursday night for another Latin American country.

As the director of Nicaragua's International Reconstruction Fund in 1979 and 1980, Cesar was credited with attaining substantial amounts of foreign aid and investment capital for the fledgling government, as well as renegotiating the enormous Somoza-era debt, 75 percent of which was held by U.S. banks.

More recently, as central bank head, he has been a key figure in attempts to dispell mutual mistrust between the Sandinistas and the Nicaraguan private business community that has contributed to rapidly falling domestic production, unemployment and economic stagnation.

Although they maintain there was no immediate issue over which the break occurred, sources close to Cesar pointed to what they said was his growing frustration over what he felt was Sandinista politicization of the economy and a misplaced belief that the Soviet Bloc could be counted on to make up shortfalls.

There were no indications Thursday that Cesar intended to join forces with other prominent Nicaraguans who have left the country charging the Sandinistas have become increasingly authoritarian and protesting their close ties to Cuba and the Soviet Union.

Chief among them is Eden Pastora, the military hero of the 1979 civil war that overthrew the Somoza dictatorship and former deputy interior minister and head of the Sandinista militia. Pastora, who surfaced several weeks ago in San Jose, Costa Rica, has denounced the nine-man Sandinista directorate for betraying the ideals of the revolution and perverting its programs and has announced his intention to oust the government.

Almost from the beginning, the Sandinista leaders have denounced counterrevolutionary plots inside and outside the country and used them to justify tighter control. Although this caused concern among some supporters, the claims were given some credibility by the the establishment of commando training camps outside the country by Somoza partisans in exile. Recent months have brought an increase in commando attacks across the border from neighboring Honduras, and violent skirmishes with Sandinista troops, as well as incidents of domestic sabotage.

Although the Sandinistas have charged that former allies now outside the country, such as Pastora, are part of this plot, there is thus far no indication that he has been offered, or has any interest in receiving, U.S. assistance. Pastora's apparent independence, as well as his enormous popularity inside Nicaragua and the degree of personal loyalty he is believed to command within the Sandinista army, have made him a much greater threat to the stability of the regime than the exiles, according to Nicaraguans who are disillusioned with the leadership.

Pastora has been joined in Costa Rica by a growing number of defecting Nicaraguan military and police officials. He also is known to have been in contact with Alfonso Robelo, a Nicaraguan politician and businessman and a former member of the ruling Sandinista junta who fled the country last month.

Of the Sandinistas' original economic team, former Central Bank President Arturo Cruz, who later served in the junta and as ambassador to the United States, resigned from the government late last year and has not returned to Nicaragua. Last fall, Haroldo Montealegre, who replaced Cesar as director of the International Reconstruction Fund, resigned protesting the politicization of the economy and moved to exile in the United States.

Agriculture students in Juarez threaten to burn more vehicles

CIUDAD JUAREZ, Mexico (AP) — Students holding their director hostage along with 15 million crop-saving insect larvae threatened late Thursday to burn more trucks unless the government guaranteed more money for the school.

School director Rigoberto Delgado Perez, who has been held in his office for three days by an estimated 2,000 students, said the students burned two government pickup trucks when the Mexican agriculture department failed to respond to their demands by Thursday evening.

"I'm upset about it," said Delgado. "I don't see any reason for this."

The protesters took over the Hermanos Escobar agriculture school on the outskirts of Juarez and an insect laboratory in Zaragosa, six miles away, on Tuesday. Agriculture offices in downtown Juarez were taken over Wednesday and students used buses to block busy downtown streets around the offices.

The students say Mexico's secretary of agriculture reneged on a promise that would have meant nearly $5 million in additional funds for the school.

Delgado said the most serious threat was to 15 million insect larvae in the laboratory. The students threatened to turn off the insects' life support systems if their demands were not met.

The insects are raised in the laboratory and then released to devour boll weevils that would damage the area's cotton crop. If the students carried through on their threat to destroy the predator insects, it could cost farmers millions of dollars, Delgado said.

"I don't think they'll pull the plug on the insects as long as progress is being made," he said. "A leader of the farmers spoke to the students today and told them they would lose the sympathy of the people if they do not liberate these predator insects. It won't benefit anybody. But the threat hasn't been taken away."

Earlier Thursday, representatives of the protesters had planned to go to Mexico City to negotiate with agriculture department officials, but Delgado said those plans collapsed after the students found out the official they would meet with did not have the power to agree to their demands.

Delgado said he was calling Mexico City in an attempt to get concessions that would halt the student protest, but was receiving no response.

Juarez Mayor Jose Reyes Estrada said he had told police to keep an eye on the protesters but ordered officers to take no unnecessary action.

Student leader Hector Reyes said the students wanted to avoid violence, adding, "All we want is full fulfillment of the agreement."

The agreement signed March 19 provided for the school to be transformed from a private institution to a state university and for the agriculture department to give the school $4.82 million in cash and farm equipment.

The money, which is used to pay instructors, is given to the school on a monthly basis and is often late, Delgado said.

He said the school would run out of money later this month unless it received further subsidies from the agriculture department.

The department currently provides $858,000 of the school's budget.

The threatened truck burnings was the latest in a series of attempts by the students to gain leverage for negotiations.

The students also were holding three local offices of the federal department of agriculture, but were allowing staff members freedom of movement as long as someone stayed to act as hostage, Delgado said.

Haig in Ankara to 'talk Turkey'

ANKARA, Turkey (AP) — Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. arrived here Thursday for a two-day visit aimed at showing support for Turkey's military government and encouraging Turkey to ease long-standing tensions with neighboring Greece.

Haig, greeted by a military honor guard on his arrival, called Turkey "a valued, steadfast friend and an irreplaceable member of the NATO alliance."

Haig will fly to Athens on Saturday, and a senior official aboard Haig's plane said one of his goals in both capitals will be to promote greater understanding between the two North Atlantic Treaty Organization members.

But reporters were told Haig has no plans to attempt to mediate Turkish-Greek differences, which center on Turkey's continued military occupation of 40 percent of Cyprus and conflicting claims in the Aegean Sea.

Cyprus was ruled by the Mediterranean island's ethnic Greek majority until Turkish military intervention in July 1974. The Turks now rule the northern half of the island.

Turkish Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen told U.S. reporters accompanying Haig that Turkey does not seek an American mediating role but that "everything the allies can do to facilitate contacts with Greece would be welcome to us."

Haig, who postponed a previously scheduled visit last December because of the Polish crisis, was scheduled to begin formal talks here on Friday.

Turkey's 20-month-old military government has been increasingly criticized by the European Common Market for its repression of political and labor rights. But Haig has shown unswerving support for Turkey's announced plan to restore constitutional rule by late 1983 or early 1984.

Turkish officials believe Haig's support has served to neutralize the stand of the Common Market, which has suspended economic assistance to Turkey.

Turkmen told reporters that U.S.-Turkish frictions stemming from Turkey's invasion of Cyprus eight years ago have dissipated and that the relationship has "come into an age of maturity."

He said he is satisfied with levels of U.S. economic and military aid. But Turkish officials have privately expressed dissatisfaction with recent congressional moves to maintain what they view as unfair military assistance.

Last week the House Foreign Affairs Committee approved a Reagan administration request for an increase in military aid to Turkey but coupled that with an aid increase for Greece to maintain the balance. The military aid to Turkey was raised to $465 million for 1983 while the figure for Greece was set at $322.5 million.

Pope's assailant to be arraigned

LISBON, Portugal (AP) — A fanatic Catholic traditionalist enraged by church reforms launched by Pope John XXIII was to be arraigned today on charges of trying to kill Pope John Paul II.

After a day of interrogation, Lisbon police described the alleged attacker, Juan Fernandez Krohn, as a "determined, no-nonsense man who knew what he was doing."

But authorities said they believed the 32-year-old Spaniard's attack was "an isolated act without any conspiracy."

If convicted on the attempted homicide charge, he could be sentenced to 15 to 20 years imprisonment.

The police say the assailant, wearing a priest's cassock and with a 14½-inch bayonet in his hand, lunged at the pope from five or six yards away as the pontiff approached an outdoor altar during a ceremony Wednesday night at the Shrine of Fatima, 110 miles northeast of Lisbon.

Four security men overpowered the screaming man before he could reach the pontiff.

Portugese church officials said the pope blessed his attacker and "forgave" him.

The pontiff returned to the scene of the attack Thursday to say Mass before more than 500,000 pilgrims and thank the Virgin Mary for protecting him from assassination by Turkish terrorist Mehmet Ali Agca in St. Peter's Square exactly one year ago. He made no reference to Wednesday's attack.

Reports from police and church officials said Fernandez Krohn was ordained as a priest several years ago by maverick Archbishop Marcel Lefebvre. His ordination apparently came after the right-wing traditionalist archbishop was stripped of his own priestly duties in 1976 for defying the Vatican.

But the Roman Catholic Church still recognizes Fernandez Krohn as a priest. In canonical terms, his ordination by Lefebvre was "valid but illicit." Fernandez Krohn is barred from performing sacraments, but if, for example, he baptizes a child, the baptism is valid.

Lefebvre was punished by the church for continuing to use the traditional 16th century Tridentine Mass, which was shelved by the Vatican as one of the reforms enacted by the Second Vatican Council in 1962-65.

New court' sworn in Philippines

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — President Ferdinand E. Marcos swore in a "new Supreme Court" today with the same chief justice and 1 of the members who resigned in a bar exam scandal.

The president left out two of the justices involved in the scandal and appointed three new men, filling all 15 court seats for the first time ever.

The country had technically been without a Supreme Court since Marcos accepted the resignations Monday, citing the court's "tarnished prestige."

Marcos reappointed Chief Justice Enrique Fernando, who admitted "blurred judgment" in allowing recorrection of the exam of a fellow justice's son. Two other justices linked to the scandal — Ramon Aquino and Antonio Barredo — also were retained.

But the president did not reappoint Justices Ramon Perandnez or Vicente Ericta. Fernandez allegedly helped obtain the test booklet of Ericta's son at Ericta's request before bar results were announced, leading to a change in the youth's grade so he could pass.

In a low-key ceremony, Marcos swore in as new justices Conrado Vasquez, a former Court of Appeals judge; Lorenzo Relova, former Supreme Court administrator, and Hugo Gutierrez, a former assistant solicitor general.

There were no speeches during the ceremonies and no mention of Ericta, Fernandez or the bar scandal.

Some groups had urged Marcos to replace the entire court. Newspapers were full of speculation that prominent government officials might be added to the bench as Marcos called in dozens of people to consult on the matter.

One of the reappointed justices, Claudio Teehankee, said the court would consider a suggestion by Marcos that it review the test booklets of the several hundred bar applicants who flunked the exam.

Opening lead: Queen of ♣.

Declarer was unlucky to find a 3-1 trump split and a 5-1 spade split, but it wasn't difficult to guard against the actual distribution. If spades were no worse than 4-2, the contract could not be defeated unless trumps were 4-0 in the wrong hand. Therefore, after winning the first club trick declarer should immediately lead the ace-king of spades. If both live, declarer can draw trumps and claim his contract.

As the cards lie, West ruffs the second spade, but declarer is still safe. Even if West returns a trump, declarer wins in hand and he can still ruff three spades in dummy—the queen of diamonds on the table prevents West from scoring a second spade ruff with his remaining diamond honor. The ace of hearts takes care of declarer's club loser.

Rubber bridge clubs throughout the country use the four-deal bridge format. Do they know something you don't? Charles Goren's "Four-Deal Bridge" will teach you the strategies and tactics of this fast-paced action game that provides the cure for unending rubbers. For a copy and a scorepad, send $1.75 to "Goren-Four Deal," c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 259, Norwood, N.J. 07648. Make checks payable to Newspaperbooks.

Isn't it amazing how often r receiver will come up h an incredible catch and drop the next ball that thrown right into his ds? Like today's declarer, simply took his eyes off ball.

South's hand more than pensated in distribution any lack of high cards he ght have held for his de- nd opening. When North uld support his second suit ly, South leaped straight slam.

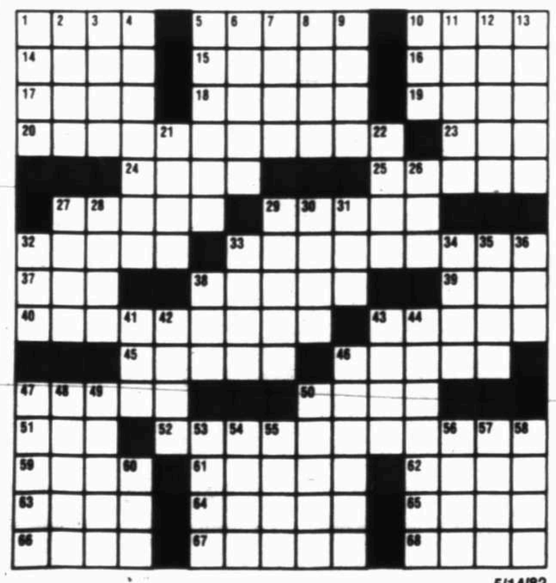

West led the queen of bs, and declarer was lighted with his dum- indeed, he was thinking terms of an overtrick. He on the king of clubs, cashed e ace of diamonds and con- ued with a diamond to the een. He was not unduly rried when East showed on the second trump.

Declarer led a spade to the g and tried to cash the ace spades. It was only when West ruffed this trick that declarer's predicament began to dawn on him. He had already lost one trick, and he had three spade losers and a club to dispose of in his hand, and only two trumps and the ace of hearts to take care of them. In the end,

Don Jose (Laurence Paxton) sings of his feelings to his love, Carmen (Paula Homer), in Tuesday's Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale's performance of the concert version of Bizet's tragic opera "Carmen." The concert, which was made possible in part by a grant from the Atlantic Richfield Foundation, closed out the symphony's 1981-82 season.

'Carmen' closes season memorably

A Review

When "Carmen" opened in Vienna in 1874, it was condemned as obscene. Less than 18 months after its opening, its creator, French composer Georges Bizet, died in Paris. He was 36 years old.

A child prodigy, Bizet's career was an erratic one. His inability to compose in the conventional mode of the time may have had much to do with his beginning many more works than he finished. His death, however, revived interest in "Carmen," and by 1883, less than a decade after his death, it was acclaimed as a masterpiece.

In 1982, it is still among the most popular of operas. Tuesday night the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale closed out its 1981-82 season in memorable fashion by presenting an abridged, concert version of "Carmen."

In opening its closing performance, the symphony, directed by Dr. Thomas Hohstadt, performed Hanson's Symphony No. 2 "Romantic," Opus 30. This work was followed by a performance of Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe," Suite No. 2. Both were executed with precision, presenting one of the symphony's finest hours during this season.

Solos during the "Carmen" production were performed by Paula Homer as Carmen, Laurence Paxton as Don Jose and William Rhodes as Escamillo. Narration and stage direction was by M. Caroline Canfield.

The role of Carmen was originally to be sung by Sandra Dudek, but, as Hohstadt announced immediately before the performance, "One day before our dress rehearsal we received a phone call from the lady who was to perform saying she was sick. We have literally been saved by Paula Homer."

Miss Homer, a teacher at Angelo State University at San Angelo, received her bachelor's degree in voice from St. Mary's College at Notre Dame, Ind., and Chicago Conservatory. She has two masters from Indiana University at Chicago in symphonic and operatic conducting.

Paxton, a member of the voice faculty at Hardin-Simmons University, is a graduate of Wesleyan University and the Indiana University School of Music. He has performed with the Metropolitan Opera, the Santa Fe Opera, Dallas Opera, Fort Worth Opera and the Rochester Philharmonic.

The "Carmen" performance marked Rhodes' third Midland-Odessa concert. His prior local performances include Beethoven's Ninth Symphony in the May 1981 Chorale Concert and Brahms' Requien in the March 1982 Chorale Concert. Rhodes has a master of music degree in voice performance and vocal pedagogy from Indiana University.

Miss Canfield is a drama and speech instructor at Angelo State University.

The production was effectively staged, with Miss Canfield doing a marvelous job of playing the gypsy narrator.

Miss Homer stayed consistently in character as the provocative, luring and dangerous Carmen. Although she has a nice soprano voice, she did not project it as well as she did the role itself. At times, her voice was simply not loud enough.

Such was not the case with Rhodes or Paxton. Both have very strong, vibrant voices. Rhodes has a commanding stage presence which, combined with his voice, stole the show.

TAME chapter chooses two scholarship winners

The Midland Senior High School Chapter of the Texas Alliance for Minorities in Engineering (TAME) held its first annual banquet recently in the Holidome banquet room.

Scholarships for outstanding academic acomplishments were awarded to Patty Robledo, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Carmen Robledo of 916 N. Fort Worth St., and Doris Nash, daughter of Mrs. Dorothy Nash of 601 S. Tyler.

Miss Robledo plans to attend Midland College and after completing two years, will transfer to Texas Tech University to major in chemical engineering. Miss Nash plans to attend Tuskeegee Institute in Alabama and major in biochemical engineering.

Guest speaker was Tony Gordon, director of exploratory wells for Conoco Oil Co. in Houston.

Special guests included Dr. James H. Mailey, Midland Independent School District superintendent; Dr. Duane H. Moore, MISD director of human resource services, and his wife; Jack Ervar, MHS assistant principal; Bill Hulbner, division engineer for Conoco Oil Co.; and O.D. Harris, district manager for Arco Pipe Line Co.

TAME, sponsored by Conoco Oil Co., was organized to encourage minority students to enter the field of engineering. Individually sponsoring the Midland chapter are Margaret Williams, MHS counselor, and Cedric White, engineer with Conoco Oil and Gas, Co.

Earlier in the year, members of TAME visited Texas A&M University and Texas Tech University for career days. Members also have participated in field trips to Texas Instruments and Conoco Oil Co.

Members attending the banquet with their parents were Patty Robledo, James Pitts, Doris Nash, Chris Conner, Anthony McDonald, La Nell Parker, Debra Jones, Elizabeth Colvin, Carlette Jones, Bouasavanh Sisoukraj, Poway Lee, Melissa Ochoa, Carmen Zuniga, Michael Gutierrez, Alfred James and Isabela Couto.

Lawsuit filed over 'On Golden Pond'

NEW YORK (AP) — A British company voided a contract granting rights to the movie "On Golden Pond" to a New York firm after the picture was nominated fo several Academy Awards, a federal court lawsuit claims.

The film, starring Katherine Hepburn and Henry Fonda, won three Academy Awards — best actor, best actress and best screenplay adaptation.

Golden Film Partners of New York stated in the U.S. District Court complaint that it purchased exclusive rights to the movie, including copyrights, from ITC Entertainment Corp. of London for $10.4 million.

But on March 15, after the Academy Award nominations were announced, ITC Entertainment sent a letter annulling the agreement to Golden Film Partners, according to the complaint.

The court papers accused Richard Kaplan, a Los Angeles attorney who allegedly represented the sellers, of willfully and intentionally failing to file the document assigning the film's copyright to the partnership.

Midland Lee pays tribute to 1981-82 athletes

Outstanding Athlete awards to Thompson, McGaha

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

In a year loaded with athletic standouts at Midland Lee, seniors Terry Thompson and Suzanne McGaha were honored at the annual Lee Spring Banquet Thursday night as the top performers during the 1981-82 school year.

Thompson, the giant linebacker who is headed to Texas A&M on a football scholarship, was named as the Male Athlete of the Year. Thompson was a three-year letterman in football for Coach Spike Dykes, earning All-District and honorable mention All-America honors in that sport.

Thompson was a two-year captain of the Lee football team and also lettered in track by competing in both the discus and shot put.

McGAHA lettered in three sports, one of three girls ever to do so at Lee. But despite her heavy work in athletics, she maintained school grades of better than a four point average.

In volleyball and basketball, McGaha received All-District and honorable mention honors. She also competed in track. McGaha will attend Texas Tech, where she plans to major in accounting.

Joining McGaha as Lee's first girls to win three letters in a single school year were Rozena McCabe and Felicia Farias. Farias was the first sophomore to turn that trick. McCabe is a senior.

All spring sports were recognized during the banquet and they all had fine moments to share.

In basketball Coach Paul Stueckler said the highlights of the season were a winning record, tying for the first half district championship, beating Midland High by coming from behind in the last two minutes and beating district champion Abilene High by a big margin on the road.

LEADING SCORER Alvin Dunson was noted for making the All-District team along with Andre Van Buren and Randy Pepper for making honorable mention.

Coach Shirley Stephenson's girl cagers also tied for the first half championship before losing to San Angelo in a district playoff. Shun Harris and Yshun King were All-District selections while Lurdes Duran was honorable mention. Harris was named the most outstanding girl basketball player. She missed the season scoring record held by Gale Wilson by 15 points and missed the season rebounding mark by Leshia Watkins by only six.

Track was another high point for the Rebels as six individuals and a relay qualified for the Region I meet and the relay squad qualified for state and will run this weekend in Austin. The relay team missed the banquet along with Coach Sam Volpe to travel to Austin.

The relay members are Damon Polk, Carlton Johnson, Troy Barber and Darren Williams. Williams set a school record with a 10.36 in the 100 meters and Polk tied a school mark in the high hurdles with a 14.2. Roosevelt Fort's long jump of 23-6½ was another school record and the team also scored 170 points in one meet for another school mark.

ASSISTANT TRACK coach Eddie Wolski made the track presentations and noted other Region I qualifiers were Isaac Garnett in the shot put, Luther Johnson in the long jump and Carl Piccolo in the 1600 meters.

Coach Ernie Johnson's baseball squad also had a winning season with a 16-13 record and finished strong in district play with a 5-2 second half mark. Barry Blackwell was selected as an honorable mention All-District choice. Johnson also noted that Coach David Browning's junior varsity team posted a 12-2 season.

Linda Caraway, girls track coach, noted that Lois Hall and Farias both were Region I qualifiers. Hall qualified in the 400 meters and Farias in the high jump. McCabe was the sport's first three-year letter winner at Lee.

It was also a good year in golf as Coach Chris Watson's girls placed second in district, winning a Region I tournament berth and three tournament firsts. Gayla Strickland was noted for leading the team scoring. Coach Van Tom Whatley's boys finished third in district play as Emil Hale was All-District and team captain.

Coach David Whytlaw went through his last official duties as the Lee swimming coach after eight years at the position by awarding letter jackets to his swimmers. He noted that the Lee girls placed second in district for their best finish ever.

IN VOLLEYBALL Coach Janice Baulch said the Lee team was one of the most successful ever. McCabe, McGaha and Pam Landers were All-District choices and Lesa Burnett was named Sophomore of the Year in 5-5A. Baulch was also Coach of the Year.

In gymnastics Coach John Hicks noted that Tod McDaniel and Richy Maley qualified for state. McDaniel is a three year letter winner and has qualified for the state meet twice. Girls Coach Mark Townzen noted that Pam Gordon was the first three-year letter winner.

In other related action, Ken Marks of the Lee Booster Club named Dewayne Parker as Booster of the Year.

Today's Birthdays

Kansas City Royals Manager Dick Howser is 46. Boston Red Sox first baseman Tony Perez is 40. Chicago Cubs pitcher Dick Tidrow is 35. Toronto Blue Jays outfielder Hosken Powell is 27.

George is not all bad to everyone

Not everyone considers New York Yankees' owner George Steinbrenner the blackguard he is painted to be by players, press and fans.

Managers and coaches, as long as they don't have to work for the Cleveland shipbuilding magnate, have been known to secretly envy and admire the Bronx tyrant.

It's a day when managers are little more than perfunctory appearance-sake necessities, whose main function is to make out the daily lineup card without ruffling the feathers of the strutting ostriches they oversee. Managers, nowadays, are vestigal appendages of what was once inviolate authority...unless you, of course, are talking about an Earl Weaver.

THE PRIMARY function of today's manager is to keep a low profile and stay out of the way.

Offend a player with criticism or a fine for an impropriety and the manager is faced with a "you-or-me" showdown, or a "How-much-do-you-make?" challenge to do something about it.

It's an untenable situation for a manager, prompted by escalating salaries, and one in which the beleaguered manager is far more expendable than a disgruntled player, who may jump ship at the first sign of abuse from the coaching ranks.

So George may be a demanding, scolding ogre, a reminder of the days of ruler-wielding school teachers, but he is paying the bills. He's the one guaranteeing lifetime security, but he wants more than the customary one year of production accepted by the other owners who seem satisfied to refer to that 20-game season in '75 for consolation.

WHEN GEORGE makes the team come to spring training early, or keeps 'em after class to work on conjugations and publicly rails at the players' failures afield, Steinbrenner has envious admirers among managers and coaches elsewhere, who wish they could do the same.

Life on the inside, perhaps, is something else. Win or lose, the Yankees remain the most talked about, written about team in baseball. One former player wrote a book called the Bronx Zoo, in which he depicted his life as a Yankee. Yankeedom is a study of turbulence and inner strife.

Although he may take a different view of the goings on in the core of the Big Apple, now that he has been fired twice by George, Bob Lemon, back in 1977 when he was an amused bystander managing the White Sox, said, "I can't wait to pick up the newspaper every morning and see what happened to them the day before. It's like watching 'Mary Hartman, Mary Hartman.'"

In 1974, Bill Virdon was named American League Manager of the Year. A year later he was gone in favor of Billy Martin, who was to win a pennant the following year.

PROOF THAT George has a compassionate nature, contrary to popular opinion, he didn't fire Martin after the Yankees lost four straight to the Reds in the Series. Instead, he bought Reggie Jackson and Don Gullett and fired Billy during the next season after a dispute with Jackson in which Billy said that "They (George and Reggie) deserve each other. One's a liar and the other is convicted." The latter was a reference to Steinbrenner's conviction on making illegal corporate political contributions, for which he drew a two-year suspension from Commissioner Bowie Kuhn.

OF COURSE, LIKE any good soap opera, the plot thickens and becomes more complicated with the passage of time. Someone is always falling off the managerial merry-go-round. Reggie, who couldn't wait to get to New York where he could get some recognition, is gone after Steinbrenner made him second-banana by signing Dave Winfield to a bigger contract. Now, Winfield is mad at George for publicly criticizing his inability to produce homers.

So much has happened that folks forget that George was just one of a 17 member syndicate who purchased the Yankees in 1973, declaring at the time that "we're all equal partners."

George, the mild-mannered rube from Cleveland, dazzled by the big city's bright lights, added, reassuringly, "I'm not buying into baseball for any profit. I love New York and I've always had a tremendous amount of respect for the Yankees. I'm looking forward to coming to town just to see the games. I hope I'll be able to buy a seat."

Steinbrenner also promised he didn't plan to take an active part in running the club. "We plan," he said with a straight face that would have done Jack Benny proud, "an absentee ownership. We're not going to pretend we are something we aren't. I'll stick to building ships."

Chaps fifth in NJCAA tennis tourney

OCALA, Fla. — With the finals still left to play here today in the National Junior College Women's Tennis Tournament, Indian River has nailed down the national championship.

The tournament, however, ended a day early for the Midland College Chaparrals as the last of the MC competitors fell from competition. The Chaps did finish fifth in the competition following Indian River, Tyler Junior College, Miami Dade South and Cooke County. Cooke County finished just ahead of MC in the Region V meet a week ago in Midland.

Today's finals will have no bearing on the team standings, but individuals will be seeking national titles. The only Western Junior College Athletic Conference members left in today's finals is the New Mexico Military Institute's doubles tandem of Yoshida and Healey. They are not competing in the team portion, however.

MC'S NO. 4 singles player Kym Somerville did advance to the semifinals before dropping a 6-1, 6-4 decision to Axandra Weller of Indian River. Somerville and Weller were tied a four-all in the second set with Somerville serving for the lead. However, Somerville double faulted as Weller broke service and then went on to close out the match.

MC's No. 1 doubles unit of Liz Alvarado and Karen Mannheimer lost to the Indian River team of Tower and Hauptman 6-1, 6-2, in the quarterfinals. MC's No. 2 doubles team of Somerville and Jodi Wertenberger also fell in the quarterfinals by losing to Cooke County's Reed and Larsen by a 6-4, 7-5 margin.

"Despite the early finish, I am pleased with our team," said MC coach Leon Dulin. "Three of our four players are freshmen, so we have three good players to start with next year and they have experience in the nationals. Karen Mannheimer is the only sophomore on the team."

The Chaparral men will trek to Ocala May 24-28 for the men's national tournament, so Dulin will be getting a lot of the Florida sun this month.

Cubs take two from Drillers, 4-1, 4-3

Midland above .500 for first time

TULSA, Okla. — For the first time this season, Midland can boast a winning record.

Thursday night, the Cubs took two from Tulsa, 4-1 and 4-3 to up their season mark to 16-14 while handing the Drillers their ninth loss in the last 10 games for an 11-20 record. The only win Tulsa managed in those games was a series-opening win over Midland, 8-4, on Monday night.

Newly wed pitcher Doug Welenc, who just got back from his honeymoon, went the distance for the Cubs to record a 4-1 victory to up his season mark to 4-3. The Drillers were only able to produce one run from seven hits off Welenc with the lone tally coming from Dan Murphy's home run over the left field fence in the first inning.

While Welenc was working to keep runs from crossing the plate, his teammates were busy scoring the runs needed for the victory.

Mike Kelley and Joe Carter came up with back-to-back doubles over Tulsa center fielder Shake Moore's head in the top of the first to take a 1-0 lead. Henry Cotto, who reached first with a single, scored what turned out to be the winning run when Carter added an RFI triple to his stats in the third.

In the fifth inning, the Cubs didn't manage to score any runs, but they knocked Tulsa starting pitcher Tom Henke off the mound for reliever Daryl Smith. Before leaving however, Henke had loaded the bases and with one out, Smith came in to get Carter and Carmelo Martinez to pop up to the infield to save the inning.

Part of what he saved in the fifth, the Cubs got back in the sixth and seventh.

Carlos Lezcano collected a single off Smith in the sixth inning, went to second on a wild pitch and came home on Dave Owen's double. In the seventh, Kelley reached first on an error and went to second when Carter walked. Fritz Connally's single in left-center brought home Kelley for the Cubs final run of the game.

In the second half of the doubleheader, the Cubs came up with two runs without ever hitting a ball out of the infield.

Cotto led off the inning with an infield hit and went to second when Kelley beat out a bunt for a hit. Carter then advanced both runners when he beat out his own infield hit to load the bases.

Tulsa starting hurler Marty Leach got Martinez to strike out and then watched two Cubs score on an error. The play began when Connally hit to third baseman Tracy Cowger, a new arrival to Tulsa from the Texas Rangers' farm club in Denver, who threw to Ron Gooch at second for the force out while Cotto scored. Gooch's throw to first in the double play attempt was wild and Kelley came in with the second run. If the Drillers could have turned the double play, Midland would have come up empty and the outcome of the game might have changed.

Tommy Dunbar put Tulsa on the scoreboard with a home run to open the fourth inning and cut the Cubs lead to 2-1, but Don Hymn negated that shot with a solo blast over the left field fence in the fifth for his first home run of the season. Connally made it 4-1 in the sixth when he connected for his 10th round tripper of the season, a 400-foot shot that crossed 15th Street and came to rest at the back door of a house behind the ball park.

Tulsa's last runs came in the bottom of the sixth when Cowger hit a two-run double with the bases loaded. Jim Gerlach came in to relieve starter Carlos Gil who got the first out of the inning, intentially walked Jerry Neufang to reload the bases and then got Mike Jirschele to strike out when he bunted a two-strike pitch foul. Gerlach got Bobby Ball to ground out to end the inning.

The Cubs will try to hold on to extend their winning record by one more tonight when they close out the current series againt Tulsa. Randy Clark, 1-0, will start on the mound for Midland against Tulsa's Mike Mason, 0-4.

Linkage favored to win Preakness

By ED SCHUYLER JR.
AP Sports Writer

BALTIMORE (AP) — Linkage, who did not run in the Kentucky Derby, is favored to beat seven other 3-year-olds Saturday in the Preakness, the second race of the Triple Crown, which is being called The Broken Crown in some quarters.

Injury and illness forced several hopefuls, including Timely Writer and Hostage, to miss the Derby May 1, and trainer Henry Clark skipped the famed race with Linkage, who has won eight times and finished second twice in 10 career starts.

Now Gato Del Sol, the Derby winner, is waiting at Belmont Park for the final race of the Triple Crown — the 1½-mile Belmont Stakes June 5. He is the first Derby winner to miss the Preakness since Tomy Lee in 1959.

"Next to rain on Preakness Day, this is the worst thing that can happen to me," Chick Lang, general manager of Pimlico, said about the Derby winner not being here. Ed Gregson, Gato Del Sol's trainer, decided the Preakness didn't fit his schedule, just as Clark decided the Derby didn't fit his schedule for Linkage.

The weather forecast for the Preakness does not call for rain.

While the Derby winner will not run, there will be five Derby starters in the 13-16-mile Preakness, which is one-sixteenth of a mile shorter than the Derby.

Back for another dose of Triple Crown competition are Laser Light, Reinvested and Water Bank, second, third and fourth, respectively, in the Derby; the filly Cupecoy's Joy, who set the pace for a mile in the Derby, then finished 10th, and Bold Style, who finished 16th.

Making their Tripie Crown debuts are Aloma's Ruler and Cut Away.

Reinvested, who races in the colors of Louis Wolfson's Harbor View Farm, was not nominated to the Preakness and had to be supplemented into the race for $10,000.

If eight start, the 107th Preakness will be worth $282,400, with $212,400 to the winner. Both are Preakness records.

Post time is 5:40 p.m. EDT, with ABC to televise from 5 p.m.-6 p.m.

"I worry about all of them," Clark said of Linkage's rivals. "You got to run around that race track. There's a lot of luck."

But while Linkage, the early 7-5 favorite, has had good luck in his career, he also has a lot of ability. In his last start, he won the 1⅛-mile Blue Grass Stakes at Keeneland by 5½ lengths over Gato Del Sol.

Linkage, owned by Mrs. Jane duPont Lunger, who races as Christiana Stable, won both of his starts as a 2-year-old. The son of Hoist The Flag opened his 3-year-old campaign with a second in an allowance race, then won four straight, including the Black Gold and Le Comte handicaps at the New Orleans Fair Grounds, before finishing second by three-quarters of a length to El Baba in the Louisiana Derby.

He rebounded to win the seven-furlong Forerunner Purse and the Blue Grass, then came north to await the Preakness, a race that was won by Clark's grandfather, William Jennings, as owner-trainer of Dunboyne in 1887.

Bill Shoemaker, who has won more than 8,000 races, will ride Linkage in a bid for his third Preakness victory. The 50-year-old Shoemaker won with Candy Spots in 1963 and Damascus in 1967.

Linkage will start from the No.6 post, but post positions should not be a factor with only eight horses in the race.

Before Majesty's Prince drew the outside in the 19-horse Derby, trainer Joe Cantey said, "The only thing post positions are good for is to give you an excuse after the race." Majesty's Prince finished ninth, while Gato Del Sol won from the No.18 post.

Linkage's top challengers appear to be Laser Light, Reinvested and Aloma's Ruler.

Laser Light, owned by the Live Oak Plantation of Dr. and Mrs. John Weber, and ridden by Eddie Maple, is winless in four starts this year. But he ran a fine race in the Derby and could take advantage if Linkage, who should run near the lead, gets involved with a fast pace.

Laser Light, who won the 1⅛-mile Remsen last year, finished third in his 1982 debut, seventh in the Florida Derby when trainer Pat Kelly tried blinkers on him, and third in the 1⅛-mile Wood Memorial and Derby.

Reinvested, ridden by Don MacBeth, won the 11-16-mile Budweiser Tampa Bay Derby, then finished fifth in the Wood before his good third in the Derby.

Nathan Scherr's Aloma's Ruler, ridden by 16-year-old Jack Kaenel, youngest Preakness jockey in modern times, won four of five starts last year. He began 1982 with an impressive victory in the seven-furlong Bahamas. Then he wrenched an ankle while training for the March 6 Flamingo and didn't race again until finishing second in a six-furlong allowance at Pimlico April 29. He earned a berth in the Preakness by winning the one-mile Withers at Aqueduct last Saturday.

Water Bank, owned by Max Gluck and ridden by Marco Castaneda, won the Gold Rush and finished second in the California Derby before his fourth in Kentucky. The only victory in seven 1982 starts for Len Mayer's Bold Style, ridden by Leroy Moyers, was in the mile and 70-yard Rebel Handicap.

Cupecoy's Joy, owned by Roberto Perez and Robert De Filippis, finished third against colts in the 11-16-mile Jim Beam-Spiral Stakes before her Derby 10th. She will be ridden by Angel Santiago and carry 121 pounds, five less than each of the others.

Cut Away, owned by Herbert Allen and ridden by Jerry Bailey, won a 11-16-mile allowance race at Churchill Downs on Derby Day.

The Preakness field in post-position order is Reinvested, Cut Away, Water Bank, Bold Style, Laser Light, Linkage, Aloma's Ruler and Cupecoy's Joy.

Rangers receive gift from Blue Jays, 4-3

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — The way the Texas Rangers have been playing this year, they're not above accepting charity. And that is exactly what they got against Toronto.

The Blue Jays committed six errors and a balk Thursday, giving the Rangers the game, 4-3, with an unearned run in the ninth inning.

"I have no pride," said Texas outfielder Billy Sample. "I'll take eight bloop hits anytime."

Three of Toronto's errors were by shortstop Alfredo Griffin. Two of those came in the ninth inning, including the one that decided the game.

"Once in awhile, Alfredo gets one of those nights," shrugged Sample.

"Those were some of the breaks we haven't been getting," added teammate George Wright, who scored the winning run. "When they (breaks) come, they come in bunches and you've got to take advantage of them."

Wright reached base on a fielder's choice in the ninth inning, stole second and went to third when Toronto catcher Ernie Whitt threw the ball into center field.

With two out, Sample dribbled a roller to Griffin for what should have been the final out of the inning. But Griffin's throw went wild.

"I'll take it, I don't care," said Texas Manager Don Zimmer, whose team is off to its worst start ever.

Heafner leads CNI, Nicklaus, Palmer close

By BOB GREEN
AP Golf Writer

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Vance Heafner has the lead, but two of the greatest golfers the game has produced — Jack Nicklaus and Arnold Palmer — are within striking distance in the $350,000 Colonial National Invitation golf tournament.

"Early in the week, I thought I was feeling the vibes — I get a little nervous, my stomach gets a little upset, I get a little anxious — that I might be ready to play a little better," said the 52-year-old Palmer, who won this event 20 years ago.

"It's probably the best I've played this year," Palmer, the current national seniors champion, said after a solid, 2-under-par 68 in Thursday's rain-delayed first round. "Maybe we can make a reasonable week of it."

He was three shots back of Heafner, a third-year tourist and the 27-year-old son of the late Clayton Heafner, who won this event in 1948. Heafner finished his round of 65 just before darkness. The start of the day's play was delayed 4½ hours by violent thunderstorms that dumped some three inches of rain on the Colonial Country Club course and produced temporary flooding.

Nicklaus was only one off the pace and tied for second with second-year tourist Lennie Clements at 66.

"I have to credit a couple of shots to Steve," Nicklaus said of his 19-year-old son, who is caddying for him. "Just as an experiment, I'm having him help me read the greens."

Nicklaus, holder of a record 17 major professional titles, has been plagued by poor putting in his last few starts and, for the first time in his career failed to qualify for the final two rounds in three of his last four starts.

His 4-under-par round marked an end to those troubles, however, and represented his best score since January.

"I don't know," he mused of his career first experiment in seeking help reading the greens. "maybe it'll help."

In any event, he's in position to challenge for the title in a tournament he has yet to win and in which he has not played for seven years.

"Obviously, I played well," said Nicklaus, who missed only two greens. "And what I hoped would happen did happen — I putted well."

Heafner, a non-winner, was very much aware of Nicklaus' closeness.

"It would be something very special to win this one, but we've played only one round," he said, positions of Nicklaus and Palmer.

"Wouldn't it be great for the tournament, on the last day to have them coming down the last two holes together, fighting for the lead? Wouldn't that be great?"

He paused a minute, smiled and added, "and maybe with me just tagging along in the three-some."

Tied with Palmer at 68 was a group that included Tom Kite, PGA champ Larry Nelson, Dave Eichelberger, Andy North, George Archer, Barry Jaeckel, Woody Blackburn, Jim Booros, Joe Inman and Brad Bryant.

Ripley strong as Cubs win 8,000th

HOUSTON (AP) — Chicago's Al Ripley needed some good luck on the 13th day of the month and he found it in the silent bats of the Houston Astros.

It was also a banner day for the Cubs as a team. They won their 8,000th game, most of any club in professional sports, broke a 12-game Astrodome losing streak and extended their win streak to four in a row over the Astros.

Ripley, who had been struggling in the bull pen with an 11.32 earned run average, got his first start of the season Thursday night and combined with Lee Smith for a 5-0 three-hit shutout victory over the Astros.

The personal triumph came none too soon for Ripley.

"I was told that with the numbers I was putting on the board I should be packing my bags and checking out," Ripley said. "But because of the work I had done, they gave me a couple of starts to see what I would do."

What Ripley did was retire the first 11 Astros and yield only a pair of hits to Ray Knight and Terry Puhl. Smith then took over to start the seventh and retired nine in a row and gave up only a pinchhit single to Danny Heep.

Cubs Manager Lee Elia said Ripley had earned another start in the rotation.

"He had the normal problem of pitching in the middle innings," Elia said. "You don't get enough pitches to get any kind of groove. It was just a matter of giving him the ball and letting him get out there and throw."

The Cubs supported their pitchers with a two runs in the second off Astros starter Joe Niekro, 3-3, on run-scoring singles by Bump Wills and Keith Moreland. Ripley's single plated another run in the third. Leon Durham drove home a run in the fifth and in the seventh, Wills walked, stole second and third and scored the final run on Moreland's sacrifice fly.

Abila stops Flores in four

FT. WORTH — Midland's Richard Abila improved his professional boxing record to 5-0 Thursday night by stopping Carlos Flores, 6-4, at 2:49 of the fourth round here.

According to Abila's manager, Rick Fleetwood, the 121-pound Midland bantamweight "took control of the fight with hand speed. Flores threw a lot of punches, but he was throwing round houses from his side. Richard threw down the middle, left jabs, straight rights and countered with hooks. Flores wanted to slug with him, but Richard would hit him three or four times and then move and go to work with head and body combinations."

With about 2:30 gone in the third round, Abila tagged Flores with a right to the chin that put the 122-pound San Antonio fighter to the canvas for the first time in his professional career and went after him in the fourth until the referee stopped the fight at the 2:49 mark.

It was also the first time Flores failed to go the distance as a pro. Flores was against the ropes with Abila hitting him at will when the ref stopped the fight.

The fight, which was televised on ESPN and should be replayed a couple of times today and Saturday, was Abila's last scheduled for six rounds. His next bout, which is still to be determined, will be an eight-rounder and will probably be held in about three weeks at Billy Bobs in Ft. Worth.

Foyt's first Indy 500 was nearly his last

A.J. witnessed Pat O'Connor's death

By STEVE HERMAN
AP Sports Writer

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Neither time nor unparalleled success can dim A.J. Foyt's memory of his first Indianapolis 500. It was almost enough to keep him from ever driving again in the race he has come to dominate.

It was 1958. A 15-car crash on the first lap killed veteran driver Pat O'Connor — "one of the worst feelings I ever had," Foyt says.

"They tell you everything to look for, and then they had the bad wreck," he recalls. "And Pat O'Connor, who helped me a lot, I seen him upside down there, with the car on fire. I didn't know if I really wanted to race or not.

"That was probably one of the biggest things that stuck in my mind. I was only 23 years old, and I had never really seen anything like that or experienced anything like that. And it just kind of shocked me pretty much."

He did come back, of course. The next year, he improved his 16th-place finish to 10th. Two years later, in 1961, he won Indy for the first of an unprecedented four times.

Now, at age 47, Foyt is the veteran, preparing for his silver anniversary race at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway on May 30 and coming off his own potentially career-ending crash.

He suffered a compound fracture of his right arm in last July's Michigan 500 when his car veered into the wall and slid on its side. Foyt says he was lucky not to lose the arm, and he still can't straighten it.

"I haven't been back in a championship car since I had the wreck," said Foyt, often grumpy and reticent to talk about himself. "That's one reason I went to Daytona (for a stock car race in February) to test, to see if I really wanted to race again."

He does.

"I still would like to run another year or two, until I lose the desire," he says.

Yet the desire is tinged with the memory of Michigan.

"A lot of people say, you know, wrecks don't bother you, and I've heard a lot of race drivers stand up and say that. But I can't ever say that. I don't care if I go out there today and run 10 laps. Out of the 10 laps, I've probably thrilled myself pretty good two or three times.

"You hear some of these guys say they never get scared. Why, I scare the hell out of myself a lot. I'm not going to lie about it."

Foyt is the last link between two racing generations. He started racing before many of the younger drivers were even born. He admits he doesn't even know who some of them are. He's a throwback to the generation of grease-covered, lead-footed drivers who did everything themselves. Yet he has bridged the generation gap with extraordinary success.

Foyt has won 67 U.S. Auto Club races for Indy-type cars, 32 more than his nearest competitor, Al Unser. He has driven more than 9,000 miles in race competition at Indianapolis, more than 2,500 miles more than second-place Bobby Unser. He holds the record for most Indy starts (24), most races leading the field (12) and most winnings ($1.4 million).

These days, Foyt doesn't do everything himself, although he remains in complete charge of his operation. He's as comfortable in a Texas leisure suit as he is in overalls. And despite his reputation as a curmudgeon, he can even be a bit modest.

"A lot of people have said I'm probably one of the best," says the stocky Houston driver. "But I don't feel I'm better than anybody else. That's my personal opinion.

"I'm just out there to do a job. I feel like this here: You've got about 10 drivers that any given time can win a race and run awful good. If you wanted to narrow it down, you can get down to maybe five. And it really would be unfair for me to sit here and pick (one)."

The list would include six other drivers who have dominated Indianapolis racing over the past decade and a half. Three of them, the Unser brothers and Johnny Rutherford, have won three times each since 1968. Mario Andretti, Gordon Johncock and Rick Mears have won once each.

Except for Mears, who is 30, all are in their 40s. Defending champion Bobby Unser, who first came to Indy in 1963, is the oldest at 48. Johncock is 45, Rutherford 44, Andretti and Al Unser 42.

"The older drivers had to build a lot, come up with their own designs and go out and test everything themselves," Foyt says. "In automobile racing today, you have so many computers, you have wind tunnels you go to.

"When I first started, you never even heard of wind tunnels, or anything like that — or computers. So you took you a hacksaw and a welding torch and you welded up something and tried to go out and win a race."

Former Indy 500 champion Rick Mears laughs as a crew member congratulates him Thursday after Mears turned the fastest lap in the history of the Indianapolis Motor Speedway, going around the 2½-mile oval at 206.8 mph. Mears, of Bakersfield, Calif., is one of 10 drivers who have topped the 200 mph mark.

Lakers after seventh straight playoff win

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — The fast-breaking Los Angeles Lakers seek their seventh straight National Basketball Association playoff win tonight while the San Antonio Spurs hope hometown fans will help them come from two games back.

Tipoff is set for 9 p.m. CDT before an expected capacity HemisFair Arena crowd of 16,000. The two teams meet here again Saturday at 7:30 p.m.

The Lakers disposed of the Phoenix Suns 4-0 in the Western Conference semi-finals, then beat the Spurs 128-117 and 110-101 earlier this week in Los Angeles to become only the fifth NBA team to win six straight playoff games.

San Antonio coach Stan Albeck says his team is capable of tying up the series in the two games at the arena, which Los Angeles coach Pat Riley has called "a hornet's nest."

The Spurs beat Los Angeles twice here during the regular season, becoming the only NBA team to win their series against the Lakers, 3-2.

Albeck said the Spurs losses have not been as wide as the final scores indicate.

"We were in both games until the final two minutes and we had the shots but didn't make them," Albeck said.

George Gervin, four-time NBA scoring champion, has been slowed by the Lakers in post-season play, averaging 6 points below his season average of 32 points a game.

Albeck said that will have to change and the Spurs' "Bruise Brothers" also will have to get back to the rebounding form that led the league during the regular season.

The Lakers outrebounded San Antonio 103-86 in the two previous games, and collected 49 of their 100 field goals on layups and slamdunks off the fast break.

Los Angeles also has outshot the Spurs 53.2 percent to 51 percent from the field and 80.4 percent to 62 percent at the foul line.

"The team that wins the boards will win the game. Obviously we have to do better," Albeck said. "Our big problem has been free throws and there's really nothing that can be done about that. We just have to make them."

Albeck said he plans for Gervin to shoot more, but the Lakers say they will keep trying to deny the wirey guard the ball.

"We have to go to George more, that and go to him more early," Albeck said. "Went want to get him 25 shots per game."

Until now, Gervin has hit only 17 of 45 shots in two games and went 7 of 21 in Game Two. The Lakers say they will continue trying to hold Gervin in check.

"We have tried to deny George the ball all the time," said Jamaal Wilkes, who has helped contain Gervin. "I play George one-on-one. As soon as he puts the ball on the floor, we double-team him.

"It seems to be working and I think that's been the key to stopping them. George obviously is an excellent player. He can do so many things well, especially score. So we must take the ball out of his hands."

Arkansas favored to win SWC track championship

HOUSTON (AP) — Arkansas, with dominating distance strength, appears ready to fulfill its favorites role in the Southwest Conference Track and Field championships that begin tonight at the Univesity of Houston.

The Razorbacks were runnersup to the Texas Aggies in the 1981 meet at Dallas but seem to be unanimous as the favorite with the University of Texas and host University of Houston given the best chance for an upset.

"Arkansas has to be picked the favorite with the rest of us fighting for second," Texas Coach Cleburne Price said.

The Razorbacks have the top conference times in the 800 and 1500 meters, led by Randy Stephens and the 5,000 and 10,000 meter events paced by Pat Vaughn. The Hogs, in fact, had eight of the top 10 times in the 5,000 meter race and two of the top five in the 10,000.

Arkansas won the SWC indoor meet and finished second in the NCAA national indoor meet earlier this year.

Stephens could face a challenge from Rice freshman Gawain Guy in the 1,500 meters.

Stephens, the NCAA indoor champion in the 1,000-yard race, has a 1500 meter best of 3:42.10 compared to Guy's 3:43.30.

Vaughn is the SWC leader in both the 5,000 and 10,000 meter races with times of 13:47.8 and 28:31.9.

Houston's chances of victory likely will depend on sprinter Stanley Floyd, who will have to make up points lost by the scholastic ineligibility of Carl Lewis, who last year won the 100 and 200 meters, the long jump and anchored the Cougars to a second place finish in the sprint relay.

Floyd, who has run only one 100 meters this season, will have plenty of competition from Texas A&M's Rod Richardson, 10.09, Texas Christian's Phillips Epps and Rice's Vince Courville, each with 10.17 season bests.

Floyd will have a legacy to uphold in the sprint events. Cougars runners have won the two events the past three years.

Epps is the conference leader in the 200 meters with a 20.19 clocking.

Texas' strength will be in the weight events where Oskar Jakobsson of Iceland is the conference leader in the discus at 200-5 and shot put, 66-10 3/4 and ranks third in the javelin at 249-7.

Winners of five other 1981 events also will miss the meet. Dennis Brantley, high jump champ, and Sam Koskie, 800 meter titlist, both of Southern Methodist, are ineligible. Injuries have sidelined Baylor's Jeke Jefferson, 400 meters, Texas A&M's Jimmy Howard, high jump and SMU's Michael Carter in the shot put.

Champions returning include Mike Collins of Houston, javelin; Keith Connor, SMU, triple jump; Scott Lofquist, Arkansas, discus; Baylor's sprint relay team; Reggie Garner of Texas, 400 meter hurdles and SMU's 1600 meter relay team.

Finals in the long jump, shot put, javelin, and 10,000 meters are scheduled tonight. The meet ends Saturday.

Trotters to play in South Africa

NEW YORK (AP) — The black Harlem Globetrotters have scheduled four basketball games in racially segregated South Africa this month, arousing an international wave of protest from anti-apartheid groups.

Representatives of the Organization for African Unity and the United Nations Special Committee Against Apartheid immediately registered protests to the team this week when they learned of the games.

If the Globetrotters, who combine comedy and basketball in their appearances, go through with their plans, they may be barred from appearing in countries upholding the United Nation's 1977 International Declaration of Apartheid in Sports, which is endorsed by most Third World and socialist nations.

"It's one thing for the South Africans to bring a series of white entertainers there because one might expect you could get whites who don't care about the racial issue, but when you get black athletes it's another thing," said Richard Lapchick, a former consultant to the U.N. committee, who now directs the South Africa Program for the Phelps Stokes Fund.

"Here is the team that symbolizes black sports internationally, and they are going not just to South Africa, but to the bantustans," said Lapchick.

The Globetrotters agreed to play in the new Sun City sports complex in Bophuthatswana, one of 10 "homelands" areas, known as bantustans, to which several hundred thousand blacks have been resettled by the South African government.

Ticket prices for the four games from May 28-31 were advertised in South Africa's Rand Daily Mail newspaper as 15.50 and 10.50 rands. A rand is equal to 94 cents in American currency. The average monthly income in Bophuthatswana is $19, according to Lapchick.

Bophuthatswana is one of four homelands declared independent nations by the South African government, although South Africa still administers the territories and most countries do not recognize them as independent states.

Broncos sign six free agents

DENVER (AP) — The Denver Broncos announced Thursday the signing of six free agents, subject to contract approval by the National Football League, bringing to 101 the number of new players signed in 1982.

Tom Landry sorry to see Braniff under suspension

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas Cowboys Coach Tom Landry, who made televised personal appeals trying to help, said Thursday the suspension of Braniff International was like watching part of the team crumble away.

"I feel like many people in our organization feel right now — sad," Landry said. "You hate it when a company like Braniff goes under. Braniff was so important to the community."

"We had many, many friends at Braniff who were like a part of our organization."

The Cowboys flew on Braniff charters for 22 years.

This last season Braniff designated a special "Cowboy plane" which included the National Football League team's logotype on the tail.

The plane made trips to New York City during the regular season and to San Francisco for the National Conference title game. Dallas lost on both occasions.

"Maybe we jinxed them, I hope not," Landry said.

Braniff flew the Cowboys during some dreadful seasons before they became a consistent NFL power, going to playoffs in 15 of the last 16 years.

"It seems like we've been with them forever and suffered through the good and the bad with them," said Landry.

Both Landry and quarterback Danny White made the televised 60-second advertisements without reimbursement.

"Doug Todd and Gregg Aiello in our public relations department felt we should do something for Braniff and asked me if I would help," Landry said. "I was glad to."

He added, "I didn't mind even though we couldn't win flying in that airplane."

Todd said, "We had a close relationship for 22 years. They were good friends and sponsored our highlight film each season.

"We had the same pilot (Wally Nicholson) and the same stewardesses, Maria Surgeon, Jackie Moseley and Codie Lewis, for years. You'd be surprised how hard it (the suspension) hit everybody up here."

There was a humorous moment during the taping of the advertisements. Landry performed perfectly through the first take until he got to the punch line: Instead of "Fly Braniff" he said "Fry Braniff."

He said, "Let's do that again. Obviously we don't want that to happen."

Now the Cowboys don't know what airline they'll be flying this fall.

Cowboys' No. 1 college draft pick decides to sign contract

DALLAS (AP) — Rod Hill, the Cowboys' No. 1 draft pick, says he always intended to sign his multi-year contract with the Dallas football club, but needed time to think before inking the agreement.

The Cowboys were forced to cancel a Thursday press conference when Hill informed club officials late Wednesday that he would not sign the contract.

But Hill finally signed the contract Thursday morning, and said he was "glad to be a Cowboy."

"I just wanted to sleep on it," Hill said. "I never did change my mind ... I just wanted to clear up some clerical problems."

The Cowboys already had announced Wednesday night that Hill had signed.

Cowboy Vice President Gil Brandt said Hill and his agent, Earl Cromwell of Houston, had agreed to terms of a contract Wednesday afternoon.

"For some reason, Cromwell just called and told me and said that the deal had changed," Brandt said. "I said, OK, we'll talk some more in the morning."

Hill, a defensive back from Kentucky State, was the 25th player chosen in the National Football League draft.

Last year, No. 1 draft choice Howard Richards held out three months before agreeing to terms with the Cowboys less than 24 hours before training camp opened.

Berra, Snider honorary captains

NEW YORK (AP) — Hall of Famers Yogi Berra and Duke Snider, who faced each other in six All-Star games and five World Series, were named honorary captains Thursday for the 1982 All-Star Game.

The game will be played Tuesday night, July 13, at Montreal's Olympic Stadium.

Berra appeared in 15 All-Star games from 1949-1962 with the New York Yankees and holds records for most games played as a catcher (14), most putouts (61), most chances (68) and most assists (7). He currently is a coach with the Yankees.

Snider, a seven-time All-Star, was named to the National League squad six times with the Brooklyn Dodgers and once with the New York Mets. He started his professional career with the Montreal Royals of the International League and now is a broadcaster with the Expos, who will host this year's contest.

Vancouver Canucks goalie Richard Brodeur stretches to cover the corner of the net as New York Islander Brent Sutter skates in with the puck. Brodeur made the save, but the Islanders went on to win the Stanley Cup game 3-0 to take a 3-0 lead in the best-of-seven playoff.

House adopts Olympic Coin legislation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rejecting more than a dozen amendments, the House Banking Committee overwhelmingly adopted legislation Thursday callling for the minting of 17 coins to commemorate the 1984 Olympic Games in Los Angeles.

The committee voted 32-7 to support a proposal by Chairman Fernand St Germain, D-R.I., for the minting of 17 coins to be sold by private firms.

This was preferred over a measure by Rep. Frank J. Annunzio, D-Ill., proposing three coins that would be sold by the U.S. Treasury. The three-coin proposal earlier in the day had been passed 6-0 by the House coinage subcommittee, of which Annunzio is chairman.

The legislation is expected to be taken up by the full House sometime next week, possibly Wednesday. A similar bill, calling for 25 coins, already has passed the Senate.

Annunzio has opposed the multiple coin program for more than a year because, he has said on many occasions, he believes the private firms will take too much of the profit from the sale. He continued his opposition during the committee deliberations and said he again would argue his disagreements when the bill comes up on the House floor.

Annunzio offered 13 amendments to the St Germain legislation, but was successful on only his last one — forbidding the private marketers to make use the U.S. Mint's coinage mailing list.

The Illinois Democrat's rejected amendments would have, among other things, make the private firms pay for the coins in advance of receiving them, would have required the marketers pay the $30 million guarantee to the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee and the U.S. Olympic Committee no matter what, would have required the sale of a single coin and would have ordered the U.S. Olympic Committee share the receipts with local athletic clubs.

St Germain argued, in just about every case, that the language in his bill gives the Treasury Secretary the discretion to put those terms in any contract signed with a private entrepreneur.

Annunzio also offered an amendment that would have prohibited any convicted of a major crime after March 1, 1976 from being a seller of the coins.

Occidental Petroleum Corp. of Los Angeles and Lazard Freres, a New York banking firm, have formed a joined venture called the Coin Group and have indicated a desire to bid on the marketing contract.

Armand Hammer, Occidental's chairman, pled guilty on March 4, 1976, to making illegal campaign contributions to former President Nixon.

L.A. seeking Sampson

SAN DIEGO (AP) — San Diego Clippers owner Donald T. Sterling said Thursday that he's been offered $6 million in cash if he would guarantee the Los Angeles Lakers the No. 1 pick in the National Basketball Association draft.

Sterling said he rejected the initial offer by Lakers owner Jerry Buss but told him, "I might consider $10 million, plus a player." He said Buss gave him until 6 p.m. Friday "to make up my mind."

The two teams flip a coin next Thursday to determine which club receives the No. 1 choice in the NBA draft June 29.

Both teams reportedly are ready to make Virginia's 7-foot-4 center Ralph Sampson their first choice if he chooses to pass up his senior season.

"I guess they think he (Sampson) is coming out," Sterling said. "It's an unconditional offer, so they must know something I don't know." He said the offer was made Tuesday at a social gathering in Beverly Hills.

The Clippers, with the second-worst record in the NBA this year, are assured of drafting no lower than second. Los Angeles obtained its lofty drafting position by virtue of a trade with Cleveland, which finished last in the NBA standings.

"Buss said we can still flip, but the agreement would be that we would pick 'X' if we won the flip, so he could pick the player he wants if he didn't win it," Sterling told the San Diego Tribune.

Sterling said the deal would not involve any Laker players.

"He told me he'd give me $6 million in cash. I said, 'No, but I might consider $10 million, plus a player.' He said, 'I want to give you more cash, but no players.'

"Then he told me that if I turn this deal down, I'll be making the biggest mistake of my life, because with $6 million I can buy so many players from around the league and really build up my franchise," Sterling said.

Sampson must announce his decision by Saturday.

Sugar Ray is recovering after operation

BALTIMORE (AP) — World welterweight champion Sugar Ray Leonard is recovering without any complications from surgery for a detached retina in his left eye, his adviser said Thursday.

"Ray Leonard has had an uncomplicated course following the retinal reattachment operation on his left eye ... He is comfortable and in excellent spirits. His left eye is healing properly and the doctors continue to be optimistic that he will achieve a complete recovery," Mike Trainer said in a statement after he met with Leonard's doctors.

The 25-year-old Leonard underwent two hours of surgery Sunday at the Wilmer Eye Clinic at Johns Hopkins Hospital. Doctors have said it could be four to six months before the results of the operation will be known.

Meanwhile, many boxing observers have urged Leonard to retire rather than risk permanent eye damage.

"No date for discharge from the hospital has been set as yet. This will be determined by the continuing progress of his left eye," Trainer said.

"Mrs. Juanita Leonard wishes to thank all those who have sent telegrams, letters, cards and flowers and wants them to know that Ray appreicates their concern," he added.

Well-wishers continued to send their greetings to the ailing fighter. Deborah Digges, a spokeswoman for Hopkins, said that more than 1,000 pieces of mail arrived Wednesday and Thursday.

Leonard was scheduled to defend his title Friday night against Roger Stafford at Buffalo, N.Y.

Leonard's fans have swamped hospital officials here with words of encouragement and telephone calls from as far away as Sweden and Argentina.

Well-wishers have included President Reagan, Howard Cosell and Roberto Duran, the only fighter ever to beat Leonard. Leonard later avenged the loss to the Panamanian.

In Mexico City, Jose Sulaiman, president of the World Boxing Council, earlier this week urged Leonard to retire.

"I wish him the best. As a friend, I believe with all the money and all the glory he has attained that Sugar Ray should retire," Sulaiman said.

Thursday's statement by Trainer was the first word from the Leonard camp since a press conference last Sunday.

Trainer has insisted on tight security measures to insure Leonard's privacy during his recuperation.

Dr. Ronald Michels, one of Leonard's physicians, earlier said that retina operations of the kind the champion underwent were generally 90 percent successful. Michels performed successful retinal surgery on heavyweight Earnie Shavers.

Leonard became the undisputed world champion last September when he stopped Thomas Hearns in the 14th round at Las Vegas, Nev.

The nationally televised fight with Stafford would have been Leonard's second bout this year. On Feb. 15, at Reno, Nev., Leonard knocked out Bruce Finch in the second round.

Three-pointer isn't universally popular

By RUTH BONAPACE
AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Fresno State Coach Boyd Grant calls the three-point field goal "a gimmick," Kansas Coach Ted Owens says college basketball rules "are pretty good as they are," and Washington State Coach George Raveling dislikes anything resembling pro basketball.

The three-point field goal, used by the National Basketball Association and adopted for next season on a trial basis by the Big Ten Conference, is getting a chilly reception from many college coaches around the country, although a few large Eastern schools welcomed the innovation.

"Basketball has always been a game of strategy," said Grant, whose team made it to the Final 16 this year. "I don't want to see it get into the pro style of run and gun. I'm not for gimmicks."

COMMISSIONER WAYNE Duke announced Tuesday that Big Ten athletic directors approved use of the the three-point basket in an experiment starting next season. Nonconference opponents will choose whether to use it.

Field goals made beyond 21 feet will be worth three points instead of two. The NBA uses a 23-foot-9-inch range for three pointers.

Missouri's Norm Stewart was among the few coaches in a random sampling by the Associated Press who endorsed the new rule wholeheartedly. Stewart said he thought the three-point range should be shorter than 21 feet.

"I would be for somewhere in the neighborhood of 18 feet, maybe from the backboard," Stewart said. "I think changes are always necessary. We're always looking to enhance the game, to me it easier to administer."

"It's a great innovation" said Coach Craig Littlepage, the University of Pennsylvania's new coach. "It adds an element of excitement to the game. I think it's something to be considered for all NCAA games.

"It gives the little man a little something," said Temple assistant coach Jim Maloney. "It gives the little man a little more impetus to work on the range of his shot, and gives more excitement to the fans."

OTHERS VIEWED the three-point field goal as superfluous.

"I think sometimes we change just for the sake of changing," said Raveling. "Personally, I think we need to leave the game alone. I'm against anything that's going to cause a similarity between pro basketball and college basketball as it relates to the rules."

"To me the college game is just about as good as it can be," said Oregon State Coach Ralph Miller. "This rule isn't going to help one iota."

"The rules we have are pretty good as they are," Owens said. "I'm not certain I'm in favor of the three-point play. I don't think it will make a dramatic difference in basketball. But, in a close game, it might alter your strategy."

The three-point impact on a tight contest is what worries Oregon Coach Jim Haney.

"I just hate the thought of a guy standing three quarters down the court and heaving the ball and I'm up by two points and he makes it. I would hate to lose on somebody throwing a 'Hail Mary,' " Haney said.

PENN STATE Coach Dick Harter is "divided." He said, "I think one of the strengths of college basketball is it has continued to increase in popularity without making a lot of changes. You don't want to get every league in the country trying out new rules.

"But to keep up todate, the three-point rule has merit. One thing the three-point play will do is force more teams into man-to-man defense. To me, the beauty of basketball is man-to-man offense and defense."

Virginia's Terry Holland also was ambivalent. "I think a combination of a shot clock and the three-point goal would make sense. To do one without the other ... I just don't know," Holland said.

The three-point field goal just doesn't make sense, said Georgia Coach Hugh Durham.

"I don't understand at all the thinking behind it," Durham said. "You kick a field goal in football from 10 yards, it's three points. And it you kick it from 50 yards, it's still three points. It doesn't go up 150 percent."

Don't hit dugouts

Alexander fined $30,000

NEW YORK (AP) — Pitcher Doyle Alexander, informed by the Major League Players Association that his offer to forgo one month's salary from the New York Yankees violated the basic agreement, Thursday withdrew the offer, then was fined an estimated $30,000 by the club.

Alexander suffered a broken finger in Seattle last Thursday night when he slammed his fist into the dugout wall. The injury will sideline the pitcher from 4-6 weeks and he volunteered to pass up his salary for one month, because the injury was self-inflicted. Based on a reported $400,000 annual salary, Alexander receives abouth $66,000 per month.

But Marvin Miller, executive director of the union, informed the pitcher that the basic agreement requires players on the disabled list to be paid and if the Yankees did not comply, they might be considered in default on his contract which could result in immediate free agency.

Alexander then withdrew the offer and the Yankees responded with the fine.

"We have no other recourse but to fine Doyle," said Bill Bergesch, vice president for baseball operations for the American Leat class with hyle is a high class individual who displayed that class with his offer. Now, because of union interference and pressure, he has been forced to reverse his position and withdraw his offer.

"It is regrettable that the situation has to be resolved by the Yankees fining Doyle, especially since he displayed his class in voluntarily offering to have his pay withheld as a sign of his sincerity. Instead, we are forced to fine him. He wanted to forfeit four weeks pay, but because of union interference, he is unable to do so.

"The Yankees do not announce the amount of fines — but in this case, it will be less than half of what Doyle offered to have with held.

"This was a very simple case of a player accepting his responsibility. Now the union comes in and makes a shamble of the entire affair."

A player can grieve a fine of this size but there was no immediate word on whether Alexander would do that. In 1979, when relief pitcher Rich Gossage suffered a broken thumb in a clubhouse scuffle with Cliff Johnson, the Yankees attempted to fine the pitcher 10 days pay, or about $18,000. But the fine was withdrawn when Gossage went to the union with the case.

Indians' Denny facing fine

SEATTLE (AP) — Cleveland Indians Manager Dave Garcia and President Gabe Paul are upset with the conduct of pitcher John Denny, who bruised his right thumb during a tantrum after he was removed from Tuesday's game against the Seattle Mariners.

"A fine is a possibility," Paul said. "We have to see how John is."

"I think doing this kind of thing is ridiculous and uncalled for," Garcia said. "What if 25 guys did this? Then they would tear down the building."

"This hitting the wall and the Coke machines seems to be the new style," Paul said. "Well, it is not a good style."

Denny said he kicked some chairs and wastebaskets and pushed a candy cabinet in the clubhouse after he was taken from the game. He said he punched nothing and nobody.

"When I came out of the game, I was extremely upset with myself," he said. "I had a one-hitter for seven innings and ended up giving up four runs."

Garcia said Denny might be fined if the bruised thumb prevents him from pitching Sunday against the California Angels.

James leads Martini International

LINDRICK, England (AP) — British Ryder Cup player Mark James fired a four-under-par 67 Thursday and took a one-stroke lead after the first round of the $110,000 Martini International golf tournament.

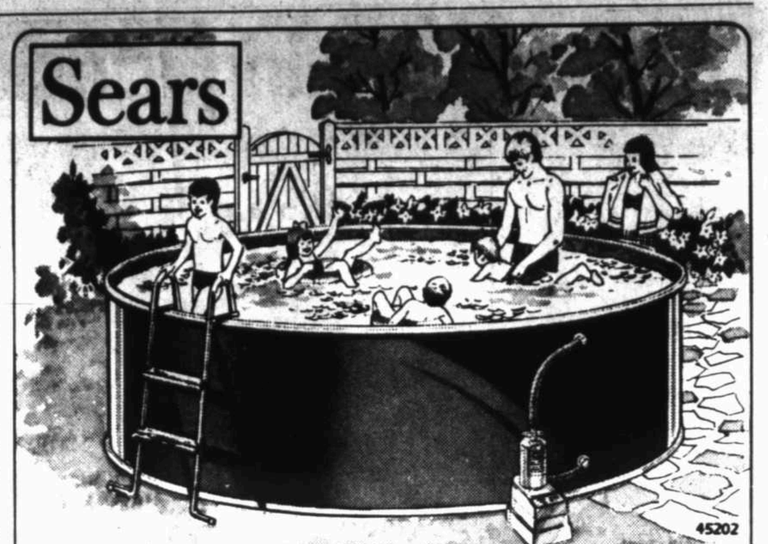

Sandy Lyle of Britain was second at 68, one shot ahead of two other British players, Nick Faldo and Craig Defoy, both of whom carded 69s.

Defending champion Greg Norman of Australia had a disappointing 73. The leading United States player was Mike O'Grady at 71.

James, winner of the Italian Open two weeks ago and third in last week's French Open, said: "My early season form is about a 600 percent improvement on last season when I missed five cuts in a row."

Playing with a new driver, James had six birdies Thursday and only two bogeys.

Stock market loses

NEW YORK (AP) — Stocks closed mostly lower today after a late decline led by blue-chip issues.

Airline stocks paced the gainers in heavy volume following news that Braniff International had suspended operations and filed for reorganization under bankruptcy laws.

Analysts cited two reasons for the carriers' advance: the possibility some of them would receive Braniff's routes and the belief that the industry's problems may have touched bottom with Braniff's demise.

Analysts also noted that blue-chip issues began falling soon after the government announced that business inventories fell 0.5 percent in March. The figure was higher than some economists had predicted and indicated to some that the economy has yet to turn up.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials had been off only fractionally for much of the session, but tumbled in late trading and closed down 6.66, to 859.11. The utility and transportation measures also fell slightly.

Losers held an 8 to 5 lead over gainers among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

Big Board turnover was 58.23 million shares, compared with 59.21 million in the previous session.

The NYSE's composite index fell 0.49 to 68.20.

At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was off 0.77 to 279.41.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Trust department can invest money

By BILL DOYLE

Q. My son, age 20, was in an industrial accident that left him physically disabled. He will receive a settlement of between $40,000 and $50,000. But he has a mental health problem and will spend the money within a week, if it is not managed for him. As his father, age 50, I won't be able to take care of him for the rest of his life.

I am afraid to death of banks and know they are failing all across the country. Savings and loan associations are in so much trouble that most of them will fold soon. Where can my son's settlement be placed, so that he will receive a check each month and his money will be safe in the future?

A. My suggestion would be the trust department at a bank. With a trust arrangement, the bank would invest your son's money for him. Because the money will be your son's, you'll probably have to have him declared an incompetent by a court. This column does not practice law. I recommend you consult the attorney who is handling your boy's settlement.

Doyle

Trust accounts are segregated and kept separate from a bank's assets. If the bank goes bankrupt, its creditors would have no claim on your son's trust account.

And I have to say you are overstating worries about banks and S & Ls to a fare-thee-well. Even when failures and forced mergers take place, trust accounts, as well as insured depositors, come out whole.

Q. I heard that the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. insures depositors at banks and the Federal Savings & Loan Insurance Corp. insures depositors at S & Ls only for the principal of their accounts — not the interest.

I hope this is not true, because I have a sizable 30-month savings certificate at an insured S & L. I leave the interest to compound and accumulate more interest. Do I have anything to worry about?

A. Not a thing, as long as the total amount you have in your name at that S & L — the original amount of the certificate, plus accumulated interest and any other accounts — doesn't top $100,000. As your certificate accumulates interest, it's covered by FSLIC insurance.

Both FSLIC and FDIC cover each depositor at an insured institution up to the $100,000 limit.

Q. What is the maximum amount of FDIC or FSLIC coverage a family can obtain by using individual, joint, trust and testamentary accounts at the same bank or S & L?

A. That depends on how many family members there are and how many different kinds of accounts they open. Remember that each of the different types of accounts you mentioned is counted as a separate depositor, for insurance purposes.

One creative-minded S & L executive recently sent in a chart showing how a family of four could have $1.4 million of insurance coverage at the same institution. But why a family would keep that much money in one place is beyond my ken.

Q. My credit union says in its literature, "Insured by National Credit Union Deposit Insurance, a federal agency." I'm not sure of the exact name, as I mislaid the literature. Is this equal to FDIC and FSLIC coverage?

A. It's the National Credit Union Association, set up by the federal government to insure credit union deposits up to $100,000. You can count it as being just as good as FDIC and FSLIC.

Here's a caution. A fairly large number of credit unions do not have NCUA coverages. When some uninsured credit unions folded, their members came out losers.

Doyle welcomes written questions, but he will be able to provide answers only through his column. Address questions to Bill Doyle, King Features, c/o The Reporter-Telegram, Midland, Texas 79702.

Bonds may be linked to inflation index

NEW YORK (AP) — In a patchwork pattern that seems to make little logical sense, some parts of the American economy have been "indexed" to inflation while others have not.

Social Security benefits are calculated by a formula that takes inflation into account. But a private pension plan, annuity or individual retiree's nest egg may offer no similar protection.

Some groups of employees have been able to secure cost-of-living escalators in their contracts — a cushion not available to other workers, such as many owners of small businesses.

Income taxes are scheduled to be adjusted for inflation starting in 1985. But at least until then, the infamous "bracket creep" is free to continue, swelling the tax bills of many people whose real earnings have not increased.

As many homebuyers of years past found to their delight, mortgages with fixed interest rates gave the borrower a free ride where inflation was concerned. Now many mortgage lenders, badly burned, are turning to mortgages with interest rates that can be adjusted periodically.

To date, however, the biggest borrower in the country — the federal government — has still had access to loans with a fixed cost.

The Treasury sells its various interest-bearing securities to investors under stated terms, leaving them to bear the market risks afterward. Because there was no better credit risk anywhere than Uncle Sam, the investors went along.

Now, however, proposals are surfacing to permit the government to issue bonds whose value would be linked to an inflation index. If these bonds were successful, it is argued, they could help solve a lot of the current problems posed by high interest rates and big federal deficits.

For one thing, proponents say, they could sharply reduce the interest costs the government must pay on its borrowing. In a discussion of the subject, Carl Alan Batlin, economist at New York's Chase Manhattan Bank, provided this example:

Assume that investors considering buying a bond expect inflation to run at 10 percent annually over the bond's life. They would then demand 10 percent interest to compensate for this.

Since they aren't interested in loaning their money out free, they would presumably require another 3 percent or so as a return. Put the two together, and the interest rate the government must offer is about 13 percent.

Exxon says

Oil shale project may resume later

NEW YORK (AP) — Exxon Corp., which recently withdrew from the largest domestic shale-oil project, intends to resume its effort to produce synthetic oil from shale when such projects become more affordable, Exxon's chairman said Thursday.

Clifton C. Garvin Jr., presiding over the company's 100th annual stockholders meeting, also said that while oil prices and demand for oil products have declined for much of the past two years, Exxon expects prices and demand to rebound this year.

"One can't be sure about how long the turnaround will take," he said, "but I would certainly expect stronger markets as the year wears on."

Exxon's earnings in the first quarter of 1982 fell by 22.5 percent from the same period last year.

Garvin told the group of about 2,000 shareholders that Exxon scrapped the Colony shale oil project in Parachute, Colo., because of its steadily rising cost rather than the uncertain outlook for oil prices that would influence its ultimate profitability.

"We concluded that even when giving the project all the credits we could for its newness and eventual desirability, the economics were just no longer attractive to our shareholders," Garvin said.

But he stressed that Exxon intends to resume its efforts to reclaim shale oil "when circumstances have changed."

Garvin said Exxon was "taking a hard and comprehensive look" at all its major projects. He said he expected 1982 spending on capital and exploration programs to be lower than the $13.5 billion announced last December. He declined to be more specific.

Exxon, the world's largest oil company, stunned the industry when it announced May 2 it was closing the Colony project. Colony, the most ambitious of all U.S. oil shale ventures, was designed to mine marlstone, crush and heat it and extract oil.

Exxon had bought out Atlantic Richfield Co.'s 60 percent interest in the project in 1980 for $300 million and spent another $400 million developing the site. Its partner, Tosco Corp. of Los Angeles, is requiring Exxon to buy Tosco's 40 percent interest for $380 million.

Garvin said the Colony site will be maintained in some form because "we believe that what we have done so far and what we've learned will make that resource ultimately more valuable."

GUSHER — A well that reaches an oil zone containing such great pressure that the oil blows out of the well and up into and above the derrick like a geyser. With improved drilling technology gushers are rare today so that the term now refers to an exceptionally good producing well.

HIATUS — A gap or missing time interval where rock formation should be present but are absent due to never being deposited or having been eroded away prior to the deposition of overlying younger rocks.

Bill Moler, owner of A-1 Office Furniture Exchange, 1613 S. Main, with some of the merchandise on sale at 20 to 30 percent off the regular low price. The sale begins Saturday and ends May 22.

Office furniture on sale

A-1 Office Furniture Exchange, 1613 S. Main, is overstocked with new and used office furniture, so in order to make room for new inventory, owner Bill Moler is reducing all merchandise by 20 percent or more. New and used office furniture regularly priced under $100 will be reduced 20 percent, while furniture priced over $100 will be reduced by 20 to 30 percent. This sale begins tomorrow and will end on May 22, so hurry in now for the best selection.

A-1 Office Furniture has a wide variety of new and used office furniture, as well as accessories for the office. There are contemporary and traditional desks in a choice of styles and materials, and coordinating chairs in a variety of colors and designs. In fact, Manager Alice Cruse says A-1 Office Furniture has just about any kind of chair you would want for your office, ranging from upholstered swivel executive and secretarial chairs to padded arm chairs and occasional chairs.

Other items featured at A-1 Office Furniture Exchange include wood and metal tables in all sizes, as well as more than 100 file cabinets.

In short, right now is the time to purchase almost everything you need for your office at tremendous savings. From desks and chairs to typewriter stands and file cabinets, A-1 Office Furniture Exchange offers more furniture value for your money than ever before.

Come by A-1 Office Furniture Exchange Monday through Saturday from 9 a.m. to 5:30 p.m., or call at 683-8181.

HINES-WOOD FURNITURE UPHOLSTERING

Give your fine old furniture a new lease on life with upholstering by Hines-Wood Upholstering Co., 1105 N. Midkiff. Now, for a limited time, Hines-Wood offers free labor on most furniture with purchase of fabric on stock.

Hines-Wood suggests recovering

Denton Hines of Hines-Wood Upholstering Co. brings 30 years of upholstering experience to his customers, and offers this sound advice to anyone considering replacing a worn piece of furniture with a new piece.

"It's a lot less expensive to re-cover good pieces of furniture than it is to replace them with similar new pieces," says Hines. "In fact, it costs about half as much. Also important is the fact that you can keep a chair or sofa you already like, and which fits into your decor, instead of shopping around trying to find something that may suit."

Hines-Wood has many thousands of fabric samples from which to choose, and now for a limited time, offers free labor on most furniture with the purchase of fabric they have in stock. Exceptions are recliners, dining room chairs and antiques.

Once you have selected your fabric, give Hines a brief description of the item you wish to have re-done and you can have an estimate immediately.

If you choose a fabric that's in stock, Hines-Wood will arrange to pick up your furniture and the job will be completed within seven to ten days and returned to your home. If the fabric has to be special ordered, the furniture will not be picked up until the work is to begin. Pickup and delivery is free anywhere within Midland city limits.

Hines-Wood is located at 1105 N. Midkiff and is open Monday through Friday from 7 a.m. to 5:30 p.m., or you can call at 694-8891 for more information.

State workers' union willing to talk — but not to delay salary increases

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — A union for 28,000 state workers says it's willing to hold discussions on Wisconsin's budget plight, but will not accept a three-month delay in scheduled salary increases.

Tom Lyng, executive director of the Wisconsin State Employees Union, AFSCME, said today that a proposal by Democrats to delay increases is impractical and would fail.

Kenneth Lund, a spokesman for Democrats, said the state would seek layoffs and cutbacks in agencies where workers refuse to renegotiate contracts. The state also has increased its sales tax in an effort to close a budget gap projected at $450 million by June 1983.

WE STOCK BOTH FAST AND SLOW SELLERS
Recent news stories told how supermarkets and discount firms are telling manufacturers: "Sell us only your fast sellers. We are weeding out all others." Their reason is that the small amounts sold of slow sellers are not profitable.
This is true, but sometimes slow selling products can be very important to the persons who need them. There are hundreds of them in our pharmacy that sell only about a dozen of each a year. We buy only a quarter of a dozen at a time and re-order when they are sold. Our reputation is to have whatever you ask for. If we don't have your favorite, tell us.
YOUR DOCTOR CAN PHONE US when you need a medicine. Pick up your prescription if shopping nearby, or we will deliver promptly without extra charge. A great many people entrust us with their prescriptions. May we compound and dispense yours?

KANO, Nigeria — This ancient Islamic city in the heart of Africa — the site of two deadly protests since the end of 1980 — has been caught up in the fear of Westernization and the unsettling introduction of radical reforms that has spread unrest throughout the Moslem world.

Thousands of people have died in this city in the unrest, first in an 11-day uprising of Moslem militants in December 1980 that left thousands dead before it was crushed by the Nigerian army. Then seven months later, a political provocation ended with a one-day rampage in which a leftist politician was burned alive and millions of dollars of property destroyed by fire.

Superficially, separated as they were by religion and politics, the two eruptions seemed unconnected. Yet, interviews with Nigerians in four of the 10 northern states, Sokoto, Kano, Kaduna and Borno, revealed a centuries-old Islamic society under the stress of worldly challenges to deeply held beliefs and efforts to cut intricate links to the past.

AS REFLECTED in the perpetual unrest in Kano, the present social ferment in northern Nigeria provides fertile ground for new messianic movements and further violent political clashes.

Unlike the Christians of southern Nigeria, who look to the West for new trends, northern Nigerians focus on developments in the East and look to Saudi Arabia for spiritual solace. Thousands of northern Nigerians go on the Moslem pilgrimage to Mecca each year.

Different events throughout the Moslem world, in varying measures, have found root in northern Nigeria. Among them are the alienation from the West, as reflected in the Islamic Iranian revolution, and the fissures between conventional religious and political authorities, as was the case in Egypt in the last days of the late Anwar Sadat's rule. Fundamentalists' attack on the Great Mosque in Mecca and the more recent insurrection in the Syrian city of Hamah have had their violent fundamentalists counterparts in northern Nigeria. The house-to-house battles in Hamah was eerily similar to the 1980 fighting in Kano between fundamentalists and soldiers. Officially, about 4,000 people died in the Kano uprising, but unofficial sources put the figure much higher.

The sudden and violent nature of clashes in northern Nigeria, where more than half of the country's estimated 100 million people live, were a constant source of concern during 13 years of military rule and remain a serious worry for the civilian government that came to power in 1979. Long-term violent social anarchy, tied to political repression, discredited the country's first civilian government and gave the army the rationale to act in Nigeria's bloody coup in 1966.

"The violence and chaos exhibited in the Kano disturbances we all condemn," said President Shehu Shagari in October on his government's second anniversary. "We will be unrelenting in our efforts to stamp out crime, to protect lives and property of all who inhabit Nigeria, citizens and foreigners alike."

YET DEADLY BATTLES between Moslem fundamentalists, rival factions of the same political parties, between competing parties and political traditionalists vs. leftists reformers have continued throughout the north, according to News Agency of Nigeria, causing at least six deaths and $420,000 in property damage in December and January.

On March 31, 3,000 angry demonstrators stormed the Gongola state house of assembly while legislators were meeting, destroyed furniture and equipment and cut one assembly member with a knife in protest against a bill proposing the dissolution of the state's traditional emirates.

The Islamic emirates, 38 of which are functioning throughout northern Nigeria, are headed by dynastic religious-political leaders called emirs. In 1967, the military government abruptly took away the emirs' secular powers over local courts, police and prisons. Although they have officially been reduced to ceremonial functions, the emirs still wield more influence than elected politicians.

The most turbulent of the northern states, Kano contains within its modern-day boundaries one of the largest and most powerful of the emirates, from which the state derives its name. The seat of the emirate is also the state capital of Kano, the largest and most industrialized of the northern cities, with a population estimated at 2 million.

ISLAM WAS FIRST brought into the then-500-year-old Hausa states of northern Nigeria in the 14th century by Arab warriors, Koranic scholars and trans-Saharan caravan traders. In later centuries, large numbers of Moslem Fulani cattle herders migrated into the region. The rule by emirs evolved as well as an imperial caste system, which distinguished those who were ruling classes from the subject classes. Rigid distinctions between northerners still exist.

"You cannot understand northern Nigeria without studying the history of the emirate system and Islam," said Jibril Aminu, vice chancellor of Maiduguri University in Borno state. "Modern (political) institutions have not been accepted into the breasts of the people."

But it is exactly the traditional system of relationships that northern reformers want to overturn. They began almost immediately after taking power in 1979 in Kano and Kaduna states by abolishing the Haraji adult community and Jangali cattle taxes as traditional tools of emir coercion and graft. The reformers doubled and, in some cases, tripled public school enrollments in their first two years in power, arguing that education was a right rather than the selective privilege it had been in the recent past.

"We want to reduce class differences and create a meritocracy where people are not given things by circumstances of birth," said one of the self-described radicals, Kano state governor Mohammed Abubaker Rimi, in an interview. Tension is generated, he added, "because introducing these types of changes into a society that is not used to it is very difficult."

While the average Hausa peasant and Fulani cattle herder in Kano state might have been grateful for the abolishment of taxes, they still remain loyal to the emirs first, knowledgeable Nigerians said, as representatives of allah on Earth.

Cuba won't exchange Soviet for U.S. ties

Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — A top Cuban Communist disagrees with the suggestion that the United States might wean Cuba away from the Soviet Union.

Such U.S. "optimism" is unjustified, Carlos Rafael Rodriguez, vice president of the Cuban Council of State, recently told the French newspaper Le Monde.

Rodriguez, No. 3 in the Cuban hierarchy, behind Fidel Castro and his brother, Raul, said that the meeting U.S. Ambassador Vernon Walters had with Fidel Castro and the conference Rodriguez had with Secretary of State Alexander Haig were not unprecedented.

He met with Secretary of State Cyrus Vance in 1978 and was about to meet with Secretary Henry Kissinger when Cuban intervention in Angola became public knowledge in 1975.

Rodriguez is a veteran Cuban Communist leader. He held a cabinet post under President Fulgencio Batista in the late 1950s but defected to Castro's 26th of July Movement months before Batista fled and Castro took power in January 1959.

The U.S. suggestions, attributed to Haig, "that Cuba renounce its foreign policy principles ..., that Cuba must forget its friendship with the Soviet Union and rejoin the big Western hemispheric family," are not new, Cuban spokesmen say.

"They are only reiterations of statements made by previous (U.S.) governments" over the years since 1959, according to a broadcast in the Spanish language international service of Radio Havana.

"The U.S. leaders cannot yet understand that the Cuban people will never renounce the construction of socialism, the exercise of internationalism, or their firm and loyal friendship with the Soviet Union," Radio Havana said.

"Unselfish Soviet aid," which also was mentioned, is another important factor in Castro-Cuban allegiance to Moscow.

U.S. estimates are that Soviet economic and military assistance to Cuba currently runs at the rate of well over $3 billion a year. That is nearly 10 times as much as the Reagan administration is asking the U.S. Congress to make available for the two dozen nations of the Caribbean Basin.

There has been no indication here, or in Havana, that Cuba will accept U.S. preconditions for rapprochement. In fact, Cuba has some of its own.

"Normalization of our relations with the United States now depends on a negotiated solution in Central America," Rodriguez told Le Monde.

"As long as the civil war continues in El Salvador, obstacles and contradictions will remain.

"A negotiated solution in El Salvador could, however, improve (U.S.) relations with Nicaragua and encourage non-aggression pacts in that region," Rodriguez said.

High on the list of U.S. demands of Cuba is cessation of Havana's support of subversion in El Salvador, as well as in Central America and the rest of the hemisphere.

Yet Rodriguez told Le Monde that the Salvadoran guerrillas "are being strengthened and reorganized, and it is clear that the armed struggle is going to be continued and stepped up."

The United States contends that the Salvadoran insurgents are being supplied and directed, at least in part, by Cuba.

Another U.S. demand is withdrawal of Cuban troops from the former Portuguese African colony of Angola.

Rodriguez said there is no question of "direct negotiations on that presence" but that a settlement of the Namibia question "might indeed open the door to negotiations making it possible for Cuban troops to be gradually withdrawn from Angola."

Namibia, or South-West Africa, borders on Angola and has been the subject of conflict between South Africa and the South-West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO).

In truth, the Castro regime can hardly be said to be working its way back into the good graces of the United States.

At the moment Fidel Castro, in his role as chairman of the Movement of Nonaligned Nations, is trying to whip up sentiment in the Third World against "the imminent British-U.S. aggression on the Argentine people."

Discord focused on autonomy talks

Strength of Egypt-Israeli relationship undergoes 'testing'

By JIM KLURFELD
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Just over two weeks since the terms of their peace treaty were fulfilled, Israel and Egypt are once again at odds.

The issue is whether autonomy talks about the future of the West Bank and Gaza Strip should be held in Jerusalem. The Israelis say that in the next round of talks, at least one meeting must be in their capital city, Jerusalem. The Egyptians, protesting the Israeli annexation of East Jerusalem, say they will not go to that city because it would imply recognition of Israeli sovereignty there.

Although the dispute over Israeli annexation of East Jerusalem began before the transfer of the last third of the Sinai to Egypt on April 25, it has emerged as the first test of Egyptian-Israeli relations since then. American diplomats here and in the Mideast are working to find a solution, but they admit that the dispute could become very difficult and could even endanger the Palestinian autonomy talks in the second part of the Camp David peace process.

"This does have the potential to be a serious problem," one administration Mideast expert said Wednesday. "Because it is the first test between the two countries since the completion of the peace treaty, it has become important symbolically as well as practically."

ISRAELI OFFICIALS say a refusal by Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak to send a delegation to Jerusalem would indicate a basic shift in Egypt's Mideast strategy and would call into question Mubarak's commitment to the peace agreement. They say they fear that now that Egypt has recovered the land it lost in the 1967 war, Mubarak will use this dispute to move away from Israel and improve his relations with other Arab nations.

"We don't understand why they won't have talks in Jerusalem," Israeli Deputy Foreign Minister Yehuda Ben-Meir told reporters in Washington Wednesday. "It could be a serious situation, because it means we can't meet face to face with the Egyptian leaders ... And it is something we feel very strongly about."

Ben-Meir said that Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin had modified his position recently, saying that the next autonomy meeting did not have to take place in Jerusalem. If the Egyptians prefer it to be in Washington or even Geneva, Israel would go along. But within this next round of talks, the Israelis insist, one meeting must be held in Jerusalem.

EGYPTIAN DIPLOMATS say that to attend a meeting in Jerusalem would indicate acceptance of the annexation of East Jerusalem and would give the appearance of agreeing that Jerusalem is Israel's capital and a part of Israel. They say these are questions that should be left to future negotiations, as outlined in the Camp David agreements. The future status of Jerusalem is, of course, the most sensitive and controversial issue in the Arab-Israeli dispute. Most diplomats say it can be dealt with only at the end of the diplomatic process.

"When Israel annexed East Jerusalem, President Anwar Sadat broke off the autonomy talks," said an Egyptian diplomat. "Our refusal to go to Jerusalem now is not a new position, and it is not a decision made only by President Mubarak. It is consistent with what Sadat had been doing ... We want to renew the autonomy talks ... but not in Jerusalem. I don't see us going to Jerusalem under the current conditions."

After delaying for its first 16 months in office, the Reagan administration says it wants to get the long-stalled autonomy talks going again. Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. has said repeatedly that he does not believe there is a viable alternative to the Camp David peace process. A key to the administration plan is to start the autonomy talks now and try to show some progress. But without a decision on where the meetings can be held, that will be difficult.

Egypt swaying from peace accords?

By JOHN P. WALLACH

WASHINGTON — If Egypt continues to refuse to hold at least one round of the negotiations for Palestinian autonomy in Jerusalem, Israel's disputed capital, political pressures will inevitably build on the Israeli government to annex the West Bank and make it officially part of Israel.

That was the stern message delivered recently by Yehuda Ben-Meir, Israel's Deputy Foreign Minister, who explained that there already is growing disenchantment in Israel with Egypt's apparent sway away from the Camp David accords.

"If Egypt does not go ahead with the (autonomy) talks, the peace process will have grinded to at least a temporary halt," Ben-Meir said at a breakfast meeting here with reporters.

"This naturally will lead us to consider what our options will be but the demands of the public (for annexation) will be much more serious," he warned. For the time being Israel remains "fully committed" to the Camp David process that calls for giving autonomy or self-rule to the Palestinians.

PRIME MINISTER Menachem Begin does not want to even consider formal annexation of the occupied territories that are home to more than a million Palestinians, Ben-Meir said. Begin considers the West Bank and Gaza to be part of Israel's ancient land of Judea and Samaria.

But he has never pushed to annex them, which would be a clear violation of the Camp David accords.

The controversy was sparked by Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak's refusal to come to Jerusalem to meet Begin prior to the final turnover of the Sinai on April 25. Israel has said it will resume talks in Washington, Cairo or even Geneva but the first round must also include a session in Jerusalem.

Mubarak's stand has won him praise in the Arab world and is a sign that Egypt is seeking reconcilation with those nations that broke diplomatic relations with Egypt after the peace treaty was signed with Israel. But his stand on Jerusalem also has created major new tensions with Israel.

"If's he's not even ready to come to Jerusalem, what kind of peace can we have?" asked Ben-Meir, who is the leader of the hardline National Religious Party faction in parliament that is the mainstay of the coalition that keeps Begin in power.

"This is not just a matter of convenience. We now have a situation where the leaders can't meet – can't even have face-to-face talks," the Israeli minister said. He said that late President Anwar Sadat had no problem coming to Jerusalem. Neither did French President Francois Mitterrand.

"We told them (the Egyptians) that coming to Jerusalem doesn't imply that they accept the Israeli position on Jerusalem," Ben-Meir said. "We don't even ask them where they want to sleep. If they want to sleep in Tel Aviv – fine," he said.

"But Israel cannot go along with a boycott of Jerusalem. The prime minister instructed me to say we are completely flexible. The first four or five days of talks can be in Washington, the next week in Cairo and a week later in Jerusalem. But Jerusalem must be included," Ben-Meir said.

MUBARAK HAS REFUSED, Egyptian diplomats explained here, for two reasons. First, neither Egypt nor any Western nation, including the United States, has recognized Jerusalem as Israel's capital. Second, one of the two main stumbling blocks to an autonomy accord concerns Jerusalem.

The dispute is over whether the Palestinian inhabitants of former East Jerusalem, captured from Jordan in the June, 1967, Arab-Israeli war, will have the right to vote in elections on the West Bank for the creation of self-governing councils.

Egypt has demanded that they be given this right. Israel has refused on grounds that to do so would be tantamount to incorporating Jerusalem into the West Bank. Even though the holy city is physically on the West Bank, Israel has claimed it as its capital since reunifying Jerusalem in 1967.

Volcano goes through non-violent eruption

VANCOUVER, Wash. (AP) — Mount St. Helens erupted early today, oozing lava from the crusty dome covering its throat and shooting a plume of steam several thousand feet into the air, scientists said.

Spotters in a small plane reported seeing glowing avalanches on the northeast side of the volcano's dome, and a light dusting of ash fell on the northwestern flanks of the mountain.

Scientists said they weren't sure exactly when the eruption began.

"It came in with a whisper rather than a roar," said A.B. Adams of the University of Washington geophysics center in Seattle.

"It appears at this point that it's non-violent," Adams said.

About 3 a.m. a steam plume rose to 16,000 feet over the southwest Washington volcano and then slowly dissipated. The plume was first detected by National Weather Service radar in Portland, Ore., about 50 miles southwest of the volcano.

Earthquakes continued to jolt the mountain, including a harmonic tremor, an underground shiver that usually indicates the movement of molten rock inside the volcano. occasional gas emissions were detected.

The U.S. Geological Survey and the University of Washington issued an eruption alert late Thursday predicting an eruption within 36 hours.

Executives secretly brought back 'flying assets'

By RONE TEMPEST
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

DALLAS — The pride of Braniff Airways, a fleet of 50 Boeing 727s brightly painted in red, green and orange, now stands several rows deep behind the terminal at Dallas-Fort Worth Regional Airport.

In the early morning rain Thursday, they looked as if they had been summoned to the site for some big announcement.

Indeed, the planes had been summoned.

At one minute past midnight Thursday morning, Braniff, broken by $733 million in debts, had filed for protection under Chapter 11 of the U.S. bankruptcy law.

Braniff executives had known since Tuesday that their company could not survive the week without court protection.

And that day they began a top-secret, night-and-day scramble to bring their "flying assets" back home, where they could be protected from the airline's creditors, foreign governments and airport officials intent on collecting past-due landing fees.

Until the company's 71 planes were secured (50 at the airline's headquarters in Dallas and 21 at other U.S. sites), Braniff executives operated completely in secret. Most Braniff employees were not told of the company's situation until late Wednesday afternoon — and then they were told not to return to work.

One pilot said he learned of the company's collapse by monitoring a commercial radio station on a Braniff flight midway between Dallas and Chicago. Passengers were literally abandoned at airports, and in some cases, were told lies to excuse the delays in Braniff flights. Bad weather conditions and labor problems were reasons given by ticket agents at various airports.

Putnam

IN AN EMOTIONAL press conference Thursday in Dallas, Braniff Chairman Howard D. Putnam apologized for the secrecy and the deception.

"What we had to do last night was very difficult," Putnam said. "It was without notice, for which I am sorry. But, unfortunately, there is a lot more at stake here than just the dollars involved."

When bankruptcy seemed inevitable, Braniff executives found themselves in a highly unusual situation. Although most companies' assets are stationary, an airline's biggest assets are its airplanes.

But no major U.S. carrier had ever filed for protection under the bankruptcy law, which grants a company time — free from creditor seizures — in which to reorganize its debts to see if it can continue to operate.

Gathering its "mobile assets," scattered from Honolulu to London to Caracas, therefore became the first, almost desperate goal of Braniff's management.

"Had the public been informed," M. Philip Guthrie, Braniff's chief financial officer, said, "it would have been virtually impossible to gather those assets and, in fact, what we feared most (creditor seizure) would have occurred."

At the company's annual meeting in Dallas last week, Chairman Putnam had warned stockholders "that we had a difficult revenue problem and that in the next few days we would do everything possible to keep the company from going into, as a last resort, Chapter 11."

"I TALKED WITH several other airline presidents and tried to work out some kind of short-term marketing or operating agreement that later we would turn into some sort of merger or combination of business," Putnam said of the days that followed the stockholder's meeting. "But there just wasn't enough time. We tried some other outside investors. But there just wasn't enough time."

The airplane roundup began Tuesday. Putnam had flown to New York on Monday to testify in a lawsuit filed against the airline by a group of pilots opposed to the Braniff sale of South American routes to Eastern Airlines.

On Tuesday, he was called by Guthrie, who told him, "that the loss in load factor and the cash drain was so dramatic that he didn't see any way we could get through the week." Guthrie told Putnam that Braniff flights were only 40 percent full — "well under water," as another executive put it.

Some of the passenger counts were nothing short of embarrassing to a major airline. Braniff stewardess Mary Green, a 14-year veteran of the airline, told of a return flight from New York to Dallas that had only three passengers.

Meanwhile, American Airlines, Braniff's chief rival for U.S. business, was reporting passenger loads of 65 percent.

"We saw no alternative," Putnam said. Braniff would file for bankruptcy.

Putnam called Braniff executive vice-president for operations, William Huskins, and told him to put into action a secret plan to bring as many planes as possible back to Dallas without alarming creditors, passengers or even employees.

Huskins' first chore was to get the five Braniff DC-8s used on South American routes back to the United States and away from widely varying foreign bankruptcy laws. Three of the DC-8s were flown to Miami and one each to Los Angeles and Dallas Wednesday morning. On Thursday, many flights that stopped in Dallas were simply held here and others were instructed to return home, with or without passengers. Some flights continued to stop and pick up passengers even after company flight suspensions were announced.

BRANIFF CAPT. Joseph J. Wisnewski said he was piloting a flight to Dallas from Minneapolis when he heard about the suspension. Nevertheless, he made a scheduled stop in Omaha to pick up more passengers before heading to the Dallas airport.

After telephoning first at 11 p.m., Putnam and Braniff lawyer Michael Crames went at midnight to the Fort Worth home of John Flowers, U.S. bankruptcy judge, paid $600 in filing fees and submitted petitions for bankruptcy.

"I'd been watching it on TV," Flowers said, "and I just put on a coat and pants and accepted the petition."

The airplane roundup was completed at 6 a.m. Thursday morning when Braniff flight 502, a 747 carrying, according to Vice President Sam Coats, "147 revenue passengers and all the non-revenue passengers we could get," arrived in Dallas from Honolulu.

"Volunteer" employees, working without pay, unloaded the baggage and helped the passengers make connections. The night before, several Braniff employees and their wives had served coffee to stranded passengers in the Dallas terminal.

AP Laserphoto

Claude "Denny" Hills, who said he was a Braniff pilot for 15 years, spent part of Thursday painting a job-hunting sign. Hills said he had a stopover in Miami before a sceduled flight to Lima, Peru, when he got the news Wednesday night of Braniff's shutdown. He said he spent the night in Miami and flew home Thursday.

Braniff employees mourn loss of 'loved one'

By MIKE COCHRAN

GRAND PRAIRIE, Texas (AP) — Braniff International employees, who were given paychecks earlier this week that are worthless today, say the airline's collapse hit them like a death in the family.

"It's like losing a loved one," said Jeannine Frank of Dallas, a Braniff secretary who has been with the company 30 years.

"It's like leaving a cemetery after you've lost a member of your family," she said. "You don't want to just walk away and leave it. But there's nothing left."

Ms. Frank was among hundreds of stunned Braniff workers pouring through a makeshift employment center here in search of new jobs after Braniff suspended operations Wednesday and sought federal court protection from creditors under federal bankruptcy law Thursday.

The state set up the temporary job center in a United Auto Workers union hall especially for the Braniff workers. Some reacted to their plight with anger, bitterness and humor, but most who spoke to reporters were sad and apprehensive.

"It's like going to a funeral," said Pat Everett of Dallas, a senior clerk in Braniff's world headquarters. "You don't know where you're going or what you're going to do."

Ms. Everett, an 11-year employee, described the striken airline as a "family" and said: "I liked my job and my company, the people I worked with and the people I worked for. And if they ever ask me back, you bet I'll come back."

In Grapevine, Braniff Chairman Howard D. Putnam said the airline's cash situation grew so tight that payroll checks issued to some of the 8,500 workers earlier this week will not be honored because "there is no cash to meet them. Earlier this year, the airline deferred one week's pay for its workers.

John Stevens of Farmers Branch said he suspected that Braniff officials suspended operations in an attempt to "break the union" and eventually create a new and smaller airline.

"I've felt that way about six months," said Stevens, a stock clerk who has a wife and three sons. "It's very disheartening."

But Charles Renfro, 48, of Irving, a mechanic for 25 years, said: "What's done is done."

"I didn't really expect this and it's a funny feeling. This will affect a lot of lives, but for me, it's been a good 25 years. I don't have any complaints."

Flight attendant Shar Turns of Irving said noted her situation was somewhat ironic.

A flight attendant since 1969, she's got a college degree, a master's degree and is qualified as both a pilot and flight engineer.

"And here I am out of a job," she said. "I'm going to be looking for a pilot's position with some carrier...but at that point I'll take anything."

She and fellow flight attendant, Zoe Sanders of Irving, said they hope Braniff can reorganize quickly, get back on its feet and begin rehiring.

"I was a Braniff baby," Mrs. Sanders said. "I started when I was 20 and the only thing I know is Braniff."

She said her 13 years as a flight attendant "counts for nothing" should she find a new job with another airline.

"You start at the bottom again," Mrs. Sanders added. "But nobody's hiring now anyway and there will be hundreds of people standing in line for the jobs that do open."

The two flight attendants blame Braniff's "flight mixups" and "disorganization" in part for the recent drop in passengers but both professed continuing loyalty.

"Speaking for both of us," said Mrs. Sanders, "this is all very depressing. But we are very, very proud of Braniff. It really was a wonderful family."

Braniff International no longer 'going your way'

GRAPEVINE, Texas (AP) — Braniff's fleet sat silently on the tarmac Thursday, its brightly painted jets reflecting colors of the rainbow. For the few remaining employees inside the terminal, it was the end of the rainbow.

But there was no pot of gold.

Two of the airline's bright orange jumbo jets squatted with their tails to the runway as planes belonging to Braniff's arch rival, American Airlines, roared into gray stormy skies.

The airline whose slogan was "going your way" was going nowhere.

Near locked entrances to the Braniff gates, two workers went quietly about their work, coding about 50 pieces of unclaimed baggage left over from Wednesday, when officials suspended all Braniff's flights.

Braniff employees were told not to report for work Thursday, and the two workers said they did not expect to be paid for their efforts.

One former employee, who asked not to be identified, said he was "still stunned" by the bankruptcy petition filed by airline officials early Thursday.

Down at the end of the half-moon corridor about 50 people sat on baggage and stood in line at a Pan American World Airways gate where a flight to New York was scheduled to take off.

COCKER SPANIEL

I am looking for a nice home. I'm only 16 weeks old and really good looking- blonde no less. My Mom and Dad registered me with AKC, got me all my shots and even took me to the beauty shop last week. To see me is to love me. I would come free but they want $250. I dont know how many biscuits that is...
